AN

EXPOSITION,

WITH

Practical Obſervations

Upon the BOOK of

JOB.

VOLUME I.

By JOSEPH CARYL, ſometime Preacher to the Honourable Society of LINCOLNS-INN, and more lately of St. MAGNUS near LONDON-BRIDGE.

JAMES 5. Verſ. 10, 11.

Take my Brethren, the Prophets, who have ſpoken in the Name of the Lord, for an Example of ſuffering Affliction, and of Patience.

Behold, we count them happy which endure. Ye have heard of the Patience of Job, and have ſeen the end of the Lord: that the Lord is very Pitiful, and of tender Mercy.

LONDON,
Printed by Samuel Simmons, and to be Sold at his Houſe next Door to the Golden-Lion in Alderſgate-Street. Anno Dom. MDCLXXVI.

AN

EXPOSITION

WITH

Practical Obſervations

Upon the BOOK of

JOB.

VOLUME I.

By JOSEPH CARYL, ſometime Preacher to the Honourable Society of Lincolns-Inn, and now Miniſter of St. Magnus near London-Bridge.

JAMES 5. Verſ. 10, 11.

Take, my Brethren, the Prophets, who have ſpoken in the Name of the Lord, for an Example of ſuffering Affliction, and of Patience.

Behold, we count them happy which endure. Ye have heard of the Patience of Job, and have ſeen the end of the Lord: that the Lord is very Pitiful, and of tender Mercy.

LONDON,
Printed by Samuel Simmons, and to be Sold at his Houſe next Door to the Golden Lion in Alderſgate-Street, Anno Dom. MDCLXXVI.

TO THE CHRISTIAN READER.

To thoſe Eſpecially of this CITY, Who have been the Movers and Promoters OF THIS WORK.

This Book of Job bears the Image of theſe times, and preſents us with a reſemblance of the paſt, preſent, and (much hoped for) future condition of this Nation. As the perſonal proſperity of Job, ſo his troubles look like our National troubles; and why may not the parallel be made up, by a likeneſs in our Reſtauration? Job was the moſt flouriſhing, the greateſt man of all the men of the Eaſt. We are the greateſt, and lately were the moſt flouriſhing Nation, of all the Nations of the North. Our Oxen (like his) were ſtrong to labour, our Sheep brought forth Thouſands and Ten thouſands in our Streets, our Garners were full, affording all manner of Store; our Sons (like his) as plants grown up in their Youth, our Daughters as Corner-ſtones poliſhed after the ſimilitude of a Palace. There was no breaking-in, nor going-out, no complaining (in reference to outward wants) in our Streets. We waſhed our ſteps with Butter, and the Rock poured us out Rivers of Oyl. The Candle of God ſhined upon our Heads, and the ſecret of God was upon our Tabernacles: Our Roots were ſpread out by the Waters, and the dew (of bleſſings) lay all night upon our Branches. Unto us the Nations gave ear and waited, and kept ſilence at our Counſel; after our words, they ſpake not again, and our ſpeech dropped upon them: If we laughed on them, they believed it not: our glory was freſh in us, and the light of our countenance they caſt not down: we choſe out their way, and ſat chief, and dwelt as a King in the Army, as one that comforteth the Mourners. Surely, a happy people were we, being in ſuch a caſe, yea moſt happy were we, having the Lord (many wayes declaring himſelf) for our God. And had we (as theſe mercies did oblige us) fill'd up, or labour'd to fill up th'other part, the better part of Job's character; Had we been a People perfect and upright, fearing God and eſchewing evil: We might (according to the promis'd, and often experienc'd tenour of Gods dealing with his people) have continued and encreaſed in all that happineſs unto this day.

But we (herein unlike to Job, and, like a fooliſh Nation and unwiſe) have ill-requited the Lord, yea, we have requited the Lord with evil, for, and in the midſt of all this Goodneſs: Our Provocations have been many, and our Backſlidings have been multiplied. Our ſins have put a Sword into the Hand of God: And God in Juſtice, hath put a Sword into the Hands of men ſkilful to deſtroy. Our young men are ſlain by the edge of the Sword, and the ſtink of our Camps comes up into our Noſtrils. How many ſad Meſſengers have haſtened unto us (as unto Job) with the Reports of Cities Surrendred and Plundred, of Towns Fired and Pillaged, of Villages and Countries laid Waſte, and almoſt Deſolate! Now ſeeing all this is come upon us, is it not time for us (with Job) to rent our Garments (yea our hearts with godly ſorrow) and falling upon the ground, worſhip God, and ſay, The Lord hath (freely) given, and the Lord hath (juſtly) taken; Bleſſed be the Name of the Lord? Our ſins have brought theſe ſorrows, let not our ſorrows bring in more ſin, by cauſing us to murmur againſt, or charge God fooliſhly.

God never ſends ſuch Troubles upon a Nation (he doth ſometimes upon a Perſon, and did upon Job) without cauſe; that is, without reſpecting ſin as a cauſe. Job might ſay (in one ſence) My Uprightneſs and my Integrity have procured theſe things unto me; But we muſt ſay, our way and our doings have procured theſe things unto us: This is our wickedneſs.

Yet (though all this evil hath been done by us, though all theſe evils are come upon us, yet) there is hope in our Iſrael concerning this thing; yea, I believe, there is mercy in and from all theſe evils, to us and all the Iſrael of our God. Only what Integrity we have, let us ſtill hold it ſtedfaſtly; what evils are (and what evils almoſt are not?) amongſt us, let us reform them ſpeedily: Without this, at leaſt, without hearty deſires, and faithful endeavours after this, we may preſume, but we cannot believe or hope our Deliverance. I grant, that whenſoever God reſtores us, he muſt reſtore us freely; and muſt both make us good, and do us good, for his own Name ſake, in Jeſus Chriſt. For as he hath puniſhed us leſs then our ſins deſerve, ſo whenſoever, or in what degree ſoever he reſtores us, it will be more then any, or all our Repentings and Reformings can deſerve: yet he commands us to Repent and Reform, that we may be reſtored. God never delivered any people for their Repentance, and rarely any (if any) without Repentance. Yea, I may ſay it plainly, that he never delivered any (in Mercy) without Repentance; for either he gave them Repentance before they were delivered, or Repentance (which is far the greater bleſſing of the two) with the Deliverance. Better have our Troubles continue, then our Sins continue. To have Peace return, and our Hearts unturn'd, were infinitely worſe then War.

And as Repentance is better then Peace, ſo it will be an Argument, that we ſhall have Peace: May we not well conclude that God is upon the giving-hand, when he gives a new Heart? And that he hath ſomewhat elſe to give, when he hath given a love unto, and a longing after his Truth?

When God feeds us with (and we have a right taſte of) this Manna in our Wilderneſs, we may reſt aſſured that God hath humbled us all this while (and all the while his Wiſdom ſhall ſee fit to humble us yet, will be) only to prove us, that he may do us good at our latter end, and make this Nation (at leaſt) like Job, in the end which he will make.

Ye have heard of the Patience of Job, and what end the Lord made: Could we but hear of the Repentance of England, all the world (I am perſwaded) ſhould hear and wonder at the end, which the Lord would make: Even ſuch an end as he made for Job, if not better; he would give us twice as much in Temporals, double Riches, double Oxen and Sheep, double Bracelets and Ear-rings, double Gold and Silver, double Sons and Daughters: And he would give us (which is not ſpecified in the Inventory of Job's repair) ſeven-fold more in Spirituals, ſeven-fold more Knowledge of his Truth, Purity in his Worſhip, Order in his Houſe; he would make the light of our Moon to be like the light of the Sun, and the light of our Sun to be ſeven-fold, as the light of ſeven dayes, in the day wherein he binds up our outward breaches, and heals the ſtroak of our wound. Thus, we may look to be reſtored ( not only as Job ) to more in kind, but to better in kind, I am ſure to better in degree: We may look, that, for Braſs we ſhall have Gold, or our Gold more refined; that, for Iron we ſhall have Silver, or our Silver more purified; that, for Wood we ſhall have Braſs, or our Braſs better furbiſhed; that, for Stones we ſhall have Iron, or our Iron better tempered; We may look, that, our Officers ſhall be Peace, and our Exactors righteouſneſs, that Violence ſhall no more be heard in our Land, waſting nor deſtruction within our borders, but men ſhall call our Walls Salvation and our Gates Praiſe:

When theſe glorious iſſues of our Troubles ſhall be, is in his Hand, who held Job's Eſtate in his Hand, ſo faſt, that Satan could not touch a Sheep or a Shoo-latchet, till himſelf willed; and who, when his time came, reſtored Job's Eſtate double, to a Sheep and a Shoo-latchet, whether Satan and his Sabeans would or no. We have already ſeen, in Job, an Epitome of our former proſperity and of our preſent Troubles: the good Lord haſten the latter part of our National likeneſs unto him, in the doubled (and O that it might be a ſeven-fold) reſtauration of our Peace and Truth.

In the mean time theſe Meditations upon this Scripture, well digeſted and taken-in, may be (through the bleſſing of God upon them) a help to our Patience, in bearing thoſe afflictions upon the Land, a help to our Faith in be- lieving, and to our hope in waiting for the Salvations of the Lord. What-ſoever things were written afore-time, were written for our Learning (but this Book was purpoſely written) that we through patience and comfort of this Scripture might have hope. Nor do I doubt, but that the Providence of God (without which a Sparrow falls not to the ground ) directed my thoughts to this Book, as (not only profitable for all times, but) ſpecially ſeaſonable for theſe times. It is a word in ſeaſon, and therefore ſhould, as a word upon the Wheels, make a ſpeedy paſſage into all our Hearts: And how ſhould it not? While we remember that theſe Wheels are Oyl'd with Blood, even with the Heart-blood of Thouſands of our deareſt Friends and Brethren.

I find, that this is not the firſt time, that this Book hath been undertaken by way of Expoſition, in ſuch a time as this. Lavater a faithful Miniſter of the Tygurine Church, opened this Scripture in Preaching, and Printed it in the German Tongue, which was afterwards publiſhed in Latine by Hartmanus Sprunglius (as himſelf expreſſes in the Title) to ſupport and refreſh the afflicted minds of the godly in that laſt (as he then ſuppoſed) and ſaddeſt declining Age of the world.

An. 1552 Ferus (a Popiſh Fryer, but very devout according to the Devotion of that Religion ) Preacher at Mentz, choſe this Scripture in the time of War and publick Calamity (as the Title alſo of his Book holds forth) to Comfort his Citizens. In his fourth Sermon he makes this obſervable digreſſion. You know (ſaith he to his Hearers) that I began to Expound this Hiſtory of JOB, to the end I might Comfort and Exhort you to Patience in theſe troubleſom times. This was and is my Intendment, this moved me to Handle and Explain this Book. But now in my very Entrance upon it, the Storm grows ſo black, that I ſee you amazed, dejected, and almoſt deſperate: Some are flying, others are preparing to flye; and in this great Calamity, no man is found to comfort his Brother: But every one increaſes his Neighbours fear, by his own fearfulneſs. He preſcribes (as far as their Principles will admit) Cordials for the Reviving of their Spirits, and Medicine for the Cure of theſe Diſtempers. The whole Book of JOB, is a Sacred Shop, ſtor'd with Plenty and Variety of both: that you may open your Hearts to Receive, and with Wiſdom to Apply the Conſolations and Inſtructions here tender'd from this part of it, is (and through the ſtrength of Chriſt ) ſhall be, the Deſire and Prayer of

Novemb. 8. 1643. Your very Loving Friend and

Servant for the Help of your Faith

JOSEPH CARYL.

THE INTRODUCTION,

Opening the NATURE, PARTS and SCOPE of the whole BOOK.

1 Cor. 14. 19. IT was the perſonal wiſh and reſolution of the Apoſtle Paul, I had rather ſpeak five words with my underſtanding, then ten thouſand words in an unknown tongue. And ſurely it is far better to ſpeak or hear five words of Scripture with our underſtandings, then ten thouſand words, yea, then the whole Scriptures, while we underſtand them not. Now, what an unknown tongue, about which the Apoſtle diſputeth, is in reference unto all, the ſame is the Scripture unto moſt, even in their own tongue, that which they underſtand not. For as an unknown tongue doth always hide the meaning of words from us; ſo do oft-times the ſpiritualneſs and myſteriouſneſs of the matter. While a man ſpeaks in a ſtrange language, we hear a ſound, but know not the words; and while a man ſpeaks in our own language, though we know the words, yet we may not underſtand the meaning; and then he that ſpeaks, is to us in that reference (ſo the Apoſtle calls him) a Barbarian. While the Leafs of the Book are opened, and read to ſuch, or by ſuch, the ſence is ſhut up and ſealed.

Acts 8. 30 When the Apoſtle Philip heard the Æthiopian Eunuch read the Prophet Iſaiah as he travelled in his Chariot, he ſaid to him, Underſtandeſt thou what thou readeſt? The Eunuch anſwered, How ſhould I, unleſs ſome man would guide me? He underſtood the Language; but the meaning was under a vail. The very ſame may we ſay to many, who read the Scriptures, Underſtand you what you read? And they may anſwer as the Eunuch did, How can we, except we have ſome man to guide us? Yea, and alas, for all the guiding of man, they may anſwer, how can we, except we have the Spirit of God to guide us? He hath his Pulpit in heaven, who teacheth hearts the heart of Scripture.

Paul (we know) was a learned Phariſee, and much vers'd in the Law, and yet he ſaith of himſelf before his converſion, That he was without the Law: but when Chriſt came to him, then the Commandment came to him. I was once without the Law, but when the Commandment came, that is, when Chriſt came, and his Spirit came in or after my converſion, and expounded the Commandment to my heart, then the Commandment came, ſc. to my heart in the power of it, and I underſtood to purpoſe what the Law was. So that the teachings of the Spirit, the teachings of God himſelf, are chiefly to be looked after, and prayed for, that we may know the mind of the Spirit, the Will of God in Scripture. Rom. 7. 9.

But he hath ſet up this Ordinance, the Ordinance of Interpretation to do it by; both that the Scripture might be tranſlated out of the Original, into the common language of every Nation (which the Apoſtle calls Interpreting in that place before cited) and alſo that the original ſence of the Scripture might be tranſlated into the mind and underſtanding of every man; which is the work we aim at, and now have in hand. 1 Cor. 14. 13.

Before I begin that, give me leave to beſeech you in the name of Chriſt, to take care for the carrying on of this work, a degree further: I mean, to tranſlate the ſence of Scripture into your lives, and to expound the Word of God by your works; Interpret it by your feet, and teach it by your fingers (as Solomon ſpeaks in another ſence) that is, let your workings and your walkings be Scripture explications. It is indeed a very great honour unto this City, that you take care for a Commentary on the Scripture in writing; but if you will be careful and diligent to make a Commentary upon the Scripture by living, or to make your lives the Commentary of Scripture, this will make your City glorious indeed. Prov. 6. 13.

It is the Apoſtles teſtimony of his Corinthians, Ye (ſaith he) are our Epiſtle, foraſmuch as ye are manifeſtly declared to be the Epiſtle of Chriſt, miniſtred by us, written not with Ink, but with the Spirit of the living God, not in Tables of Stone, but in fleſhly Tables of the Heart. Give us, we beſeech you, the ſame occaſion of glorying on your behalf, that we may ſay, You are our Expoſition, foraſmuch as you are manifeſtly declared in your practice to be the Expoſition of the mind of Chriſt miniſtred unto you by us. A walking, a breathing Commentary goeth infinitely beyond the written, or ſpoken Commentary. And as the Apoſtle makes his Concluſion (before noted) I had rather ſpeak five words with my underſtanding, then ten thouſand words in an unknown tongue: So I ſay, I had rather know five words of Scripture by my own practice and experience, then ten thouſand words of Scripture, yea, then the whole Scripture, by the bare expoſition of another. And therefore let the words of Chriſt by theſe verbal Explications, dwell richly in your underſtandings in all wiſdom: And by a practical Application, let it be held forth plentifully in your lives in all holineſs. Add Commentary to Commentary, and Expoſition to Expoſition: Add the Comment of works to this Comment of words; and an Expoſition by your lives, to this Expoſition by our labours. Surely if you do not, theſe Exerciſes will be coſtly indeed, and will come to a deep account againſt you before the Lord. If you are lifted up to Heaven by the opening of the Scripture (which is either a carrying you up to Heaven, or a bringing of Heaven down to you) and then walk groveling upon the earth; how ſore will the Judgment be! But it is to me an Argument and an Evidence from Heaven, that God hath put it into your hearts to be more glorious in the practice of holineſs, becauſe he hath put it into your hearts to deſire more the knowledge of holineſs. 2 Cor. 3. 2, 3.

To draw in my ſpeech nearer to the buſineſs. Having a Book full of very various matter before me, give me leave to premiſe ſome things in the general, and ſomething more particularly by way of Preface, concerning the Book, before we come to the handling of the Text.

First, For the general. That which God ſpeaks concerning the whole work of Creation, we may ſpeak concerning the whole Book of Scripture, It is very good. Solomon obſerves, That whereſoever the wiſdom of God ſpake, it ſpake of excellent things. And David, to quicken our endeavours, and excite our diligence to the ſtudy of the Word, preferreth it in worth above thouſands of Gold and Silver, and in ſweetneſs above the honey and the honey-comb. And when he ceaſeth to compare, he beginneth to admire, Wonderful are thy Teſtimonies. And well may that be called Wonderful, which proceedeth from the God of Wonders. All Scripture is given by divine inſpiration, or by inſpiration from God; and I need not ſtay to ſhew you the excellency of any part, when I have but pointed at ſuch an Original of the whole. Gen. 1. 31. Prov. 8. 6. 2 Tim. 3. 16.

As therefore the whole Scripture (whether we reſpect the Majeſty of the Author, the height and purity of the matter, the depth or perſpicuity of the ſtile, the dignity or variety of occurrences; whether we conſider the art of compiling, or the ſtrength of arguing) diſdains the very mention of compariſon with any other humane Author whatſoever; ſo are compariſons in it ſelf, as Book with Book, Chapter with Chapter, dangerous. There is not in this great Volume of holy counſel; any one Book or Chapter, Verſe or Section, of greater power or authority then other. Moſes and Samuel, the writings of Amos the Shepherd, and of Iſaiah a Deſcendant of the blood Royal; the writings of the Prophets and Evangeliſts, the Epiſtles of Paul, and this Hiſtory of Job, muſt be received (to uſe the words of the Trent Councel in the fifth Seſſion, but to far better purpoſe) Pari pietatis affectu, with the ſame holy reverence and affection. They uſe it about Traditions, matching Traditions with the Scriptures; but we may fully match all Scripture together, and ſay, all muſt be received with the ſame devotion and affection.

Yet notwithſtanding, as the parts of Scripture were penned by divers Secretaries, publiſhed in divers places, in divers ages, on divers occaſions, for divers ends; ſo the argument and ſubject matter, the method and manner of compoſing, the texture and the ſtile of writing, are likewiſe different. Some parts of Scripture were delivered in Proſe, others in Verſe or Numbers: ſome parts of the Scripture are Hiſtorical, ſhewing what hath been done; ſome are Prophetical, ſhewing what ſhall be done; others are Dogmatical or Doctrinal, ſhewing what we muſt do, what we muſt believe. Again, ſome parts of Scripture are clear and eaſie, ſome are obſcure and very knotty: ſome parts of Scripture ſhew what God made us, others, how ſin ſpoiled us: a third, how Chriſt reſtored us. Some parts of Scripture ſhew forth acts of mercy to keep us from ſinking; others record acts of judgment to keep us from preſuming. And becauſe the way to Heaven is not ſtrewed with Roſes, but, like the the Crown of Chriſt here upon earth, ſet with thorns; becauſe not ſmiles and loving imbracements from the world, but wounds, and ſtroaks, and temptations, do await all thoſe that have received the preſs-money of the Spirit, and are enrolled for the Chriſtian warfare: becauſe every true Iſraelite muſt expect that which Jacob upon his death-bed ſpake of Joſeph, that the Archers will ſhoot at him, hate him, and grieve him: In a word, becauſe many are the troubles of the righteous; therefore the Scripture doth preſent us with ſundry platforms of the righteous conflicting with many troubles.

Gen 49.23

Now theſe conſiderations that are ſcattered ſeverally thorough the whole Scripture, ſeem all concentred, and united together in this Book of Job: which if we conſider in the ſtile and form of writing, is in ſome part of it Proſe, as the two firſt Chapters and part of the laſt, and the reſt is Verſe. If we conſider it in the manner of delivery, it is both dark and clear: If we conſider the ſubject matter of it, it is both Hiſtorical, Prophetical, and Doctrinal. In it is a mixture of mercy tendred unto, of judgments threatned againſt, and inflicted upon the wicked: In it is a mixture of the greateſt outward bleſſings, and the greateſt outward afflictions upon the godly, concluding in the greateſt deliverances of the godly from affliction. In this laſt the Book is chief; there was never any man under a warmer Sun of outward proſperity then Job was; neither was there ever any man in a hotter fire of outward affliction then Job was, God ſeeming to give charge concerning this trial of Job, as King Nebuchadnezzer did concerning the three children, to have the furnace heated ſeven times hotter then ordinary. This is the general concerning the Book.

Now more particularly; I will not detain you in that Proemial diſquiſition about the Author and Penman of this Book; there is great variety of Judgment about it, ſome ſay it was one of the Prophets, but they know not who; ſome aſcribe it to Solomon, ſome to Elihu, not a few to Job himſelf; but moſt give it to Moſes. That reſolution of Beza in the point ſhall ſerve me, and may ſatisfie you. It is very uncertain who was the Writer of this Book (ſaith he) and whatſoever can be ſaid concerning it, is grounded but upon very light conjecture. And therefore, where the Scripture is ſilent, it can be of no great uſe for us to ſpeak, eſpecially ſeeing there is ſo much ſpoken as will find us work, and be of uſe for us: neither need we trouble our ſelves (being aſſured that the Spirit of God indited the Book) who it was that held the pen. Only take this, that it is conceived to be the firſt piece of Scripture that was written; take it to be written by Moſes, and then it is moſt probable that he writ it before the deliverance of the people of Iſrael out of Egypt, while he was in Midian.

Quis libri ſcriptor fuit incertum eſt, nec niſi leviſſimis conjecturis nititur quicquid de eo re dici poteſt. Beza.

Neither will I ſtay you in the ſecond place about the inquiry into, or rather about the refutation of that fancy; that this whole Book is a Parable rather then a Hiſtory, like that of Lazarus in the Goſpel, not a thing really acted, but only a repreſentation of it. Now this (which was the dream of many of the Jews and Talmudiſts, and is faſtned with no ſmall clamor upon Luther by the Jeſuites) may clearly be convinced both by the names of places and perſons (which we ſhall have occaſion to open when we come to the Book it ſelf) and alſo by thoſe allegations of the Prophets and of the Apoſtles concerning Job; the Prophet Ezekiel quoting him with Noah and Daniel, two men that unqueſtionably were extant, and acted glorious parts in the world, and therefore Job alſo. All that I will ſay in particular, ſhall be in theſe three things.

Luk. 15. & 16.

Ezek. 14. 14.

First, to ſhew you more diſtinctly the ſubject of this Book.

Secondly, The parts and diviſion of it.

Thirdly, The uſe or ſcope and intendment of it.

Firſt, For the ſubject of this Book, we may conſider it, either as principal, or as collateral.

The main and principal ſubject of this Book is contained (and I may give it you) in Pſal. 34. 1. Many are the afflictions of the righteous, but the Lord delivereth him out of all.

Pſal. 34. 19

Concerning this ſubject, there are two great Queſtions handled and diſputed fully and clearly in this Book. The firſt is this, Whether it doth conſiſt with the Juſtice and goodneſs of God to afflict a righteous and ſincere perſon, to ſtrip him naked, to take away all his outward comforts. Or, Whether it doth conſiſt with the Juſtice and goodneſs of God, that it ſhould go ill with thoſe that are good, and that it ſhould go well with thoſe that are evil. This is one great debate, the main Queſtion thoroughout the Book. And then ſecondly, here is another great diſpute in reference to the former; Namely, whether we may judge of the righteouſneſs, or unrighteouſneſs, of the ſincerity or hypocriſie of any perſon, by the outward dealings and preſent diſpenſations of God towards him. That is a ſecond Queſtion here debated.

The friends of Job maintained the firſt Queſtion Negatively, the latter Affirmatively. They denied that God in Juſtice could afflict a righteous and a holy man. They affirmed, that any man ſo afflicted is unrighteous, and may ſo be judged, becauſe afflicted. And ſo the whole argument and diſpute, which the friends of Job brought, may be reduced to this one Syllogiſm. He that is afflicted and greatly afflicted, is certainly a great open ſinner or a notorious hypocrite: But Job, thou art afflicted, and thou art great afflicted; therefore certainly thou art, if not, a great open ſinner, yet a notorious hypocrite.

Job, as conſtantly and as vehemently maintaineth both thoſe queſtions in the contrary ſence. He acknowledged himſelf to be a ſinner, yet he ſtiffly denied that he was a hypocrite; he diſclaimed his own righteouſneſs in point of Juſtification, yet he juſtified himſelf in point of uprightneſs. And as for the ſinfulneſs of his nature and of his life, he was willing (except known or wilful, in ſincerity) to own both, and charge himſelf faſter then his friends could, appealing to, and triumphing in free grace for full pardon.

This one Syllogiſm (I ſay) is the ſum of all the diſpute, between Job and his three friends; this is (as it were) the hinge upon which the whole matter turned.

But beſides theſe, there are many diſcourſes falling in collaterally, which concur to make up the ſubject of this book: For, as it is with thoſe that ſtudy the Philoſophers-ſtone, the great thing they aim at, is to make Gold, &c. that's the principal, the chief end: yet collaterally they find out many excellent things, many profitable experiments have been made, many rare ſecrets have been diſcovered in proſecuting of that great deſign. So although this be the principal ſubject of the Book, yet collaterally for the carrying on of theſe diſputes, many other rare and excellent, heavenly, ſpiritual and uſeful truths are handled and diſcovered. As to give you ſome particular inſtances.

Firſt, We have the Character of a diſcreet and faithful Maſter and Father in a family, and the ſpecial duties which concern thoſe relations; the doctrine of the Oeconomicks is often touched in this Book.

Secondly, We have here the Character of a faithful, zealous and juſt Magiſtrate in the Common-wealth, how he ought to behave himſelf, and what his duty is, ſet down alſo plainly and clearly by occaſion of this diſpute.

Thirdly, We have a great diſcovery made in the ſecrets of nature. The bowels of nature are as it were ript open, and the great works of Creation are here diſplayed. In this you have diſcourſes of the Heavens, of the Earth, of the Sun, Moon, and Stars; of thoſe Meteors, the Hail, the Snow, the Froſt, the Ice, the Lightning and the Thunder. In this you have diſcourſes of Jewels, of Minerals, and of Metals; in this, of Beaſts, and Birds, and Creeping things. So that by occaſion of this diſpute, a diſcourſe is carried about all the world, in the whole circuit of natural knowledge or Philoſophy.

Fourthly, Here are diſcourſes of Chriſtian Morals, of the duties of equity from man to man: Of the duties of piety which man oweth to God, of the duties of ſobriety and temperance towards a mans own ſelf. Yea here we find the great duty of Faith, the matter of believing in the Redeemer of the world, our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

Laſtly, Here are many diſcoveries made of God, in Himſelf and his Attributes; in his Power, Wiſdom, Juſtice, Goodneſs and Faithfulneſs; yea, whatſoever may be known of God in any of theſe, is ſome way or other here diſcovered. So then, all being ſummed up together, it may well be ſaid concerning this Book, that it is Βίβλος πανάρετος, a Book containing all excellencies, of Wiſdom and Holineſs; and what (as ſome of the Jews and Rabbins ſay of it) in other Books, is here a little and there a little, is all plentifully gathered together in this. In a word, it is a Summary, a Compendium of all Knowledge, both Humane and Divine, both concerning our ſelves, and concerning God. So much of the ſubject of this Book, both Principal and Collateral.

The ſecond general to be conſidered is the diviſion of this Book. We may conſider it in reference to the diviſion; Firſt, as it a Dialogue (for ſo ſome call the whole Book) which is an interchangeable diſcourſe concerning any ſubject or matter whatſoever. And taking it in that notion, we may divide it by the Collocutors or Speakers, and by the ſeveral ſpeeches which they made.

The Collocutors or Speakers in this Book, are Eight.

1. God.
2. Satan.
3. Job.
4. Job's Wife.
5. Eliphaz.
6. Bildad.
7. Zophar.

} Job's three Friends.

8. Elihu, Who cometh in as a Moderator of that diſpute.

Their Speeches which they make, are in the whole compaſs of the Book, thirty two diſtinctions.

There are two Dialogues between God and Satan. One between Job and his Wife. Three between Job and Eliphaz. Three between Job and Bildad. Two between Job and Zophar. Two between God and Job. And then we have Elihu making four diſtinct Speeches or Orations which have no Anſwer. And laſtly, two ſeveral Speeches or Parables (as they are called) of Job, one in Chap. 27. 1. and the other in Chap. 29. 1. So that, ſum up all theſe together, and you may divide the whole Book into thirty two diſtinct or ſeveral Speeches, either by way of poſition, or anſwer, or reply, or determination. God ſpeaks four times, Satan twice, Job's wife once, Job thirteen times, Eliphaz thrice, Bildad thrice, Zophar twice, Elihu four times.

Or if we ſhould conſider the Book as a Diſputation (which is higher then a Dialogue) ſo you may diſtinguiſh it, by the Opponents, by the Reſpondents, and by the Moderators.

The Opponents are three. Job's three friends.

Job himſelf is Reſpondent. The Moderators are,

Firſt, Elihu, he cometh in firſt as an Umpire between them.

Secondly, God himſelf at laſt, out of the whirle-wind giveth the deciſive determinative voice and ſentence. He ſtates the queſtion fully for Job, and reproveth Job's friends, as not having diſputed and argued aright concerning him.

Yet further, We may divide the Book into five Sections, whereof

The firſt doth ſet forth the happineſs and fulneſs of Job's outward eſtate; and the integrity and perfection of his ſpiritual eſtate. And that is contained in the firſt five verſes.

The ſecond preſents Job's affliction, Job's fall, the great and ſore calamity which in a moment did overtake him, with the occaſion of it. And this you have ſet forth from verſ. 5. excluſively to verſ. 9. of Chap. 2.

Thirdly, We have the queſtions, the debates and diſputes which did ariſe upon and about the fall of Job into that ſad condition: which are contained from verſ. 9. of Chap. 2. to the end of Chap. 31.

Fourthly, We have the moderation or determination of this diſpute and of this argument, firſt by Elihu, and then by God himſelf, from the beginning of Chap. 32. to verſ. 7. of Chap. 42. All which is but as a determination or ſtating of the Queſtion.

Fifthly and laſtly, We have the reſtitution of Job, his reſtoring and ſetting up again, and the repairing of his eſtate, and making of it double to what formerly it had been. And that is begun and continued from verſ. 7. of Chap. 42. to the end of the Book. So here you have a five-fold diviſion of the Book.

Once more, We may divide the Book into three parts. And ſo it ſets forth, Firſt, Job's happy condition, both in regard of Externals and Internals, in the firſt five verſes.

Secondly, Job's fall, Job's calamity, Job's trouble, from that, to verſ. 7. of Chap. 42.

Thirdly, Job's reſtitution or reſtoring, from thence to the end.

Take the Book in this diviſion, and it ſeems to hold forth to us ſuch a repreſentation of Job, as is given us in the three firſt Chapters of Geneſis concerning man. In thoſe three firſt Chapters, we have man ſet forth, Firſt, In the excellency and dignity of his Creation, being Lord and Soveraign of all, adorn'd with that integrity and purity of nature which God had planted in, and ſtamped upon him at his Creation. And in the beginning of this Book, we have Job like a man in innocency, ſhining in all his dignity, compaſs'd about with bleſſings of all ſorts, bleſſings of the body, bleſſings of the ſoul, bleſſings of this life and of that which is to come.

Secondly, There we find the Devil plotting the ruine of man, and we find his plot taking for a while, and in a great meaſure prevailing. So here in this Book we have the Devil begging Job's ruine, and having obtained leave, ſo far as concerned his outward eſtate and body, quickly puts it in execution.

Thirdly, There we have Adam by Gods free mercy and promiſe reſtored to a better eſtate in Chriſt through the grace of Redemption, then he had before in himſelf, by the goodneſs of Creation. So here we have Job, through the mercy, power, and faithfulneſs of God, reſtored to all he had, and more; we ſee him repaired and ſet up again after his breaking, not only with a new ſtock, but a greater: his eſtate being doubled, and his very loſſes proving beneficial to him. This may ſuffice for the diviſion or parts of the Book, which, I conceive, may ſhed ſome light into the whole.

Now for the third thing which I propoſed, which was the uſe, or ſcope, or intendment of this Book. For that is a ſpecial thing we are to carry before us in our eye in the reading of Scripture. It is poſſible for one to underſtand the ſubject, and to know the parts, and yet not to be attentive to find out, or diſtinctly to find out what the mind of God is, or whereat he ſpecially drives and aimeth. Therefore it will be very profitable to us likewiſe to conſider what the tendency and intendment, or (as I may ſo ſpeak) the Uſes of this Book are.

Firſt, It aims at our Inſtruction, and that in divers things.

Firſt, (Which much concerns every Chriſtian to learn,) it inſtructeth us how to handle a Croſs: How to behave our ſelves when we are in a conflict, whether outward or inward: What the poſtures of the Spiritual War are; and with what patience we ought to bear the hand of God, and his dealings with us. This, I ſay, is ſet forth by the Scripture in other places to be the main, and one of the principal ends or intendments or Uſes of this Book. This the Apoſtle James ſpeaks of, You have heard of the patience of Job; as if he ſhould ſay, do you not know why the Book of Job was written? Why God in his providence did bring ſuch a thing to paſs concerning Job? It was that all men ſhould take notice of his patience, and might learn the wiſdom of ſuffering, that noble art of induring.

Jam. 5. 11

Job was full of many other excellent graces, and indeed he had all the graces of the Spirit of God in him. But the Patience of Job was the principal grace. As it is with natural men, they have every ſin in them; but there are ſome ſins which are the Maſter ſins, or ſome one ſin it may be doth denominate a wicked man; ſometimes he is a proud man, ſometimes he is covetous, ſometimes he is a deceiver, ſometimes he is an oppreſſor, ſometimes he is unclean, ſometimes he hath a profane ſpirit, and ſo the like; ſome one great Maſter luſt doth give the denomination to the man: he hath all other ſins in him, and they are all reigning in him; but one as it were reigneth above the reſt, and ſits uppermoſt in his heart. So it is with the Saints of God (and here with Job) every Saint and ſervant of God hath all grace in him, every grace in ſome degree or other, for all the limbs and lineaments of the new man are formed together in the ſoul of thoſe that are in Chriſt. But there is ſome ſpecial grace which doth give (as it were) the denomination to a ſervant of God. As that which gave the denomination to Abraham, was Faith; and that which gave the denomination to Moſes, was Meekneſs; and ſo this which giveth the denomination to Job, is Patience; and ſo the denomination too of this whole Hiſtory, as if that were the great leſſon that were to be taken out, the leſſon of ſuffering and of patience: So that what the Apoſtle makes to Rom. 14.4. be the Uſe of all Scripture, Whatſoever (ſaith he) were written aforetime, were written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope. That, I ſay, which the Apoſtle there makes to be the end and ſcope of the whole Scripture, doth ſeem to be in ſpecial the principal and chief end of writing this Book of Job.

Secondly, Another Inſtruction which we are to take from the whole Book, is this; God would have us learn, that, Afflictions come not by chance, that they are all ordered by providence; in the matter, in the manner, and the meaſure; both for the kinds and for the degrees, they are all ordered, even the very leaſt, by the wiſdom, by the hand and providence of God.

Thirdly, Another thing which we are to learn generally from this Book, is this, The Soveraignty of God; that he hath power over us, over our eſtates, and over our bodies, and over our families, and over our ſpirits; that he may uſe us as he pleaſeth, and we muſt be quiet under his hand; when he cometh and will take all from us, all our comforts, we muſt give all glory to him. This Book is written for this eſpecially, to teach us the Soveraignty of God, and the ſubmiſſion of the creature.

Fourthly, It teacheth us, That God doth ſometimes afflict his children out of prerogative; that though there be no ſin in them which he makes the occaſion of afflicting them (ſuch was Job's caſe) yet for exerciſe of his graces in them, for trial of their graces, or to ſet them up for patterns to the world, God may and doth afflict them. Though no man be without ſin, yet the afflictions of many are not for their ſins.

Fifthly, There is this general Inſtruction which God would have us learn out of this Book, namely, that the beſt, begotten, and the beſt founded eſtate in outward things, is uncertain; that there is no truſting to any creature-comforts. God would unbottom us quite from the creature, by holding forth this Hiſtory of Job unto us.

Sixthly, God would alſo ſhew forth this for our learning, viz. The ſtrength, the unmoveableneſs of faith, how unconquerable it is, what a kind of omnipotency there is in grace. God would have all the world take notice of this in the Book of Job, that a godly perſon is in vain aſſaulted by friends or enemies, by Men or Devils, by wants or wounds: Though he be even benighted in his ſpirit, though God himſelf take away the light of his countenance from him, yet God would have us learn and know, that over all theſe a true believer is more then a conqueror. For here is one of the greateſt battels fought, that ever was between man and man, between man and Hell, yea between God and man: yet Job went away with the victory; True grace is often aſſaulted, it never was or ever ſhall be overthrown.

Seventhly, This alſo we may learn, That God never leaves or forſakes his totally or finally.

Eighthly, Laſtly, The book teacheth this general leſſon: That the judgments of God are often times very ſecret, but they are never unjuſt. That though the creature be not able to give a reaſon of them, yet there is infinite reaſon for them.

Theſe are the general Uſes from the general ſcope and intendment of this Book by way of inſtruction.

Secondly, This Book ſerves to convince and reprove that ſlander of worldly men and of Satan, who ſay that the people of God ſerve him for their own ends, that they follow him for loaves, that they attend upon him for an eſtate, for creature-comforts and concernments. The Lord did on purpoſe cauſe theſe things to be acted, and this Hiſtory to be penned, for ever to ſtop the mouth of Satan and all iniquity, and to ſhew that his people follow him for love, for the excellency they find in him and in his ſervice. Though he ſtrip them naked of all they have, yet they will cleave to him. Here is one Confutation.

Secondly, It is to convince and reprove all thoſe, who judge of the ſpiritual eſtate of thoſe that are under the hand of God in ſore afflictions by ſome unbecoming and raſh ſpeeches, which may fall from them in the time of thoſe their conflicts, when troubles and ſufferings are upon them.

Thirdly, To convince and confute thoſe who judge of mens ſpiritual eſtates, by Gods dealing with them in their outward eſtates.

Fourthly, To convince and confute that curſed opinion, that a man may fall finally and totally away from grace and from the favour of God. God hath ſhewed by this Hiſtory, that ſuch an opinion is a lye. If ever any man were in danger of falling quite away from grace received, or might ſeem to have loſt the favour of God, formerly ſhewed, ſurely it was Job: and if he were upheld in the grace of holineſs, and continued in the grace of Gods love, notwithſtanding all that came upon him; certainly God would have all the world know that free grace will uphold his for ever.

Fifthly, To convince all thoſe of pride and extream preſumption, who think to find out and to trace the ſecrets of Gods counſel, the ſecrets of Gods eternal decrees, the ſecrets of all his works of providence: Whereas God ſheweth them in this Book, that they are not able to find out, or comprehend his ordinary works, thoſe which we call the works of nature, the things of creation, the things that are before them, which they converſe with every day, which they ſee and feel, and have in their ordinary uſe. They are not able to find out the ſecrets of the Air, of the Meteors, of the Waters, of the Earth, of Beaſts or Birds; every one of theſe puts the underſtanding of man to a ſtand, and poſe his reaſon; they are not able to comprehend the works of Creation, how are they able then to find out the counſels of God in his Decrees and purpoſes and judgements? And for that end it is that God ſets forth here ſo much of the works of nature, that all men may be ſtopp'd in that preſumptuous way of ſearching too far into his counſels. Here is another Uſe or ſcope of this Book.

Thirdly, There is much for Conſolation.

Firſt, That all things do work for the good of thoſe that love God.

Second Conſolation is this, That no temptation ſhall ever take hold of us, but ſuch as God will either make us able to bear, or make a way to eſcape out of it. We can be in no condition caſt ſo low, but the hand of God can reach us, find us out, ſend in deliverance, and raiſe us up again.

Laſtly, Here are two general Exhortations.

Firſt, We are exhorted to the Meditation and Admiration of the power and wiſdom of God from all the Creatures. This is a duty which this Book leads us unto, for that is the end why ſo much is ſpoken concerning the works of Creation, that (as the Apoſtle ſaith) The inviſible things of him from the Creation of the world, may be clearly ſeen, being underſtood by the things that are made, even his eternal power Rom. 1,20 and Godhead.

Secondly, To glorifie God in every condition, to have good thoughts of God, to ſpeak good words for God in every condition. We are drawn to this, by conſidering how Job (though ſometimes in vehemency of ſpirit he over-ſhot himſelf, yet he recovers again, and) breaths ſweetly concerning God, ſhewing that his ſpirit was full of ſweetneſs towards God, even when God was writing bitter things againſt him; as when he ſaith, Though he kill me, yet will I truſt in him; then which, what could expreſs a more holy and ſubmiſſive frame of heart, in reference to the dealings of God with him? Surely he thought God was very good to him, who had that good thought of God, To truſt him, even while he ſlew him.

Theſe things being propoſed concerning the Book in general, will help to caſt a light thorough the whole at one view. And though at this time I ſhall not enter upon expounding of the Text it ſelf, yet you have had in ſome ſence, the Expoſition of the whole Text. If you carefully lay up theſe Rules, they will much advantage and advance your profit, when we come to the Explication of any part.

AN EXPOSITION WITH Practical Obſervations UPON THE THREE FIRST CHAPTERS Of the Book of JOB.

CHAP. 1. Verſ. 1, 2.

There was a man in the Land of Uz, whoſe Name was JOB, and that man was perfect and upright, and one that feared God, and eſchewed evil.

And there were born unto him ſeven ſons and three daughters.

THis Chapter may be divided into three Parts; whereof the firſt contains a Deſcription of JOB in his proſperous eſtate; from the firſt, to the end of the fifth Verſe.

In the ſecond, we have the firſt part of JOB's Affliction; ſet down from the ſixth verſe, to the end of the nineteenth.

In the third, JOB's Carriage and Behaviour in, or his Conqueſt and Victory over that firſt Trial, are diſcovered; this concludes in the three laſt verſes of the Chapter.

The Deſcription of his proſperous Eſtate is given us in three Points.

Firſt, What he was in perſon, Verſe 1.

Secondly, What in his Poſſeſſions: We have an Inventory of his Goods, Verſe 2, 3, 4.

Thirdly, What in his Practice of Holineſs, Verſe 5. Where one Example or Inſtance is ſet down for all the reſt.

The Book begins with the Deſcription of his Perſon, in the firſt Verſe; where JOB is deſcribed by that which is Accidental, and by that which is Eſſential.

By Accidentals; ſo he is deſcribed;

1. By the Place where he dwelt; There was a man in the Land of Uz.

2. By his Name; whoſe Name was JOB.

The Eſſentials are four qualifications, which were eſſential to him, not as a Rational man, but as a Holy man; And that man was,

1. Perfect. 2. Upright.
3. One that feared God. 4. Eſchewed evil.

As they who write the Acts or Stories of great men, uſually give us ſome Deſcription of their Perſons, before they ſet down their Undertakings or Atchievments (as you ſee in 1 Sam. 17. 4, 5, 6, 7. how the great Giant Goliah is deſcribed) ſo here, the Holy Ghoſt, by the Pen-man of this Book, being to record a glorious Combat, a Combat not with Fleſh and Blood alone, but with Principalities and Powers, a wreſtling with mighty and ſtrong temptations, firſt gives us (if we may ſo ſpeak) the Proſopography of this Divine Hero's Soul, the Lineaments and Abilities of his Spirit. This was the height, and this the ſtature of the Combatant; ſuch were his Limbs, and ſuch his Weapons; there he dwelt, and this was his Name.

There was a man in the Land of Uz, whoſe name was JOB.

There was] That refers us either to the truth of the Story, or to the time of the Story. Such a man there was, that's certain. Such a man there was, but the time when is uncertain. It refers us to the time only indefinitely: There was ſuch a man, but when, is not exactly and preciſely ſet down. The Scripture (we know) doth often keep an exact account of years (the Scripture is the Guide and Key of all Chronologie) and ſometimes it leaves things in general for the time, and only ſaith thus much, ſuch a thing was, and ſuch a perſon was; ſo here. Yet ſome have undertaken to define (what the Spirit of God hath left at large) the preciſe time wherein JOB lived *; and tell us in what year of the world theſe things were done: But I deſire not to be ſo accurate, unleſs the Rule were ſo too. Only thus much we may ſafely ſay, that JOB lived between the times of Abraham and Moſes; and nearer Moſes then Abraham; and for that, I conceive, there is ground ſufficient. There are theſe two ſpecial Reaſons, why it ſhould be circumſcribed within that limit.

* An. 2236 from the Creation, 574 years after the Flood; 282 years after Abraham. Bolduc. in loc.

1. Becauſe JOB offered Sacrifice at that time in his own Countrey; which, after the giving of the Law, and ſetting up of a publick worſhip, was forbidden all, both Jews and Proſelytes. They that were acquainted with the wayes of God, knew they muſt not worſhip, by Sacrifice, any where but before the Tabernacle, or (after the Temple was built) at the Temple.

2. Becauſe in the whole Book, there is not the leaſt print, or the leaſt mention of any thing, which did concern thoſe great and glorious paſſages of God's providence towards the people of Iſrael, either in their going out of Egypt, or in their journey through the Wilderneſs to Canaan. Now in a Diſpute of this nature (ſuch as was between JOB and his Friends) there would have been frequent occaſion to have conſidered and inſtanced ſome of thoſe things. There is ſcarce any Book in Scripture, that bears date after that great and wonderful Diſpenſation of God, but it makes mention of, or refers to ſome paſſages concerning them.

Again, for the time; that which ſome collect to clear it, is from the Genealogie of JOB: There are three ſpecial opinions concerning the Line of his Pedigree.

One, That he deſcended from Nahor, who was Brother to Abraham, Gen. 22. 21. It was told Abraham, behold Milcah ſhe hath born Children to thy Brother Nahor, Uz his firſt-born, and Buz his Brother, &c. This Uz who was the firſt-born of Nahor, Abraham's Brother, is conceived to have given denomination to the Land of Uz, and ſo from him JOB to be deſcended.

Another opinion there is (maintained by many) that JOB was of the Line of Eſau, and that he was called Jobab by Moſes, Gen. 36. 33. And Bela died, and Jobab the Son of Zerah of Bozrah reigned in his ſtead. This Jobab, who was a Deſcendant, or one of the Dukes of the Line of Eſau, they ſay was JOB. But why the name Jobab ſhould be contracted into JOB, I ſee little reaſon offered.

A third Opinion for his Deſcent is, that he came from the Children of Abraham by his ſecond Wife Keturah, Gen. 25. Where it is ſaid, that Abraham by her had divers ſons, and that he gave them Portions, and ſent them Eaſtward into the Eaſt-Country; and from Midian (who was the fourth Son of Abraham by that ſecond Marriage) our Genealogies do poſitively and directly affirm, that JOB was deſcended.

That may ſuffice for the time: for bringing of him within a narrower limit, I have no grounds but conjectural.

A man.] He is not called A man (here) barely as the Philoſophers Animal rationale, &c. as Man is oppoſed to a Beaſt; nor barely is he called a Man to diſtinguiſh his Sex, as a Man is oppoſed to a Woman: but there is ſomewhat more in the expreſſion; he is called a Man by way of excellency. And for the clearing and opening of that, we may conſider that there are three words in Scripture-Original by which man is expreſs'd.

אדם

1. Man is called Adam. That was the proper name of the firſt man, and it became the common name for all men ſince. So man was called from the matter of which he was made; Adam from Adamah, becauſe (as the reaſon is given, Gen. 2. 7.) God made man duſt out of the Earth, or, (as we tranſlate) of the duſt of the Earth.

אנש

2. Man is called Enoſh: So he is called in regard of the infirmities, weakneſſes and ſorrows which he hath contracted by ſin, ſince the Fall. Sin made the red earth weak and brittle earth indeed, earth moiſtned with tears, and mixt with troubles.

איש

3. He is called Iſh, which the Criticks in that Language, ſay, comes from, and hath alliance with two words; one ſignifying Being or Exiſtence, and the other Heat or Fire. So that the excellency of man's being, the heat, courage and ſpirit that flames in him, is ſet forth in that word; and that's the word here in the Text, There was a man; it is Iſh, an excellent, a worthy man, a man of an excellent ſpirit, a man of men, a man fitted to honour God, and govern men. And that it is ſo uſed in Scripture I will give you an Inſtance or two, that you may ſee it is not a bare conjecture.

בני אדם

בני איש

In the forty ninth Pſalm, David, as it were, ſummons and divides Mankind. In the firſt verſe he ſummons; Hear this, all ye people, give ear all ye inhabitants of the world. In the ſecond verſe he divides; Both low and high, rich and poor together. The word in the Hebrew for high, is Bene-Iſh, Sons of Iſh; and the word for low, is Bene-Adam, Sons of Adam. If we ſhould tranſlate the Text directly, according to the Letter, the words muſt run, ſons of men and ſons of men; for ſons of Adam, and ſons of Iſh, are both tranſlated ſons of men; yet when they are ſet together in a way of oppoſition, the one ſignifieth low, and the other high; and ſo our Tranſlators render it according to the ſence, not Sons of men and Sons of men, but low and high. Junius tranſlates to this ſence, though in more words; as well they who are born of mean men, as they who are born of the honourable.

A like Inſtance we have, Iſa. 2. 9. The mean man boweth down, and the great man humbleth himſelf. The mean man, that is, the Son of Adam; and the great man, that is, the Son of Iſh; the great man, in regard of his excellency, is by ſuch a circumlocution deſcribed to be more then a man: not only the ſon of man, but the ſon of an honourable and great man. So I find the word divers times uſed, to ſignifie the excellency and greatneſs of the perſon.

Then further, it ſignifieth, not only a man that is great; but it ſignifieth a man in authority. There was a man, that is, an excellent man, a man of worth: There was a man, that is, a man in authority. It ſignifies a Magiſtrate; and ſo in divers places of Scripture, Man is put for a Magiſtrate; eſpecially, when it is expreſt as here, by Iſh; Gen. 43. 11. Carry a Preſent to the man; ſcil. to the Governour of the Countrey. Jer. 5. 1. Go through Jeruſalem, and ſearch, and ſee if you can find a man. What, were men ſo ſcarce in Jeruſalem at that time? Was there ſuch a dearth of men, that a man could not be found? Surely no; Jeruſalem had throngs of men in every Street. The meaning is then explained in the words following; if there be any that executeth judgment: that is, if there be a Magiſtrate, a publick man, that's the man I mean.

So in Numb. 27. 16. We find the word to ſignifie a Magiſtrate. Let the Lord, the God of the Spirits of all Fleſh, ſet a man over the Congregation. A man, that is, a Magiſtrate; for there, that's the buſineſs; if you read the Text, you will find it, a man in authority, a man fit to rule. And that is it which is meant in Acts 17. 31. concerning Chriſt, God (ſaith he) hath appointed a day wherein he will judge the world by that man whom he hath ordained. It noteth Chriſt the man in power, in authority, becauſe all power in Heaven and in Earth is committed to him. So you know it was uſual among the Romans to call their Magiſtrates by the Names of The men; as the Triumviri, the Septemviri, the Decemviri; to call them ſometimes the Three men; ſometimes the Seven men, ſometimes the Ten men. Thoſe who were the ſpecial men in authority, that were men in place and eminency, they carried away the name of men (as it were) from all men, as if they were the only men.

Homer begins with ἄνδρα μοι ἔννεπε μοῦσα. Virgil like him, Arma virumq; cano.

So that we have theſe two things to take notice of, when it is ſaid here that JOB was a man; you muſt carry it further then the word is ordinarily taken: He was a great man, he was a man in Authority, a Magiſtrate. Some carry the Magiſtracy ſo high, as to ſet him on a Throne; affirming that he was a King, a point very much contended for by divers Expoſitors: but that he was a Magiſtrate in authority, a Chief in his Countrey, is clear by that which is expreſs'd of him in Chap. 29. Where he ſpeaks of his deciding mens rights, and executions of Juſtice.

In the Land of Uz.] I will not trouble you with any Geographical Diſcourſe: In a word, we may conſider three things about Uz.

1. Why it was called ſo.
2. Where it was ſeated.
3. What manner of People they were that dwelt in Uz.

Firſt, For the Name; let it be taken from Uz, the name of a Man. And there were three called by that Name in Scripture, Gen. 10. 23. Gen. 22. 21. Gen. 36. 28. From either of theſe JOB's Countrey might derive its Name; but from which of theſe, would be (I think) a nice debate; yet it is rather aſcribed to Uz or Huz, the eldeſt ſon of Nahor, Gen. 22. 21.

Secondly, For the place where it was ſeated; it is clear that it was upon the Borders of the Sabeans, and of the Caldeans, and of the Arabians, thoſe Eaſtern People. Some affirm that the Lot of the half Tribe of Manaſſes on the other ſide Jordan, which was ſet forth for them when the People of Iſrael came into Canaan, was the very place where JOB lived, and that was called Vz. It is clear, that it was near thoſe Parts above-mentioned. Firſt, from Lam. 4. 21. There the Prophet Jeremiah ſpeaking of Vz, ſaith, Rejoyce and be glad, O Daughter of Edom, that dwelleſt in the Land of Vz. And Jer. 25. 20. He ſpeaks again of the Land of Vz: All the mingled people, and all the Kings of the Land of Vz, they ſhall drink of the Cup. He mentions the Cup alſo in that place, Lam. 4. Rejoyce and be glad, O Daughter of Edom, that dwelleſt in the Land of Vz; the Cup alſo ſhall paſs through unto thee. Secondly, Vz bordered upon thoſe Countries; for theſe People made out their Parties, invaded, ſlew and took away JOB's Eſtate, Cattel and Servants; therefore the place, in all probability, lay near theſe Countries.

For the Condition and Manners of the People; it is generally received, that they were a People prophane in their Lives, and ſuperſtitious, at leaſt, in their Worſhip: Edumeans and Edomites, the Deſcendants of Eſau, hear ill all the Scripture over. Among theſe JOB lived, among theſe JOB governed; there he exerciſed thoſe precious Graces, and practiſed thoſe excellent Duties both of Holineſs toward God, and of Juſtice toward men. It was in the midſt of a ſinful and perverſe Nation, in the Land of Vz.

Thence obſerve, Firſt, God hath his Servants in all places, in the worſt places.

There was never any Air ſo bad, but that a Servant of God might breath in it. Here God had a choice piece, even in the Land of Vz, a place of prophaneneſs; here was Bethel in Bethaven, a Houſe of God in a Land of wickedneſs. Lot dwelt in Sodom, Joſeph in Egypt, David in Meſech and in Kedar, there were Saints in Cæſar's (wicked Nero's) Houſhold. Babylon holds many of God's people; yet let them not make ſuch places their refuge, much leſs their election: but remember the Call, Come out of her my people.

Secondly, We may obſerve from hence (this being ſpoken of JOB, to ſet him forth in the excellency of his ſpiritual condition, that he lived in the Land of Vz) That

It is a great honour and a high commendation to be good, and do good amongſt thoſe that are evil.

You ſhall be recorded for it. This was one reaſon why the place is named, that the Honour of JOB might be lifted up; that he was good, not by the example and encouragement, but againſt the example of others; he was a leading-man himſelf: though he lived amongſt thoſe that were ſcoffers and wicked, yet JOB was holy. As they ſay concerning the Affection of Love, it is moſt unnatural for a man to hate thoſe that love him; it is civil for men to love thoſe that love them; but this is truly Chriſtian, for a man to love thoſe that hate him and do him wrong. So in regard of living and converſing, as of loving and affecting, we may ſay, it is a moſt wicked thing to be naught among thoſe that are good; that aggravateth a man's ſinfulneſs, to be unholy while he converſeth with thoſe that are holy: It is a good thing to be good with the good, to take example by them; but it is a moſt excellent thing, a glorious thing to be good among thoſe that are ſtark naught, to worſhip God aright among Idolaters, to fear God among thoſe that have no fear of God before their eyes, to be perfect among hypocrites, to be upright among thoſe that are unjuſt, to eſchew evil among thoſe that are altogether wrapt about with evil: this was the honour and commendation of JOB. For a man to be as LOT in Sodom, never touched with Sodom's wickedneſs, to keep himſelf pure and ſincere, and without rebuke in the midſt of a crooked and perverſe Generation, to ſhine as a light in the midſt of darkneſs; this brings honour both to God and man. Phil. 2. 15.

Thirdly, From the place where JOB lived, we may obſerve,

Grace will preſerve it ſelf in the midſt of the greateſt oppoſition.

It is ſuch a Fire as no water can wholly quench or put out. True Grace will keep it ſelf ſound and clean among thoſe who are leprous and unclean; it is ſuch a thing as overcomes and maſters all the evil that is about it: God hath put ſuch a mighty power into Grace, that if it once poſſeſs the heart in truth, though there be but a little of it, though there be but as much as a grain of Muſtard-ſeed, not all the wickedneſs in the world, no nor all the Devils in Hell can diſpoſſeſs it. As all the water in the ſalt Sea cannot make the Fiſh ſalt, but ſtill the Fiſh retains its freſhneſs; ſo all the wickedneſs and filthineſs that is in the world, cannot deſtroy, cannot defile true Grace; that will bear up its head, and hold up it ſelf for ever.

And this man was perfect and upright, one that feared God, and eſchewed evil.

Perfect] Not that he had a Legal Perfection; ſuch a perfection as the Papiſts now contend for, and aſſert poſſibly attainable, yea, actually attained by many in this life: For what is man that he ſhould be clean? And JOB himſelf profeſſeth, Chap. 9. 20. If I ſay I am perfect; it ſhall alſo prove me perverſe. He acknowledgeth, Chap. 7. 20. I have ſinned. The perfection therefore here ſpoken of, is not an abſolute, a legal perfection. תם

For the clearing of the word, we may conſider there is a twofold perfection aſcribed to the Saints in this life; a perfection of Juſtification, a perfection of Sanctification.

The firſt of theſe, in a ſtrict ſence, is a compleat perfection. The Saints are compleat in Chriſt, they are perfectly juſtified; there is not any ſin left uncovered, nor any guilt left unwaſhed in the blood of Chriſt, not the leaſt ſpot, but is taken away: His Garment is large enough to cover all our nakedneſs and deformities. In this reſpect they may be called perfect, they are perfectly juſtified: By one Offering Chriſt hath perfected for ever them that are ſanctified, Heb. 10. 14.

Then there is a perfection of holineſs or of ſanctification; and that is called ſo, either in regard of the beginnings of, or in regard of deſires after, and aims at perfection.

The Saints even in this life have a perfect beginning of Holineſs, becauſe they are begun to be ſanctified in every part; they are ſanctified throughout, in ſoul, and body, and ſpirit, as the Apoſtle diſtinguiſheth, 1 Theſ. 5. 23. Though every part be not throughout ſanctified, yet they are ſanctified in every part throughout; and this is a perfection. When the work of ſanctification is begun in all parts, it is a perfect work beginning.

They are likewiſe perfect in regard of their Deſires and intendments. Perfect Holineſs is the aim of the Saints on earth; it is the reward of the Saints in heaven. The thing which they drive at here, is perfection, therefore they themſelves are called perfect. As God accepts of the will for the deed, ſo he expreſſeth the deed by the will; he interpreteth him to be a perfect man, who would be perfect; and calls that perſon perfect, who deſires to have all his imperfections cured. That is a ſecond underſtanding how JOB was perfect.

A third way is this; He was perfect comparatively, comparing him with thoſe who were either openly wicked, or but openly holy; he was a perfect man, he was a man without ſpot, compared with thoſe that were either all over ſpotted with filthineſs, or only painted with godlineſs.

Or thus, We may ſay the perfection here ſpoken of, is the perfection of ſincerity. JOB was ſincere, he was ſound at the heart. He did not act a part, or perſonate Religion, but was a religious perſon. He was not guilded, but Gold. So the word is interpreted. Some render it, JOB was a ſimple man, not as ſimple is put for weak and fooliſh, but as ſimple is put for plain-hearted, one that is not (as the Apoſtle James phraſeth it) a double-minded man; JOB was a ſimple-minded man, or a ſingle-minded man, one that had not a heart and a heart; he was not a compound, ſpeaking one thing, and meaning another; he meant what he ſpake, and he would ſpeak his mind. It is the ſame word that is uſed in Jacob's Character, Gen. 25. 27. Eſau was a cunning hunter, a man of the field, and

Jacob was Iſh Tam, a plain man. So that to be a perfect man, is to be a plain man; one whoſe heart you may know by his Tongue, and read the man's ſpirit in his actions. Some are ſuch Juglers, that you can ſee little of their ſpirits in their lives, you can learn but little of their minds by their words; Jacob was a plain man, and ſo was JOB; ſome tranſlate it, a ſound man. It is the ſame Expreſſion that is given of Noah; He was [Tamim] in his generation; or, he was ſound, upright-hearted or perfect with God, Gen. 6. 9. And it is that which God ſpeaks to Abraham, Gen. 17. 2. Walk before me, and be thou [Tamim,] be thou perfect, or ſound, or upright, or plain in thy walking before me. In Exod. 28. 30. We read of the Urim and Thummim on the Breaſtplate of the High-Prieſt. Thummim comes from this Root, and ſignifies the integrity of heart and life required in the High-Prieſt, as Urim did the light and clearneſs of his knowledge.

ישר And upright.] The former word which was tranſlated perfect, in other Texts is rendered upright; but when we have both the Expreſſions together, as here, we muſt diſtinguiſh the ſence: It is not a Tautologie. Then the former being taken for inward ſoundneſs, plainneſs and ſincerity; this latter (to be upright) may be taken for outward Juſtice, righteouſneſs and equity, reſpecting all his dealings in the world. He was a perfect man, that is, he was plain-hearted, and he was plain-dealing too, which is the meaning of He was upright: So the one refers to the integrity of his ſpirit, the other to the honeſty of his wayes; His heart was plain, and his dealings were ſquare. This he expreſſeth fully in the 29 and 31 Chapters of this Book; which are, as it were, a Comment upon this word upright. There you may read what is meant by uprightneſs; his fairneſs in all parts, both of Commutative and Diſtributive Juſtice. In thoſe things that concerned Commutative Juſtice, when JOB bought or ſold, traded or bargained, promiſed or covenanted, he ſtood to all uprightly. Take him as he was a Magiſtrate; when JOB ſate in Judgment, or had any Buſineſs brought before him, he gave every one his due; he did not ſpare or ſmite upon Ends: he did neither at any time juſtifie the wicked, or condemn the godly; but was upright in Judgment: He was not byaſs'd by Affection or Intereſt; he was not carried away by hopes or fears; but kept the path of Juſtice in all his diſpenſations toward that people among whom he lived. This is to be an upright man; and ſo the Prophet tells us, Iſa. 26. 7. The way of the juſt is uprightneſs; that is, they are upright in their wayes; and more, uprightneſs in the abſtract. We have a like expreſſion, Prov. 29. 27. Thoſe that are upright in the way, are an abomination to the wicked. Uprightneſs doth refer to the way wherein a man goes in his outward dealings and diſpenſations towards men. There is a twofold Uprightneſs of our wayes. 1. Uprightneſs of words. 2. Of works. So upright walking is expounded and branched forth, Pſal. 15. 2, 3. He that walketh uprightly, and worketh righteouſneſs, and ſpeaketh the truth in his heart. He that backbiteth not with his Tongue. This is the ſecond part of JOB's deſcription; He was perfect and upright.

Thirdly, He was One that feared God.

Fearing God.] The Fear of God is taken two wayes. Either for that natural and inward worſhip of God; and ſo the fear of God is a holy filial affection, awing the whole man to obey the whole will of God: That is Fear as it is an Affection. Or the Fear of God is put for the external or inſtituted worſhip of God. So that a man fearing God, is as much as this; a man worſhipping God according to his own will, or according to his mind and direction. Now whenas JOB is ſaid to be a man fearing God, you muſt take it both theſe wayes: He had that holy affection of fear with which we muſt worſhip God (as we are taught, Heb. 12. 28. Let us have Grace whereby we may ſerve God with reverence and godly fear. And, ſerve the Lord with fear, and rejoyce before him with trembling, Pſ. 2. Fear is that affection with which we muſt worſhip and ſerve God.) And JOB likewiſe did perform that worſhip to God which he required; that is called Fear, and the exerciſe of it, fearing God. Fearing God, is worſhipping God; as you may ſee clearly by two Texts of Scripture compared together In the Fourth of Matthew, verſe 10. Chriſt ſaith to the Devil, It is written, thou ſhalt worſhip the Lord thy God, and him only ſhalt thou ſerve. Compare this with Deut. 6. 13. And there you ſhall have it thus expreſt; Thou ſhalt fear the Lord thy God: That which in one place is worſhip, in the other is fear. Again, Mat. 15. 9. In vain (ſaith Chriſt) do they worſhip me, teaching for Doctrine the Commandments of men. Now the Prophet Iſaiah (from whence that is taken) Chap. 29. 14. expreſſeth it thus; Foraſmuch as their fear towards me is taught by the precepts of men. They worſhip me according to the precepts of men, ſaith Chriſt. Their Fear is taught by the precepts of men, ſaith the Prophet: So that Fear and Worſhip are the ſame. Fearing God doth include both the Affection of a Worſhipper, and the Duty or Act of worſhipping.

The fourth part or line of JOB's Character, is, his Eſchewing evil.

Evil is here taken for the evil of ſin. Before ſin came into the world, there was no evil in the world: God ſaw every thing that he had made, and behold it was very good. But when ſin came, which was the firſt, and is the chiefeſt evil, it brought in with it all other evils. Sin hath in it the whole nature of evil, and all the degrees of evil; and from it proceed all evil effects: Hence it is eminently called evil. Sickneſs, and Death, and Hell, are called evil; how much rather that, but for which theſe evils had never been? how much rather that, with which theſe compared, may be called good? Further; Evil is put here indefinitely: He was one that eſchewed evil; not this or that evil; but evil, that is, all evil; this indefinite is univerſal. And then further, we are to take evil here, as himſelf afterward expounds it in his practice, not only for the acts of evil, but all the occaſions, the appearances, the provocations and incentives of, or unto evil, or whatſoever might lead him into evil; for thus he inſtanceth in one particular; I made a Covenant with mine eyes, why then ſhould I think upon a Maid? Chap. 31. 1.

Eſchewed.] In this word the prudence of JOB ſhines as bright as his holineſs; who, having received a great ſtock and treaſure of Grace, now watches to preſerve it, and oppoſes whatſoever was deſtructive to the life or growth of the inner man. That man ſhews he hath both Money, and his wits about him, who ſuſpects and provides againſt Thieves.

JOB eſchewed evil.] There is much in that expreſſion. It is more to ſay a man doth eſchew evil, then to ſay a man doth not commit evil. It had been too bare an expreſſion, to ſay, JOB did not commit evil; but when it is ſaid, JOB eſchewed evil, this ſhews that not only the hand and tongue of JOB did not meddle with evil, but that his heart was turned from evil. For eſchewing is a turning aſide with reluctancy and abhorrency; ſo the Hebrew (Sar) imports; JOB did abhor evil, as well as not commit evil. As there is a great deal of difference between theſe two, the doing of good, and a delight in doing good; between being at peace, and following of peace. A man may do good, and not be a lover of good, a lover of the Commandments of God, a delighter in them; he may be at peace, and not be a lover and follower of peace. So a man may be one that commits not ſuch and ſuch ſins; he may do no hurt, and yet in the mean time, he may be one that loves thoſe ſins he commits not: Such an one is not preſently a man that eſchews thoſe ſins; for to eſchew evil, noteth the activity of the ſpirit againſt thoſe evils: That is the ſpiritualneſs and ſtrength of holineſs: JOB's heart did (as it were) riſe againſt evil. Some expound it by war; as if under this expreſſion, were meant the enmity that JOB did bear againſt evil; that it was ſuch an eſchewing, as when a man hateth his enemy, and makes war againſt him, and doth by all means oppoſe him; ſo there was, as it were, a deadly feud, an irreconcileable enmity between JOB and evil. He was a man that feared God, and eſchewed evil. So much for the opening of that firſt Verſe; wherein you have the firſt part of the Deſcription of JOB's proſperous eſtate; and that is, what he was in his Perſon.

That man was perfect and upright.

We will obſerve hence ſomewhat in the general firſt, and then ſomewhat more particularly.

You ſee here, when God comes to deſcribe a man, and to ſet him forth in his Glory and Excellency, where the Spirit of God begins, what is the chief and firſt thing which God takes notice of; it is his Grace. When he would ſet forth what a man JOB was, how bleſſed and how happy; here he ſets his Pen firſt, to deſcribe what his ſpiritual eſtate was. Hence then this in the general:

First, Gracious Habits and Spiritual Bleſſings are the choiceſt of all Bleſſings.

If God have given a man Grace, he hath the beſt and the choiceſt of all that which God can give. God hath given us his Son, and God hath given us his Spirit, and God hath given us the Graces of his Spirit; theſe are the fineſt of the Flower, and the Honey out of the Rock of Mercy. Though you ſhould not come to Children, though you ſhould not come to the other part of the Inventory, to Sheep, and Camels, and Oxen, and Aſſes; if you are in the firſt part of the Deſcription, that you have a perfect heart, and upright life, and the fear of God in your inward parts, and a holy turning againſt every evil, your lot is fallen in a fair place, and you have a goodly heritage: they that have this, need not be diſcontented at their own, nor envious at the condition of any other; they have the principal Verb, the one thing neceſſary.

Again, When God deſcribeth a gracious man, you ſee he goes thorough; he ſets him forth in every thing that concerns his ſpiritual eſtate; Perfect and upright, fearing God, and eſchewing evil. From hence, this alſo in the general.

Secondly, Where one Grace is, there is every Grace.

Grace is laid into the Soul in all the parts of it, and there is ſomewhat of every Grace laid into the Soul. We have not one man one Grace, and another man another Grace; but every man hath every Grace that hath any Grace at all. I do not ſay that every man hath every Grace, or that the ſame man hath every Grace in the ſame height and degree: Grace in ſome is more eminent then in others; and the ſame man may have one Grace more eminent then another; he may have one Grace (like Saul among the people) higher by head and ſhoulders then the reſt in his throng of Graces; yet that man hath ſomewhat of every Grace, that hath any Grace; all Grace goes together. Thus in the general.

Particularly; This man was perfect. That is (as we have explained it) he was ſincere and plain-hearted. Obſerve from hence,

First, It is Sincerity that eſpecially commends us unto God.

As JOB's Graces are preferred in his Deſcription, before his Riches, ſo ſincerity is preferred before all his other Graces.

Sincerity is that which makes us ſo acceptable and pleaſing unto God: He was a man that was perfect; you ſee that is put in the firſt place. And indeed, whatſoever a man hath beſides, be a man never ſo juſt in his dealings, could you ſuppoſe a man worſhipping God in all his Ordinances, and avoiding all manner of evil, yet if there be doubling and falſneſs in his ſpirit, all is caſt off, all is rejected of God as abominable. Therefore here the foundation is laid, here is the bottom-Grace, Perfection, Sincerity. Whether it be a diſtinct Grace, or whether it be that which doth accompany every Grace, and gives it life and beauty in the eye of God (for my own part I conceive Sincerity is not properly a diſtinct Grace, but the perfection of every Grace) it is that which doth commend a man unto God. Chriſt tells the Angel of the Church of Sardis, I have not found thy works perfect. Not full; ſaith the Greek Text. There wanted ſomewhat within. Sincerity is the filling up of all our Duties: Without that, they are but empty ſounds, as ſounding braſs, and as a tinkling Cymbal.

He was perfect; that is, he was ſincere. Obſerve then,

Secondly, Sincere and ſound-hearted perſons are in God's eſteem perfect perſons.

It is not all that you can do, or all that you can ſay, or all that you can ſuffer, or all that you can loſe, that can make you perfect in the eſteem of God, without ſincerity; add ſincerity but to the leaſt, and it gives you the denomination of perfect. God accepts the very Goats-hair, the leaſt offering from one that is ſincere; he accounts it a rich Preſent, and calls the Preſenter perfect; but he will not receive the greateſt Riches, whole Droves of Cattel for Offerings, the greateſt and mightieſt Services, from one that is unſound. Truth of Grace is our perfection here; in Heaven we ſhall have Perfection as well as Truth.

Further, In that upon this perfectneſs and plainneſs of heart, there is preſently added uprightneſs: Obſerve from thence,

First, Where the heart is ſincere towards God, the wayes are juſt and honeſt before men.

And Secondly, It is a great honour and an ornament unto our Profeſſion of Godlineſs, to be juſt and upright in our dealings toward men.

This is put as a ſpecial part of JOB's excellency, that he was upright, ſcil. in his dealings. There is much ſcandal caſt upon the Profeſſion of the Name of God, through a defect in this. The world ſaith, theſe men profeſs, they take the Name of God upon them, but they are as unanſwerable to their promiſes, as unjuſt in their tradings, &c. as any other. Then make proof of your perfection in profeſſion, by the uprightneſs of your converſation.

Perfect and upright, one that feared God.

Here we have fearing God added to perfect and upright. Obſerve hence,

First, Moral Integrity and Moral Honeſty, without the Fear of God, can never render us acceptable unto God.

There are ſome that pleaſe themſelves in this, that they are plain-hearted. (It is poſſible for a man in a fence to be ſo, and yet not to fear God) or they give every man his due, &c. Theſe are good; but in JOB we may learn, on what theſe muſt be founded, whence they come, when we pleaſe God in them; they come from the Fear of God; that muſt be the ſpring of uprightneſs and perfection, elſe they are only Heathen-Virtues, and not Chriſtian-Graces.

God delights in nothing we do, unleſs we do it in his fear. As Joſeph ſaid to his Brethren when they feared ſome hard meaſure from him; I fear God. When this fear of God ties our hands, it ſhews the love of God fills our hearts. Not to wrong man becauſe we fear God, is an argument of more than man.

Gen.42.18.

Fearing God.] Hence obſerve,

Secondly, Holy Fear contains in it every Grace we receive from God, and all the worſhip we tender up to God.

Fear is a comprehenſive word; it is more then a particular Grace. When Abraham had offered up his Son Iſaac, that was a work of mighty Faith, and the Faith of Abraham is wonderfully commended by it; but God ſpeaks thus, Now I know thou feareſt me. Fear containeth Faith, and Fear containeth Love too. Though perfect love caſt out tormenting fear, 1 John 4. 18. yet perfect love calls in obeying fear. Hear the Concluſion of all, ſaith the Preacher, Eccleſ. 12. 13. Fear God, and keep his Commandments; for this is the whole duty of man: or, this is whole man. Fear is all duty, and every Grace.

Fearing God, and eſchewing evil.

Hence this from the Connexion. Thirdly, Holy Fear keeps the Heart and Life clean.

The Fear of the Lord is clean, ſaith David; Pſal. 19. Clean, not only in it ſelf, formally clean; but effective: it makes clean, and keeps clean the Heart and Life. Fear is an armed man at the Gate, which examines all, and ſtops every one from entring that is unfit. It ſtands as a watchman on the Tower, and it looks every way, to ſee what's coming to the Soul; if evil come, fear will not admit it. And therefore in Scripture you ſhall have theſe two often put together, fearing God, and eſchewing evil. Nay eſchewing evil is not only put as an effect of the fear of God, but it is put into the very definition it ſelf of the fear of God. The Fear of the Lord is to depart from evil.

He eſchewed evil.

From hence obſerve alſo, First, Godly perſons do not only forbear ſin, but they abhor ſin.

They have not only their hands bound from it, but they have their hearts ſet againſt it. Holy enmity againſt ſin, is the temper of a godly man's heart; he eſchews evil.

Secondly, A Godly man's oppoſition of ſin is univerſal; it is againſt all ſin.

JOB eſchewed evil, all evil; there was no picking of this or that particular evil to oppoſe, but whatſoever came under the name and notion of ſin, Job's ſpirit turned againſt it. Enmity is againſt the kind.

Thirdly, Godly perſons do not only avoid the acts of evil, but all the occaſions of evil.

JOB eſchewed evil, whatſoever led him to evil, all the appearance of evil, as the Apoſtle ſpeaks. We cannot avoid the ſin, if we will not avoid the occaſion. When Solomon cautions to take heed of the path of the wicked, he uſeth four expreſſions, and all to the ſame purpoſe; Avoid it, Prov.4.15. ſaith he, paſs not by it, turn from it, and paſs away; to ſhew unto us, that if we would keep from the acts of ſin, we muſt keep from the way of ſin.

The ſecond thing whereby his proſperous eſtate is ſet out unto us, is what his Poſſeſſions were. You have a particular Inventory of his Eſtate in the ſecond and third Verſes; and you have the total ſum caſt up after all the particulars are ſet down; and it amounts to thus much, that Job was the greateſt of all the men in the Eaſt. In the Second verſe, you have the firſt part of his Goods ſet down, his Jewels, his Children.

Verſe 2. And there were born unto him ſeven Sons, and three Daughters.

This Verſe contains the firſt part of Job's outward happineſs; the Bleſſings of Children. Concerning whom, we have three things offered. 1. Their Number; Ten. . The diſtinction of Sexes; Sons and Daughters. 3. Their mutual Love and Concord, v. 4.

There is little in the words that needs explication; therefore where the Scripture is plain and clear, I will not ſpend time.

There were born unto him.] His Children were not born againſt him, but born unto him, given as Comforts and Bleſſings to him.

Seven Sons and three Daughters.] * The number ſeven, and the number three, are numbers of perfection. Some trouble themſelves much about them: But I will not ſtay upon Numbers.

* The word Banim, ſons, comes from Banah, to build; becauſe ſons and daughters build up their Fathers houſe, and continue the Family; or, becauſe they are (as it were) built and framed out of their parents.

There were born unto him ſeven Sons and three Daughters.

Here obſerve,

Firſt, Children are the Bleſſings of the Lord.

They are put here as a part of his inheritance: Psa.127.13. Children are an heritage of the Lord, and the fruit of the womb is his reward. They are ſpecial Bleſſings. Children (as it is obſerved) are a reſemblance of our Immortality, becauſe a man revives again, lives anew (as it were) in every Child; he is born again (in a Civil ſence) when others are born to him. There are ſome who account their Children but Bills of Charges; but God puts them upon the account of our Mercies: How holily and piouſly ſpeaks Jacob concerning his Children? Theſe (ſaith he) are the Children which Gen. 33.5. God hath graciouſly given thy ſervant.

Secondly, Obſerve this; Children as they are Bleſſings, and great Bleſſings; ſo they are greater Bleſſings then any outward thing elſe whatſoever.

When a deſcription is made of Job's Goods, the beſt is put firſt. Firſt, his ſpiritual Bleſſings are ſet down, then comes his outward; now Children are put in the very next degree to his Graces. What our Saviour Chriſt ſaith of a Mat.16.26. man's Soul, may be ſaid of Children: What (ſaith he) ſhall a man give in exchange for his Soul? It is true, that is ſpoken there of a man's own Soul, that it is more to himſelf then the world; but it is a truth here too, if one have a Soul given him (and to have a Child, is to have a Soul beſtowed on us) for the preſent, it is more then to have the whole world beſtowed on him. A whole world of riches is not ſo good, not ſuch goods, as one Child; therefore Children are put in the firſt place, as his choiceſt and chiefeſt outward Bleſſings.

Then from the number of his Children, he had many Children; he had ſeven Sons and three Daughters.

Obſerve, Thirdly, To have many Children is a great Bleſſing; and the more Children the greater the Bleſſing.

Some think themſelves bleſſed, if they may have one or two Children; one to inherit their Eſtates, one or two to delight themſelves in, to play with, or to bear their name; but if they come to a number, to a great number, then they think themſelves exceedingly burdened, then they are troubles. When God caſts up the eſtate of a bleſſed man in outward things, he ſaith not only that he hath a Child, that he is not barren; but that he hath many Children, that he hath his Quiver full of ſuch Arrows, as the expreſſion is, Pſal. 127.5. And that is made the bleſſedneſs of a man there, Happy is the man (ſaith he) that hath his Quiver full of them; that hath many arrows, ſuch are children of the youth, V. 4. There are ſome rich and covetous men, that are in this point beyond others, rich in folly: You ſhall hear them pride themſelves that they have no Children, or but few; this they conceive ſets them off in the opinion of the world, for the richer men; whereas one Child is more riches then all the things that are in the world. And we know it is an ordinary thing (though indeed it is a very ſinful thing) to ſay, 'tis true, ſuch an one is a rich man, he hath a fair eſtate, but he hath a great charge, a great many Children, as if that did take off from his riches, or make him leſs happy; as if he were the poorer, becauſe he hath a larger ſhare of that ancient firſt Bleſſing upon man, Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the Earth. Gen.1.28.

Fourthly, Note this, To have many Sons, to have moſt Sons amongſt our Children, is the greater outward Bleſſing.

JOB is deſcribed here in the moſt exact method of outward Bleſſings; he had Sons, and his Sons out-number his Daughters; he had ſeven Sons, and but three Daughters. And the reaſon why moſt Sons among Children are the greater Bleſſing, is clear; becauſe Sons bear up the Name, and are a greater ſupport unto the Family.

Fifthly, To have many Sons and Daughters too, is yet a compleater Bleſſing.

For by Daughters the Family is encreas'd, and other Families are joyned, and knit, and united to that Family. And to have Sons and Daughters both, is the perfection of that Natural Bleſſing; becauſe man was ſo made at the firſt; he was made male and female. As it is with the Soul and the Body, though the Soul be more excellent then the Body, yet the Soul alone is not ſo perfect, as when Soul and Body are together; becauſe though the Body be not ſo ſtrong in conſtitution, and noble in condition, as the Soul, yet Body and Soul in Creation were joyned together, therefore their greateſt perfection conſiſts in their union. So likewiſe it is in a Family; though Sons, in nature are more perfect, yet becauſe it was the firſt inſtitution of a Family, male and female, therefore the fulneſs and compleatneſs of the Bleſſing is in the union of both. JOB had many Sons and Daughters likewiſe; this made the Bleſſing more compleat.

And then laſtly obſerve this, Children, many Children in the Family, are in themſelves, no impediments, either of Piety toward God, or Juſtice toward man.

As ſoon as Job was deſcribed in all his Perfections, it is added, he had ſo many ſons and ſo many daughters; though he had ſo many children to look to & provide for, yet he omitted neither duty towards God, nor duty towards man. There are many who think it ſome excuſe, if not excuſe enough for their neglect, for their ſlighting holy duties, or ſlightneſs in the holy duties of Hearing, Praying, and the like; Oh, they have a great many Children, and they muſt riſe early, and they muſt work late, they can ſpare no time, or but little for the publick or private, or ſecret worſhip of God; ſpecially for any thing that is extraordinary: ſo that theſe Cares ſteal away, not only thoſe times that might be beſtowed in an extraordinary manner upon their Souls, but even the ordinary times are ſtollen away by them alſo. Further, Some think themſelves by this in part excuſed for their injuſtice toward men; they have a great Family, and if they deal ſomewhat hardly, and ſtick as cloſe as they can in all buſineſſes, they may be born with, for they have a great many Children; and they muſt look to provide for them, they elſe were worſe then Infidels; and hence they take liberty to do what honeſt Infidels were aſhamed of. Job you ſee was upright, though he had ſo many Sons, and ſo many Daughters to provide for. It is ill with thoſe, whoſe gain for their Children is loſs to their ſouls; but wo, when any to gain for their Children, loſe their ſouls; doing like thoſe in Nahum 2. 12. The Lion did tear in pieces enough for his whelps, and ſtrangled for his Lioneſſes, and filled his holes with prey, and his Dens with rapine. By the Lion, there, is meant thoſe Oppreſſors that lived in Nineveh; and by their Whelps, are meant their Children; and by Lioneſſes, their Wives; they had Wives and Children, and they muſt have Means and Eſtates for them. Job, as I may ſay, had Whelps and a Lioneſs, Wife and Children, yet he doth not tear for them. Nay, though he had ſo many to provide for, yet he rather giveth out to others. What hungry belly was not filled with his meat? and what naked back was not cloathed with his wool? He did not ſay, I have Children to feed and to cloath, and therefore you can have nothing. You ſee though he had many Children and a great Charge, yet how compleat he was in his duty to God, and in his duty to man; he failed not either in the duties of worſhip and holineſs, nor in the duties of Juſtice and Uprightneſs.

VERS. 3, 4, 5.

His ſubſtance alſo was ſeven thouſand Sheep, and three thouſand Camels, and five hundred yoke of Oxen, and five hundred She-Aſſes, and a very great Houſhold; ſo that this man was the greateſt of all the men of the Eaſt.

And his Sons went and feaſted in their houſes, every one his day, and ſent and called for their three Siſters, to eat and to drink with them.

And it was ſo, when the days of their feaſting were gone about, that Job ſent and ſanctified them, and roſe up early in the morning, and offered burnt Offerings according to the number of them all, &c.

Pſal. 127. 4, 5.

THe Holy Ghoſt having ſhewed us the qualities of Job's perſon, in the firſt Verſe, the Olive-plants round about his Table (being the firſt outward Bleſſing) in the ſecond; now proceeds to ſhew alſo his outward eſtate, his ſtock of Cattel: His Subſtance was ſeven thouſand ſheep, &c.

Concerning the outward Eſtate of Job, we may note in this third verſe,

1. The ſeveral kinds of his Stock, Sheep, Camels, Oxen and Aſſes.

2. The ſeveral numbers of each of theſe kinds; Seven thouſand Sheep, three thouſand Camels, &c.

It is ſaid, His ſubſtance was ſeven thouſand Sheep, &c. We in our Language, call the Eſtate of a man his Subſtance; and a rich man we call him a ſubſtantial man; though indeed riches are but external and accidental, yet they are called the ſubſtance of a man, becauſe they make him ſubſiſt and ſtand by himſelf, he needs not the prop and help of others.

מקנהו

ϗ ἦν τὰ κτήνη αὐτοῦ Septuagin.

The word here in the Hebrew which we tranſlate ſubſtance, is indifferent to ſignifie any poſſeſſion; but eſpecially it ſignifies poſſeſſion or ſubſtance by Cattel. Therefore in thoſe times wherein the eſtates of the great men of the earth were moſt in Cattel, this expreſſion was chiefly uſed; The Septuagint renders it, And his Cattel were ſeven thouſand ſheep, &c. So then his ſubſtance, ſcil. of Cattel, was ſeven thouſand Sheep.

Sheep.] Sheep for meat, and Sheep for cloathing; the fleſh and the fleece, both are of great uſe.

And three thouſand Camels*.] Camels were uſed in thoſe Countries for burdens, and for travel, eſpecially in long journeys. Merchants travelled with Camels; as you may read, Gen. 37. 25. Joſeph's Brethren beheld a company of Iſhmaelites which came from Gilead with their Camels, and theſe were very ſtrong for travel, being able to abide much hunger and thirſt (as the Natural Hiſtory affirms.) Some affirm they will travel ſix days together in thoſe hot Countries without drink; and therefore thoſe Eaſtern parts are ſtock'd and ſtored with Camels, beaſts ſo fit for ſervice there.

And five hundred yoke of Oxen.] Oxen for the tillage of the ground. Their Oxen are ſtrong to labour, Pſal. 144.

The Aſſes were for ordinary travel, and for ordinary burdens about the houſe.

But you may ſay, We read in the Inventory which here is made of Job's Eſtate, that he had Sheep and Camels, Oxen and Aſſes; but where was the Silver and the Gold? where was the goodly Houſhold-ſtuff, the Jewels and the Plate? here is no mention made of theſe.

I anſwer, Firſt, That without doubt Job had Silver and Gold, and precious things: It is clear that he had, when he ſaith (Chap. 31. 24.) If I have made Gold my hope, or have ſaid to the fine Gold, thou art my Confidence; it had not been proper for him to deny that Gold was his hope (in this ſence) if he had not had Gold in his poſſeſſion; or to ſay, he did not confide in fine Gold, when he had no Gold to confide in: Then he had Gold and Silver. And for Jewels, the holy Story tells us (Chap. 42. 12.) That God gave Job twice as much as he had before. And a part of what was reſtored to him, was Jewels and Ear-rings; Every man gave him a piece of Money, and every one an Ear-ring of Gold; therefore he had Jewels alſo in his poſſeſſion at firſt, or elſe they could not be doubled to him in the day of his Deliverance.

We find frequent mention in thoſe ancient times, of the riches of the Patriarchs and others, in Gold and Silver. It is expreſs'd concerning Abraham, Gen. 13. 2. That Abraham was very rich in Cattel, in Silver and in Gold. And Abraham's Servant, Gen. 24. 35. ſaith of him, The Lord hath bleſſed my Maſter greatly, and he hath given him flocks and herds, and ſilver and gold: And v. 53. The Servant brought forth Jewels of ſilver and gold, and gave them to Rebekah; he gave alſo to her Brother and to her Mother precious things. And Gen. 23. 16. We read of Abraham's paying four hundred ſhekels of ſilver unto Ephron the Hittite; which was called currant money with the Merchants. So that it is plain, in thoſe days Gold and Silver and Jewels were ſubſtance.

But here the Eſtate of Job is reckoned and caſt up by Cattel; there is no mention of Gold, and Silver, and Jewels, and precious Stones, and the like. His Subſtance was ſeven thouſand ſheep, &c. Two Reaſons may be given for this Accompt.

The firſt is this, becauſe thoſe ancient times were ſo much given to, and employed in the feeding of Cattel; therefore they did reckon their Eſtates by Cattel, as we now do by Money, by Gold, and by Silver, or by yearly Rents and Revenues. If a man had ſo many Cattel, ſo many Sheep, ſo many Oxen, &c. they knew his Eſtate, what Gold and Silver, or other Riches he might have. When the Sons of Jacob came before Pharaoh, Gen. 46. 32. they are called Shepherds; The men are Shepherds, for their trade hath been to feed Cattel: They are men of Cattel; as if he ſhould ſay, the ſpecial Commodity, the main thing theſe trade in, is about Cattel, and that gives denomination: They had Gold and Silver, but they are men of Cattel.

אנשי מקנה

And then again, for this reaſon; Cattel are living Subſtance; Gold and Silver are dead ſubſtance. Cattel, in their own nature, are more excellent then Gold and Silver; becauſe they have Life. Every thing that hath Life, is better in its degree then that which hath no Life. The loweſt Creature that hath Life, is better then the beſt without Life; the loweſt of a ſuperiour order, is better then the higheſt of an inferiour. Now all things without Life, are put into a degree, into a claſſis or form below and inferiour to thoſe that have Life. It is true, that Money anſwereth all things: Money is equivalently Sheep, and Oxen, and Aſſes, and Camels. Money is equivalently Bread, and Meat, and Drink, and Cloathing, and whatſoever you need; it is virtually all that you may and can receive; ſo that by way of commutation and exchange, Money is all things; but formally, and in it ſelf, ſo theſe things are the life, and ſuſtenance, and ſupport of man; therefore theſe go away with the name and the title of the Eſtate; the Eſtate or Subſtance of Job was in theſe natural and living Riches,

Eccl. 10. 19

---

* The Hebrew word גמל comes from the root Gamal, to render and make recompence; for this creature being uſed much for burden and travel, doth abundantly recompence his Maſter for his keeping. From this Hebrew word Gamal, the Greeks derive the name κάμηλος; the Chaldeans Gamla, the Latines Camelus, and we in our Engliſh Camel.

Riches, not in artificial or dead Riches. Hence it was that the Ancients gave the name Pecunia to Money; which comes a Pecude, from Cattel (ſo the Criticks obſerve) becauſe they ſtamp'd the form of a Sheep or an Oxe upon Money, noting that Cattel were the riches and the eſtate of a man properly and chiefly. This may ſuffice for the reaſons why the eſtate or riches of Job is ſet forth by Cattel, and not by Gold and Silver, and other-like Poſſeſſions.

Further, with this abundance of Cattel that Job had, we muſt underſtand (though it is not expreſt) that he had Land ſutable to ſuch a Stock.

Pauperis eſt numerare pecus.

And when theſe Numbers are ſet down (becauſe we uſually ſay, he is but poor, that can number his Cattel) we are not to ſtand ſtrictly upon the preciſe number of ſeven thouſand, or five hundred, &c. But here are great quantities mentioned; to note, that Job had not only many, very many Cattel, but that he had great numbers of all theſe.

ועבדה רבה ὑπηρεσία, Miniſterium Sep. δουλεία, Servitium, Aqu. οἰκετεία, famulitium. Sym.

Then it follows, He had theſe, and a very great Houſhold. The words in the Original, do ſignifie Servants, or Tillage and Husbandry. Concerning Iſaac, Gen. 26. it is ſaid that he had poſſeſſions of flocks and of heards, and great ſtore of ſervants; ſo ſome read it; others, that he had great ſtore of husbandry. It comes all to one purpoſe; for the greatneſs of the Houſhold, or multitude of Servants, were for thoſe uſes, to mannage and order thoſe Flocks, that Tillage and Eſtate that God had bleſſed him with. He had a very great Houſhold, many attendants upon the ſeveral ſervices of his Eſtate.

Laſtly, We have the ſum and reſult (as it were) of all his Eſtate, in the cloſe of the Verſe.

So that this man was the greateſt of all the men of the Eaſt.

He was the greateſt divers ways; greateſt in riches, greateſt in power, greateſt in honour, greateſt in grace, which is the beſt greatneſs of all. He was greateſt all theſe wayes; but that which is here ſpecially meant, is the greatneſs of his honour and riches: He was the greateſt man in outward eſtate of all the men of the Eaſt.

Of all the men of the Eaſt.] Heb. Sons of the Eaſt. In Gen. 25. 6. Abraham gave gifts to his Sons by the Concubines, and ſent them away from his Son Iſaac Eaſtward into the Eaſt Countrey. Doubtleſs the Bleſſing of God followed theſe Sons of Abraham his Friend, and they waxed great, but among them all Job was greateſt. It had been much to ſay, he was a great man amongſt the men of the Eaſt; for the men of the Eaſt were very great men, and very rich men. As to ſay, one is a rich man in the City of London, where there are ſo many rich men; one that goeth for a rich man there, is a rich man indeed. But here is more in this; he was not only a rich man, or a great man amongſt the men of the Eaſt; but he was the greateſt, he was the richeſt of them: as to ſay, that one is the richeſt in the whole City, cries a man up to the height of riches. This expreſſion then heightens the ſence of the Text concerning Job's greatneſs, he was not only great among the men of the Eaſt, but the greateſt man of them: as if the Holy Ghoſt ſhould have ſaid, I will not ſtay reckoning up Particulars, or tell you this and that Job had; you know the Eaſt was a large Countrey, and full of rich men; his eſtate was the largeſt, and himſelf the richeſt of all the men of the Eaſt.

A Queſtion may here be raiſed, Why the Holy Ghoſt ſpends ſo many words, and is thus accurate in the ſetting forth of Job's outward eſtate?

I ſhall touch three Reaſons for it.

1. He is deſcribed to be a man of a very great eſtate, to the end that the greatneſs of his affliction might appear afterward. The meaſure of a loſs is taken by the greatneſs of a mans enjoyment. If a man have but little, his affliction cannot be great; but if a man have much, if he have abundance, then the affliction doth abound. After great enjoyments, want is greateſt: Emptineſs preſſes thoſe moſt, who once were full. I went out full (ſaith Naomi, Ruth 1. 21.) and the Lord hath brought me home empty; therefore call me not Naomi (which is pleaſant) but Marah, which is bitter; for the Almighty hath done very bitterly with me.

2. The greatneſs of his Eſtate is ſet forth, that the greatneſs of his Patience might appear. For a man to be made poorer, that was but poor and mean before, it is no great matter though he bear it; for a man to have but little, that never had much, is no great trial of his patience: but for a man to have nothing at all, that had, as it were, all things, and to be patient under it, this ſhews the proof of Patience. To a man that is born a Slave or a Captive, Captivity and Bondage is no trouble; it doth never exerciſe his patience, he is ſcarce ſenſible of the evil, becauſe he never knew better: But for a King, that is born free, and hath power over others, for a King that is in the height of freedom and liberty, to become a Slave and a Captive, in ſuch a one patience hath a perfect work, if he bear it. So for Job, a man that once abounded in all manner of good things, to be outted and emptied of all, that tried his patience to the full.

Scimus quia majorem dolorem commovent damna majora. Greg.

Multo facilius eſt non habita repudiare, quam poſſeſſa amittere. Aug.

3. It was to give all the world a teſtimony, that Job was a thorough godly and holy man; that he was a man of extraordinary ſtrength of Grace: Why? Becauſe he held his integrity, and kept up his ſpirit in the way of Holineſs, notwithſtanding he was lifted up with abundance of outward Bleſſings. To be very great, and very good, ſhews that a man is good indeed: Great and Good, Rich and Holy, are happy conjunctions, and they are rare conjunctions. Uſually Riches impoveriſh the Soul, and the World eats out all care of Heaven; therefore Job was one of a thouſand, being at once thus great in Riches, and thus rich in Goodneſs. He was Rich in Grace, that was ſo gracious in the midſt of ſo much Riches; the Godlineſs of Job was enriched by his Riches. It argued that Job's Godlineſs was very great, and very right, becauſe he continued right in the midſt of all his Greatneſs. How often do Riches cauſe forgetfulneſs of God, yea, kicking againſt God? How often are they made the Bellows of Pride, the Fewel of Uncleanneſs, the Inſtruments of Revenge? How often do rich men contemn, deſpiſe and oppreſs their weak and poor Brethren? but to make Riches the fewel of our Graces, and the inſtruments of Duty both to God and man, to have the houſe full of Riches, and the heart full of holineſs, theſe united are admirable. Extreams are very dangerous; to be extream poor, or extream rich, is an extream temptation. There the wiſe man Agur, Prov. 30. v. 8. prayes, Give me neither poverty nor riches. Lord (ſaith he) I would not be in any of the extreams: It is a ſore temptation to be far on either hand; to be far on the hand of riches, or far on the hand of poverty. To be very poor, and very holy, is a rare thing: That man hath great treaſures and riches of Grace, who is ſo. I remember the ſpeech of a poor woman, who having a Child about eight or nine years of age, and being once in ſuch a ſtreight, that hunger began to pinch them both; the Child looking upon the Mother, ſaid, Mother, do you think that God will ſtarve us? No Child, anſwers the Mother: The Child replied, If he do, yet muſt we love him and ſerve him. Such Language from the heart, becomes and argues more then a Child in Grace, a grown Chriſtian. They are filled with Chriſt, who can ſtarve, and ſerve him: So likewiſe are they, who being full-fed, yet ſerve him; and Temptations are greater upon the full, then upon the empty, upon the rich, then upon the poor: The reaſon of it is, becauſe as Riches do ſtir up Luſt, ſo they give fewel, and adminiſter inſtruments for the obtaining and taking in of that which Luſt calls for; this Poverty doth not do.

Ex ingentibus Jobi divitiis valde locupletatur ejus Sanctitas. Pined. in loc.

Deut. 32.

The poor (ſaith Chriſt) receive the Goſpel; the lame and the blind make moſt ſpeed, and ſee their way cleareſt into the Kingdom of Heaven; but for rich men (he ſaith) It is eaſier for a Camel to go through the eye of a Needle, then for a rich man to enter into the Kingdom of Heaven. We ſee now the Miracle acted in Job; the Camel is got through the Needle's eye; Job, a rich man, is got through the Needle's eye with three thouſand Camels, &c. And the reaſon was, becauſe all his Camels, Cattel, and Riches, did not take up ſo much room in his heart, they were not ſo thick in his ſpirit, as one ſingle thred. All his outward eſtate was kept without; not a ſhred, not a thred got into his ſpirit. Take this for a third Reaſon, why the Holy Ghoſt doth thus exactly ſet forth the eſtate of Job; ſcil. that he might appear to be an exact holy man.

Mat. 19. 24.

From the whole, take theſe Obſervations:

Firſt, We ſee here Job a holy man, very full of Riches: Thence obſerve,

That Riches are the good Bleſſings of God.

God would never have beſtowed them upon his Job elſe. Leſt we ſhould think Riches evil, they are given to thoſe who are good: And leſt Riches ſhould be thought the chiefeſt good, they are given to thoſe that are evil. It is a certain Truth, that God never gives any thing in it ſelf evil to thoſe that are good; nor doth he ever give the chiefeſt good to thoſe that are evil. Therefore it ſhews, that Riches are good, becauſe the Godly have them; and it ſhews, that they are not the chiefeſt good, becauſe the wicked have them. When the Goſpel calls us to renounce the world, to caſt off the world; it calls us to caſt the world out of our affections, not out of our poſſeſſion. To hold and poſſeſs great riches, is not evil; it is evil to ſet our hearts upon them.

Divitiæ, ne malæ putentur, dantur bonis; ne magnæ vel ſummæ, dantur & malis. Aug.

Secondly, Job was deſcribed before, a juſt man, an upright man, that is, a man juſt in his dealing, a man that gave every one his own; he did not decline, no not a hairs breadth (if poſſibly he could) from the Line of Juſtice, Commutative or Diſtributive; yet this Job is exceeding rich. Hence obſerve, That Plain and honeſt dealing is no hinderance to the gaining or preſerving of an Eſtate.

Honeſt dealing is no ſtop, no bar to getting. There is a curſed Proverb amongſt us, which ſome uſe; and it is to be feared, ſome walk by it; That he which uſeth plain dealing, ſhall die a Beggar. You ſee Job, that was a plain man, a juſt-dealing man, yet is full of Riches. The nigheſt and the ſafeſt way to riches, is the way of Juſtice. Wo to thoſe, who by getting riches, get a wound in their own Conſciences. What will it advantage any one to gather many goods, when in the mean time, his heart tells him, that all have a bad Maſter? What will it advantage any to load and fraight his Ship by trading on forbidden Coaſts, when by doing this, he ſplits and makes ſhipwrack of his Soul? If you would go the ready way to attain the things of this life, walk in the wayes of God. Honeſty and Juſtice, Uprightneſs and Truth, will lead you to the higheſt and greateſt eſtate, with Gods Bleſſing. All other riches are poverty, all other gain is loſs; there is a fire in an eſtate ill gotten, which will at laſt conſume it. A man builds with timber that hath fire in it, that layes the foundation of his eſtate by ſin; he lays up iniquity for his Children. And ſo doth God, Job 21. 19.

It is commonly ſaid likewiſe, Dives aut iniquus, aut iniqui hæres; A rich man is either an unjuſt man, or heir of an unjuſt man. In Pſal. 82. The wicked are put for the rich: How long will you judge unjuſtly, and accept the perſon of the wicked? That is, the perſons (Divitum aut Potentum) of rich or great men, ſo it is to be underſtood; for Judges would never accept the perſons of wicked men, if they were poor, if they be in equal ballance with others, in regard of outward things: and then the oppoſition that is made in the next words, Defend the poor and fatherleſs, ſhews that the rich are there meant. Theſe great ones are called wicked, becauſe (ſaith the gloſs) they uſually get and uphold their greatneſs by wickedneſs. Such is the courſe of the world, and it is the ſhame of the world, much more of Chriſtians. We ſee in Job's practice, that riches may be attained and maintained too by righteouſneſs; Job was rich and juſt.

Thirdly, In that Job, a man fearing God, was thus rich, thus great; ſee here the truth of the Promiſes. God will make good his Promiſe concerning outward things to his people. Godlineſs hath the promiſes of this Life, as well as of that which is to come. As it hath promiſes made to it, ſo it hath promiſes performed to it; Job, a man fearing God, a godly man, is very rich. Indeed, not many rich, not many mighty, not many honourable, not many great ones are called: and ſo not many of thoſe that are called, are mighty, and rich, and great, and noble; yet ſome ſuch are, that the truth of the promiſes may appear ſometime in the very Letter to the eye of ſence, as it alwayes doth to the eye of Faith.

1 Tim. 4. 8.

1 Cor. 1. 26

Do not fear that you ſhall be poor, if you turn godly; for Godlineſs hath the promiſes of this life; and there was a rich Job, a rich Abraham, a rich Iſaac, a rich David, and many other godly rich. God will perform when it is good for them, the promiſes of outward good things to his Children outwardly.

Fourthly, Here is another Obſervation from this place; Job was frequent in holy duties; he was a man fearing God, that is (as we explained in the firſt verſe) he was much verſt in the wayes of holy worſhip; he did not ſerve God by fits, or at his leiſure, but continually; yet he was very rich. Note hence,

Time ſpent in holy duties is no loſs, no hinderance to our ordinary Callings, or to our thriving in them.

Job ſerves God ſo frequently, that it is called continually; yet he grows in wealth abundantly. The time that he ſpent in the ſervice of God did not rob his purſe, impoveriſh his family, or hinder him in his dealings and buſineſſes of the world. Job maintained both his Callings; he maintained his general Calling in the wayes and ſervice of God, and his ſpecial or particular Calling in his relations unto men; both went on together, and they were no hindrance one to another, but a furtherance rather. The time we ſpend in ſpiritual duties, is time gained for ſecular. The time we ſpend in Prayer, &c. whets our tools, and oils our wheels, promotes all we go about, and getteth a bleſſing upon all.

This meets with another Blaſphemy very frequent in the world. If a man profeſſing Godlineſs, go backward in his Eſtate, eſpecially a man that is taken notice of for his extraordinary zeal and conſtancy in holy duties; then the clamour is, O you ſee what hearing of Sermons hath brought him unto; you ſee what comes of his praying and faſting; he hath followed theſe things you ſee, till he is undone. I ſay two things unto theſe men.

Firſt, Many are thought to go backward in their outward eſtate, becauſe they do ſo much in ſpiritual duties, when indeed they are ſo far from doing too much, that they do too little, and that rather is the reaſon why they thrive not. The Body may be exerciſed often, when the Spirit works but ſeldom, if at all in holy things; and this indeed provokes God many times to blaſt an outward eſtate. It is a common fault, that when we ſee thoſe whom we conceive godly, falling in outward things, we are taken up only in finding out anſwers how to acquit the Juſtice of God in his promiſes. What ſhall we ſay to ſuch a promiſe, Seek firſt the Kingdom of God and his righteouſneſs, and all theſe things ſhall be added unto you? We trouble our ſelves often to ſatisfie the point in reference to the Juſtice of God, and the truth of his promiſe: We ſeldom ſuſpect whether or how they have performed the condition of the Promiſe. We ſhould rather doubt that they have not evangelically performed the condition, then trouble our ſelves ſo much with ſeeking how to ſatisfie the Juſtice of God in anſwering the Engagement and Promiſe on his part. For without all queſtion, they that do ſeek according to the tenour of that Condition, God will adminiſter all things unto them.

Or ſecondly, We ſhould ſay thus rather, that they who are ſo much exerciſed in wayes of Communion with God, have ſurely gained a great ſpiritual eſtate; and that now God brings them to the proof of it by loſſes in their temporal eſtates. Theſe or the like interpretations we ought to make, if we ſee them going backward in outward things, who have been very forward in ſpiritual things.

And ſo much concerning Job's outward eſtate, in regard of his Riches, both what they were in the kind, and in the number.

In the next place, his outward happineſs is deſcribed by the unity and concord of his Children.

Verſe 4. And his Sons went and feaſted in their houſes, every one his day, and ſent and called for their three Siſters to eat and to drink with them.

This Verſe ſets forth a third part of Job's happineſs in reſpect of his outward eſtate. He had Children, and many Children in the ſecond Verſe: Here in the fourth, we find all theſe Children, Sons and Daughters agreeing and feaſting one with another. We may note from the words four things concerning this feaſting.

1. Their Alacrity and Chearfulneſs, which moſt do obſerve out of that expreſſion, they went and feaſted; which phraſe in the Hebrew, ſignifies, the doing of a thing with chearfulneſs and readineſs.

2. Their Unanimity: It is not ſaid that ſome two or three of his Sons feaſted, but his Sons indefinitely, all his Sons; and not only his Sons, but his Daughters; the three Siſters were called too. So that they were all of one mind, they all met together in love; though they were ten in number, they were but one in heart, the ſame in ſpirit.

3. The Place where they feaſted; it was in their houſes; they did not go to ſuſpected places, but in their own private houſes and families, where it was moſt convenient, and where they might celebrate thoſe meetings with moſt ſecurity, both for their Bodies, and for their Souls.

4. The frequency of that feaſting; it was not only once, but every one his day. They did not meet at every one of their houſes upon a ſpecial and a ſet day: Every one his day; ſome make the ſence thus, they feaſted in their houſes one every day; as if it had been a continual Feaſt with them; they feaſted all the week long, and they would ſeem to allow it by the moderation uſed in their feaſting; but the words, every one his day, note a courſe, a certain time wherein they did feaſt, not a continued feaſting. Some conceive it was upon their Birth-days; whether that be ſo or no, there is nothing appears from the Text; only it is ſaid, They feaſted every one his day.

And they ſent and called for their three Siſters to eat and to drink with them.

In that we may obſerve three things.

1. The Humanity of the Brethren; they would not banquet alone and leave out their Siſters; but they ſent and called them.

2. The Modeſty of the Siſters; that they would not come but upon ſpecial invitation; they were not forward of themſelves, but they were ſent and called for.

3. The end of this Invitation; it was to eat and to drink with them. As under the notions of Bread and Water, or Bread and Wine, all neceſſaries for food are comprized; ſo under the actions of eating and drinking, the whole buſineſs of feaſting is contained, Luke 12. 19. Iſa. 22. 15. Eccl. 2. 24.

There is nothing further in the words, that we need ſtay longer in opening or clearing of them: We ſhall only give you ſome few Notes out of them.

His Sons went and feaſted in their houſes, every one his Day.

This is ſet forth as the third part of Job's outward happineſs. Then note we firſt, That

The Love and mutual Agreement of Children is one of the greateſt Bleſſings to a Parent.

The Love of Children is the Fathers bleſſing, and it is a great bleſſing. How many Fathers have their hearts rent and divided by the rents and diviſions that are amongſt their Children? It doth blaſt and wither all the comfort the parent hath, to ſee that there is no agreement of Love, no correſpondency of affection, amongſt thoſe that come all from the ſame Bowels, from the ſame loins. This is a bleſſing which was not common in the world, no not in thoſe times. Adam had not this bleſſing. Adam, when he had only two Sons, they could not agree; but one murdereth the other. Abraham enjoyed not this bleſſing; when he had but two Sons, one is mocking the other; Iſhmael is mocking Iſaac. Iſaac failed of the bleſſing; he had but two ſons, and one threatned to murder the other: The days of mourning for my Father are at hand, then will I ſlay my Brother Jacob. This was not Jacob's bleſſing; he had twelve ſons, there was one of them, Joſeph, the common Butt of all his Brethrens envie; they did ſpight him; The Archers did ſhoot at him, and grieved him ſorely, and hated him. They could not all agree, there were diviſions among them. It is no ordinary bleſſing then. You ſee David, a holy man; yet what diviſions were there among his Children? one murdereth another; Abſolom cauſed Amnon to be murdered; Adonijah riſeth up againſt Solomon; he cannot bear it, that his Brother ſhould have the Crown. You ſee then that it is a bleſſing, and it is an extraordinary bleſſing: Therefore take notice of it, you that have an agreeing family, children that live together in love and unity; look upon it as a ſpecial bleſſing from God.

Fratrum quoque gratia rara eſt. Ovid.

Gen. 4.

Gen. 21. 9.

Gen. 27. 41.

Gen. 37. 4.

Gen. 49. 23

2 Sam. 13. 28.

1 King. 1.

Secondly, We may obſerve, That

It is a very comely thing for Brethren and Siſters to live together in unity.

In *Job*s children, we have that of Pſal. 133. fulfilled; Behold (he calls all to look upon it) how good and pleaſant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity! Such a ſight may draw all eyes after it. Job's Children were many in number, in heart but one, in love the ſame. And as there is nothing more troubleſome, ſo nothing more uncomely and unnatural, then rents and diviſions in a Family.

Numero plurimi erant, conſenſu autem & concordia quaſi unus, unanimitate atq; dilectione quaſi idem. Orig.

Thirdly, We may note, That

It is lawful to uſe feaſting.

The Children of Job here went and feaſted at their ſeveral houſes, every one his day. The Chriſtians in the Primitive Churches had their ἀγάπας, Love-feaſts. In a Feaſt there are two things; extraordinary proviſion, and extraordinary company; both are lawful. God hath given us the Creature, not only for neceſſity, but for delight; and it is a clear argument that ſuch uſing of the creatures in feaſting, is lawful, becauſe God hath made more creatures ſerving for the delight of man, then he hath made for the neceſſity of man. If God had meant that men ſhould do nothing, but ſerve their own neceſſity, and maintain their lives, ſo as they might go on in their places and callings, one half of the creatures might have been ſpared: But God made nothing in vain: therefore he is willing we ſhould uſe the creatures for moderate delight. Abraham made a great Feaſt at the weaning of Iſaac; and Iſaac makes a Feaſt for Abimelech and Phicol the chief Captain of his Army, Gen. 26. 30. And the like examples we have in divers other places: And our Saviour Chriſt himſelf was at a Feaſt in Cana of Galilee; where, when wine failed, he ſupplied it by Miracle, John 2.

Tert. Apol. c. 39.

Deus multo plura condidit, quibus facile carere poſſemus, quam quibus neceſſario nobis opus eſt. Bez. in loc.

Gen. 21. 8.

But becauſe Feaſting is ſo often abuſed, and many turn this liberty into wantonneſs; being then moſt wicked, when they ſhould be moſt thankful; and grieving God moſt, when he gives them means or occaſion of rejoycing. I ſhall therefore briefly diſcover the abuſes of Feaſting: which will alſo hint rules for the right ordering of it; That we may (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks) eat and drink, and do all to the Glory of God.

1. Then Feaſting is ſinful, when any overcharge their Eſtates, and laviſh out what will but ſerve their neceſſities, or conveniencies, upon delights and ſuperfluities; to ſuch, Feaſting is a ſin.

2. When the rich feaſt the rich, and never think upon the poor, Luke 14. 12, 13. When thou makeſt a Dinner or a Supper, call not thy friends nor thy brethren, neither thy kinſmen, nor thy rich neighbours. Obſerve here, this is not an abſolute denial of calling Brethren, and Kinsfolks, and friends, or rich; for brethren may, yea, ought to be called; but (ſaith he) when thou makeſt a Feaſt, call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind; that is, when thou makeſt a Feaſt, be ſure to remember theſe; do not bid thy brethren, or the rich alone, let the poor have a portion with thee, and be refreſhed at or from thy Table. When the rich feaſt one another, and let the poor ſtarve or pine, this is very ſinful.

3. When there is a ſtudied curioſity and exactneſs in feaſting. When all things that can be thought on, muſt be fetch'd in, ſtrange meats and foreign ſauces; when there is a luſting after Quails, when men muſt have meat for their Luſts. Though we may have feaſting for our delight, yet we muſt not have feaſting for our luſts: Such make their Belly their god, as the Apoſtle ſpeaks; when there is ſo much Art uſed, as deſtroys the nature of the Meat, this is a ſin and an errour. I remember Bernard ſpeaks of his times, That a man might be at a Fiſh-feaſt, and yet ſhould not know whether he had eaten any Fiſh or no; all things were prepared with ſo much Art, that the very nature of the Creature was loſt. This is a ſinful Vanity.

4. When there is Intemperance in feaſting (whatſoever the proviſion be) when there is exceſs, an overcharging of Nature, which is ſurfetting and drunkenneſs. As by the former, man overthrows the nature of meats and drinks, ſo by this, meat and drink overthrow the nature of man. A man may feaſt himſelf into a Beaſt; and we uſually ſay of ſuch men, They are diſguiſed: For ſuch feaſting the Land mourns.

5. When Feaſtings are frequent. Feaſts are not for every day; that was the thing taxed in the Glutton, Luke 16. That he fared deliciouſly every day.

6. When we ſpend too much of the day at any time, or too much time any day in feaſting; when we dine till night, and ſup all or a great part of the night; this is chambering and wantonneſs, this is a woful expence and waſte of time; and the expence of time is worſe by far then the expence of money: you may regain the expence of your money; but you can never call back the expence of your time; you may be at greater charges in your feaſting for the waſte of time, then for the waſte of Eſtate. All the world cannot give you back again the expence of an hour. Indeed we often hear men complain they have ſpent too much money in Feaſting and Entertainments; but it is very rare, that any complain they have ſpent too much time; which is, as if a man having received a wound in his Body, ſhould only be troubled for the hole which the Sword made in his Doublet. Prodigality of time is the worſt and moſt dangerous prodigality.

7. Feaſting is ſinful when unſeaſonable. I ſpeak in regard of occaſions and opportunities: there are ſpecial times wherein it is unlawful to feaſt, though we ſhould ſpend but very little time in feaſting, Iſa. 22. 12, 13. In that day did the Lord God of Hoſts call to weeping and mourning, and to baldneſs, and to girding with ſackcloth; and behold joy and gladneſs, ſlaying oxen and killing ſheep, eating fleſh; and drinking wine. In the next Verſe it is ſaid, It was revealed in mine ears by the Lord of Hoſts, ſurely this iniquity ſhall not be purged from you till you die. To feaſt in that day was ſinful, and a ſin that left ſuch a ſtain as could not be got out; it ſhall not be purged from you. What time was this wherein their feaſting was ſo ſinful? What made this ſin ſo deep-grain'd? You ſhall find a reſolution in the beginning of the Chapter: It was a day of trouble and perplexity, and of treading down by the Lord God of Hoſts in the valley of Viſion, breaking down the walls, and crying to the mountains. It is a day of trouble and perplexity, and will you now be feaſting? (ſaith God.) Is this a time for you to feaſt in, when my wrath is breaking forth amongſt you? This feaſting with men, is a daring of God, a ſending (as it were) defiance unto Heaven. And ſuch feaſting as this Amos reproves, Chap. 6. 4, 5. They did eat the Lambs out of the flock, and the Calves out of the midſt of the ſtall; they chaunt to the ſound of the Viol, and invent to themſelves Inſtruments of Muſick, like David; they drink wine in Bowls, and annoint themſelves with the chief ointments: but they are not grieved for the affliction of Joſeph.

Then at this time feaſting is unſeaſonable; for Joſeph, the People and Churches of God are in affliction: and this is ſuch a day as the Prophet deſcribes, a day of perplexity from the Lord. The Kingdom is full of trouble, and we are full of fears; therefore now Faſting is in ſeaſon, not Feaſting; now humbling is in ſeaſon, not rejoycing: Or if any feaſt now, let them feaſt as if they feaſted not, and rejoyce as if they rejoyced not; let them feaſt, as remembring the affliction and bonds, the hunger and wants of our diſtreſſed Brethren. Therefore in thoſe feaſtings which have a kind of neceſſity in them, you ſhould labour to have your hearts exceedingly above your feaſting, not to lie ſo low as the Creature; it is ever very ſinful to have your hearts drowned in the creature; but now eſpecially, when you hear the voice of the Sword threatning to take the creature from us, and ſee God claſhing them together, as if he meant to ſtain the beauty, and ſowr the pleaſures of them all.

Verſe 5. And it was ſo, when the days of their feaſting were gone about, that Job ſent and ſanctified them, &c.

This Verſe contains the holy practice of Job. You ſaw before that he had Grace in his heart; now you may ſee Grace in his Life. Holy Practice makes Grace viſible. There it lay in the habit, here it came forth in the act. Concerning this holy practice of Job, we may note theſe three things for the diviſion of the Verſe.

1. The Actions about which this holy care of Job was exerciſed: They are two.
   1. He ſent and ſanctified them. And,
   2. Offered burnt Offerings according to the number of them all.
2. The Ground of this holy practice of his, what moved Job after their feaſting, thus to ſend and ſanctifie them. The ground was this; For Job ſaid, it may be that my Sons have ſinned, and curſed God in their hearts.
3. The Conſtancy of Job in this his holy practice; he did not this by fits, now and then; but thus did Job continually.

And it was ſo, that when the days of their feaſting were gone about, that Job ſent and ſanctified them.

That is the firſt thing that we are to explain and open unto you; Job ſent and ſanctified them. How could Job ſanctifie his ſons or his daughters? A Parent indeed may provide Riches for his children, but can he provide Grace alſo? A Parent may put Money in their purſes, but can he put holineſs in their hearts too, that it is ſaid here, that Job ſent and ſanctified them? Is not ſanctification the proper work of the Spirit of God? Doth not the Holy Ghoſt alone ſanctifie?

For the clearing of this; Whereas it is ſaid that Job ſent and ſanctified them: Firſt, Some expound the meaning thus; that Job ſent up prayers to God to ſanctifie them. And indeed Prayer is a ſanctifying Ordinance. As Prayer requireth a holy heart, ſo Prayer will make a holy heart, make the heart that prayes holy; yea, many times get holineſs into anothers heart. Secondly, Others ſay, He ſent and ſanctified them; that is, he ſent them to the place that was appointed for Sacrifice, where he intended to ſanctifie them; or where, in the holy duty of calling upon the Name of God, and of offering Sacrifice, they were to be ſanctified: He ſent and ſanctified them; he ſent them to the place where the Sacrifice ſhould be offered, that ſo they might be ſanctified. But Thirdly, I rather take it thus; He ſent and ſanctified them; that is, he ſent a Meſſage to them, to command them to prepare and to fit themſelves for the holy Duty of offering the burnt offering, or ſacrificing. For to ſanctifie, in Scripture notes two things.

1. The infuſion of a holy habit, the infuſion of a new principle into the ſoul.
2. A preparation of the ſoul to holy duties.

Now when it is ſaid, that Job ſent and ſanctified them, it is not meant, as if Job did infuſe holy habits into his Children, as if it were in his power to make them gracious; Indeed that is impoſſible; it is only the work of the Spirit of God; no man can come at the Spirit of another, but the Spirit of God. But this is it, he ſent to them to prepare themſelves, to adviſe and warn them to prepare themſelves, that they might be ready for that holy duty, for the duty of ſacrificing. And this preparation to holy duties, is often called ſanctifying; as, Gen. 35. When Jacob was called to Bethel, to offer ſacrifice, and to build an Altar, he ſaid to his Houſhold, v. 2. Put away the ſtrange gods that are among you, and be clean (that is, ſanctifie you, or be you ſanctified) and let us ariſe and go up to Bethel, and I will make there an Altar unto God, &c. The preparation to the Sacrifice, was a cleanſing or a ſanctifying of them. So Exod. 19. 20. When the People were to be prepared to receive the Law, the Lord ſaith unto Moſes, Go unto the People, and ſanctifie them to day and to morrow; that is, prepare the people, or warn the people, that they prepare themſelves for the receiving of the Law. And likewiſe in 1 Sam. 16. 5. It is ſaid, that Samuel did that which the Lord ſpake, and came to Bethlehem, and the Elders of the Town trembled at his coming, and ſaid, comeſt thou peaceably? And he ſaid, Peaceably; I am come to ſacrifice unto the Lord; ſanctifie your ſelves, and come with me to the Sacrifice; that is, prepare your ſelves to come to the Sacrifice. So ſanctification is preparation. And, John 11. 55. (to name no more) The Jews Paſover was nigh at hand, and many went out of the Countrey up to Hieruſalem before the Paſover, to purifie themſelves, or to ſanctifie themſelves, that they might be fit and ready for the Sacrifice. So then this ſanctifying of them, was a preparing of them for the Sacrifice. There were ſolemn Rules given afterward, when the form of the Church-Order and Diſcipline was eſtabliſhed by Moſes; but even now before that, the Law and Light of Nature taught this, beſides the teaching of God, that they muſt be ſanctified, before they came to ſacrifice. Job ſent and ſanctified them, and then they came to that holy Service.

This is the firſt Act of Job. We may here obſerve, firſt, the time when Job ſent to ſanctifie them; it was when the dayes of their feaſting were gone about. Job did not take them off from their feaſting, or deny them the liberty of their feaſting; but when the dayes of their feaſting were gone about, then he ſent and ſanctified them. The Point we may note from hence, is this,

That, It doth well become godly Parents to give their Children leave to take moderate refreſhing and recreation one with another.

Job did not ſeverely and auſterely forbid them, and ſay, What do you feaſting and ſpending your time idly one with another? why do you ſpend ſo many days in feaſting? He never interrupted them till the dayes of their feaſting were gone about: It becometh Parents to looſe the reins of Government ſo far as to give them leave for their refreſhing, to let themſelves out in honeſt wayes of recreation by their mutual ſociety. Job did not call them to this holy ſervice from their feaſting; but when the dayes of their feaſting were gone about.

Secondly, Job ſent to ſanctifie his Children. Though they were in their own houſes, though they were at their own diſpoſing (for it appears they had families and houſholds of their own) though they were men and women grown; yet Job ſent to ſanctifie them. Obſerve hence,

That, Parents muſt not caſt off the care of their Children, though they are grown up, though they are men and women.

Some think, that if they look to their Children at School, and breed them up a while, and have given them ſome inſtructions in their youth, they need not then trouble themſelves any further: whereas the care of Parents ought to live as long as they and their Children live together. Job's care went after his Children to their houſes: He ſent to them to bid them prepare themſelves.

Thirdly, Though theſe were (as we ſay) men and women grown, yet as ſoon as their Father ſends the meſſage to them, they all ſubmit and all obey: then obſerve,

That, Children that are grown up, or have Houſes and Families of their own, ought yet to yield all reverence and ſubmiſſion to the lawful commands, counſels and directions of their Parents.

Do not think you have outgrown obedience and honour to Parents, when you are grown in years; ſtill we ſee theſe thought themſelves under their Fathers command and counſel; there is not one of them replies, what need my Father trouble himſelf about us? No; but all willingly prepared themſelves and came; for he offered burnt Offerings according to the number of them all; therefore certainly they all came.

Fourthly, From the matter of this Act, what it was that Job did; the Text ſaith, He ſent and ſanctified them after their feaſting: He did not ſend a Meſſenger to them, to aſk how they were in health, whether they had not ſurfetted themſelves, or had got any diſtemper; he did not ſend to know how the accounts went in their Families, whether they had not ſpent too much; but the matter that he had his eye and his heart upon, was, that they might be ſanctified and fitted for holy Duties. From hence obſerve,

That, A Parents main and ſpecial care ſhould be for the Souls of his Children.

The care of many Parents is only to enrich their children, to make them great and honourable, to leave them full Portions and Eſtates, to provide Matches for them; but for ſanctifying their children, there is no thought of that. Nay, many are affraid their Children ſhould be ſanctified; ſome Parents cannot abide their Children, becauſe they ſuſpect them ſanctified: Such Parents are the Devil's Children. Job's greateſt care was, that his children ſhould be ſanctified. And every Parent ought to ſay of his Natural Children, as the Apoſtle John doth of his ſpiritual Children (Eph. 3. 4.) I have no greater joy, then to hear that my Children walk in the Truth.

Fifthly, Job was a holy perſon, and you ſee which way his care lies; that his children may be holy: Then take this Note in the general.

He that is a holy perſon himſelf, deſires to make others holy too.

Holy Job would have all his Children holy. As it is with the wicked, a wicked man would fain have all wicked with him; he would fain ſcatter his wickedneſs, and diffuſe his poyſon unto others: The Drunkard would fain have companions with him in his Drunkenneſs, &c. And ſo the man that is truly godly, would make others godly too. As Paul ſaid to King Agrippa, I would to God, that not only thou, but alſo all that hear me this day, were both almoſt and altogether ſuch as I am. Act. 26.29. Grace is attractive: It deſires to draw others into fellowſhip. A good man would not be happy alone.

Sixthly, Sanctification you ſee here, is aſcribed unto Job; he ſent and ſanctified them; and all that he did, was but to give them counſel and warning to ſanctifie themſelves; as if he ſhould have ſaid, Go to my Children, and bid them prepare themſelves; warn them that they may be ready againſt the Sacrifice, that they fit themſelves for it; yet the Text ſaith, that Job ſanctified them. Then we may obſerve from this,

That, the good which others do by our advice and counſel, is reckoned as done by our ſelves.

While we provoke others to goodneſs, that good which they do, is ſet upon our account, as if we had done it. As the wickedneſs, the ſin which another commits by the advice and counſel of any man, is ſet upon the ſcore of that man: If another do ill by thy advice, the ill is reckoned to thee. If one ſhould come and ſay as Abſolom ſaid to his Servants, Mark ye now, when Amnon's heart is merry with wine, and when I ſay unto you, ſmite Amnon, then kill him, fear not, have not I commanded you? Not only did the ſervants kill Amnon, but Abſolom killed Amnon, becauſe he commanded them to kill him. You know what is ſaid of David; he did but ſend a Letter concerning the death of Uriah; and the Charge cometh, Thou haſt ſlain Uriah with the Sword of the Children of Ammon. All the evil others commit by thy counſel, direction, advice, command or conſent, is as done by thy ſelf. So (on the other ſide) all the good others do by our counſel, advice, promotion, admonition, inſtruction, and the like, that good ſhall all be reckoned to us. If another be holy by thy advice, it will be ſaid thou haſt made him holy, thou haſt ſanctified him.

Laſtly, Obſerve, That Holy Duties call for Holy Preparation.

We muſt not touch holy things with unholy hands, or with unholy hearts: I will waſh my hands in innocency, and ſo will I compaſs thine Altar, O Lord, was David's reſolution, Pſal. 26. 6. Therefore Job intending a ſolemn duty, a Sacrifice, which did contain the ſum of all Religion concerning the external worſhip of God, ſends ſolemnly to his children to prepare themſelves: O come not to the Sacrifice except you be ſanctified. It is a point ſo clear, that I ſhall need but only to name it to you. How and wherein they ſhould ſanctifie themſelves, and what courſe they took for the ſanctifying and preparing of themſelves for that Duty, doth not appear in this place; but afterwards, when God gave them the Law, he preſcribed them a rule, what they muſt do that they might be ſanctified: the Jews had ſpecial directions for their preparations. Some things were outward, and ſome inward. I will but touch them.

For the outward, they were commanded to waſh their cloaths, Exod. 19. that place before quoted; Sanctifie them to day and to morrow, and let them waſh their cloaths: Not that God regarded cloaths, but he aimed at ſomewhat further; if the cloaths muſt be waſhed, certainly then the heart muſt be waſhed; he pointed at that in the waſhing of their cloaths. In Leviticus and Numbers, other outward preparations are commanded; as the abſtaining from all things that were unclean; they muſt not touch any thing that was unclean: and then ſometimes they were not only to waſh their cloths, but to change their cloaths: you have the expreſſion in that place concerning Jacob; Be clean (ſaith he,) and change your garments: It might be a changing by waſhing; but I rather conceive, that it was a change by putting on of other cloaths. There was alſo another external requiſite to the preparing and ſanctifying of themſelves; and that was by abſtaining for a time from the lawful uſe of the Marriage-bed: You have the command expreſly in that of Exod. 19. 15. Be ready againſt the third day, come not at your wives; and there are other the like places, 1 Sam. 21. 4. The Prieſt ſaid, There is no common bread under mine hand, but there is hallowed bread; if the young men have kept themſelves at leaſt from women; if they have but the outward preparation; the meaning is, if they had kept themſelves from their Wives: David affirms it was ſo, in the words following. The Apoſtle giveth the ſame Rule, in 1 Cor. 7. 5. Speaking of that point; Defraud not one another (ſaith he) except it be with conſent for a time, that you may give your ſelves to faſting and prayer. So that the Holy Ghoſt therein intimates ſuch an abſtaining as was preparatory to ſolemn duties, that you may give your ſelves to faſting and prayer. Extraordinary duties call for extraordinary preparations. Theſe outward preparations were ſo neceſſary, that when the people failed in them, Hezekiah prayed for pardon, 2 Chron. 30. 18, 19. The good Lord pardon every one that prepareth his heart to ſeek God, the Lord God of his Fathers, though he be not cleanſed according to the purification of the Sanctuary. Though their hearts were upright, though they had hearts rightly prepared, yet he prayeth that God wou'd pardon the want of thoſe outward preparations. The principal preparation is of the heart, and the waſhing of our wayes: therefore we find how the Lord contendeth with them, in Iſa. 1. 10, 11, &c. where he ſpeaks of thoſe Oblations, and great Services of the Jews: I hate your ſolemn feaſts, bring no more vain oblations, &c. Why? Your hands (ſcil. your lives) are full of blood. Waſh ye, make you clean, put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes; ceaſe to do evil, learn to do well, &c. As if he ſhould ſay, Why do you come to me in theſe holy duties, except you prepare and fit your ſelves accordingly; I cannot abide that unholy perſons ſhould come about holy things.

Jer. 7. 8, 9.

The very Heathen had this Notion, they would not admit any to come to their religious ſervices unleſs they were prepared. That ſaying of Æneas in the Poet, to his Father, when he came from the War, is a clear proof; Tu genitor, &c. Father, do you meddle with the Sacrifices; but as for me it is a ſinful thing to touch them, —till I have waſhed my ſelf in the fountain. This was an outward external Rite amongſt them for cleanſing themſelves. The very Heathen ſaw they muſt not meddle with their holy things till they were cleanſed; therefore they had one cried out to the people when they came to ſacrifice; All you that are unclean and prophane, go far away from theſe Sacrifices. Not only the word of God, but the very light of Nature taught them, not to meddle with holy things till they were ſanctified.

Tu Genitor cape ſacra manu patrioſque penates. Me bello extento digreſſum & cæde recenti attrectare nefas, donec me flumine vivo abluero. Virg. Æn. —Procul, hinc procul eſte prophani, conclamat vates totoque abſiſtite luco.

Therefore ſpecially look to this, when you have any ſacrifice, any duty to perform; be prepared and ſanctified within and without, before you come to the duty. It is true, that the duty ſanctifies, but it is ſeldom that the duty ſanctifies us, unleſs we be ſanctified for the duty: They get moſt holineſs from the duty, who are moſt holy when they come to the duty: beſides the great danger of coming unprepared. Take heed how you hear; not only hear, but take heed to prepare your ſelves for hearing: So, look to thy feet (it hath the ſame ſence) when thou comeſt into the houſe of God; prepare thy ſelf, be not haſty, leſt thine be counted but the Sacrifice of Fools. So much of the firſt act of Job's holy care; He ſent and ſanctified them.

Part of VERS. 5. & V. 6.

And roſe up early in the morning, and offered burnt-offerings according to the number of them all. For Job ſaid, It may be that my Sons have ſinned, and curſed God in their hearts. Thus did Job continually.

Now there was a day when the Sons of God came to preſent themſelves before the Lord, and Satan came alſo among them.

NOw follows the ſecond Act of Job's holy Care; He roſe up early in the morning, and offered burnt offerings according to the number of them all.

It is ill to perform a holy duty with neglect of preparation; it is as bad to make preparation, and then neglect the duty. We ſee both joyned in Job; he is careful to prepare, and he is as diligent to perform.

He roſe up early.] This notes the extraordinary diligence and zeal of Job toward God in this duty: He was ſo zealous, that he riſes not only in the morning, but early in the morning. In Scripture, to do a thing in the morning, and to do a thing diligently, are the ſame; Pſ. 101. 8. I will early deſtroy the wicked of the Land; the word is, I will deſtroy the wicked of the Land in the morning; and the meaning is only this, I will with all diligence and all care root out of the Land all wicked perſons. So there is an expreſſion, Prov. 7. 15. which illuſtrates this; where the wicked woman, the Harlot, tells the young man, that ſhe came forth to meet him, and diligently to ſeek his face: The Original word there, is, to ſeek thy face in the morning; and yet we know, that in Verſe 9. it was in the twi-light, in the evening that ſhe met him. But the Hebrew phraſe is, I came forth in the morning to ſeek thy face; that is (as it is rendred) I came forth diligently to ſeek thy face. So this coming forth of Job in the morning, beſides the time, that it was at ſuch an hour, the beginning of the day; notes the great diligence and exceeding care of Job about this work.

Yet more exactly, it is not only ſaid, he roſe in the morning (for there is a great latitude in the morning, there are divers hours which all are called morning) but it is ſaid, he roſe early in the morning, in the very beginning or firſt of the morning; as it is commanded, Exod. 23. 19. The firſt of the firſt-fruits of the Land thou ſhalt bring into the houſe of the Lord. God would not only have the firſt-fruits, but the firſt of the firſt-fruits; if there were any ripe ſooner then others, God would have them; ſome fruits that ripened after, were firſt-fruits; but God would have the very firſt of them. So here, Job gave God not only the firſt fruits of the day, but the earlieſt time, in the morning, which is the firſt of the firſt fruits of the day.

Early in the morning.

Thence obſerve,

> Firſt, That it is Gods due and our duty, to dedicate the morning, the firſt and beſt of every day unto God.

Pſalm. 5. 3. My voice ſhalt thou hear in the morning, in the morning will I direct my Prayer unto thee, and will look up. We have a ſaying among us, that the morning is a friend to the Muſes; that is, the morning is a good ſtudying time. I am ſure it is as true, that the morning is a great friend to the Graces; the morning is the beſt praying time.

Again, In that Job did riſe ſo early in the morning to offer ſacrifice, and did this becauſe he was affraid that his ſons had ſinned (as we ſhall ſee afterward.) Hence obſerve, > Secondly, That it is not ſafe for any to let ſin lie a moment unrepented of or unpardoned, upon their own Conſciences, or the Conſciences of others.

If a man's houſe be on fire, he will not only riſe in the morning, or early in the morning, but he will riſe at midnight to quench it. Certainly when you have guilt on your ſouls, you have a fire in your ſouls, your ſouls are on a flame; therefore you had need riſe, and riſe early, and get up as ſoon in the morning as you can, to get it quenched and put out.

And offered burnt-offerings.] There were divers ſorts of Sacrifices among the Jews, when the Law or Rules of ſacrificing were eſtabliſhed. There were, Firſt, Whole burnt-offerings. Secondly, Treſpaſs-offerings. Thirdly, Sin-offerings. Fourthly, Peace-offerings. That which Job is here ſaid to offer, was a burnt-offering, an Holocoſt or whole burnt-offering, ſo called, becauſe it was altogether conſumed; there was no part of it reſerved for the Prieſt, or for the people; but all was offered up unto God. Of other Sacrifices, as the Sin-offering, and Treſpaſs-offering, there were parts and portions reſerved for the Prieſt, and part of the Peace-offerings for the People; as you may ſee by that expreſſion of the Harlot, Prov. 7. 14. I have at my houſe Shelamim, Peace-offerings; now they did feaſt upon the Peace-offering, for ſhe invited him to a Feaſt. But the Burnt-offering was wholly conſumed; the word in the Hebrew doth ſignifie an Aſcenſion, or a thing lifted up. He offered

Lev. 1, c. 2. c. 3, &c.
עלה
חטאת
אשם
שלמים

העלה עלות

offered burnt-offerings, word for word out of the Hebrew, it is, He lifted up an elevation, he cauſed an Aſcenſion to aſcend; elevabat elevationem, or aſcendere fecit aſcenſionem; and it was ſo called, becauſe the Sacrifice which was a whole burnt-offering, was all conſumed upon the Altar, and did, as it were, evaporate or aſcend up unto God.

It was called a lifting up, or a thing lifted up, for three Reaſons.

1. Becauſe when the Sacrifice was offered, the Smoke of it did aſcend; and beſides there were ſweet Odours put upon the Altar, which did fume up alſo with the Sacrifice towards Heaven, and ſo the Sacrifice took its denomination from aſcending and going upwards.

2. Becauſe the Prieſt, when he offered the Sacrifice, did lift it up upon the Altar, and hold it toward Heaven, to God.

3. Becauſe at that time when the Sacrifice was a burning, all the People that were preſent, did lift up their hands and their eyes, but eſpecially their ſouls and their ſpirits, heaven-wards, and powred themſelves forth in Prayer unto God. That of David, in *Pſal.*141.2. will give ſome light to this; Let (ſaith he) my Prayer be ſet forth before thee as incenſe, and the lifting up of my hands as the evening-Sacrifice. David at that time (as Interpreters note upon the Pſalm) was barred the enjoyment of the Publick Ordinances; he could not come to ſacrificing as formerly he had done: now he ſeeks unto the Lord that he would accept of the lifting up of his hands and heart, inſtead of Sacrifice; as if he ſhould ſay, Lord, I have not a Sacrifice now to offer unto thee, I am hindered from that work, I cannot lift that up; but I will lift up what I have, and what will pleaſe thee better then a Bullock that hath horns and hoofs; I will lift up my hand and my heart unto thee, and let theſe be accepted for Sacrifice and all. Prayer (which is a Sacrifice of the Goſpel) it is nothing elſe but a lifting up of the Soul, an elevation of the ſpirit unto God: So ſome of the Ancients call Prayer, an aſcending of the Soul unto God; and in alluſion unto this, Hezekiah, when he ſent to Iſaiah the Prophet to pray for him in that time of diſtreſs, and day of trouble, ſaith, Go and deſire the Prophet to lift up his Prayer for the remnant that are left; alluding to the ſacrifices which were wont to be lifted up. The like expreſſion of Prayer you have, *Pſal.*25.1. Lord (ſaith David) I lift up my Soul unto thee. Hence Prayers not anſwered, not accepted, are ſaid to be ſtopt from aſcending, *Lam.*3.44. Thou haſt covered thy ſelf with a Cloud, that our Prayer ſhould not paſs through. When you meet with ſuch expreſſions in the Old Teſtament, concerning Prayer, you muſt ſtill underſtand them to be alluſions to the Sacrifices, becauſe the Sacrifices were lifted up and did aſcend. That for the Act.

2 Kings.19.4.

For the Perſon, It is ſaid that Job offered theſe Sacrifices, Job roſe up early and offered, &c. Was not this to uſurp upon the Prieſt's Office? Was it not this for which King Uzziah was reprehended, and told by the Prieſts, It appertaineth not to thee to burn Incenſe unto the Lord, but to the Prieſts, the Sons of Aaron? and was he not ſmitten with Leproſie for doing of it?

2 Chr. 26. 18.

I anſwer in a word, by that rule of the Ancients, Diſtinguiſh the times, and Scriptures will agree: It was Job that offered, and Job had right to offer. The time wherein Job offered Sacrifice doth reconcile this; it was before the giving of the Law (as we have ſhewed in the opening of the former points about the time when Job lived) now in thoſe times the Father, or the Elder of a Family was as a Prieſt to the whole Family; and he had the power and the right to perform all holy Family-duties; as the duty of Sacrificing, and the like: this you may ſee carried along in all the times before the Law was given, in the holy Stories of the Patriarchs, they ſtill offered up the Sacrifice.

But it may be here further enquired, If it were before the Law was given, who taught Job to offer Sacrifice? where had he the Rule for it?

I anſwer; This was not will-worſhip, though it was not written worſhip: For howſoever Job did offer Sacrifice before the Law of Sacrificing was written, yet he did not offer a Sacrifice before the Law of Sacrificing was given; for the Law of Sacrificing was given from the beginning, as all the other parts of worſhip uſed from the beginning, were. God could never bear it, that men ſhould contrive him a Service; therefore Job did not offer up an offering unto God according to his own will, a thing that he had invented to pacifie and pleaſe God with: God had been ſo far from accepting, that he could not have born ſuch a deviſed worſhip. God doth never truſt man with the making of holy Inſtitutions. There is nothing doth pleaſe him in any act of worſhip, unleſs he ſees himſelf obeyed; Obedience is better then Sacrifice; and therefore a Sacrifice which is not out of obedience, cannot be accepted: He that ſacrificeth, doth but offer up a Beaſt; but he that obeyeth, offereth up himſelf; ſacrificeth his own will. It could not be therefore, but that Job had a word, a word as all the world had at that time; a word given by God, and ſo carried down from one to another by tradition (as it was for more then two thouſand years.) All the will that God would reveal, or had revealed to them, was carried from hand to hand, and from heart to heart, from the Fathers to the Children, till at laſt the Law was written, and the Scripture penned by Moſes. So then Job offered Sacrifice according to an Inſtitution; though it was not an Inſtitution written, yet it was an Inſtitution ſent forth and given by God himſelf.

Yet there is a third Query upon it; Suppoſe that there was an Inſtitution of God for ſacrificing, why did God call for Sacrifices? What is his meaning? Doth God delight in the blood of Bulls and Goats? Thou delighteſt not in Sacrifices (ſaith David) thou deſireſt not burnt offerings. And what was the Sacrifice unto Job, or unto his Sons? Could the killing of a Beaſt take away ſin? Why then doth Job, when he feareth that his Sons had ſinned, go preſently and offer Sacrifice?

Pſal.51.16.

For Anſwer: It is true that the Sacrifices in themſelves were nothing, either to God or man; they could do no good, they had no power in them, either to pacifie God, or to purge the Souls of men. But look upon the Sacrifice, as it was an Inſtitution, and then God ſaw his Son Jeſus Chriſt in it, and was well pleaſed; and likewiſe man beheld and believed Chriſt in it, and was purged. When the Sacrifice was offering, man ſaw Chriſt ſuffering; this took away his ſin, and pacified his Conſcience. A Sacrifice in it ſelf, as it was the killing or burning of a Beaſt, had no virtue in it, but as it had reſpect unto Chriſt; ſo God ſaw the death of his Son, and that ſatisfied him; and man ſaw the death of his Saviour, and that juſtified him.

Again, It was not the bare Sacrifice that was effectual, but the Faith of Job, and the faith of his Sons carried up in Prayer; theſe mingled with the Sacrifice, wrought the cure: Therefore we find in the time of the Sacrifice, ſtill the people were at prayer; they knew the Sacrifice, the Incenſe, could do nothing, but as joyned with the Faith of the Sacrificer in Prayer. We read, Luke 1.10. when Zacharias the Prieſt was offering the Incenſe within the Temple, the Text ſaith, that the whole multitude of the people were praying without at the time of Incenſe. The Incenſe might burn long enough, and yet the Anger of God burn too; the Incenſe might burn, and yet the people not be purified, but conſumed. But while the Incenſe was burning, while the Sacrifice was offering, the people were praying and believing. Theſe actings of Faith, and powrings out of Prayer made the Sacrifice, as effectual for man, ſo acceptable unto God.

Then in that he offered burnt-offerings, which burnt-offerings were made when he feared that his Sons had ſinned; theſe offerings typing out and leading them to Chriſt and his Death; we may note this,

That, Chriſt was ever the only remedy and cure of ſin.

As ſoon as ever there was any fear of ſin, preſently they had recourſe to a Sacrifice; and what was that? They went to Chriſt. Chriſt hath been the help againſt ſin in all the generations of the world from the firſt, and will be to the laſt. If any man ſin (ſaith the Apoſtle John) we have an Advocate with the Father, Jeſus Chriſt the righteous, and he is the propitiation for our ſins; he is the Propitiatory Sacrifice for our ſins. It follows,

1 Joh.2.1.

According to the number of them all.] That is, he offered for each of his Sons a Sacrifice. There were ſome Sacrifices, which did ſerve for the whole Congregation; as we may ſee in Lev. 4.13,14. and in divers other Chapters of that Book. Beſides theſe, there were perſonal Sacrifices, fices, Lev. 1. Where the Laws about Sacrifices are ſet forth; If any Soul had ſinned, that particular Soul muſt come to the Prieſt, and bring a ſacrifice for his ſin. So here, Job doth not offer only one general family-ſacrifice for them all, but he offereth up a diſtinct particular ſacrifice for every particular Son. This teacheth us, Firſt, That every one is ſaved and pardoned by the ſpecial and particular actings of his own Faith: Every Soul muſt believe for it ſelf.

Every one muſt have a Sacrifice. We have Congregational prayers, and we have perſonal prayers; now it is not enough for people to pray in publick with the Miniſter, or for the Miniſter (who is the mouth of the Congregation to God) to offer up a prayer for the pardon of the people; but every one muſt apart and by himſelf ſue out his own pardon; which is, as it were, his own ſacrifice, by offering up and tendering of Jeſus Chriſt unto God for the pardon of his ſins.

Then again you may note, in that Job offered a Sacrifice for every one of his ſons,

That, it is not enough for Parents to pray in general for their Children, but they ought to pray particularly for them.

As Parents who have many Children, provide portions according to the number of them all, and proportion out their care perſonally, according to the number of them all; and in the Family they provide meat and cloathing according to the particular number of them all: So likewiſe they ought to be at a proportionable expence in ſpirituals, to lay out and lay up prayers and interceſſions, according to the number of them all; not only to pray in general, that God would bleſs their Children and Family, but even to ſet them one by one before God, and ſo beg and ſue out a bleſſing upon the head of every one of them, as, without all queſtion Job did, when the ſacrifice for every ſon was made; he ſent up a Prayer to God for the pardon and acceptance of every ſon. That for the opening of the ſecond Act in the Text; firſt, He ſent and ſanctified them; and ſecondly, He offered burnt-offerings according to the number of them all.

Now follows the Ground or the Reaſon of this Act of Job, both in ſanctifying them, and in offering Sacrifices for them. For Job ſaid, it may be that my ſons have ſinned, and curſed God in their hearts.

Holy Duties muſt be grounded upon reaſon. There muſt be a reaſon why we pray, before we pray; we muſt ſee cauſe for it, and great cauſe too. To pray out of cuſtom and formality, to offer ſacrifice, only becauſe it is a day of Sacrifice, is not praying nor ſacrificing. Job had a ſpecial reaſon; for Job ſaid, it may be my ſons have ſinned.

Let us examine the Reaſon a little; It may be my ſons have ſinned. What is it come to an It may be with Job, that his ſons have ſinned? What ſons had Job? Surely they were more then men, that the Father is but at a Queſtion whether his ſons have ſinned or no. Solomon after an If, concerning ſin, reſolves it into a concluſion, 1 King. 8. 46. If (ſaith he) they ſin againſt thee (here he makes a ſuppoſition; but you ſee he goes not one ſtep from it, before he makes a direct aſſertion) for (ſaith he) there is no man that ſinneth not; and yet Job puts it with an uncorrected If; or, it may be, my ſons have ſinned.

For the opening of this; Without all queſtion Job was fully and throughly ſtudied in that point of the univerſal corruption of man; his Diſputings (as we ſhall ſee afterwards in this Book) ſufficiently evince it. What is man, (ſaith he) that he ſhould be perfect, or he that is born of a woman, that he ſhould be clean? Here, by ſinning then, we are to underſtand ſomething more then ordinary ſinning. To ſin, ſometime is put for common and daily infirmities, ſuch as do inſeparably and inevitably cleave unto us; ſuch as, conſidering the ſtate and condition wherein we are, having corrupt fleſh and blood about us, we cannot be freed from. As a man who in the morning waſheth his hands, and goes abroad about his buſineſs and affairs in the world, though he doth not puddle in the mire, or rake among dunghils, yet when he returns home again to dinner, or at night, if he waſh, he finds that he hath contracted ſome uncleanneſs, and that his hands are foul: we cannot converſe in an unclean and dirty world with our bodies, but ſome uncleanneſs will faſten upon them. So it is with the Soul; the ſouls of the beſt, of the pureſt, of the holieſt, though they do not rake in the dunghil, and wallow in the mire of ſin baſely and filthily, yet they do from day to day, yea from moment to moment, contract ſome filth and uncleanneſs. And in this ſenſe it is that there is no man that liveth and ſinneth not. Every man hath a Fountain of uncleanneſs in him; and there will be ever ſome ſin, ſome filthineſs, bubling and boiling up, if not flowing forth.

Secondly, To ſin, is put for ſome ſpecial act of ſin, that which in Scripture is called a Fall; If any man be overtaken with a fault, you that are ſpiritual, reſtore him. And in this ſenſe the Apoſtle John ſaith (which is a clear anſwer to this doubt, and doth open the term) I write unto you little Children, that you ſin not. He did not write to them an impoſſible thing; he wrote to them about that, which in a Goſpel-ſenſe, they might attain unto. 1 Joh. 2.1.

There are three degrees of ſinning.

1. There is one kind of ſinning, which is called a daily infirmity; which the Saints of God, the beſt in this life, are not freed from.

2. There is another kind of ſinning, which is to ſin wilfully and with pure delight; and thus, he that is born of God, cannot ſin. 1 Joh. 3.9.

3. There is another kind of ſinning, which is called falling into ſin, or the falls of the Saints; and ſometimes they have fallen into great and ſcandalous ſins: In this ſenſe it is that the Apoſtle ſaith, Little Children, I write unto you, that you ſin not; that is, though you have daily infirmities, yet take heed of ſcandalous ſinnings. So here in the Text, where it is ſaid, It may be my ſons have ſinned; it is not meant either in the firſt or ſecond ſenſe; it is not meant, as if he thought his Sons were without infirmities, nor is it meant, that he did ſuſpect them of thoſe ſins (which are indeed incompatible with the ſtate of Grace) ſins of perfect wilfulneſs, and of malice, or the like; but it is of thoſe ſins in the middle ſort. It may be my ſons have ſinned; that is, have ſinned ſo, as to provoke God, and ſcandalize men in this their feaſting, in their meeting together. We may note from that,

Firſt, He that liveth without groſs ſins, in a Goſpel-ſence, liveth without ſin.

To be without great and groſs ſin, is our holineſs upon earth; to be without any ſin, is the holineſs of heaven. He that liveth without fault, ſine querela (as it is ſaid of Zachary and Elizabeth, that they lived blameleſly) in Goſpel-account, is ſaid to live without any ſin at all.

Another Point we may collect from this [It may be my ſons have ſinned.]

Certainly then Job's ſons were godly.

If Job be at a queſtion whether they have ſinned, they were godly without queſtion.

When a man lives ſo, that he leaves only a ſuſpition that he hath ſinned, we may be at a concluſion that he is ſanctified. For other perſons can do nothing elſe but ſin, even in holy actions, much more in civil or natural.

Again, [It may be my ſons have ſinned.] It was a ſuſpition in Job concerning his children. Hence obſerve,

It is no breach of Charity to ſuſpect ill of others, while we intend their good.

Indeed upon an It may be, upon a peradventure, to accuſe and charge another, is very uncharitable; but upon a Peradventure, or an It may be, ſuch a one, my Child, or my Friend, or my Brother hath ſinned, to be put to pray for him, this is very charitable. A good heart turns its ſuſpitions of others ſinnings and failings, into prayers and interceſſions, that they may be pardoned; not into accuſations and ſlanders, that they may be defamed. The uſe which Job made here of his ſuſpition of his ſons ſinning, was to turn it into prayer and ſupplication for the pardon of their ſin.

One thing further from this [It may be my ſons have ſinned.] Job knew of no evil that his ſons had committed; he had no report, that we read of, that his ſons had behaved themſelves unſeemly in their Meetings and Feaſtings; he only doubteth, he only is jealous and affraid that they had; yet at this time he prayeth, and ſacrificeth, and laboureth a reconcilement for them. Note from hence,

A ſuſpition that we our ſelves or others have ſinned againſt God, is ground enough for us to ſeek a reconcilement for our ſelves or others with God.

If you that are tender Parents, have but a ſuſpition, if there be but an It may be, that your Child hath the Plague, or taken the infection, will it not be ground enough for you to go preſently and give your Child a good Medicine? If any of you have but a ſuſpition, that either your ſelves, or your friends have taken poyſon, though you be not certain of it, will it not be ground enough for you to take or give an Antidote preſently? Sin is as a Plague, it is as a Poyſon; therefore while you have but a ſuſpition, either of your ſelves or of others, that you have ſinned or failed thus or thus; here is ground enough for you to take an Antidote, to take a Preſervative, to ſeek all the means you can to heal your ſouls, and to make your peace with God.

And if Job prayed thus, when he only ſuſpected his ſons had ſinned; what ſhall we ſay of thoſe Parents, who are little troubled, when they ſee and know their ſons have ſinned?

It is ſafeſt to repent even of thoſe ſins we only fear we have committed; for then we ſhall be ſure to repent of thoſe we have committed. A ſcrupulous Conſcience grieves for what it ſuſpects; a ſeared Conſcience is not grieved for what it is certain either it ſelf or others have done amiſs.

Laſtly, Where had Job's ſons been that he is thus ſuſpitious? Had they been in any ſuſpected place? No, it was only in their own houſes. Had they been about any unlawful thing? No, it was only a friendly meeting, feaſting of Brothers and Siſters together. Yet Job is affraid leſt his ſons had ſinned. Hence obſerve,

That, we may quickly offend and break the Law, while we are about things in their own nature lawful, eſpecially in feaſting.

It is an eaſie matter to ſin, while the thing you are about is not ſinful; nay, while the thing you are about is holy. We may ſuſpect our ſelves that we have ſinned, when we have been praying; much more when we have been feaſting. We may ſuſpect our ſelves that we have ſinned, when we have been hearing the Word, ſpeaking the Word; juſt cauſe then much more we have to ſuſpect our ſelves, when we have been trading, buying or ſelling, and working abroad in the world. Lawful things are oftentimes the occaſion of unlawful. All the ſins of the world are deſcribed thus; they ate, they drank, they bought, they ſold, they planted, &c. There is not one of theſe an act evil in it ſelf; yet they ſinned away their peace, and ſinned away their ſouls, in dealing about theſe things. Therefore as you muſt be affraid of all things in their own nature unlawful; ſo be jealous of your ſelves in things that are lawful.

Luke 17. 27, 28.

It follows,

And curſed God in their hearts.

Interpreters are much divided about the ſenſe of theſe words.

Firſt, Some obſerve that the Hebrew word Barach, doth ſignifie not only to bleſs, but to bow the knee: So it is uſed, 2 Chron. 6. 13. Solomon at the Dedicating of the Temple, had made a Brazen Scaffold, and upon it he ſtood, and kneeled down upon his knees before all the Congregation. The word there, kneeled down upon his knees, in the Original, is the ſame here uſed. But,

Then further, the word Elohim, is uſed in Scripture, not only for the true God, for God himſelf; but it is applied ſometimes to Angels, and ſometimes to Idols, to Devil-gods, to falſe gods, Exod. 18. 11. Now I know that the Lord is greater then all gods; ſc. then all the Idols that the Egyptians did truſt upon.

וברכו

They obſerve further, that the Hebrew word Leb, [in their hearts, Bilebabbam] doth ſignifie not only the Heart, but the middle or center of a thing: As when it is ſaid in the Scripture, They went down into the midſt of the Sea; the word is, They went down into the heart of the Sea; and in the midſt of the Earth, it is the heart of the Earth; and ſo when it is ſaid, that Abſolom was hanging in the midſt of the Oak, the Original word is, he was left hanging in the heart of the Oak. From all theſe acceptions of the ſingle terms, the ſenſe is made up thus; It may be my ſons have ſinned, &c. that is, It may be my ſons have ſinned, bowing down to the falſe gods that are in the midſt of them. I confeſs Feaſting and Falſe worſhip, Senſuality and Idolatry go often together, Exod. 32. 6. When the Golden Calf was made, they ſate down to eat, &c. And Moſes foretels, Deut. 31. 20. When they ſhall have eaten, and filled themſelves, and waxen fat, then will they turn unto other gods. Yet I cannot admit this of Job's Children; ſurely he who had beſtowed ſo much care in their inſtitution, and had them ſtill under his eye, could not ſuſpect them in degenerating ſo ſoon into ſuch palpable Idolatry.

לב

Pſal. 46. 2.

2 Sam. 18. 13.

Secondly, Others take the word [Barach] in the Original, in its proper ſenſe, It may be my ſons have ſinned, and bleſſed God; and they expound and open it thus: It may be my ſons have ſinned, and inſtead of being humbled and ſeeking to God for the pardon of their ſins, they have rejoyced and bleſſed God. Juſt as if a Thief that hath ſped well, and hath got a good prey, ſhould thank God that he hath proſpered ſo well in his wickedneſs: So here (as if Job ſhould ſay) My ſons have done ill in their feaſtings, and they are ſo far from being humbled, that they have bleſſed God in their hearts; they have been lifted up; they have given God thanks for the plenty of Creatures, but have not repented for their abuſe of the Creatures. So we may interpret it by that place, Zech. 11. 4. where there is ſuch an expreſſion; the Lord ſpeaking to Chriſt, ſaith, Feed the flock of the ſlaughter; whoſe poſſeſſors ſlay them, and hold themſelves not guilty. (They that ſhould have been the feeders of the flock, inſtead of feeding of them, have deſtroyed them; yea, they do this, and hold themſelves not guilty) and they that ſell them, ſay, bleſſed be the Lord, for I am rich. They grew rich by ſelling ſouls (as many ſince have lived by the ſame Trade, ſtarving the people, to feed themſelves) the juſt character of an idle Idol-ſhepherd; and then they ſaid, Bleſſed be God we are grown very rich, and have got much goods, though we have done little good. This is a ſecond interpretation, and a clear one; only methinks it layes too high a ſtain of wickedneſs on Job's ſons. It is one of the greateſt wickedneſſes for a man to bleſs himſelf in his ſins; but for a man to bleſs God in his ſins, is far worſe.

Thirdly, Others interpret Benedicere by Valedicere, bleſſing by departing. Thus, It may be my ſons have ſinned and departed from God in their hearts; and they bring ſome Texts of Scripture, wherein the word [Barach] ſignifies to depart, or to take leave, and go away; as, Gen. 47. 10. Jacob bleſſed Pharaoh, and went out from before Pharaoh; he bleſſed him, and departed. So it is ſaid likewiſe of Joab, 2 Sam. 14. 22. When he had obtained what he deſired, he fell to the ground on his face, and bowed himſelf, and thanked (or bleſſed) the King, and went out. Now they would interpret this, bleſſed God in their hearts, to the ſame ſenſe; It may be my ſons have ſinned, and bleſſed God in their hearts, that is, have departed from God in their hearts. Indeed every ſin is a departure from God; as the Apoſtle ſpeaks; Take heed leſt there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief to depart from the living God. Sin is a turning away from God; yet every ſin is not, nay, few ſins are a farewel to God. But I ſhall lay by this interpretation; for the proofs come not home, no, nor near the point. In both thoſe places, bleſſing is not put barely for departing; and beſides, departing in thoſe Texts, is taken in a good ſence; Jacob departed from Pharaoh, not in a way of deſerting him, but in a way of ſaluting him; ſo Joab departed from the King, not that he did revolt from him (as they would have the word to import a kind of revolting and apoſtatizing from God) but only he did obeiſance, and went away about his buſineſs; therefore this interpretation cannot ſtand.

Heb. 3. 12.

There is a fourth Expoſition much laboured by Zanchius (and would it hold, it were an excellent expoſition) according to the Letter of the Text: thus; It may be my Sons have ſinned, and not bleſſed God in their hearts; and ſo he makes thoſe words to be exegetical, the explication of the former, what the ſin of Job's ſons was; It may be my ſons have ſinned, and if you would know what they have ſinned in, I fear they have forgot to give God the glory for the

Zanchius.

the refreſhing they have had by the Creatures, they have not bleſſed God. This were an excellent and clear ſence; but the way he takes to make it out, is very obſcure: For he doth it only by this Rule; When (ſaith he) there is a negative Particle in the former, a negative is likewiſe to be underſtood in the following Clauſe. His Rule he clears by divers Inſtances. But we find in this place no negative Particle, as Non or Ne, or the like, in the former part of the Verſe; and how there ſhould be a negative in the latter, I cannot underſtand according to his Rule: Ne forte, (It is here ſaid) It may be my ſons have ſinned (that is a word of doubting, not denial; rather an affirmative, then a negative) and have not bleſſed; now ſaith he, though that Particle (not) be not in the Hebrew, yet it muſt be underſtood of courſe, becauſe there is a negative Particle in the former part: How he can make (ne forte) peradventure, a negative particle, I do not well apprehend; yet the ſence in it ſelf is very good; It may be my ſons have ſinned, and not bleſſed God in their hearts.

Some would read it with an Interrogation (though I queſtion whether the Grammar will allow it) Thus, It may be my ſons have ſinned; and have they bleſſed God in their hearts? As if he had ſaid, I fear they have not bleſſed God, or not bleſſed him cordially; neglect of, or ſlightneſs in ſuch a Duty, calls for ſacrifice.

Laſtly, That meaning which our Tranſlation leads unto, is moſt commonly taken by Interpreters both ancient and modern; name'y, that here in this Text the word [Barach] is to be expounded by curſing; It may be my ſons have ſinned, and curſed God in their hearts. I ſhall preſent you with the grounds of this Interpretation, and how it is made good; and then leave it to the Readers Judgment, whether to chuſe this, or thoſe former which have had any countenance ſhewed them. For in a Scripture which may without impeachment of any Truth, admit divers ſences, I would not be ſo poſitive in one, as to reject all others.

Now this Tranſlation is maintained by a Figure, either by an Antiphraſis, which is the ſpeaking of a thing ſounding one way, when it is meant another way, when there is an oppoſition between the Letter of the word, and the Meaning of the word. Thus, 1 Kings 21. 13. Naboth is charged for bleſſing God and the King; ſc. curſing. Or, by an Euphemiſmus; that is, when ſome filthy or execrable matter is expreſſed by a word of a fairer ſignification. So in Scripture, the uncleanneſs of ſome things is covered with a word, that ſo the offenſiveneſs of it may be removed both from the Ear and Phanſie: As for example, that Veſſel wherein Nature doth unburden it ſelf, it is called A Veſſel wherein there is no pleaſure; and ſo the word that the Hebrews uſe for a Harlot, ſignifies properly a holy woman; as, Gen. 38. When Judah asked whether they ſaw the Harlot? the word in the Hebrew (Kedeſah) ſignifies a holy woman, by an Antiphraſis, or by an Euphemiſmus. Yet ſome think a Harlot, ſo called, becauſe (holineſs being the dedication of a thing or perſon) ſuch dedicate and give themſelves up to, or are poſſeſſed with a ſpirit of uncleanneſs. But to the Text; take it by an Euphemiſmus, or fair ſpeaking: It may be my ſons have ſinned, and curſed God in their hearts; they even abhorring to uſe ſuch a word concerning God, expreſs it by bleſſing; It may be my ſons have ſinned, and bleſſed God in their hearts. So the Latines uſe the word, Sacrum pro execrando, that which is the moſt execrable thing, they call a ſacred thing.

Jer. 22. 28.

Hoſ. 8. 8.

קדשה

Auri ſacra fames.

Now taking it thus according to the common ſtream of Expoſitors upon the place, it may yet be doubted, how Job could ſuſpect his ſons of this, that they ſhould curſe God?

I anſwer to that; Here we are not to take curſing either for that abominable act (at which Heathens bluſh) the caſting of open reproach upon the Name of God; or for a malicious and virulent, though ſecret blaſpheming of God, and ſending defiance to Heaven in their hearts. But to curſe God in the heart, doth ſignifie an irreverent, undue, unfit, unholy thought of God, any thought unbecoming the Glory and Majeſty of ſo great a God; which, how quickly the heart may ſend out at a Feaſt, who feels not, who finds not? God is ſaid to be curſed, when he hath not that reverence and honour which belongs to him, whoſe Name is Holy and Reverent. In that ſence only we are to underſtand the word curſing here. And Mr. Broughton gives a Tranſlation which lets in ſome light to this; It may be my ſons have ſinned, and little bleſſed God in their hearts; that is, they have not had ſuch high, ſuch holy thoughts of God as became them; they have little bleſſed God: careleſs thoughts of God are little bleſſing of God, and both amount to a curſing of God.

So that the Senſe which reſults, is this. As if Job ſhould have ſaid, I am well enough ſatisfied concerning my ſons, that they have not broadly blaſphemed God, that they have not been ſuch as have torn his Name with Oaths, Curſings and Execrations; yet notwithſtanding I know the heart is a deceitful thing, there are many ſtarting-holes in it; it quickly conceives, and cloſely conceals a ſin; and therefore I am very doubtful; though my ſons have carried it fairly and well in their actions and words while they feaſted, that yet their hearts have been looſe, and their affections vain, I am affraid they have curſed, lightly regarded, or little bleſſed God in their hearts.

Obſerve Firſt, That we ought to keep our hearts with all manner of keeping in every thing we go about.

If your hearts are diſorderly, it is a kind of curſing God. Remember not only to keep your hearts, when you are praying, and when you are hearing, and when you are in holy duties; but remember to keep your hearts when you are feaſting and refreſhing your ſelves, when you are in your callings, when you are buying and ſelling, &c.

Note, Secondly, That Sins of the heart, ſinful thoughts are very dangerous ſins.

Job could not accuſe his ſons of loud blaſphemies, he only ſuſpected the ſilent ſins of the heart; yet he offereth ſacrifice for them.

Again, When Job hath nothing to charge his Sons with, but only ſins of the heart, you ſee it is with an It may be my ſons have curſed God in their hearts; he doth not ſpeak directly or poſitively that they have done ſo.

Whence note, That no man can poſitively conclude what is wrought in the heart of another.

The Heart is God's Peculiar; as he only hath the Lock and Key of the Heart, to ſhut or open it, ſo he only hath a Window to look into it; we may gueſs at the heart, we may ſay, It may be, further we cannot go. The hearts of men often come forth at their mouths, and appear in their actions, and then indeed we may conclude their hearts are naught; for out of the abundance of the heart the mouth ſpeaketh, and the hand worketh, but unleſs we have that teſtimony, unleſs the heart give that witneſs againſt it ſelf, we can only ſuſpect it; it may be thus or thus; God alone can tell when we curſe him in our hearts; and (if we go on impenitently in them) irreverent thoughts will be interpreted a curſing of God.

Thus did Job continually.

This is the third thing to be opened in this Verſe; to wit, the Conſtancy of Job. We have ſeen the Acts of his ſpiritual care, and the ground of it, his fear leſt his Sons had ſinned. Now we have the conſtancy of this duty. Thus did Job continually.

Continually.] The Original is, all the dayes thus did Job; Cunctis diebus, all dayes, that is, all the dayes that this occaſion did offer it ſelf. When his Sons went to feaſting, then ever Job went to praying and to ſacrificing. Continually, or all the dayes, doth not import that Job did offer ſacrifice every day; this continually is to be underſtood in the renewed ſeaſons; all the dayes are thoſe dayes wherein occaſion was given. We are then ſaid to do a thing continually, when we do it ſeaſonably; ſo thoſe places of Scripture are to be underſtood; Pray without ceaſing; not that a man ſhould do nothing elſe but pray, but that he ſhould labour to have his heart in a praying frame alwayes, and ſhould actually pray as often as Duty requires; ſuch an one prayes alwayes. So here; Job's offering ſacrifice continually, noteth only the conſtancy and perſeverance of Job in the Duty, that ſo often as there was an occaſion renewed, Job renewed this ſervice and holy care concerning his ſons, for reconciling them unto God. Job had many other things to do in the world; he had a calling, yet he offered ſacrifice continually.

כל הימים

1 Theſ. 5. 17.
Eph. 6. 28.

It is an excellent point of ſpiritual wiſdom, to drive the two Trades for Heaven and Earth ſo, as that one ſhall not intrench upon another; for a man to pray ſo, as that it may be ſaid he prayes continually; and for a man to follow his Calling ſo, as that it may be ſaid, he follows his Calling continually. In that he offered ſacrifice as oft as his Sons did feaſt, Obſerve this,

That, the heart of man is continually evil.

Do not think that one Sacrifice will ſerve the heart of man; when it hath failed once in a Duty, and thou haſt humbled thy Soul for that, think not thus, now my heart will forbear, when I come to ſuch a duty, or ſuch a buſineſs again, now I have taken order with my heart, I need not fear any more: no, the heart will ſin over the ſame ſin a thouſand times, it will ſin continually. You ſee here Job ſacrificing every time his Sons feaſted, he knew their hearts were apt to conceive thoſe ſins at any time, therefore he ſeeks God for them at all times.

Further obſerve, That, Renewed Sins muſt have renewed Repentance.

Thus did Job continually.] Till you have done ſinning, you muſt never give over repenting. If there be a Leak in the Ship, that lets in water continually, the Pump muſt work continually to carry it out: We are leaking Veſſels all of us, ſin cometh in, ſin is renewed, there muſt be the Pump of Repentance to carry it out again.

Laſtly, We may note this, Job did it continually; Job was not good by fits.

That which a man doth out of Conſcience, he will do with perſeverance.

Nature will have good moods, but Grace is ſteddy. Thus did Job continually; whatſoever his affairs or buſineſſes were, whatſoever was laid by, he would not lay by this duty of ſacrificing.

Let this ſuffice for the Fifth Verſe, containing the care of Job over the ſouls of his Children. And ſo in theſe five Verſes already opened, we have Firſt, ſeen the dignity and ſincerity of Job's Perſon. Secondly, The fulneſs and proſperity of his Condition. Thirdly, The holineſs and piety of his Life. Certainly a man thus raiſed, thus glorious, ſet up thus in Temporals and in Spirituals, thus furniſhed with Subſtantials, and adorned with Circumſtantials, abounding in whatſoever could make a man great and happy, both in the eye of God and man; ſurely ſuch a man as this, a man thus compleat, wanted nothing but ſome want, to try his ſincerity in this fulneſs. And now behold this haſtening upon him: God having thus fitted and qualified him, will now try him, try him like Gold in the Furnace of affliction. You may ſee matter gathering for this, and the fire kindling in the next part of the Chapter.

Verſe 6. Now there was a day when the Sons of God came to preſent themſelves before the Lord, &c.

Take this in the General, from the connection of the two parts.

Vſually where God gives much Grace, he tries Grace much.

To whom God hath given ſtrong ſhoulders, on him, for the moſt part, he layeth heavy burdens. As ſoon as Job is ſpoken of thus prepared, the next thing that follows is an affliction.

Now there was a day, &c.] And ſo we are come to the ſecond main Diviſion of the Chapter; which is, the Affliction of Job; and that is ſet forth from this verſe 6, to the end of verſe 19. And leſt we ſhould conceive it to have come upon him by chance, it is punctually deſcribed four wayes,

1. By the Cauſes of it, verſe 6, 7, &c.
2. By the Inſtruments of it, verſe 15, 16, &c.
3. By the Manner of it, verſe 14, 15, 16, &c.
4. By the Time of it, verſe 13.

Firſt, His Afflictions are ſet forth in their Cauſes; and that is done from the ſixth verſe to the end of the twelfth. And the Cauſes are threefold.

Firſt, The Efficient Cauſes, and they were two.

1. The ſupreme and principal efficient Cauſe, and that was God, ordering and diſpoſing the affliction of Job.
2. The ſubordinate efficient Cauſe, and that was Satan; he was an efficient but under God: Satan found out other Inſtruments and Tools to do it by; but he was an efficient ſubordinate unto God; and the Text diſcovers him three ways.

1. By his Diligence in tempting, verſe 7.
2. By his Malice in ſlandering, verſe 9, 10, 11.
3. By his Cruelty, in ſoliciting the overthrow and affliction of Job, verſe 11.

Secondly, We have the Material Cauſe of Job's Affliction; or, in what manner he was afflicted; and that is laid down, firſt, poſitively, in thoſe words, All that he hath is in thy power; that is, his outward Eſtate; that was the matter wherein he was afflicted. Then it is laid down negatively, in thoſe words, Only upon himſelf put not forth thy hand. God doth ſet him out how far the affliction ſhall go: in the things that he hath, thou ſhalt afflict him; but thou ſhalt not meddle with his Perſon, with his Body, or with his Soul.

Thirdly, The Final Cauſe of Job's Affliction; and that is, the practical and experimental determination, deciſion, or ſtating of a great Queſtion that was between God and Satan concerning Job's ſincerity. God tells Satan that Job was a good and juſt man; Satan he denies it, and ſaith that Job was an hypocrite. Now the determination of this Queſtion was the general Final Cauſe of Job's affliction. When on the one ſide, God affirms it, and on the other ſide, Satan denies; how ſhall it be tried? Who ſhall be the Moderator and Vmpire between them; Satan will not believe God, and God had no reaſon to believe Satan: How then ſhould this be made out? It is as if Satan had ſaid, Here is your Yea, and my Nay; this queſtion will never be ended or decided between us, unleſs you will admit ſome courſe to have Job ſoundly afflicted: This will quickly diſcover what metal the man is made of; therefore let him come to the trial, ſaith Satan. Let him, ſaith God, behold all that he hath, is in thy power; do thy worſt to him, only upon his perſon put not forth thy hand. So that, I ſay, the general final cauſe of Job's affliction, is the determination of the Queſtion, and deciſion of the Diſpute between God and Satan, whether Job was a ſincere and holy man, or no.

And all this (to give you the ſum of thoſe ſix verſes a little further) is here ſet forth and deſcribed unto us after the manner of men, by an Anthropopathy; which is, when God expreſſes himſelf in his actions and diſpenſations with and toward the world, as if he were a man. So God here; he preſents himſelf in the buſineſs after the manner of ſome Great King ſitting upon his Throne, having his Servants attending him, and taking an account of them, what they had done, or giving Inſtructions and Commiſſions to them what they ſhall do. This, I ſay, God doth here after the manner of men; for otherwiſe we are not to conceive, that God doth make certain dayes of Seſſion with his Creatures, wherein he doth call the good and bad Angels together about the affairs of the world; we muſt not have ſuch groſs conceits of God; for he needs receive no information from them, neither doth he give them, or Satan, any formal Commiſſion; neither is Satan admitted into the preſence of God, to come ſo near God at any time; neither is God moved at all by the ſlanders of Satan, or by his accuſations, to deliver up his ſervants and children into his hands for a moment. But only the Scripture ſpeaks thus, to teach us how God carries himſelf in the affairs of the world, even as if he ſate upon his Throne, and call'd every Creature before him, and gave each a direction, what and when and where to work, how far, and which way to move in every action.

So that in theſe ſix verſes following, which contain the cauſes of Job's affliction, are (as we may ſo ſpeak) the Scheme or Draught of Providence (that may be the Title of them.) If a man would delineate Providence, he might do it thus; ſuppoſe God upon his Throne, with Angels good and bad, yea, all creatures about him, and he directing, ſending, ordering every one, as a Prince doth his Subjects, or as a Maſter his Servants, do you this, and do you that, &c. So all is ordered according to his Dictate.

Thus all things in Heaven and Earth are diſpoſed by the unerring wiſdom, and limited by the Almighty power of God.

Such a repreſentation as this we read in 1 Kings 22. 19. Where Micaiah ſaid to Ahab, Hear thou the word of the Lord; I ſaw the Lord ſiting upon his Throne, and all the Hoſt of heaven ſtanding by him. And ſo he goeth on to ſhew how a Spirit came and offered himſelf to be a lying Spirit in the mouth of Ahab's Prophets. This is only a ſhadow of Providence; there was no ſuch thing really acted; God did not convene or call together a Synod of Spirits to adviſe with (de Arduis Regni) about hard, doubtful caſes; nor are wicked Spirits admitted into his preſence; only by this we are inſtructed and aſſured that God doth as exactly order all things in heaven and earth, as if he ſtood queſtioning or interrogating good Angels, Men, and Devils, concerning thoſe matters.

Having thus given ſome light about theſe ſix Verſes in general, I ſhall open the Particulars.

Now there was a day.] The Jewiſh Rabbins trouble themſelves much to find out what day this was: They ſay it was the firſt day of the year. Others, that it was the Sabbath day. But I account it a diſadvantage to a clear Truth, when it is proved by an obſcure Text. The Sabbath hath proof enough before the Law, though this be ſpared. The holy Ghoſt hath told us only that there was a day, or a certain time.

Hic locus refellit Chryſoſt. qui negat Angelos unquam vocari filios Dei. Druſ. Read more of this Point, c. 2. 1. where the whole Verſe is repeated.

When the Sons of God.] In Gen. 6. 2. The poſterity of Seth (who were the Viſible Church at that time) are called the Sons of God. The unanimous conſent of all Expoſitors (I have met with) is, that here the Sons of God are the good Angels; ſo alſo they are called, chap. 38. 7. of this Book. Some, it may be, will object againſt this Expoſition that of the Apoſtle in Heb. 1. 5. To which of the Angels ſaid he at any time, thou art my Son? How then do you interpret here, that the Sons of God are the Angels, whenas the Apoſtle hath expreſt, To which of the Angels, &c.

I anſwer, that the Angels are not the Sons of God, as the Apoſtle there expreſſeth; they are not the Sons of God by eternal Generation; but they are the Sons of God by temporal Creation; for ſo he ſpeaks there; To which of the Angels ſaid he, thou art my ſon, this day have I begotten thee? They are not the begotten ſons of God, but they are the created ſons of God. And the Angels are called the ſons of God in three reſpects.

Firſt, Becauſe of their great and mighty power; therefore Eph. 1. 21. they are called Principalities and Powers; far above principalities and powers, and might and dominions; that is, far above all Angels. They are called the ſons of God, becauſe they are like God in power and dignity.

Then again they are called the ſons of God, becauſe they ſerve God as ſons, chearfully, willingly, readily. They do not obey as ſlaves, as ſervants, as the beſt of ſervants, they obey better then the beſt of ſervants; they obey as Children; they go about their work with filial and ſonlike chearfulneſs and delight.

Thirdly, They are called ſons, becauſe of the great priviledge that God doth vouchſafe them; he doth uſe them as his Children, as his ſons, they are his Courtiers, they are near him, alwayes attending him, and continually ſee his face; they have the priviledge of ſons.

Came to preſent themſelves before the Lord.] Not that the Angels are at any time out of the preſence of God, for Chriſt is expreſs in that, Mat. 18. 10. Their Angels do alwayes behold the face of my Father. But they are then ſaid to come and preſent themſelves before God, when they come upon ſome ſpecial buſineſs, or upon ſome ſpecial occaſion. As it is with us here upon the earth, we are never out of the preſence of God; for Pſal. 139. Whither ſhall I go from thy preſence? Yet when we come to pray, and are in other holy duties, we are ſaid to preſent our ſelves before God, and to draw near unto God, and God is ſaid to draw near unto us at ſuch a time, and yet God is ever with us, and we ever with him. So when it is ſaid here, that the Angels came and preſented themſelves before the Lord, it noteth only this, their readineſs, either to give an account of what they had done, or to receive directions from God what to do. The Angels are moſt willing to go about the ſervice and work of God, and that is all that is here meant by their preſenting themſelves before the Lord, for otherwiſe they are ever in his preſence: as, Luke 1. 19. The Angel anſwered and ſaid, I am Gabriel that ſtand in the preſence of God, and am ſent to ſpeak unto thee. I am Gabriel that ſtand; he ſpeaks in the preſent time, even now while I am ſpeaking unto thee, I ſtand in the preſence of God. The Angel while he goeth into the world, is not abſent from God, he beholdeth the face of God alwayes. The Schoolmen have an odd diſtinction, they ſay, there are aſſiſting Angels, and miniſtring Angels: Thoſe Angels that are aſſiſtants, ſtand alwayes before God, and never are ſent out about the world upon any occaſion; Others are miniſtring Spirits; as, Heb. 1. 14. Are they not miniſtring Spirits ſent forth to miniſter for them who are the heirs of ſalvation? This is School-Doctrine. But there needs no ſuch diſtinction of ſome to be aſſiſting or attending, and ſome to be miniſtring Angels; for whereſoever they are, they are alwayes in the preſence of God; and their preſenting themſelves before God, notes only their preparedneſs to attend the Lords Service in whatſoever he ſhall employ them.

And Satan came alſo among them.] That is, the chief of the evil Angels. The word [Satan] ſignifieth an Adverſary; and ſo it is oftentimes applied to men; as, concerning Solomon, it is ſaid, that while he did walk exactly with God, there was neither Adverſary nor evil occurrant; the word in the Original is, there was no Satan in his Kingdom. And in 1 Kings 11. 14. it is ſaid, The Lord ſtirred up Satan an Adverſary againſt Solomon. And that accuſation which thoſe wretches in Ezra 4. ſent againſt the building of Jeruſalem, is called Sitna; they ſent Sitna, an accuſation, or an oppoſing Letter. It comes from the ſame Root; any kind of oppoſition is called Sitna, from Satan, who is an Oppoſer. It is ſometimes uſed more generally concerning any oppoſition; as the Angel that came to oppoſe Balaam, Numb. 22. 34. I wiſt not (ſaith Balaam) that there was an Adverſary that ſtood in the way.

1 Kin. 5. 4.

But how can it be ſaid that Satan ſhould come among the ſons of God?

I ſaid before, that it was but an alluding ſpeech to the dealings of men in their Seſſions and Aſſemblies, and there is no neceſſity to make every Particular of it hold. We may conceive it thus,

Satan came alſo among them.] It is not ſaid that the ſons of God and Satan came and preſented themſelves before the Lord; Satan did not joyn himſelf in with them, Satan did not offer himſelf for any good ſervice; but thither he came, being ſo ordered by the over-ruling power of God.

But can Satan come into the preſence of God?

No otherwiſe then a blind man can come into the Sun; he comes into the Sun, and the Sun ſhineth upon him, but he ſees not the Sun. Satan comes ſo into the preſence of God, that he is alwayes ſeen of God; he is never ſo in the preſence of God, as to ſee God. It is queſtion'd whether the lapſed Angels ever ſaw God at all while they ſtood; becauſe if they had ſeen God, it is conceived that Viſion would have been their confirmation: But it is moſt certain, that the lapſed Angels, ſince their fall, never ſaw God, nor ever ſhall; though it be ſaid here, Satan came among the ſons of God: you know what the Apoſtle Jude teacheth, That the Devils kept not their place, but are reſerved in Chains of darkneſs againſt the judgment of the great day: We ſhall open that afterward, when we come to ſpeak of his compaſſing the earth, how he doth compaſs the earth, and yet is reſerved in chains of darkneſs. But I ſay, there is his ſeat, there is his place, and all that is ſpoken of him in this, doth not infer any the leaſt glimpſe or fruition of God or communion with the Angels. In regard of his nature, he is ſtill a Spirit; but in regard of his ſin, he is a miſerable Spirit; he hath loſt his excellency, though he hath not his Nature. And being a Spirit, he hath power to paſs and repaſs, to go up and down the world, to aſcend and deſcend at his pleaſure (as good Angels may and can) when God doth permit them.

We ſee here the good Angels are called the Sons of God; in this learn the priviledge of Believers; they partake with the Angels in this Title: The Apoſtle ſaith, Behold what manner of love the Father hath ſhewed, that we ſhould be called the ſons of God. If you would know what manner of love it is, it is as great as the Angels in Heaven have: Chriſt took not upon him the nature of Angels, but hath given us the honour of Angels. Fallen Angels could not ſhare with us in the benefit of redemption, but we ſhare with the Angels that ſtand in the priviledge of Sonſhip. We are the Sons of God as well as they, and in ſomewhat beyond them; they are created Sons, but not (as we) adopted ſons.

Came and preſented themſelves before God.] This ſhould teach us to imitate Angels. This we pray for; That the will of God ſhould be done on Earth, as it is done in Heaven. The Angels alwayes preſent themſelves, they alwayes ſtand before God, ready to do his will; we ſhould be ever in the preſence of God in this ſence, that is, preſenting our ſelves, ſtanding as in the preſence of God, ready to take and receive inſtruction, to do his will, whatever it is. Lord, what wilt thou have me to do, is as it were the voyce of an Angel ſtanding before the Throne of God. It ſhould be the voice of every Soul, Lord, what wilt thou have me to do? This is the preſenting of the Soul before God.

Then conſider here, who Satan was; Satan was as good in his Creation, as any of thoſe who are called the Sons of God. They are called the ſons of God; and he is now called nothing but Satan, an Adverſary. His condition was once as good as theirs. Note hence,

> There is no created excellency, but if it be left to it ſelf, will quickly undo it ſelf.

Theſe Angels were as good at the firſt as any of thoſe that were here called the ſons of God. They were not confirmed, they ſtood upon their own bottom, they fell, and had no tempter at all; they turned about upon the freedom of their own will, and left their habitation (ſaith the Scripture.) There is no truſting to any eſtate out of Chriſt.

Further, note this, what was the difference between thoſe ſons of God, and this Satan? Only ſin; One was as good as the other in the Creation; nothing elſe made an Angel a Devil, but only ſin.

> Sin deſpoiles the Creature of all its comfort and honour at once.

Again, note this, The Angel falling, and becoming ſinful, hath his name preſently changed, he is called Satan, an Adverſary; an Adverſary to God, an Adverſary to man.

> He that is wicked himſelf, will quickly be an adverſary, an oppoſer of all goodneſs; no ſooner a Sinner, but a Satan.

Laſtly, note this;

> To be an oppoſer of good, is to be conformable to the Devil.

The Devil is the Adverſary, the Satan; and ſo proportionably, as any one is an oppoſer of good, ſo much of Satan, ſo much of the Devil he hath in him: Therefore Chriſt ſaid to a chief Apoſtle, when he did oppoſe him in that greateſt good of all, the working out of our Redemption in dying for us; get thee behind me Satan, Mat. 16. All oppoſition of goodneſs is a ſpice of the Devil. So the Apoſtle Paul, Acts 13. 10. when he ſpeaks to Elymas the Sorcerer, ſaith, O thou Child of the Devil, thou enemy of all goodneſs. To be an enemy of goodneſs, is to be the child of the Devil; it is the very Character of the Devil: He is a Satan in reſpect of all goodneſs and good perſons.

And ſurely (my Brethren) if this be a character of the Devil, and to be conformable unto Satan, how conſpicuous is that conformity in this age? How many thouſands bear this Mark of the Devil, not only in their hands cloſely, but in their foreheads openly? How many viſible walking Satans are there among us, enemies of all goodneſs, oppreſſors of all righteouſneſs, oppoſers of our peace, oppoſers of our liberty, oppoſers of the Goſpel, oppoſers of Chriſt? Theſe are all as ſo many Satans in the world, ſo many enemies. Now is a time that Satans are let looſe in the world; the Devil, now, if ever, works mightily in the hearts and ſpirits, in the hands and tongues of theſe children of Diſobedience. It becometh us then, that as there are many adverſaries and oppoſers of goodneſs, to ſhew our ſelves friends and patrons of goodneſs. Chriſt hath many Challengers, let him find ſome Champions. Now it is time to raiſe your ſpirits, not only to love the Truth, but to maintain the Truth. As it is the height of wickedneſs, not only to do evil, but to oppoſe good; ſo it is the height of holineſs, not only to do good, but to oppoſe evil. This is juſt to be on the contrary point to Satan; he doth wickedneſs, and oppoſeth good; let us do good, and oppoſe all evil: To be a Satan againſt Satan, is the glory of a Chriſtian. Now ſet your ſelves againſt the Satans, be Adverſaries to that Adverſary, and all his adherents, ſo ſhall you approve your ſelves the friends of Chriſt.

VERS. 7, 8.

And the Lord ſaid unto Satan, whence comeſt thou? Then Satan anſwered the Lord, and ſaid, from going to and fro in the earth; and from walking up and down in it.

And the Lord ſaid unto Satan, haſt thou not conſidered my ſervant Job, that there is none like him in the earth? a perfect and an upright man, one that feareth God, and eſcheweth evil?

IN the former Verſe we ſhewed you that great and glorious Seſſion, the Lord with his holy Angels about him, and Satan too coming among them. In the Verſes following, to the end of the twelfth, we have the buſineſs or acts of the Seſſion recorded. God interrogates, Satan anſwers; Satan moves, God grants. This is the ſum of all the buſineſs that paſs'd in this Seſſion. God puts two Interrogatories to Satan, one concerning his Travels, or where he had been? ver. 7. The other, concerning his obſervations, or what he had done? ver. 8.

In ver. 7. we have the firſt Queſtion, the Lord beginneth with Satan; And the Lord ſaid unto Satan, whence comeſt thou?

How the Lord ſpeaks, is a point almoſt unſpeakable. There are many Diſputes about it, I will not ſtay upon them; only to open this, that you may take in all Scripture of the like kind, wherein the Lord is ſaid to ſpeak. We muſt know, that as in Scripture, God is ſaid to have a mouth, and a voice, alluding unto man by that common Figure; ſo likewiſe, when the Lord ſpeaks, we muſt underſtand it by the ſame figure; it is but an alluſion to the manner of men. God is ſaid to ſpeak, as men are ſaid to ſpeak; but God doth not ſpeak as men ſpeak, forming a voice by ſuch Organs or Inſtruments of ſpeech: but when the Lord ſpeaks, it is either by forming and creating a voice in the ayr; ſo God is ſaid to ſpeak ſometimes; as when Chriſt was baptized, there came a voice from heaven, ſaying, This is my beloved Son, &c. So John 12. 28. There came a voice from heaven, ſaying, I have glorified thee; which all the People heard ſounding in the ayr. Secondly, God is ſaid to ſpeak, when he manifeſts and declares himſelf, either to the Spirits of men, or unto Angels, who are Spirits. God doth ſpeak unto the ſpirits of men, ſometimes without any forming of a voice; ſo the phraſe is uſual in the Prophets, The word of the Lord came unto me; which is to be underſtood, that the Lord did ſecretly reveal himſelf to the ſpirits of his Prophets, and not by any external audible voice; it was an inward, not an outward word. So when the Lord ſpeaks unto Spirits or Angels, be they good or evil Angels, you muſt not underſtand it of a voice formed or faſhioned into audible words and ſyllables; but it is a manifeſtation and declaration of Gods will and mind unto the Angels mind, good or bad, as God willeth. For the will of God to declare himſelf unto an Angel, is the ſpeech of God unto an Angel. So much as God intendeth of his mind ſhould be known to the Devil, is a ſpeaking to the Devil. The intention of one Spirit is as plain to another Spirit, as the voice of one man is to another man, there is the very ſame proportion. So here in this place where it is ſaid, The Lord ſaid unto Satan, this was only a manifeſtation of Gods will, as he willed unto Satan; God did manifeſt himſelf thus far to Satan, that it was his pleaſure to know of him whence he came; this will was his ſpeech.

Mat. 3. 17.

To paſs from the manner of ſpeaking, we will look upon the matter ſpoken, And the Lord ſaid unto Satan, whence comeſt thou? That's the firſt Queſtion.

This Queſtion is here put, not for information; as if the Lord did not know whence he came, as men uſually queſtion, that they may be informed. But Queſtions in Scripture (eſpecially when the Lord putteth them) are to be underſtood in ſome of theſe ſences.

Firſt, To exact a Confeſſion from the mouth of the party. He ſaid unto Satan, Whence comeſt thou? Not that he needed an information, but that he might receive a confeſſion from the mouth of Satan. So he queſtioned Adam, Gen. 3. Adam, where art thou? who told thee that thou waſt naked? Haſt thou eaten of the Tree whereof I commanded thee, thou ſhalt not eat? Theſe Queſtions were not to inform God, but only that Adam might give a confeſſion out of his own mouth concerning thoſe things. So he queſtioned Cain, Gen. 4. Where is Abel thy Brother? It was a Queſtion only to draw a confeſſion from Cain of what he had done. There is a like Queſtion of Eliſha to his Servant Gehazi, when he had run after Naaman, and had got a reward from him, 2 Kings 5. 25. Eliſha ſaith to him, Whence comeſt thou? or, Where haſt thou been? He asked him this, only to draw a confeſſion from him; for ſaith he afterward, Went not my Spirit with thee, when the man turned again from his Chariot to meet thee? He knew before where his Servant had been; God had revealed the thing unto him; only he queſtions him to make him acknowledge it. So here the Lord queſtions Satan, whence comeſt thou? that he might have a confeſſion from himſelf. Though the Lord doth know all the actions, wayes and thoughts of every Creature, yet God at the laſt will queſtion every man, that he may judge every man upon his own confeſſion.

Secondly, This Queſtion may be underſtood, as intimating a diſlike of the thing or of the buſineſs that Satan had been about. Queſtions are many times put, not out of ignorance or neſcience of what hath been done, but out of a diſlike or abhorrence of the thing done. When the man or the thing is not approved, then God carrieth himſelf toward him and his action, as if he knew not what he had been doing, and he muſt have it out by confeſſion. Thus Hiram, 1 King. 9. 13. puts the Queſtion upon Solomon: What Cities are theſe which thou haſt given me, my Brother? He ſaw and knew before what Cities they were; but thus he queſtion'd, becauſe they pleaſed him not, ver. 12. In Hoſ. 8. 4. God is ſaid not to know that they ſet up Kings; They have ſet up Kings, but not by me; they have made Princes, and I knew it not: that is, I did not like them, I took no notice of them by way of approbation. So God queſtions about things, as if he did not know them, when he doth not like them; and we may conclude that this Queſtion holds out to us Gods diſlike of the wayes and works of Satan.

Thirdly, Queſtions, and this Queſtion may be underſtood in a way of objurgation or chiding; Satan, whence comeſt thou? Thou haſt been a tempting, thou art come now from murders, and thefts, and adulteries, and blaſphemies, from provoking men to all theſe wickedneſſes. As that Queſtion, Jonah 4. 4. was a chiding of Jonah; Doſt thou well to be angry? So, whence comeſt thou? As many times when you are angry with your ſervants, you ask, where have you been? There is a reprehenſion in the Queſtion: So God full of wrath toward Satan, ſaith, Whence comeſt thou? Thou haſt been doing all the miſchief thou canſt abroad in the world I am ſure.

Laſtly, For the better conceiving of the matter of this Queſtion propoſed, whence comeſt thou? there is more to be underſtood then is expreſſed; for God doth not only enquire here concerning the places where he had been, but concerning the buſineſs and the work which he had done; all is included in it: Whence comeſt thou? what haſt thou been doing in the world? what hath thy buſineſs been abroad? Every man, every Creature, every Angel, good or bad, muſt give an account of themſelves unto God. So much of the Lords Queſtion; now let us examine Satans Anſwer.

Then Satan anſwered the Lord, and ſaid, From going to and fro in the earth, and from walking up and down in it.

If I am enquired (ſaith Satan) whence I come; I anſwer, I come from walking up and down in the earth, from going to and fro in it. Here again it may be doubted, how Satan ſpeaks to the Lord; as before it was about the Lords ſpeaking unto Satan. The ſpeaking of Satan and all Spirits, is according to the manner before explained of Gods ſpeaking. Then Angels ſpeak one to another, or unto God, when they direct or intend ſuch or ſuch things to be known. As a thought, a conception in the mind, is a word in the mind; ſo the directing or putting forth, or an intending to put forth that word or that thought, is the ſpeaking of the mind, then the mind ſpeaks. As we know in our ſelves, a man meditates, he conceives ſuch and ſuch things, he forms them all in his ſpirit under ſome words into ſuch notions; and he can put forth theſe by deſires, though he doth not ſpeak. And ſo we are ſaid often in Scripture to ſpeak unto God in our hearts, when the mouth doth not ſpeak at all. As Moſes, Exod. 14. 15. is ſaid to cry unto God; that was nothing but the directing, or actual intending of ſuch and ſuch ſecret deſires unto God; that was a crying unto God. So it is ſaid of Hannah (1 Sam. 1. 13.) that ſhe ſpake to the Lord in her heart. After this manner do Angels and Spirits ſpeak. As we can ſpeak to God in our ſpirits, by our hearts, when we intend or lift up ſuch and ſuch thoughts unto God; ſo they ſpeak in the ſame manner by making known and revealing ſo much of their minds to God, as they deſire he ſhould take notice of: For if a man have ſuch and ſuch thoughts, and only reſerve them to himſelf, he is ſaid to ſpeak to himſelf, to ſpeak within himſelf: So Angels, though they have ſuch & ſuch thoughts, they do ſpeak to themſelves, and not to God, while they keep thoſe thoughts within themſelves; however God knows them all before, yet an Angel is ſaid to ſpeak no more to God, then he doth intentionally and obedientially (as ſome expreſs it) make known and declare to God his deſire, that God may take notice of it. So here Satan anſwereth and ſaith unto God, or he ſpeaks to God theſe things; that is, he doth actually intend that God ſhould know thus much of him, what he had been about; that he was come now from going to and fro in the earth, from walking up and down in it.

From going to and fro, &c.

It may be doubted, how Satan can be ſaid to go to and fro in the earth, and to walk up and down in it; whereas it is expreſs in the Epiſtle of Jude, ver. 6. that the Angels which kept not their firſt eſtate, but left their own habitation, he hath reſerved in everlaſting chains under darkneſs unto the judgment of the great day. Now if Satan, if the Angels that fell, be in chains, and in chains of everlaſting darkneſs, and reſerved unto the judgment of the great day, how doth Satan here ſpeak of himſelf, as being at liberty, going to and fro in the earth, and walking up and down in it?

I anſwer, That though the Devil goeth up and down, yet he is ever in chains. He is in a double chain, even when he goes and circuits the whole earth abroad, he is in a chain of Juſtice, and in a chain of Providence. He is in a chain of Juſtice, that is, under the wrath of God; and he is in a chain of Providence, that is, under the eye of God; he can go no further then God gives him leave, then God lets out and lengthens his chain. So that ſtill he is reſerved under chains, even chains of darkneſs; when he goes abroad, he goes like a Priſoner, with his fetters upon his heels.

But it may be here enquired further, if Satan be thus under the wrath of God, and be a condemned ſpirit, if he be in ſuch darkneſs, how can he intend or attempt, plot or execute thoſe deſigns of temptation for the overthrow of ſouls, and diſturbance of the Churches of God throughout the world? Will not ſuch torment and horrour of darkneſs, diſable and unfit him for ſuch curious methods of doing miſchief? can he have his thoughts upon any thing but upon his own woful condition, and miſerable eſtate?

For this likewiſe (to clear it) we may conceive, that Satan, although he be, at preſent, under the wrath of God, yet he is not under the fulneſs of the wrath of God; he is not yet in extremity, he is not yet in that degree of judgment which hereafter he ſhall receive. Satan is now as full of Diſcontent as he can be, but he is not ſo full of Torment as he can be; this we ſee expreſly in Mat. 8. 29. where the Devils ſay to Chriſt, Art thou come to torment us before our time? as noting that there will be a time wherein they ſhall have more torment, their fill of torment, ſuch torment, as what they now endure, compared with it, may paſs for no torment, if not for pleaſure. Then they ſhall drink the very dregs of the cup of Gods wrath; now they do (as it were) but ſip, or taſte it. The devils, though they are already caſt down from their glorious eſtate, yet they are not caſt into ſuch a woful ſtate as hereafter they ſhall be; therefore they may walk up and down in the world, and unceſſantly ſet themſelves about the deſtruction of others.

For the words, From going to and fro in the earth, and from walking up and down in it. Satan here ſpeaks like a Prince; therefore ſome conceive, that this is the Prince of devi's that is here mentioned in this Text, Beelzebub, the chief of the devils; for here he ſpeaks of himſelf as ſome great Prince, that had gone about his Countries to view his Provinces, his Kingdoms, and Cities; I come, ſaith he, from viſiting my ſeveral Places and Dominions; I come from going to and fro in the earth, and from walking up and down in it.

These expreſſions are not to be underſtood properly; for properly Spirits, ſuch as Satan is, cannot be ſaid to go or to walk: A Spirit moveth, that is proper to a Spirit: but properly a Spirit doth not walk or go, that is proper only to bodies: But the word which we tranſlate, from going to and fro, is tranſlated by ſome, from compaſſing the earth, or from compaſſing about in the world, and then it is proper; the Original ſignifying to compaſs or circuit about by any kind of motion, as well as by going.

משוט בארץ

Further, For the underſtanding of Satans going to and fro in the earth; we muſt not conceive that this is all that Satan doth, to walk up and down in the world, to go to and fro; he is no idle Peripatetick; but by going to and fro in the earth, is noted,

First, The exact diſcovery which Satan makes of all things in the earth. For the word [Shut] ſignifieth to enquire, to ſearch diligently into a thing. It is not a bare going about, but it is a going about as a ſpie, to ſearch, to enquire, to obſerve and conſider diligently all things as one paſſeth along. The ſame word is uſed (Dan. 12.4.) for diſcourſing; we tranſlate it thus, Many ſhall run to and fro, and knowledge ſhall be encreaſed; now, we may wonder how knowledge ſhould be encreaſed by running to and fro, up and down; they that would encreaſe knowledge, ſhould rather ſit ſtill and conſider, and debate things; but the word (ſo ſome tranſlate it) ſignifies to diſcourſe or diſpute of things; they ſhall diſcourſe or go about to enquire into things, and knowledge ſhall be encreaſed. Thus Satans going to and fro in the earth, is a diſcourſing upon every thing, a diſputing upon every point and perſon; he doth, as it were, debate every mans condition as he goeth, and every mans eſtate, every mans temper, and every mans calling; he conſiders what is fitteſt to be done againſt him, and how he may aſſault him with greateſt advantage. That is the running or going to and fro which is here meant in the Text, it is a going to and fro to encreaſe his knowledge, and inform himſelf of all things as he goeth. The ſame word is uſed concerning the good Angels, Zech. 1.10. It is ſaid there, that they were ſent to walk to and fro through the earth. It was not a bare paſſing through the earth, but a curious obſerving and prying into all things as they went; we tranſlate it a walking to and fro; but it is a walking ſo as to bring God intelligence; for theſe were ſent out as Chriſts Intelligencers, to bring him in a report of the ſtate of things abroad: for ſo there in the Viſion it is expreſt after the manner of men. Though Chriſt needs none to inform him about the eſtate of his Church and People, yet he alludes to the cuſtom of Princes, who maintain Intelligencers in all Courts and Kingdoms, to adviſe them how the affairs of other Nations are tranſacted. The very ſame Original word is uſed of God himſelf (Zech. 4.10.) The eyes of the Lord run to and fro through the whole earth; he is his own Intelligencer, exactly diſcovering and taking notice of every thing that is done in the world. So then this is the meaning, I have been going to and fro in the earth, ſaith Satan; that is, I have fully and throughly taken notice of all paſſages, of all perſons in all places, of all conditions and ſorts of men; that is the thing I have been doing: Thus Mr. Broughton tranſlates, from ſearching to and fro in the earth, noting his exactneſs of enquiry in his travels.

Proprie eſt attente diſcurrere, circumſpicere, & explorare.

Then Secondly, It noteth the unquietneſs of Satan. He is an unquiet, a reſtleſs Spirit, being caſt out of heaven, he can reſt no where. A Soul that is once diſplaced, and out of the favour of God, hath no place to repoſe in afterward. Now, ſaith he, all my buſineſs is walking to and fro, going up and down: Satan hath no reſt. As the Sentence of Cain was, Gen. 4. when God had caſt him out of his preſence, Thou ſhalt be a fugitive and a vagabond; thou ſhalt do nothing but run up and down the world as long as thou liveſt. Satan is ſuch a fugitive, a vagabond, one that runs up and down in the world; he is an unſetled, an unquiet Spirit. They who are once departed from God, can never find reſt in any Creature; but running to and fro is their condition and their curſe.

Thirdly, Some underſtand it thus, that Satan makes (as it were) a recreation of his tempting and drawing men to Hell. Satan cannot poſſibly in a proper ſenſe, take any comfort, or be refreſhed; but as one doth well expreſs it, he himſelf being loſt, undone and damned, ſeeks to comfort himſelf by undoing and damning others. It is a joy to ſome to have companions in ſorrow. All Satans delight (if we may conceive he hath any delight) is in this, in making others as bad and miſerable as himſelf: therefore, it may be, he calls his trade of ſeduction and deſtruction, walking up and down in the earth; as men are ſaid to walk up and down for refreſhing and recreation; he ſpeaks of it, not as of ſome toilſome hard journey, but as of walking for delight. But I conceive the former to be more proper. Take two or three Notes from this. Here we may obſerve, Ipſe perditus perdendis hominibus ſolatia quærit.

First, That, there is no place in the world that can ſecure a man from temptation, or be a ſanctuary from Satans aſſaults.

For Satan goeth to and fro through the earth; he is an ubiquitary, he ſtayes no where, but runs every where. It is the folly of Popiſh Votaries, that think to ſhut themſelves up in walls from the temptations of Satan: Cloyſters are as open to Satan as the open field. Satan walketh to and fro through the earth.

Secondly, We may note here the wonderful diligence of Satan.

Satan is very active to do miſchief.

He walketh to and fro; as Peter expreſſeth it, 2 Pet. 5.8. He goeth about as a roaring Lion, ſeeking whom he may devour. There is his diligence, and there is his intent. Satan ſpeaks nothing of his intent here, he conceals that; he ſpeaks only as if he went about like a pilgrim, walking through the earth: his main buſineſs, that he went about, to devour ſouls is kept in ſilence; but the Holy Ghoſt unmasks him, and diſcovers the deſign of his walking to and fro; He ſeeks whom he may devour. If Satan be thus diligent going about to tempt, we ought to be as diligent, ſtanding alwayes upon our watch, to prevent his temptations. Mr. Latimer, in one of his Sermons, where he taxes the Clergy, eſpecially the Biſhops of thoſe times, for their idleneſs, propoſeth to them the example of the Prophets and Apoſtles, and of Chriſt himſelf; their diligence in going about to preach, ſhould quicken thoſe Idlers: But (ſaith he) if you will not follow their example, follow the example of Satan; he goeth about in his Dioceſs to and fro continually. Take example from him in doing evil, how to do good: we may take example thus far from Satan, to be as forward to do good, as he is to do hurt; to be as watchful againſt him, as he is watchful againſt us. If this be his buſineſs to go to and fro through the earth, and his intent be to devour ſouls, then where-ever we go in the world up and down, we ought to be careful to keep our own ſouls, and gain the ſouls of others.

Thirdly, We may obſerve from it,

That, Satan is confined in his buſineſs to the earth.

He can get no farther then the earth, or to the ayerial part: he is called the Prince of the Ayr. Satan being once caſt out of Heaven, can never get into Heaven more. There is no tempter in heaven; there is no Serpent ſhall ever come into the Celeſtial Paradiſe; there was one in the earthly Paradiſe, but there ſhall never be any in the Celeſtial. Therefore when we are once beyond the earth, we are beyond the reach of all temptations; we are then at reſt from Satans ſnares and practices, as well as from our own labours.

Let us now conſider what the Lord replieth, or his ſecond Queſtion to Satan. Well, thou haſt been walking to and fro in the earth, ſaith God; Haſt thou conſidered my ſervant Job? Tell me, haſt thou taken notice of ſuch an one?

Haſt thou conſidered?] The word is, Haſt thou put thy heart upon Job? So it is word for word in the Original; haſt thou laid Job to thy heart? haſt thou ſeriouſly, fully, and exactly conſidered my ſervant Job? And ſo it is rendred it out of the Septuagint; Haſt thou attended with thy mind upon my ſervant Job? To put a thing upon the heart, is to have ſerious and ſpecial regard to it; as when the Scripture ſpeaks of not putting a thing upon the heart, it noteth a ſlighting and neglecting of it. When the wife of Phi- προσέσχες τῆ διανόια σου κατὰ τοῦ παιδός μου ἰωβ.

השמת לבך

neas was delivered, and they told her that ſhe had brought 1 Sam. 4. 20 forth a ſon, the Text ſaith, ſhe anſwered not, neither did ſhe regard; the Hebrew is, neither did ſhe put her heart upon it: the ſame word is here in the Text. Thus Abigail ſpeaks 1 Sam. 25. 25. unto David, As for this ſon of Belial, let not my Lord put his heart upon him, or (as it is tranſlated) let not my Lord regard this man of Belial; take no notice of ſuch an one as he is, he is a fool, name and thing, do not regard him, do not put him upon thy heart. There are divers ſuch expreſſions, where putting upon the heart is expreſſed by regarding; and not putting upon the heart, by not regarding. Then here, haſt thou put Job upon thy heart? That is; haſt thou ſeriouſly weighed and conſidered Job? As if God had ſaid, I am ſure in thy travels and wandrings about the world, thou couldſt not chooſe but take notice of Job, he is my jewel, my darling, a ſpecial man among all the ſons of men: He is is ſuch a ſpectacle as may juſtly draw all eyes and hearts after him: when thou walkedſt, didſt thou not make a ſtand at Jobs door? I cannot but look upon him my ſelf and conſider him, therefore ſurely thou haſt conſidered him. The eyes of the Pſal. 34. 15. Lord are upon the righteous, and his heart is upon them too. A wicked man hath not the eye of God: a godly man hath his heart, and ſhall have it to all eternity. The ſum is,

This Queſtion teacheth us, That amongſt all the men that dwelt on the face of the earth, Job was the moſt conſiderable.

Haſt thou not conſidered my ſervant Job?

It is as if one ſhould ſay to a man come from this City into the Country, were you at Court, or have you ſeen the King? Becauſe he is the moſt eminent and conſiderable perſon. So God here ſpeaks to Satan upon his account of walking about the earth, haſt thou taken notice of Job? A godly man is the moſt conſiderable man in the world. But then you muſt put your heart upon him, not your eye only, for then, as it was ſaid of Chriſt, (Iſa. 53. 3.) you may perhaps ſee no beauty in him: his inſide is the moſt conſiderable thing in the world. As a wicked man is the moſt unconſiderable, not worthy the looking unto, though he be 2 King. 3. 14 never ſo great: as Eliſha ſaid to the King of Iſrael, Surely as the Lord of hoſtes liveth, before whom I ſtand, were it not that I regard the preſence of Jehoſaphat the King of Judah, I would not look toward thee nor ſee thee; thou art not a man ſaith he, that deſerveth ſo much as to be looked upon: A Pſal. 15. 4. godly man is therefore deſcribed to be one, in whoſe eyes a vile perſon, a wicked man, is deſpiſed.

But ſecondly, in reference to Satan. Some read theſe words not by way of Queſtion, but by way of Affirmation, thus; Thou haſt conſidered my ſervant Job. Thou haſt been abroad in the world, ſurely then thou haſt taken notice of my ſervant Job, thou haſt conſidered him; that is, of all men in the world, thou haſt ſet thy ſelf about Job to tempt him and to try him: when thou cameſt to Jobs houſe, there thou madeſt an aſſault, there thou tryedſt the uttermoſt of thy ſtrength to overcome him; thou conſidereſt him, what to do againſt him, how to overthrow him: and tell me, haſt thou not found him a tuff piece? Didſt thou ever meet with ſuch an one in the world before? To conſider a thing, is to try all wayes how to gain it, or how to compaſs 1 Sam. 9. 20 ſuch a thing: as Samuel ſaid to Saul, when he was ſeeking his fathers Aſſes, As for thine Aſſes that were loſt, ſet not thy mind on them; that is, do not trouble thy ſelf, do not beat thy brains to conſider which way to go to find them, or where it is moſt probable to get them. So here, thou haſt ſet thy mind or conſidered my ſervant Job, that is, thou haſt beat thy brains, and ſet all thy wits on work, what courſe to take with greateſt advantage to deſtroy my ſervant Job.

Take the words in that ſenſe, and they yield us this Inſtruction.

That Satans main temptations, his ſtrongeſt batteries are planted againſt the moſt eminent godly perſons.

When Satan ſees a man that is eminent in grace, againſt him he makes his hotteſt and ſubtileſt aſſaults: he ſets his heart upon ſuch a man, yea and vexeth his heart too about him. Satan is moſt buſie at holy duties (one ſaid he ſaw in a viſion ten Devils at a Sermon, and but one at the Market) and about holy perſons. As for others, he doth not trouble himſelf about them, for they (as the Apoſtle 2 Tim. 2. 26 ſhews) are led captive by the Devil at his will; if he do but whiſtle (as it were) they eaſily follow him, and come after him preſently, ſo that he needs not ſet his heart or vex himſelf about them. But when he cometh to a Job, he ſets all his wits and all his ſtrength a work, bends all his thoughts to conſider what courſe to take to aſſault ſuch a ſtrong hold of grace. If he can get ſuch a man down, then there is triumph indeed, he ſings victoria; then (if we may ſo ſpeak) there is joy in Hell. As there is joy indeed in Heaven at the converſion of a ſinner; ſo there is a kind of joy in Hell, when one ſins that is converted. If any thing can make the Devils merry, it is this, to give a godly man the foyl; though they ſee he is paſt their reach to deſtroy him, yet if they can but blemiſh or diſgrace him, if they can but trouble and diſquiet him; this is their delight. Hence it is that General Satan with his legions of darkneſs, thoſe infernal ſpirits, encamp about ſuch perſons with deadly hatred. As when an Army meets with a ſtrong Caſtle, or City, they ſit down, and there conſider what courſe to take for the beſiedging and gaining of it.

Haſt thou conſidered [my Servant Job.] The title which God gives Job is very obſervable, My ſervant Job. A Servant (you know) is one, that is not at his own diſpoſe, but at the call and beck of another; ſo the Centurion deſcribes a ſervant; For (ſaith he) I am a man under authority, and I have ſervants, and I ſay to this man go, and he goeth, and to another come, and he cometh. Servants are at the word of another, they are not (ſui juris) in their own power; therefore Ariſtotle calleth Servants, living tools, or living inſtruments, breathing inſtruments, becauſe they ζῶντα ὄργανα. are at the will of another, to be uſed and imployed at the diſcretion of their Maſter. Here God calleth Job his ſervant: And he calleth him ſo, Firſt, by way of diſtinction or difference; my ſervant, that is, mine, not his own. Many are their own ſervants, they ſerve themſelves, as the Apoſtle ſaith, They ſerve not the Lord Jeſus, but their own bel- Rom. 16. lies, they ſerve their own luſts, divers luſts and pleaſures; Job is not ſuch an one, he is my ſervant.

Many are Satans ſervants; as if God ſhould have ſaid to Satan here; Satan thou haſt gone about the world, and thou haſt found a great family of thine own, thou haſt found many ſervants in all places, but haſt thou conſidered my ſervant? There is one, I am ſure, that oweth thee no ſervice, and by his good will, will do thee none; haſt thou not found my ſervant?

Some are the ſervants of men; but Job is my ſervant; not a ſervant of men, to ſubject himſelf to their luſts, either for hope or fear: He is not (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks) the ſervant of men (in that ſenſe) to pleaſe men, with ſinning againſt and provoking God.

Secondly, My ſervant, by way of ſpecial right and property; So Job and all godly perſons are called Gods ſervants. Firſt, By the right of election they are Gods choſen ſervants, as Paul is called a choſen veſſel, that is, a choſen ſervant, to carry the name of God. Secondly, They are Gods ſervants by the right of purchaſe; my ſervant whom I have bought and purchaſed: ſo in the 1 Cor. 6. You are bought with a price, be not the ſervants of men; that is, you are bought with a price to be my ſervants, therefore be not the ſervants of men in oppoſition to me, or to my diſſervice in any thing. So Job was Gods ſervant by way of purchaſe; God buyeth every one of his ſervants with the blood of his Son.

Thirdly, My ſervant, by way of Covenant. Job was Gods Covenant ſervant, God and he had (as it were) ſealed Indentures. Job entred into Covenant with God, that he would perform the duty of a ſervant; and God entred into Covenant with him, that he ſhould enjoy the priviledge of a ſervant. Now that which is Gods by right of Covenant, is his by ſpecial right.

Then again, We may further underſtand this, and all ſuch like expreſſions: When God ſaith, my ſervant, he doth as it were glory in his ſervant. God ſpeaks of him, as of his treaſure, my ſervant; as a man doth of that which he glorieth in. As the Saints glory in God, when they uſe this expreſſion, my God, and my Lord, my Maſter, and my Chriſt, this is a kind of glorying and triumphing in God. So this expreſſion carryeth ſuch a ſenſe in it, Haſt thou not conſidered my ſervant Job; there is one that I have honour by, one that I rejoyce and glory in, one that I can ſpeak of with much more then content, even with triumph, my ſervant Job: There's a man.

It is a mans honour to be Gods ſervant, and God thinks himſelf honoured by the ſervice of man.

It was once a curſe, and it is a great curſe ſtill to be the ſervant of ſervants, as it is ſaid of Cham; but it is an honour, the greateſt honour of the creature to be a ſervant to God. He that is a ſervant of Chriſt, is not onely free, but noble. And Chriſt reckoneth that he hath not onely work done him, but honour done him by his willing people, and therefore he glories in any ſuch, my ſervant.

Gen. 9.

My ſervant Job.] There is ſomewhat alſo to be conſidered in that. When God ſpeaks of his people by name, it noteth two things in Scripture.

Firſt, A ſpecial care that God hath over them.

Secondly, A ſpecial love that God hath to them, John 10. 3. He calleth his own Sheep by name; this noteth a ſpecial care Chriſt hath of his Sheep, and a ſpecial love that he beareth to them. So Iſa. 49. 1. The Lord hath called me from the womb, from the bowels of my mother hath he made mention of my name; it noteth the ſpecial care, and the ſpecial love that God had of, and bare to Chriſt. See it eminently in that place, Exod. 33. 12. where Moſes ſpeaks thus unto God, Yet thou haſt ſaid, I know thee by name; now what it is to know by name, is by way of Expoſition added in the end of the verſe, And thou haſt alſo found grace in my ſight. So that to be known by name, is in a ſpecial manner to find grace in the ſight of God: When it is ſaid here, My ſervant Job, it ſhews that God did take an extraordinary care of, and did in an extraordinary manner love Job above all that were upon the Earth.

There is a great deal of difference between theſe two expreſſions; to know the name of a man, and to know a man by name. It is a truth, that God knoweth all your names, and the names of all the men in the world, but he doth not know all by name. Therefore the Scripture aſſures us, that God hath the names of none written, but the names of his own, as Moſes ſaith in the former Chapter, If thou wilt not forgive the ſin of this people, blot me, I pray thee, out of thy Book which thou haſt written. Thou knoweſt me by name, my name is written in thy Book: So Luke 10. Chriſt bad his Diſciples that they ſhould not rejoyce ſo much that they had the ſpirits ſubject unto them; but in this they ſhould rejoyce, that their names were written in Heaven. Note from hence,

That God doth take care of his elect children and ſervants in a ſpecial manner above all other men in the world.

The names of Princes, or Emperors, or Potentates, if they belong not to God, are not vouchſafed a place in his Book, but the names of the meaneſt of his Saints, are recorded for ever, and ſhall be had in everlaſting remembrance.

Haſt thou not conſidered my ſervant Job, that there is none like him in the Earth, &c.

We read before at the end of the 3. verſe, that Job in reference to his riches was the greateſt of all the men of the Eaſt: Now he goeth beyond that, in reference to his holineſs, he is the greateſt upon the Earth, there is none like him in the Earth.

This we may underſtand, firſt, as a cauſe or reaſon why Job fell under the ſpecial conſideration or obſervation of Satan, Haſt thou not conſidered my ſervant Job, becauſe (ſo ſome render that particle) or in as much, or for that, there is not the like to him in the Earth. As if God ſhould ſay, there is reaſon why he muſt needs be taken into thy conſideration; becauſe there is not ſuch another man as he in the Earth. You know that a man is quickly taken notice of, when there are none like unto him, in the Place or Company where he is. If a man walk in the Streets, or come into a Houſe, who is of an extraordinary tallneſs; ſome will ask the queſtion, did you not obſerve ſuch a man, for there was never a man in the Company, never a man in the Street ſo tall as he? So one that is extraordinary in Beauty, or extraordinary in rich Apparrel, every one hath an Eye upon ſuch. The reaſon why many are obſerved, is, becauſe they are not like to others, they are beyond others in quality or in habit. So here, Haſt thou not conſidered my ſervant Job, that there is none like unto him in the Earth, thou muſt needs take notice of him.

Or again, It may be underſtood thus; as the matter which Satan ſhould conſider and obſerve in Job. Haſt thou conſidered my ſervant Job, ſc. in this thing, that there is not a man upon the Earth like to him? Haſt thou not taken notice of this in him? Thou who haſt looked over all men, and haſt (as it were) ſifted all mens manners, haſt thou not obſerved thus much, that there is not ſuch a man upon the Earth as Job? Hath not that fallen under thy obſervation?

So now in the words [There is none like him] there is a ſecret advancing of the praiſe of Job. For there is nothing that can be ſpoken more to the praiſe of man then this, to ſay that there is none like him. Though you ſay no more, you have ſaid all. As the Scripture (we know) ſets forth the wonderful praiſes of God, Exod. 15. 11. Who is like unto thee O Lord, among the gods? who is like thee? Which is reſolved into the negative, there is none amongſt the gods like unto thee, there is none like unto thee. This is the high praiſe of God, Mic. 7. 18. Who is a God like unto thee that pardoneth iniquity? It is the higheſt commendation of God to ſay, there is none like him, to ſet him above all creatures. In like manner here in the Text, when it is affirmed, that there was none like Job; this ſetteth him up in all praiſes and excellencies to the higheſt: though particulars be concealed, yet whatſoever may make for the honour of a man is included in this, that there is none like him.

Eſt quaſi quædam Apoſiopeſis maximarum laudum.

But how ſhould we underſtand this of Job, that there was none like to him upon the Earth?

We muſt underſtand it, not only in reference to wicked men, that there was no meer natural man, no wicked man like unto him: as if God had ſaid to Satan, there is none in the Earth which is thy inheritance, no earthly man like my ſervant Job; look over all thy ſervants, thou haſt not ſuch an one in the Earth. That's too low. We will take it therefore in reference to all the Saints that were then upon the Earth, there was not ſuch a godly man upon the Earth, none like unto him; and then we muſt expound likeneſs by a diſtinction. There is a double likeneſs; there is a likeneſs of Quality; and there is a likeneſs of Equality. When it is ſaid here, that in the Earth there was none like to Job, you muſt not underſtand it of a likeneſs of quality, as if there were no man that had ſuch qualities as Job had: for all the Saints that are in the Earth, have the ſame kind of qualities, they are all alike in the main and in the general; namely, in the conformity of their nature to the will of God, which is holineſs, that is the general quality; and thus all the Saints upon the Earth are alike; there is not any man can have any other likeneſs upon him then this; it is impoſſible. I ſay in this regard, the meaneſt and loweſt Saint upon the Earth, is like to the higheſt and greateſt Saint upon Earth: yea not only ſo, but the meaneſt Saint upon Earth, is like to Jeſus Chriſt in Heaven, in regard of quality; he hath the ſame quality, the ſame nature, he is made partaker of the divine nature: And the Apoſtle Paul exhorts the Philippians, Let this mind be in you, which was alſo in Chriſt. The meaneſt Saint hath the ſame mind and the ſame quality, in reference to his new nature, that is in God himſelf or in Chriſt, he is like to God, God begetteth all his own children in his own likeneſs. But in regard of the likeneſs of equality; thus Job was ſuch a man as there was none like him in the Earth; no man like him in the degrees of thoſe qualities, they were not equal to him in this or that or the other grace. Job was a man above them all. As we know it is with wicked and natural men, all wicked men upon the Earth are as like one to another as can be, As face anſwereth to face in water, ſo doth the heart of man to man; the heart of one natural man to the other: but yet there are ſome wicked men ſo wicked, that there is none like them in the Earth. We have the very ſame words applied to Ahab in wickedneſs, 1 King. 21. 25. But there was none like to Ahab, which did ſell himſelf to work wickedneſs in the ſight of the Lord. None like unto him, I ſay not (as in the former) that there were no wicked men that had the ſame ſinful qualities, for all have the ſame ſinful qualities; but there was none like him in equality of wickedneſs, Ahab was a None-ſuch, he was a Giant in wickedneſs, none were grown to ſuch a ſtature of wickedneſs as Ahab. In the ſame manner we muſt underſtand this concerning Job, none did reach to him in the equality of his graces, in the ſtature of the inward man; Job had out-grown all the world in grace at that time.

2 Pet. 1. 4.

Phil. 2. 5.

Prov. 27. 19

Yet a little further, for the underſtanding of this: We find ſometimes when the Scripture ſaith of a man, that there is none like to him, the ſpeech is to be reſtrained to ſome one particular. And it may be a Queſtion, whether we are to underſtand this of Job's preheminence in the general, or in regard of ſome one particular grace? We read of Solomon that there was none like him, Neh. 13. 26. Among many Nations was there no King like him who was beloved of his God. There was no King like to Solomon, but he reſtrained it to this, who was beloved of his God, none to whom God did ſo much communicate himſelf as to Solomon, none like to Solomon in wiſdom and knowledge, in thoſe revelations and intimate communions that God had with him, he was, as it were, Gods darling, as his other name Jedediah importeth. Then it is ſaid of Hezekiah (ſee another inſtance) 2 King. 18. 5. That he truſted in the Lord God of Iſrael, ſo that after him was none like him among all the Kings of Judah. Now this we muſt underſtand of ſome one particular eſpecially, that is, of his truſting in the Lord; in regard of his truſting ſo firmly in God, he went beyond all the Kings that came after him, there was none did ſo perfectly truſt in God: for it is ſaid, he brake in pieces the braſen Serpent that Moſes had made, and ſtamped it to powder, truſting in the Lord. Though ſome of his Counſellors might tell him, If you do thoſe things you may bring a world of trouble upon your ſelf and the Kingdom; if you change theſe ancient cuſtoms you will make your people mutiny: this Serpent was of God, it was made in the wilderneſs, &c. Yet ſaith he, I ſee it is abuſed to Idolatry, I care not for all that you ſay, I will truſt in the Lord however it go. Here was an high, an unparalel'd act of confidence. Yet afterward it was ſaid concerning Joſiah, 2 King. 23. 25. That like unto him was there no King before him, that turned to the Lord with all his heart, and with all his ſoul, and with all his might. Here it is ſaid after Hezekiah, that Joſiah was ſuch a King as there was none before him; and it was ſaid of Hezekiah that was before him, that he was ſuch a one, that after him there ſhould be none like him. How ſhall we reconcile theſe two? Only by applying thoſe expreſſions to ſuch and ſuch particulars: Hezekiah was ſuch a man, as there was no King after him for truſting in God; and Joſiah was ſuch a man, as there was no King before him, for deſire, care, and zeal in reforming the Church of God: Joſiah's reformation was the moſt perfect reformation that was made by all the Kings of Judah; and ſo in that particular, in regard of his great zeal for God, there was no King before him, like him. How ſhall we underſtand this then concerning Job?

2 King. 18. 4.

I anſwer in two Concluſions. Firſt, When it is ſaid, there was none like to Job, we are to underſtand it in reference to that generation. Doubtleſs God had as great ones in grace as Job, both before and afterward; Noah and Abraham before him, were eminent ones; and afterward, Moſes, and Joſhua, and David, and Samuel. But take Job in the time and the age wherein he lived, ſo there was none like unto him in equality, we may underſtand it ſo; For Job is conceived to be in the darker times, between Abraham and Moſes, about the time that the people of Iſrael were in captivity in Egypt; ſo that in reference to that time Job lived in, he was the only man, the chief man, the greateſt for grace in that age: As it is ſaid of Noah, he was a juſt man, and perfect in his generations; he was the juſteſt man of all that age, the moſt righteous of all that generation: ſo was Job in his.

Secondly, We may underſtand it, not only concerning ſome particular grace wherein he was moſt eminent: although it be a truth, that he had one grace, for which he was cryed up in Scripture more then for others, to wit, Patience; Have you not heard of the patience of Job? But we may take it for the whole latitude of Job's holineſs and graces, and there was not at that time ſuch a man upon the earth as Job: And ſo God himſelf ſeemeth to expound it, he doth not confine this to ſome one point, but ſaith, Haſt thou not conſidered my ſervant Job, that there is none like him in the earth, a perfect and upright man, one that feareth God and eſcheweth evil? God addeth this by way of expoſition, what he meaneth by a man to whom there was none like, who had no match upon the Earth. In thoſe words the whole ſum of godlineſs is compriſed; whatſoever goes, or may be conceived to go, toward the making up of a godly man, falls under one of thoſe four members: And God ſaith there is none like him, take him in any, or in all theſe.

I ſhall only give you two or three brief Obſervations from hence. There is none like unto him in the Earth. Learn, Firſt, That God hath ſervants of all ſtatures and degrees.

All his ſervants come not to the like pitch, to the like height, here is one that is beyond them all, My ſervant Job, not a man like him upon the Earth.

Secondly, note this, We ought not to ſet up our reſt in low degrees of grace; or content our ſelves to be like others in grace.

We ſhould labour (if it be poſſible) to go beyond all others in grace. It did not ſatisfie Job that he had gotten to ſuch a degree, to ſuch a frame and temper of heart, to ſuch a courſe of holineſs, as his neighbours or brethren that were good, had attained unto, but he laboured to go beyond them all; Not ſuch a man upon the Earth as Job. It is an holy ambition to labour to exceed all others in grace and goodneſs. We have a great many in the world that deſire to be ſo rich, as none ſhould be like them; to be ſo gay in their apparel, as none ſhould be like them; ſo beautiful, as none ſhould be like them: but where are they that deſire and endeavour to have ſuch a portion or ſtock of grace, that none ſhould be like them; to be above others in holineſs, as Job was? True grace never reſts in any degrees or meaſures of grace, but labours to increaſe: he that hath any grace would have more: do not think it enough when you are like others; you ought to labour to be beyond others.

Then ſee the Character that God giveth of Job, A perfect and upright man, one that feareth God and eſcheweth evil. Theſe have been already opened in the firſt verſe, and theſe are but a report of the Hiſtory before going, therefore I ſhall not need to ſtay upon this place; only take theſe two Obſervations from it.

Firſt, God hath a perfect Character of every ſoul.

He knoweth fully and clearly what the tempers of your hearts and ſpirits are: juſt as the hiſtory and relation of Job was, ſuch is Gods teſtimony of him to a tittle.

Secondly, God will give to every man a teſtimony according to his utmoſt worth.

God will not conceal any of your graces, or obſcure your goodneſs, he will make it known to the world to the full, what you are. When God cometh to give teſtimony, he giveth it ſo, as his Saints can never looſe by it. Oftentimes man gives a teſtimony ſhort of his Brothers goodneſs, and draweth a curtain before another mans worth; but God will draw the curtain quite back, and unveil every ſoul to the whole world. You ſhall ſee and hear a teſtimony from God before men and Angels concerning your ſelves to the uttermoſt, what you are in all godly and gracious perfections.

Job was an excellent man, a man commended indeed, who was commended of God: as the Apoſtle concludes it, Not he that commendeth himſelf is approved, but he whom God commendeth. It is good for us to have our Letters Teſtimonial from God, to have our Letters Commendatory from Heaven. It is not what a man ſaith in his own heart, what he flattereth himſelf: It is not what your Neighbours or others flatter you, and ſay of you, but what God ſaith of you, what teſtimony he giveth of you. He is not approved that commendeth himſelf, or that other men commend only, but he whom the Lord commendeth. And if God ſpeak well of us, no matter though all the world be ſilent, or ſlander.

VERS. 9, 10, 11.

Then Satan anſwered the Lord and ſaid, doth Job fear God for nought?

Haſt not thou made an hedge about him, and about his houſe, and about all that he hath on every ſide? Thou haſt bleſſed the work of his hands, and his ſubſtance is increaſed in the Land.

But put forth thy hand now, and touch all that he hath, and he will curſe thee to thy face.

IN the former verſe Job receiveth teſtimony from God himſelf; in this, though Satan cannot deny it, yet he calumniates, and miſ-interprets what he cannot contradict.

Satan grants indeed that Job fears God, but the latter words embaſe the former, and faſten inſincerity upon all his ſervices. Doth Job fear God for nought? Fear is worth nothing unleſs in this ſenſe it be for nought. I have already ſhewed you what it is to fear God, I ſhall now clear the other term, and ſhew how much evil Satan charges Job with, when he queſtions, Doth Job fear God for nought?

Satan accuſeth with a queſtion, doth Job fear God for nought? The queſtion may be reſolved into this Accuſation: Job doth not fear God for nought. The word which we tranſlate for nought, hath a threefold ſenſe from the Hebrew.

חִנָּם Firſt, Some render it in vain. Doth Job fear God (fruſtra) in vain. We are then ſaid to do a thing in vain, when we cannot attain the end which we propoſe in doing of it. The Egyptians help in vain, that is, they cannot procure that ſalvation and deliverance which was deſired or intended: and ſo the ſenſe here may be, doth Job fear God in vain? No, he doth not, he hath his end, he looked for riches, that he intended in taking up the ſervice of God, and that he hath attained.

Secondly, It is interpreted by, without cauſe, Doth Job fear God without cauſe? ſo the word is tranſlated, Pſal. 35.7. where David complaining of his enemies, ſaith, Without cauſe have they hid for me their net in a pit, which without cauſe they have digged for my ſoul. As if he ſhould ſay, I never gave them any cauſe why they ſhould lay ſnares for me, I never wronged or hurt any of them. According to this ſenſe, when Satan ſaith, Doth Job fear God for nought? namely, without cauſe, it is as if he had ſaid, The Lord hath given Job reaſon enough, he hath given him cauſe enough to do what he doth; Job ſeeth reaſon in his Flocks and in his Heards, in his many Children, and in his great Houſhold, in his Subſtance, and in his Honour, he ſeeth reaſon in all theſe, why he ſhould fear God, and be a very obedient ſervant, having ſo bountiful a Maſter. Doth Job fear God without cauſe?

Or Thirdly, The word is tranſlated by Gratis (as we expreſs it.) To do a thing gratis, that is to do a thing without any reward, without any price, or without pay. I ſhall inſtance Scriptures wherein the word is rendred in that ſenſe, Gen. 29. 15. Laban ſaith to Jacob, when he was come to him to ſerve him, Thou art my kinſman, ſhouldſt thou therefore ſerve me for nought? that is, ſhouldſt thou ſerve me gratis, or without wages, as he explains his meaning in the next words, Tell me what ſhall thy wages be? So that to do a thing for nought, is to do a thing without wages, without price. And ſo there is the ſame interpretation of the word, Exod. 21. 11. where Moſes ſpeaking of the Maid that was taken into the family and was not married, ſaith, If he do not theſe three unto her, then ſhe ſhall go out free without money, ſhe ſhall pay nothing, ſhe ſhall go out gratis, or for nought. So here we may take in this ſenſe to fill up the form: doth Job ſerve God gratis? doth he ſerve God without price, or without pay? Surely no, thou haſt given him ſufficient hire, wages ſufficient for all his ſervice; Job doth not ſerve thee gratis, out of good-will and affection to thee, but he ſerveth thee for hire, becauſe thou payeſt him ſo plentifully.

So the general ſenſe of the words, Doth Job fear God for nought? is as if Satan had beſpoken the Lord in ſuch words as theſe: Lord thou doſt enquire of me whether I had conſidered thy ſervant Job? I confeſs I have, and I muſt needs acknowledge that he is a man very diligent and zealous in thy worſhip and ſervice; neither do I wonder that he is ſo, ſeeing thou haſt out-bid all his labours and endeavours by heaps of benefits. There is no queſtion but thou mayeſt have ſervants enough upon ſuch terms, at ſuch rates as theſe: no marvail if Job be willing to do whatſoever thou commandeſt, whenas thou beſtoweſt upon Job whatſoever he deſireth. Thou ſeemeſt, as it were, to neglect all other men, and only to intend the ſafety and proſperity of thy darling Job. Is it any great matter, that he who hath received a flock of ſeven thouſand Sheep from thee, ſhould offer a few, ſeven, or ten, to thee in ſacrifice? Is it any great matter that he ſhould give ſome of his fleeces to cloath the poor, who hath received from thee ſo many thouſands to cloath and enrich himſelf? Is it a ſtrange thing that he ſhould feed a few, that hath five hundred yoak of Oxen? Is not Job well hired to work for thee? doth he fear God for nought, who hath received all theſe?

Yet a little more diſtinctly for the opening of this expreſſion, I ſhall give you Satans ſenſe in three notable falſities or lyes, which he twiſts up together in this one ſpeech, Doth Job fear God for nought?

Firſt, That riches will make any man ſerve God, that it is no great matter to be holy when we have abundance; a man that proſpers in the world cannot chuſe but be good. This Satan implyes in theſe words, and this is an extream lye; for as there is no affliction, ſo there is no outward bleſſing can change the heart or bring it about unto God, They did not ſerve the Lord in the abundance of all things, Deut. 28. 47. Abundance doth not draw the heart unto God: Yet Satan would infer that it doth. This might well be retorted upon Satan himſelf: Satan why didſt not thou ſerve God then? thou didſt once receive more outward bleſſings from God then ever Job did, the bleſſedneſs of an Angel; yet that glorious Angelical eſtate wherein thou waſt created, could not keep thee in the compaſs of obedience, thou didſt rebel in the abundance of all bleſſings, and didſt leave thy habitation; Satan thou ſhouldeſt not have ſerved God for nought. Why then didſt not thou ſerve him? thine own Apoſtacy refutes thy error in making ſo little of Job's obedience, becauſe he had received ſo much.

Secondly, There is this in it; Doth Job fear God for nought? Satan intimates, that God could have no ſervants for love, none unleſs he did pay them extreamly; That, God is ſuch a Maſter, and his work ſuch as none would meddle with, unleſs allured by benefits. As if Satan ſhould ſay, you have indeed one eminent ſervant, but you ſhould not have had him unleſs you had been at double coſt with him. Here is another lye Satan windeth up cloſely in this ſpeech; For the truth is, Gods ſervants follow him for himſelf: the very excellencies of God, and ſweetneſs of his wayes, are the argument and the wages by which his people are chiefly moved and hired to his ſervice. God indeed makes many promiſes to thoſe that ſerve him, but he never makes any bargains with them: His obey him freely. Satan makes bargains to hire men to his ſervice, as he did with Chriſt, Mat. 4. 9. All theſe things will I give thee, if thou wilt fall down and worſhip me. God makes many large and gracious promiſes, but he never makes any ſuch bargain and agreement with men for their obedience.

Then there is a third ſenſe full of falſhood, which Satan caſteth upon Job, Doth Job fear God for nought? that is, Job hath a byas in all that he doth, he is carried by the gain of godlineſs, not by any delight in godlineſs, thus to ſerve God. Job is mercenary, he ſerveth God for hire; Job hath not any deſire to pleaſe God, but to benefit himſelf; Job doth not ſeek the glory of God, but he ſeeks his own advantage. This is the ſenſe which the words have in reference to the perſon of Job; that as once Satan accus'd God unto man, ſo, now he accuſeth this man unto God. He accus'd God unto man, Gen. 3. when God had forbidden him to eat of the Tree of knowledge of good and evil, and told him that in the day he did eat thereof he ſhould ſurely die; You ſhall not ſurely die, ſaith Satan, for God knoweth, that in the day you eat thereof, then your eyes ſhall be opened, and ye ſhall be as Gods, knowing good and evil. As if he ſhould ſay, God hath not forbidden this tree, becauſe it will do you any hurt, but becauſe he would be God alone, he would have all the knowledge to himſelf, he hath an ill intent: he knows, that if you eat of it, you will be like him, as gods knowing good and evil. So here he accuſeth man to God, Job ſerveth you indeed, and offereth you ſacrifice, and obeyeth you, but it is that he may get by you, that he may receive more and more from you, he likes the pay, the reward, not the work; he cares not for God, but for the good that cometh from him. This is the accuſation which here the ſlanderer caſteth upon all the holy ſervices and duties of Job.

Thus in brief you ſee the ſenſe, I ſhall give you ſome obſervations from it.

Firſt, It is an argument of a moſt malignant ſpirit, when a mans actions are fair, then to accuſe his intentions.

The Devil hath nothing to ſay againſt the actions of Job, but goes down into his heart and accuſeth his intentions. Malice miſ-interprets the faireſt actions, but love puts the faireſt interpretation it can upon foul actions. Malice will ſay when a man doth well, it is true he doth it, but it is for vain glory, it is to be ſeen of men, it is for his own ends, it is for gain: But when a man doth ill, love will

ſay

Luk.23.24.

ſay, this he hath done through ignorance, or inadvertency, or violent temptations, love covers a multitude of ſins as fairly as poſſibly it may with wiſdom and with juſtice. How fair a cover did Chriſt himſelf put upon the fouleſt act that ever was in the world, upon his own crucifying, Father forgive them, they know not what they do; they do it indeed, but they do it ignorantly. So Peter afterward, I wot (ſaith he) that through ignorance you did it, as did alſo your Rulers. Love excuſeth what is ill done in another, and malice accuſeth what others do well. Let ſuch men learn from hence, that in ſo doing they are the mouth and tongue of Satan.

Secondly, Obſerve, That it is an argument of a baſe and an unworthy ſpirit to ſerve God for ends.

Had this been true of Job in Satans ſenſe, it had indeed ſpoiled and blemiſhed all that he had done. Thoſe that come unto God upon ſuch terms, they are not holy, but crafty; they make a trade with God, they do not ſerve God; it is not Obedientia, but Mercatura, as one expreſſeth it, it is merchandizing with God, not obeying him. There is reward enough in God himſelf, there is reward enough in the very duties themſelves; work and wages go together. Therefore for any to be carried out to the ſervice of God upon outward things, argues a baſe and an earthy ſpirit. As ſin is puniſhment enough unto it ſelf; though there were no other puniſhment, though there were no hell to come after, yet to do evil is or will be hell enough unto it ſelf: So to do good is reward enough unto it ſelf. A Heathen Poet obſerved it as a brand of infamy upon the age wherein he lived, that moſt did repent that they had done good, or were good gratis, or for nought, that the price of all good actions fell in their eſteem, unleſs they could raiſe themſelves. If a Heathen condemn'd this, how damnable is it among Chriſtians?

Nec facile invenies multis in millibus unum virtutem pretium qui putet eſſe ſui.----Et gratis pœnitet eſſe probum. Ovid de Pont.

But here a Queſtion will ariſe, and I ſhall a little debate it, becauſe it doth further clear the main point, May we not have reſpect to our own good, or unto the benefit we ſhall receive from God? Is it unlawful to have an eye to our own advantage, while we do our duty? Muſt we ſerve God for nought in that ſtrict ſenſe, or elſe will God account nothing of all our ſervices?

I ſhall clear that in five brief Concluſions, and theſe will (I ſuppoſe) fully ſtate the ſenſe of this Text and of this ſpeech.

The firſt is this, There is no man doth, or poſſibly can, ſerve God for nought: God hath by benefits already beſtowed, and by benefits promiſed, out-vyed and out-bid all the endeavours and ſervices of the creature. If a man had a thouſand pair of hands, a thouſand tongues, and a thouſand heads, and ſhould ſet them all on work for God, he were never able to anſwer the ingagements and obligations which God hath already put upon him. Therefore this is a truth, that no man can in a ſtrict ſenſe ſerve God for nought. God is not beholden to any creature for any work or ſervice that is done unto him.

Again ſecondly, this is further to be conſidered. The more outward bleſſings any one doth receive, the more he ought to ſerve God, and the more ſervice God looks for at his hands. That is another Concluſion. Therefore we find ſtill, that when God hath beſtowed many outward bleſſings upon any, either Perſons or Nations, he chargeth an acknowledgment upon them, Hoſ. 2. 8. She did not know that I gave her corn, and wine, and oyl, and multiplied her ſilver and gold, which ſhe beſtowed upon Baal; therefore I will come and recover it, ſaith God. You having received this, you ought to have ſerved me with it. You ſee how God upbraideth David, 2 Sam. 12. 7, 8. I annointed thee King of Iſrael, and I delivered thee out of the hand of Saul, and I gave thee thy Maſters houſe, and thy Maſters wives into thy boſom; and if this had been too little, I would moreover have given thee ſuch and ſuch things. How is it then that thou haſt deſpiſed the Commandment of the Lord, to do evil in his ſight? As if he ſhould ſay, the more I beſtowed upon thee, the more obligations thou ſhouldſt feel thy ſelf under to obey me faithfully.

In the third place, it is lawful to have ſome reſpect to benefits both received and promiſed by way of Motive and incouragement to ſtir us up and quicken us, either in doing or in ſuffering for God. Moſes, Heb. 11. 26. had reſpect to the recompence of reward; therefore it is not unlawful. And Chriſt himſelf, Heb. 12. 2. Looking at the joy that was ſet before him. Theſe are examples beyond all exceptions, that reſpect may be had to benefits and bleſſings received or expected.

Fourthly, Then reference unto benefit is ſinful, when we make it either the ſole and only cauſe, or the ſupream and chief cauſe of our obedience. This makes any thing we do ſmell ſo of our ſelves that God abides it not: when we reſpect our ſelves, either alone or above God, God hath no reſpect at all to us. As Chriſt taxes thoſe, Joh. 6. You did not ſeek me, but the loaves. To have reſpect to the loaves more then to Chriſt, or as much as to Chriſt, is to have no reſpect at all to Chriſt.

Thus when the Sichemites, Gen. 34. 23. admitted of Circumciſion, and ſo gave up themſelves as a Covenant-people to God, here was all the argument they propoſed to themſelves, Shall not their cattel, and their ſubſtance, and every beaſt of theirs be ours? what beaſts were theſe Sichemites, what ſhadows of Religion, who would take upon them this badge of Religion for the gain of beaſts and worldly ſubſtance? Such pure reſpects to our ſelves, defile all our ſervices, and render our perſons odious unto God.

Therefore in all our duties and holy ſervices, we muſt ſet the glory of God in the Throne, that muſt be above; and then we may ſet our deſires of Heaven and glory on the right hand, we may ſet the fear of hell and the avoiding of miſery on the left hand, we may ſet our deſires of enjoying outward comforts here in the world at the foot-ſtool. Thus we muſt marſhal and rank reſpects to God and our ſelves. And thus we may look upon outward things, as motives and incouragements; we muſt not make them ends and cauſes; we may make them as occaſions, but not as grounds of our obedience.

Laſtly, We may look upon them as fruits and conſequents of holineſs, yea as incouragements unto holineſs, but not as cauſes of our holineſs; or we may eye theſe as media, through which to ſee the bounty and goodneſs of God, not as objecta on which to fix and terminate our deſires. So much for the clearing of the firſt part of Satans anſwer, Doth Job ſerve God for nought? Wherein you ſee he caſts dirt upon Job's ſincereſt duties, and how we may carry our reſpects in the ſervice of God to outward bleſſings, whether received or promiſed. It followeth,

52

Verſe 10. Haſt thou not made an hedge about him and about his houſe, and about all that he hath on every ſide? Thou haſt bleſſed the work of his hands, and his ſubſtance is increaſed in the land.

39

Here Satan more fully expounds himſelf, and what he meaneth by Job's not ſerving God for nought. You ſhall ſee it is not for nought. He caſts up the particulars of Gods benefits conferred on Job, and they amount to a great ſum. 1. He hath an hedge about him, that is ſomewhat. 2. He hath bleſſed him, that's more. 3. He doth increaſe and multiply, there's the higheſt degree of outward happineſs. Here are three degrees of Gods dealing with Job. Theſe Satan reckons up in this verſe, that he may make Job's goodneſs of no account, and leave his perſon in no degree of acceptance with God.

Here is firſt Protection in the hedge, Haſt thou not made an hedge about him?

Secondly, Here is a Benediction upon that which was protected. It was not a bare keeping of that from ſpoiling, but it was a bleſſing of it.

Thirdly, Here is alſo an increaſe or multiplication; he was not only bleſſed to keep himſelf and all he had in the ſtate and plight wherein he ſtood, but there was a daily increaſe and an augmentation. Thou protecteſt him, thou bleſſeſt him, and thou doſt increaſe all that he hath, he is increaſed in the Land. That is the ſum and ſenſe of the words. I ſhall now open them a little more diſtinctly.

שׂכת

Firſt, He ſpeaks here of his protection; Haſt thou not made an hedge about him? Some render it, Haſt thou not made a wall about him? Or, Haſt thou not made a trench about him? It is an elegant Metaphor frequent in Scripture, ſhewing that as when a Field is well hedg'd, or a Town well wall'd and entrench'd, then it is ſafe. So when God is ſaid to make an hedge or a wall about a man, or about a nation, the ſafety of that man or nation is aſſured by it, Iſa. 5. 2. We have this word uſed, where God ſpeaks of his vineyard, He planted a vineyard in a very fruitful hill, and he fenced it, or he made a wall or an hedge about it. So verſ. 5. when God is angry with his vineyard and will deſtroy it, it is thus expreſt, I will (ſaith he) take away the hedge thereof, that is, I will take away my protection from it. In the ſame ſenſe, Zac. 2. 5. I will be (ſaith God) a wall of fire round about; that is, I will be a defence unto it. So when it is ſaid here, that God had made an hedge about Job, it notes Divine Protection, he was under the wing and ſafegard of the Almighty.

Deus ipſe arx eſt quæ virum innoxium ambit. Pondus habet immenſum pronomen illud Tu, cujus ſenſus mirus ac arcanus eſt, Deum ipſum eſſe ſepem, &c. non hanc curam ſolis demandaſti angelis.

This hedge of protection is twofold. It is ſaid God made this hedge, Haſt thou not made an hedge about him? Firſt, There is an hedge which is made immediately by the hand of God: Sometimes God makes the hedge immediately, yea ſometimes God expreſſeth himſelf to be the hedge or wall, as Zac. 2. 5. So Pſal. 18. (all thoſe are words of protection) verſ. 2. Thou art my rock and my fortreſs, my deliverer, my ſtrength, my buckler, the horn of my ſalvation, and my high Tower, &c. There God was the hedge, here God makes the hedge: God hath not put out this hedge to others to make, but he makes it himſelf; Satan obſerves as much: Haſt not thou made an hedge about him?

Secondly, Sometime the hedge of protection is made by the hands of others. God ſends out his Angels to guard his people, Pſal. 34. 7. The Angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him. Encamping and hedging are to the ſame purpoſe: Gods hedge is as ſtrong for ſafety as any wall, as any trench. Sometime God doth make one man to be an hedge or a defence to another. The ſervants of Nabal ſaid of David, 1 Sam. 25. 16. That he had been a wall unto them both by night and day; that is, he had been a protection and a guard to them, he had defended them all the while his Army was quartered in thoſe parts. God makes a good man to be as a wall to a wicked man. How much more will he make men and Angels to be walls and hedges for the ſecurity of his own people?

The Text further goes on and ſhews the compaſs of this hedge, what ground it takes in, how far it reacheth: and here we ſhall find that it was a very large hedg of a great extent. We know there are ſome Cities that have not only a ſingle wall, but a double wall, yea ſome ſtrong Cities and places have a treble wall about them: So we find a threefold hedg made about Job, and they are all expreſt here in this Text.

Here was an hedg, firſt, about his Perſon, that was the inmoſt hedg, or the inmoſt wall, in theſe words, Haſt thou not made an hedg about him? That is, an hedg about the very perſon of Job, an hedg about his body, leſt any ſickneſs, diſeaſes or dangers ſhould invade it; and an hedg about his ſoul, leſt ſnares and temptations ſhould take hold of, or prevail againſt that; thou haſt made an hedg about him, ſo that I cannot come at the perſon of Job to hurt him.

Again, Beſides this inmoſt wall, and the neereſt about his perſon, there is a ſecond wall or hedg, and that is expreſt to be about his family. Haſt thou not made an hedg about him, and about his houſe? By houſe, we are not to underſtand the material houſe of ſtone or timber, the edifice in which Job dwelt, but by the houſe we are to underſtand the houſhold, Job and his family, as oftentimes in Scripture, the houſe is put for the family. This day (ſaith Chriſt to Zacheus) is ſalvation come to thy houſe; and it is ſaid of the Jaylor, that he believed and all his houſe, that is, all his houſehold. So here, thou haſt made an hedg about him, and about his houſe, that is, about his family, about his children eſpecially: hence the Hebrew word for a child, for a ſon, doth ſignifie an houſe, becauſe children build up the houſe or keep up the name of their fathers. So that the houſe hedg'd about, is the children, the family and the followers and ſervants of Job; as if Satan ſhould ſay, thou haſt made an hedg not only about his perſon, but about all that belong unto him, about his children and ſervants, I may not meddle with them neither. There is the ſecond hedg.

Act. 16.

Jobus nihil tam vile & exile habet, quod non cuſtodiendum in tuam ſuſceperis tutelam. Lavat. in loc.

Laſtly, There is an hedg or wall, Haſt thou not made an hedg about him, and about his houſe, and about all that he hath? That is about his goods, about his cattel, and about his lands: ſo far as ever any thing of Jobs doth extend, ſo far the hedge goeth; if Job have but the leaſt thing abroad, God doth make an hedge about it, he hath not the meaneſt thing belonging unto him but is under guard and protection. That is the meaning of it.

There is yet another thing to be obſerved in the words to make it more full. Haſt thou not made an hedge about him, and about his houſe, and about all that he hath on every ſide? It is not only ſaid, thou haſt made an hedge about him, but thou haſt made an hedge about him on every ſide, which is a pleonaſm or redundancy of ſpeech. It was a ſign of Gods care of Job, when he made an hedge about him; but to ſay he made an hedge about him on every ſide, here is expreſt an extraordinary care, that God had not left the leaſt gap for Satan, or for any annoyance, to come in unto Job. There is not the leaſt breach, the leaſt hole, thou haſt hedged him round about on every ſide; whereby the wonderful ſafety of Job, his family and eſtate, is ſet out under the protection of God. That for the opening of thoſe words.

Illud quod per circuitum vallatur, ex nulla parte poteſt pati inſultum.

Per circuitum circumcirca.

Firſt, We may obſerve from the manner of this ſpeech, Haſt thou not made an hedge about him? Satan ſpeaks very angerly. Queſtions as they ever expreſs quickneſs of ſpirit, ſo they, many times, expreſs much paſſion and trouble of ſpirit. Here Satan in queſtioning, ſpeaks as if he were vext, Haſt thou not made an hedge about him? Hence note,

That the protection which God gives to his people and ſervants, is the vexation of Satan and of all his Inſtruments.

It troubleth them extreamly that God doth ſo regard and hedge up his people, that they cannot come at them. No man can endure to ſee that defended, which he wiſheth were deſtroyed.

Then again, if we conſider the matter of Satans ſpeech, it is a truth, and a moſt comfortable truth, a truth full of conſolation to the people of God, Haſt thou not made an hedge about him, and about his houſe, and about all that he hath on every ſide? We may note hence,

That Satan, the father of lyes, ſometimes ſpeaks truth for his own advantage.

For, as it is ſaid concerning Judas about his care for the poor, when he would have had the oyntment ſold and given to the poor, This he ſaid (ſaith the Text) not that he cared for the poor, but becauſe he was a thief, and had the bag, and bare what was put therein. So we may ſay here, Satan ſets forth the care of God over his people in moſt exact terms; And why doth he do this? Not that he cares to ſpeak well of God, or to advance God in the eyes of his people, by telling his people and ſervants how watchful he is over them: but he doth this only for his own advantage, that hereby he may leſſen the ſervice, and blemiſh the obedience of Job, becauſe he received ſo much care and love from God. As it is many times with ungodly men, they will do good, not that they care to do good, but only for ſome by-end: So Satan will ſometime ſpeak that which is true, not that he regards the truth, or that he would ſpeak a word of truth (for he hath nothing but lyes in his heart; there is a lye in his heart when there is truth in his mouth.) He never ſpeaks truth, but to deceive and do hurt by it.

Thirdly, we may obſerve this, which lieth plain in the words,

That the people and ſervants of God dwell in the midſt of enemies, in the midſt of dangers.

Why elſe need there be an hedge, a wall about them? What need there be a guard about them, unleſs there were dangers about them? There are none in the world ſo envyed and ſpighted, ſo aimed at and perſecuted as the people and ſervants of God; you may ſee it by the wall that is made about them; God will not beſtow coſt and care in preſerving and guarding where there is no danger of invading. If you ſhould come to a City and ſee it mightily fortified, and ſee men make wall after wall about it, and bulwark after bulwark, you will preſently conjecture, that City ſtands in great danger, and is in the midſt of enemies: So when we read that God was fain to make wall after wall, to make hedge after hedge about the perſon, the family, the eſtate of Job, it ſheweth that the devil had an ill eye upon Job and upon all that was Jobs; Satan and his inſtruments, had it not been for this hedge, would quickly have fallen upon him. No godly man ſhould live a quiet moment, did not the Lord ſtretch forth his hand to ſave and protect him.

Fourthly, That God himſelf doth undertake the guarding and protecting of his people.

Thou haſt made an hedg about him, and about all that he hath.

God himſelf either doth it immediately, or he doth put thoſe to do it to whom he giveth his power, ſtrength and wiſdom. There is no meer creature could be ſtrength and ſecurity enough for us againſt our great malicious and mighty enemies, therefore God himſelf either is or makes the hedge. There is no ſtrength in man but Satan can over-match it; Satan can over-power all the ſtrength, and out-wit all the wiſdom that is in the creature. Fleſh and blood are no match for a ſpirit. And we wreſtle not againſt fleſh and blood, but againſt Principalities and Powers and ſpiritual wickedneſs in high places, Epheſ. 6. 12. But if God makes an hedge about us, it is not in the power of all the enemies in the world, whether men or devils, to make a gap in it; they are ſure that are under the protection of God. They that dwell in the ſecret place of the moſt high, they ſhall abide (ſafe) under the ſhadow of the Almighty, Pſa. 91. 1.

Fifthly, You ſee here how far the hedge goeth, an hedge not only about his perſon and houſhold, but about all that he hath. Take the meaneſt thing that Job hath, God protects it and hedgeth it about. Then we may note this, That God hath an eſpecial care, and doth exceedingly prize even the meaneſt thing that belongs to one of his ſervants. God would not beſtow an hedge about it, if he did not prize it: A man will not hedge or wall that about, which he doth not value. God highly values the meaneſt thing that belongs to one of his ſervants. The Pſalmiſt ſaith, Precious in the ſight of the Lord is the death of his Saints. But not only is the blood, the life of the Saints, precious in the ſight of God, but every member, every hair of their head is precious: God numbers theſe. Not only are their children precious, but every thing that's called theirs, their ſervants, their houſehold, their cattel, their Oxen, their Aſſes, whatſoever they have, is all precious in the ſight of God.

Pſal. 116.

Laſtly, Obſerve, That Satan hath a deadly ſpight, not only againſt the perſons of the godly, but againſt every thing that belongs unto a godly man.

Satan would not only hurt and annoy them in their perſons, but in every thing that's theirs. If God (if we may ſo ſpeak with reverence) ſhould leave but a dog that belongs unto one of his ſervants unguarded, Satan would do it a miſchief; Satan would be doing at the leaſt thing, rather then not do miſchief. If he cannot deſtroy our ſouls he would be at the very hair of our heads; therefore Chriſt to comfort the Diſciples in the time of trouble, aſſures them, that the very hairs of their heads were numbred: As if he ſhould ſay, God will have an account of every hair, the enemies cannot pull off a hair, but God will call them to a reckoning for it.

Mat. 10. 30.

And it notes too that the enemies will take hold of any thing that belongs to the people of God; if they cannot get all, they will get a hair if they can, why elſe is it expreſt that the very hairs of their heads are numbred? Thoſe words at once intimate, Gods care of all, and Satans malice againſt all.

It followeth, Haſt thou not made an hedge about him, &c. Thou haſt bleſſed the work of his hands, and his ſubſtance is increaſed in the Land.

Thou haſt bleſſed.] The root Barac, which from the word here uſed, doth ſignifie to bow the knee as well as to bleſs, becauſe men uſed to bow the knee in bleſſing God or man. Bleſſings are carryed three wayes.

Firſt, From man to man; one man bleſſeth another. There were Prophetical or extraordinary bleſſings, as Iſaac bleſſed Jacob, and Jacob bleſſed his ſons upon his death-bed; and there is a popular or ordinary bleſſing, to wiſh well to another is to bleſs another, every time we pray for our friends, we bleſs our friends. So man from man.

Secondly, Man bleſſeth God; and then man bleſſeth God when he praiſeth God, when he takes notice of and returns thanks for the bleſſings received from God. Bleſs the Lord O my ſoul, &c. (Pſal. 103. 2.) and forget not all, (that is,) forget not any of his benefits. Thankfully to remember benefits, is to bleſs the Lord. The Cup in the Sacrament of the Lords Supper, is called the Cup of bleſſing, 1 Cor. 10. 16. becauſe therein we commemorate the death of Chriſt, and render thanks to the Name of the Lord, for the unſpeakable benefits conveighed to us by his blood.

Thirdly, as here in the Text, God bleſſeth man. Now God bleſſeth man, when he cauſeth that to proſper which man undertakes. Mans bleſſing unto man, it is only a wiſh, an optative bleſſing: but Gods bleſſing unto man is an operative bleſſing, as Aquinas expreſſeth it, Dei benedicere eſt benefacere, when God wiſheth us good he doth us good.

So then the ſenſe is, Thou haſt bleſſed, that is, thou haſt cauſed him to proſper and thrive in what he undertakes, as we ſhall ſee in the object of the bleſſing, Thou haſt bleſſed the work of his hands.

The work of his hands.] We are not to underſtand it ſtrictly for manual or hand labours, as if Job were a man imployed in ordinary manual ſervices, in the labour of his hands; but according to an ordinary uſe of ſpeech among the Hebrews, and likewiſe amongſt other Nations, by the work of the hands, is underſtood any kind of labour, any kind of buſineſs whatſoever. As it is ſaid of Chriſt, Iſaiah 53. 10. that the pleaſure of the Lord did proſper in his hands. Now the work that Chriſt had to do was not a handy work, yet it did proſper in his hands, that is, he managing and going about it, it did proſper and took ſucceſs; it was effectual for the redemption and ſalvation of his people; This was proſpering of the work in his hands. In this ſenſe the work of the head may be called the work of the hands; the work of the tongue, the work of the hands; any work, any buſineſs that a man doth, may be called the work of his hands. So then, Thou haſt bleſſed the work of his hands, that is, thou haſt bleſſed every thing that Job goeth about, as a Magiſtrate, as a Miniſter, or as a Maſter of a Family, in any of, in all his relations, thou haſt cauſed his endeavours to proſper. In the 28. of Deuteronomy, an univerſal bleſſing is thus promiſed, verſ. 6. Bleſſed thou ſhalt be when thou comeſt in, and bleſſed ſhalt thou be when thou goeſt out: between thoſe two are contained all the labours and undertakings of that people: by their going forth is meant the beginning of their labours, and by their coming in is meant the end and concluſion of their labours; ſo that beginning and ending, when they ſet their hands to a buſineſs, and when they took their hands from a buſineſs, they ſhould be bleſſed, that is, they ſhould have a thorough bleſſing upon all their labours. So here, Thou haſt bleſſed the work of his hands, that is, every thing he putteth his hands unto.

And his ſubſtance is increaſed in the Land.] That is the third thing which Satan doth obſerve here concerning Job, that he was not only bleſſed in the eſtate wherein he was, but God did mightily increaſe and multiply his eſtate. He is increaſed in the Land. The word we tranſlate increaſed, ſignifieth not an ordinary increaſe, but ſuch an increaſe as breaks the bounds; it ſignifieth ſo to increaſe in ſuch an abundance, as that the former place where thoſe things were, cannot contain nor hold them, but they muſt ſeek ſome new place, more room for them: ſuch a kind of increaſe is here meant. So the word is uſed, Exod. 1. 12. concerning the people of Iſrael when they were in Egypt, when they were afflicted, the Text ſaith, The more they afflicted them, the more they multiplied and grew; the ſame word is there uſed, to ſhew the wonderful increaſe of the people of Iſrael when they were in their affliction: It was ſuch as did break the bounds. As it is with a river, the more it is ſtopped, the more it ſwelleth and breaks all the banks and bays, whatſoever is ſet to hinder the courſe of it: So much is meant in that place of Moſes, when the people of Iſrael were ſtopped and hindered from their increaſe, they like a river did ſwell over all, they did increaſe ſo as they did break all the bounds. Thus of Job, his ſubſtance is increaſed, it is as if we ſhould ſay in our Language, he had ſo much that there was no end of, no room for his ſubſtance: as the rich fool ſaid, Luk. 12. when his eſtate was increaſed, what ſhall I do, my barns are not big enough? I muſt pull them down and build larger, that they may hold my eſtate. So Jobs eſtate was ſo increaſed, that the compaſs he had for that preſent could not contain it, he muſt make new folds for his Sheep, they increaſed ſo; and he muſt make greater barns for his Corn, his fields brought forth ſuch plentiful crops; he muſt make larger ſtalls for his Oxen, he muſt build bigger houſes for his family; he is increaſed, he is broken forth in the Land, Gen. 38. 29. When Tamar brought forth twins, the Text ſaith, that one put out his hand, and as he drew it back, his brother came out, and therefore they called his name Pharez (the ſame Original word that is here uſed) becauſe of the breach that he made. So this ſignifieth the breaking forth of the eſtate of Job in the Land, he increaſed wonderfully and exceedingly. Thus Satan, by the moſt emphatical words, ſtill heightens the dealings of God with Job, that he may the more debaſe the ſervices of Job towards God.

פרץ

In immenſum excreſcere.

Hebraica vox Paraz ſignificat non ſolum creſcere, ſed præ copia & abundantia diſrumpi, Merc. Ruperunt horrea meſes. Virg.

Thou haſt bleſſed (ſaith he) the work of his hands, and his ſubſtance is increaſed in the Land. We may obſerve here,

First, That, All ſucceſs in buſineſs is from the bleſſing of the Lord.

Satan ſpeaks very good Divinity here; Thou haſt bleſſed: It is from the Lord. It is ſaid of Joſeph, Gen. 39. 23. That, whatſoever he did, the Lord made it to proſper. We may do much, we may ſet our hands to do many things, but we cannot proſper any thing. Working is our part, but proſpering is the Lords part. As it was with the Diſciples, they could fiſh all night; but till Chriſt came, they could not catch; when Chriſt came, the bleſſing came; and when the bleſſing came, there was not only fiſhing, but catching; and there was catching in abundance. So it is in all the works of mens Callings; men may be labouring, and ſweating, and toyling, but there is no proſpering, no ſucceeding, till God come with a bleſſing. Thou haſt bleſſed the work of his hands. Some take all to themſelves, and thank their own labours, their own wiſdom, policy and parts: Others aſcribe all to their good Fortune, &c. We ſee Satan himſelf here preacheth a truth, that will confute them; he is more orthodox then theſe practical Atheiſts: Satan acknowledgeth, Thou haſt bleſſed.

Luke 5.

Then again, we may obſerve, Thou haſt bleſſed the work of his hands.

Every one ought to be a man of employment.

Every one ought to have ſome buſineſs to turn his hand unto. In the former part of this Chapter, we read of Job's piety and holineſs, and of his zeal in the worſhip of God: Here now we ſee Job's care and diligence in his place and calling wherein God had ſet him, which is called the work of his hands. Every one muſt have two callings, and the one helpeth forward the other; Job feared God, and Job went on in the buſineſs which God ſet him. Job is ſaid to ſerve God continually, and yet Job did work continually. Theſe two continuals may well ſtand together; for both the continuals are taken for their ſeaſons; continually, that is, ſeaſonably, according to the ſeveral opportunities God called him to, and put into his hands. This rebukes thoſe who have no labour, who can ſhew no work of their hands. It was ſaid to Adam, and in him to mankind, not only as a curſe, but as a command, In the ſweat of thy face thou ſhalt eat thy bread, till thou return to earth; this is laid upon all, In the ſweat of thy face thou ſhalt eat thy bread: Not that every man is bound to labour in ſuch an employment as cauſeth the face to ſweat; but thereby is meant ſerious labour and employment in ſome honeſt calling: ſo here, the work of the hands, is taken, not ſtrictly, but for any employment wherein Job was ſerviceable to God and his Countrey.

Gen. 3. 19.

Put theſe two together; Thou haſt bleſſed, and, thou haſt bleſſed the work of his hands; and we may obſerve from both,

That the Lord delighteth to bleſs thoſe who are induſtrious.

It is ſeldom that there is an induſtrious hand, but there is a bleſſing of God upon it: Hence, as we find in one place, The diligent hand maketh rich; ſo in another, The bleſſing of God maketh rich. The bleſſing of God maketh rich, and the diligent hand maketh rich; neither of them alone, but both conjoyned; the bleſſing of God upon a diligent hand makes rich: a diligent hand cannot make rich, without God; and God doth not uſually make rich without a diligent hand: Therefore it is ſaid here, that God bleſſed the work of Job's hands. Up, and be doing, and the Lord ſhall be with you. God will not be with us unleſs we be doing. God doth not love to bleſs thoſe that are idle; if we be doing, God will be bleſſing; his being with us, is put for his aſſiſting and proſpering of us: So it is indeed in all things. God doth not work, that we ſhould ſit ſtill; nor bleſs, to the intent that we ſhould do nothing; as it is in Judges 6. They proclaimed the Sword of the Lord, and of Gideon; thoſe two muſt go together. Would you be bleſſed with protection? you muſt labour to protect your ſelves. Do not think that the Lord will protect you with your hands in your pockets, and your Swords ruſting in your ſheaths: while you labour in theſe times of danger, to defend your ſelves, you may expect defence from the Lord: How unbecoming is it for you now to ſtand ſtill, and ſay, Lord help us. We muſt indeed ſtand ſtill (as Moſes counſelled the people, Exod. 14. 13.) in regard of fear and diffidence, but beware of ſtanding ſtill in regard of care and diligence, as ever you hope to ſee the ſalvation of the Lord. The Sword of the Lord and of Gideon muſt be cried up at once; thoſe two muſt go together.

Prov. 10. 4. Prov. 10. 22.

There is a fourth point that we muſt obſerve alſo from the connection of the two ſentences in the Text. Thou haſt bleſſed the work of his hands, and his ſubſtance is encreaſed in the Land.

The Bleſſing of God where it falleth, is effectual.

If God doth but bleſs, we ſhall encreaſe, there is no queſtion of it; if God doth but bleſs, we ſhall encreaſe mightily. Thou haſt bleſſed him, and he is encreaſed: It is the word that followed the firſt bleſſing after the Creation, Gen. 1. 28. God bleſſed them, and ſaid unto them, be fruitful and multiply. Bleſſing and multiplying go together: The bleſſing of God is a powerful bleſſing; it is mighty in operation, and carrieth all before it. You know what a ſtrong opinion Balak had concerning the bleſſing of Balaam, Num. 22. 6. I wot (ſaith he) that he whom thou bleſſeſt, is bleſſed, and he whom thou curſeſt, is curſed; a ſtrong conceit, and but a conceit. As there are many at this day, as ſtrongly conceited of the bleſſing of that Balaam of the ſeven hills, that bleſſing, but curſed Prophet: If they can but get a bleſſing from the Pope, they think all is ſafe; if they can but get a bleſſed Sword (ſuch ſome have obtained) to do a curſed act, to cut the throat of Gods people, or of their Prince, it muſt needs be effectual. You know there was a bleſſed Standard or Banner given to them that came againſt us in Eighty eight: and when that Standard was lifted up, that Banner diſplayed, with the Popes ſpecial bleſſing, they accounted, nay called themſelves Invincible: Such was their invincible ignorance, till they were taught better with Briars and Thorns, or rather with ſtorms and winds fighting againſt them. And though they have been often cozened, yet ſtill they retain ſuch an eſteem of the Popes bleſſing, that they travel and throng for it, as for their lives, more then for all manner of riches. I may ſay to them, as once that great Cardinal did on the ſame occaſion; Seeing this people will be deceived, let them be deceived. But I deſire to raiſe your eſteem of Gods bleſſing; for it is a certain truth, that whom God bleſſeth, they are bleſſed: Gods bleſſings are fixed and effectual bleſſings; if he bleſs, we ſhall be bleſſed indeed: His bleſſings are irreverſible bleſſings, as Balaam was forced to confeſs; Behold, he hath bleſſed, and I cannot reverſe it. If once God hath bleſſed, it is not in Satan, nor in all his lying Prophets, nor in all the power of the Creature to alter it, no nor to retard or hinder it for a moment.

Judg. 8. 16.

If God now give us the mercy of Protection, if he make the hedge about us, and bleſs us in theſe times, we ſhall be continued and eſtabliſhed in the Land; yea, we ſhall be increaſed in the Land, we ſhall break forth abundantly, to the amazement of all hearers and beholders. Though Rome curſe, though Hell plot, yet if God bleſs, we are ſafe.

This is the thing therefore that we ſhould labour for, to be under the influence of the bleſſing of God. If we have but that, we have all; let means be what they will, great or little, or none at all, if God bleſs, he can make any thing ſerve the turn; any thing with a bleſſing, will do it; any thing with a bleſſing, will make us encreaſe; yea, make us a ſtrong, a mighty, an invincible people; ſo that Satan, and his inſtruments, for very envie, ſhall be forced to acknowledge that there is a hedge about us, which they cannot break through, that there is a wall about us, which they can neither ſcale, nor batter with all their Engines and Artillery.

In theſe two Verſes, we have the Anſwer which Satan makes to the Lords Queſtion; Haſt thou conſidered my ſervant Job; You ſee the ſlander that is in it, and how he doth advance the bleſſings of God upon Job, that he may debaſe the ſervices of Job toward God. Now leſt God ſhould take him off preſently with a denial, and tell him that all this is falſe; that Job is no ſuch man as he repreſents him to be, that he hath moſt preſumptuouſly intruded into Gods peculiar, namely, the ſecrets of the heart (for Satan had nothing to accuſe him of, that was in ſight, only he gueſſeth at his heart) leſt God, I ſay, ſhould preſently come and check him thus, for his boldneſs and impudence, both in contradicting his teſtimony, and in charging Job with inſincerity: Satan makes a motion in the next Verſe; Put forth thine hand now, and touch all that he hath, and he will curſe thee to thy face: as if Satan ſhould have ſaid, Lord, if you be not ſatisfied that thus it is with your ſervant Job, if you will not take my word that he is an hypocrite, and that he doth ſerve you only for ends; do but ſtretch forth your hand, &c. do but take away that which you have given him, and you ſhall ſee preſently he will take away that which he hath given you; if you will withdraw his riches, he will quickly withdraw his ſervice.

VERS. 11, 12.

But put forth thine hand now, and touch all that he hath, and he will curſe thée to thy face.
And the Lord ſaid unto Satan, behold all that he hath is in thy power, only upon himſelf put not forth thine hand. So Satan went forth from the preſence of the Lord.

THis eleventh Verſe contains Satans motion, which he ſubjoynes to his Anſwer, ver. 10. But put forth thine hand now. By his Anſwer before, he had wounded all the holy ſervices of Job, and now he ſeeks to wound his eſtate and poſſeſſions. His Anſwer was full of malice, and his motion is as full of cruelty. Whom before he had falſly accuſed, he (in theſe words) deſireth may be cauſleſly afflicted. Put forth thine hand now: As if he ſhould have ſaid, There is great queſtion concerning Job's integrity, this one Experiment will quickly decide and determine it; Touch all that he hath, &c. This motion is grounded (as was before noted) upon a feared denial of his Anſwer in the former words: For there Satan had argued after this manner; That is an unſound and hypocritical profeſſion, which is grounded only upon outward benefits; but all the profeſſion of Job is grounded only upon outward benefits: therefore it is unſound. Doth Job ſerve God for nought? This is the ſtrength of Satans Argument. Now he perceiving the weakneſs, or rather indeed the falſeneſs, the extream Lie that was in the Minor, in the Aſſumption (namely, that the profeſſion and holineſs of Job was grounded only upon outward things) he (I ſay) perceiving that) ſeeks to confirm what he had affirm'd by his motion. If you doubt (ſaith he) whether it be ſo or no with Job, let that come to the trial; touch all that he hath, and he will curſe thee to thy face. The ſtrength of the reaſon that lies in the motion, may be thus conceived: That profeſſion is grounded upon outward things, which a man layes down, when outward things are removed and taken away; but if thoſe outward things be removed and taken away from Job, he will quickly lay down his profeſſion; yea, he will take up Blaſphemy, he will curſe thee to thy face: therefore the profeſſion of Job is grounded upon outward things. This now is the Logick or the reaſon, upon which Satan bottoms and infers this motion, that ſo he may bring Job upon a further trial.

שלח Put forth thine hand now.] The Hebrew is, ſend forth thy hand. To put forth the hand, ſignifies, ſometimes to help, and ſometimes to hurt. So in Pſal. 144.7. Send forth thine hand, and deliver me. There is a ſending forth the hand in a way of mercy. And ſo, Acts 4. 30. There Peter prayeth that Chriſt would ſtretch forth his hand to heal. So that ſtretching forth, or ſending forth, or putting forth the hand (for the words are all uſed in common to the ſame ſence) ſignifie to do a thing for our good and preſervation: But uſually this putting forth, or ſtretching forth of the hand, notes ſome affliction, ſome puniſhment. A man that ſtandeth with his hand ſtretched out, is in a poſture to ſtrike. And ſo God himſelf is often deſcribed, by having his hand ſtretched forth, when he is about to puniſh; as, in the Propheſie of Iſaiah divers times, Chap. 5.25. Therefore is the anger of the Lord kindled againſt his people, and he hath ſtretched forth his hand againſt them, and hath ſmitten Ezek. 6.4. them: And Chap. 9. three times; ver. 12. For all this, his anger is not turned away; but his hand is ſtretched out ſtill: and ſo at verſ. 17. and verſ. 21. His anger is not turned away, but his hand is ſtretched out ſtill; that is, the Lord is ſtill ſmiting and afflicting them. In Eſther 6. 2. Two men were found in the Chronicle, who ſought to lay (or put forth) their hands on King Ahaſuerus, ſcil. they would have ſlain him. Then the meaning of Satan here is, ſtretch forth thine hand, let him feel the weight of thine hand in ſmitings and ſore afflictions.

Thy hand.] The hand of God in Scripture ſignifies, Firſt, The purpoſe of God; as that, Acts 4. 28. They have done whatſoever thy hand and thy counſel determined before to be done; that is, whatſoever according to thy purpoſe, thou didſt determine. Secondly, The hand of God ſignifies the Spirit of God, in the mighty actings and workings of it; ſo a Spirit of Propheſie is called the hand of God, Ezek. 1. 3. The hand of the Lord was there upon me: And, Ezek. 37. 1. The hand of the Lord was upon me; that is, the Spirit of the Lord, a mighty power of Propheſie was upon me. So likewiſe a Spirit of ſtrength that is upon a man, is called the hand of God, 1 Kings 18. ult. The hand of the Lord was upon Elijah, and he girt up his loins, and ran before Ahab. Here the hand of the Lord is put for the power of the Lord; Put forth thy hand, that is, put forth thy power: and ſo the hand of the Lord is uſed often, Iſa. 59. 1. The hand of the Lord is not ſhortned; that is, the power of the Lord is not abated. The Lord hath a long hand, and his hand is alwayes of the ſame length. So, ſtretch forth thy hand now, that is, do thou put forth thy mighty power.

This hand of the Lords power (to clear that a little further) is taken three wayes in Scripture.

Firſt, For his protecting power. There is a protecting hand; as, John 10. 28. No man is able to pluck them out of my Fathers hand; ſaith Chriſt. God hath his ſheep in his hand, and he will protect and ſafeguard them ſo, that none ſhall be able to pluck them away. This hand God put forth before for Job.

Again, It is put for his correcting power; as, Pſal. 32.4. His hand was heavy upon me; that is, the afflicting hand of God was heavy upon me. Let us fall into the hand of God: (David choſe that, 2 Sam. 24. 14.) that is, into the afflicting hand of God, rather then into the hands of men.

Thirdly, It is put for a revenging hand, for a wrathful hand, by which he doth deſtroy and break in pieces thoſe who are his enemies, Heb. 10. 31. It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God. David deſireth to fall into the hands of God, ſcil. into his correcting hand, becauſe he knew there was mercy; but it is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of God, when he cometh in wrath to take vengeance on thoſe who contemptuouſly deſpiſe his mercy, as is there expreſſed.

Now here, when Satan ſaith, Put forth thy hand, that is, thine hand of power; Satan intendeth not, that God ſhould put forth the hand of his power, to protect, nor barely to correct: He deſireth more then barely a correcting or chaſtiſing hand upon Job; he would have his revenging hand, his breaking, his deſtroying hand, as we ſhall ſee afterward.

Further, Thy hand; that is, Gods own hand: as if he did deſire that God himſelf would take Job into his own hand to chaſten and puniſh him.

The hand of God, his correcting or chaſtiſing hand, ſometimes is an immediate, and ſometimes a mediate hand. Sometimes it is immediate, when God by himſelf doth chaſten, or puniſh, or afflict, when no ſecond cauſe doth appear or intervene. So it may ſeem Satan here means, when he ſaith, put forth thine hand, that is, do it thine own ſelf, let no other have the handling of Job, but thy ſelf. God doth ſend ſuch immediate afflictions; a man is afflicted in his body, in his eſtate, and many other wayes, and he cannot find any thing in the Creature, whence it ſhould come; it is an immediate ſtroke of God, he cannot ſee how or which way, or at what door this evil came in upon him; therefore it is called a creating of evil, Iſa. 45. 7. I make peace, and create evil. Now creation is out of nothing; there is nothing thing out of which it is wrought. So many times God bringeth evil upon a people or perſon, when there is no appearance of ſecond cauſes, no matter out of which it is made, but it comes as a creature, formed by the only hand of God. Sometimes likewiſe it is called Gods hand, when it is the hand of a creature, it is Gods hand in a creatures hand; Gods hand when it is the hand of wicked men, Gods hand when it is Satans hand. So that place is tranſlated, Pſal.17.14. Deliver my ſoul from the wicked which is thy Sword (you ſee a wicked man is Gods Sword) and from men which are thy hand. So that thy hand may be underſtood of an inſtrument; Satan himſelf is Gods hand to puniſh in that ſence, as wicked men here are ſaid to be Gods hand; from the men that are thy hand. Though there be other readings of that place, ſome read it, Deliver me from men by thy hand; and others, Deliver me from men of thy hand: but our tranſlation may very well carry the ſence of the Original in it, from men which are thy hand, as Nebuchadnezzar that wicked King is called Gods ſervant, Jer. 43. 10. I will ſend and take Nebuchadnezzar my ſervant; God ſpeaks of him as his ſervant, or as his hand in the thing. So then, Put forth thy hand, it may be underſtood (I ſay) either immediately, do it by thy ſelf, or do it by Inſtruments, ſtrike him thy ſelf, or give me Commiſſion, or give others Commiſſion to ſtrike.

נא Particula obſecrantis. There is one thing further in this expreſſion, Put forth thine hand now. Now. Some read it, Put forth thine hand a little; and ſome read it, I pray thee put forth thy hand. The Original word is tranſlated to all theſe ſences; we tranſlate it, referring to the preſent importunity and inſtancy of Satan, Put forth thine hand now, let not this buſineſs ſleep, let it not be deferred a minute, a moment, let commiſſion go out ſpeedily to afflict Job.

And touch all that he hath.

To Touch] Notes ſometime a heavy and a ſore affliction, and ſometime a light and a ſmall affliction. In the Scripture we find it both wayes uſed. Sometime (I ſay) to Touch, doth ſignifie, the greateſt and the ſoreſt affliction or puniſhment that can be; and ſo Job doth expreſs all the afflictions that fell upon him at the laſt only by touching, Job 19. 21. Have pitty upon me, have pitty upon me, O ye my friends, for the hand of God hath touched me. Whereas Job at that time lay under the ſoreſt and heavieſt affliction that could be, all his eſtate was gone, and his body was full of diſeaſes, and his ſoul was full of horrour, and all this he doth expreſs by this, The hand of the Lord hath Touched me. So Pſalm 73. 14. To be Touched ſignifies the greateſt affliction, All the day long (ſaith David) have I been plagued. That which we tranſlate plagued, is the ſame Original word which we tranſlate Touch, in the Text; All the day long have I been Touched, that is, I have been Touched with the ſoreſt plagues, heavy afflictions have been laid continually upon me. So that to Touch ſignifies ſometimes the greateſt, or the ſoreſt ſtrokes of trouble.

Sometimes again, we ſhall find it ſignifies only a light affliction, as Gen. 26. in two places of that Chapter, at the 11. verſ. Abimelech charged all his people, ſaying, he that toucheth this man or his wife, ſhall ſurely be put to death, that is, he that doth them the leaſt hurt or wrong. So at verſe 19. in that agreement between Abimelech and Iſaac, they conclude thus, That thou wilt do us no hurt, as we have not touched thee, and as we have done unto thee nothing but good. So that to touch, notes the leaſt ill or hurt that can be, we have not touched thee, that is, we have done nothing to thee but good: Any thing on this ſide doing of good to them, had been touching of them. We find the like expreſſion in Pſal. 105. 15. where the Pſalmiſt ſpeaks of Gods extraordinary care of his people. He ſuffered no man to do them wrong, he rebuked Kings for their ſakes, ſaying, touch not mine anointed, and do my Prophets no harm. Touch not mine annointed people, that is the meaning of that place. Though in many other places we know Princes are called the annointed of God: yet here it is meant of the people of God in general, they are Gods annoynted (as the context clearly carries it) for they have all received Unction from God, an Unction of Grace, an Unction of the Spirit, and an Unction of Priviledge. Touch not mine annointed, that is, do them not the leaſt hurt. And the ſence that theſe words may bear, Put forth thy hand now and touch all that he hath, might be carried, as if Satan here intended only a touch in the latter ſence; Give him but the leaſt ſtroak, lay but the lighteſt affliction upon him, do but touch him; you are ſo confident of your ſervant Job, that he is ſuch a man, do but give him the leaſt touch, and you ſhall ſee how he will diſcover himſelf. So ſome expound it.

He doth not ſay, wound him, ſmite him, break him to pieces, but touch him only. Neither ſaith he, touch him, but his: And if thou give him but a touch with the top of thy little finger, thou ſhalt preſently find the rottenneſs of his heart. In that ſence the word imports, an extenuation of Jobs ſincerity, or heightning of Jobs hypocriſie: as if he had been ſo rotten in his profeſſion, that the leaſt touch would overthrow him, and make him diſcover himſelf to be ſtark nought. Like the Apples growing about Sodom, which have fair out-ſides, but if you touch them, they moulder away into duſt and aſhes. Si vel extremo digitulo leviſſime tangas bona ſua, ejus fictum animum & ſimulatam probitatem manifeſte comperies.

Though the words have this ſence in them, and Satan carries it cunningly, expreſſing himſelf in ſuch ambiguous terms, yet certainly Satan had a further intendment, whatſoever his language may bear: he had an intention that Job ſhould be touched in the former ſence, namely that he ſhould have a touch to the quick, as we ſay, that he ſhould have the ſoreſt and deepeſt wound that his eſtate was capable of: he would have him whipt, not with cords, but with Scorpions; he would have the little finger of God heavier upon him, then his loyns upon others.

Deſtroy him, undo him by your touching. He ſpeaks by the figure μειώσις, which is when we go leſs in our expreſſions then in our intentions, when our words are lower then our ſpirits: and that is proper for Satan, who is the great deceiver, the great jugler in word and deed; to deſire that Job ſhould only be touched, when he meant he ſhould be utterly undone and ruined. Touch all that he hath, that is, all his Eſtate, all his Poſſeſſions, his Children, his Family, his Cattel, whatſoever belongeth unto Job, let all feel an undoing ſtroak from thy hand.

Before I come to that which he undertakes upon the affliction, I ſhall obſerve two or three things from the words, thus far opened,

Put forth Now thine hand.] We may note from that,

The extream importunity of Satan to do miſchief.

He would not give God a minutes, not a moments reſpite to conſider this thing, but do it now preſently, let him preſently be afflicted; he makes haſte to deſtroy, he makes haſte to ſhed blood; their feet are ſwift to ſhed blood, as the Pſalmiſt ſpeaks. So Satan, his feet are ſwift to ſhed blood; when Satan would have God to afflict us, do it preſently, ſaith he; when Satan, would have us ſin againſt God, do it preſently, ſaith he; now ſin, now provoke God, do not ſtay till the next day: but when we are called to give up our ſelves to God, then to morrow will ſerve the turn, and next year will ſerve to repent, yea when you are old 'tis time enough to repent; when he tempteth to do any miſchief, any ſin, then now, now ſin; but 'tis time enough to do good hereafter, to morrow will ſerve for that.

Put forth now thine hand, and touch all that he hath.

It is a truth which Satan here ſpeaks concerning the hand of God; That if God do but touch the higheſt and greateſt eſtate in the world, it will fall to pieces quickly. There is a truth in it, take it in the eaſieſt ſence that can be, if God do but lightly touch the eſtate of a man, it will ſoon fall in pieces. God is not put to any ſtreſs to afflict and puniſh, as Pſal. 81. 14. I ſhould ſoon have ſubdued their enemies, and have turned my hand againſt their adverſaries: God expreſſeth the utter over-throw of the enemies of his people, but by the turning of a hand: if God do but turn his hand, they are all gone preſently, ſoon ſubdued; if he do but touch the might, the pomp, the greatneſs, the riches and the power of all thoſe in the world that are oppoſers of his Church, preſently they fall to the ground: A touch from the hand of God will end our Wars. If he touch the Mountains they ſmoak (as it is in the Pſalm) and conſume to aſhes: they that are the mighty and great ones of the World, the Mountains, by one touch of his hand fall as it were to nothing. So if God do but touch our eſtates, they moulder away, no creature can uphold them.

Then again obſerve here, the cunning impoſture of Satan that puts ſuch ſore, ſuch heavy afflictions into ſuch light and eaſie expreſſions; he cloatheth his malice, his utmoſt malice here in very fair words, do but touch him, ſaith this enemy; but you ſee what Satans touches are, touch all that he hath. Why Satan, would nothing have made a tryal, but only a touching of all? For Job to have loſt ſomewhat had been a tryal, a touch: for Job to have loſt half his flocks of Sheep, or his Oxen, had been a tryal, and no very light one neither; for Job to have loſt a ſon, to have found one of his children ſuddenly ſtruck dead, had been an affliction, and a heavy one too; ſuch a touch as that might well have touched the fathers heart: Would it not ſerve Satan that a ſon ſhould dye, or that ſome of his Cattel ſhould be deſtroyed, but he muſt have all touched, all that he hath? The malice of Satan is unſatiable, there is nothing will ſerve him, unleſs he may devour all.

This touch of Satan, which he deſireth might be laid upon Job, is like the touch that many have given to thoſe, who have come into their hands amongſt us; they would but touch them, but they would touch them in all; when they put forth their hands (as they pretended) in the wayes of Juſtice, in their Courts, they would touch men in all, touch them in their liberties by impriſonment, and touch them in their eſtates by extream vaſt fines, and touch them in their names by diſgrace, touch them in their bodies by whipping and cutting, and touch them in their relations, by keeping all friends from ſight of them: No moderation, no bounds, but touch them in all that they had. And (O exactneſs of Juſtice) when God came to touch that power, he gave them a touch, juſt after the rate and proportion of their own touches; for when thoſe Courts and perſons came to have their power and actions ſcanned, it was not moderating, or regulating, or reſtraining, or abating, or limiting their power, that ſatisfied, they muſt quite down, and be taken away. God gave them a touch, juſt as they touched others before: So that a man may ſay certainly, there is a God that judgeth the Earth. Theſe are the touches of Satan, and the touches of mercileſs men are as like his as themſelves are, they think there is nothing done unleſs men be undone: they never give over touching till they come to ruining.

אם לא

Touch all that he hath, and he will curſe thee to thy face.

Some render it thus, Touch all that he hath, if he curſe thee not to thy face: So it is word for word out of the Original, niſi, unleſs, or Si non, Touch all that he hath, and ſee if he do not curſe thee to thy face. We give the ſence of it in a direct affirmation, Touch all that he hath, and he will, &c. Others put the force of an imprecation to it, Touch all that he hath, and ſee if he do not curſe thee to thy face; that is, as if he had ſaid, let me never be believed, and never be truſted. Indeed Satan is ſo far diſgraced and damned already, that he hath nothing to looſe, he cannot damn himſelf further, he cannot wiſh any thing to himſelf worſe then he already is; but yet here is a kind of execration or imprecation upon himſelf in it; Do this, and if he do not curſe thee to thy face, let me never be accounted of, or (as many uſe to ſay) let me never be truſted; or as ſome wretched helliſh ones, Let me be damned, if ſuch or ſuch a thing be not. There is ſuch an emphaſis in that manner of ſpeaking uſed in the Text. But we tranſlate it by a direct affirmation, and that is a good ſence too, Touch all that he hath, and he will curſe thee to thy face, that's certain, ſo ſaith Satan, he will do it, it is as ſure as done already.

In particula ſi aliquid ſubaudiendum, ut ubi legimus, Si Davidi mentiar, ſi introibunt in requiem meam, hic ſubintelligitur, Sim vanus aut aliquid tale. Dru. in loc.

Curſe thee.] It is the ſame word which is uſed before, ver. 5. It may be my children have curſed God. The word ſignifies properly to bleſs. It was ſhewed that probably in that place, it might be tranſlated Curſe; but in this Text there is a neceſſity of tranſlating it ſo, ſeeing a clear ſence cannot be made out, taking the word properly. In curſing another theſe three things concur. Firſt, An ill opinion or conceit of that perſon. Secondly, Hatred or malice againſt him. Thirdly, A deſire that ſome evil may befall him. This Satan means when he undertakes that Job being afflicted will Curſe God. So then, to Curſe God is to blaſpheme God in our thoughts and words, to think or ſpeak unworthily of God, and the wayes of God; ſee, if he Curſe thee not to thy face, that is, ſee if his heart be not imbittered againſt thee, ſee if his tongue be not ſharpned to wound thy honour, to reproach thy goodneſs, to accuſe thy providence: As it is ſaid of thoſe, Iſa. 8.21. They ſhall be hungry and hard beſtead; And what then? They ſhall fret themſelves, and Curſe their King, and their God, and look upward; that is, they ſhall ſpeak baſely of their King and of their God, in whom they have truſted, and whom they have followed; he ſpeaks of thoſe wretches that did ſeek to falſe gods, or worſhip the true God falſly, they ſhall Curſe their King and their God. It is the very ſame, that here Satan promiſeth himſelf and undertakes with God that Job will do; Do but make him hungry (ſaith he) and hard beſtead, and he will fret himſelf, and Curſe thee.

It was very ordinary among the Heathen to do ſo: when their gods did not pleaſe them, then they would Curſe their gods. The Poets bring them in often raging againſt their gods; as he ſpeaks of the mother that found her ſon dead; ſhe calls the gods and the Stars cruel, ſhe flies in the face of Heaven preſently, who would ſerve ſuch gods as theſe are, that thus ſlay my ſon, &c. Satan interprets Job to be a man of the ſame temper.

Cum complexa ſui corpus miſerabile nati: Atque deos, atque aſtra vocat crudelia mater. Virg. Eclog. 5.

Quem non incuſavit amens hominumque deumque: Id. lib. 2. Æneid.

Aquinas takes the word properly, Touch all that he hath, and he will bleſs thee to thy face: And endeavours to make out the ſence thus, Touch all that he hath, and thou ſhalt ſee he hath bleſſed thee to thy face; he reads it in the Preterperfect tenſe; that is, if thou afflict him, thou ſhalt find that all his former Religion was nothing but meer outſide formality, that he ſerved thee only from the teeth outward, ſerved thee to thy face; he bleſſed thee, pray'd unto thee, and honoured thee only to thy face. He had no regard to thy worſhip in his heart; he did not worſhip thee, ex animo, becauſe he loved thee, or delighted in thee, but gave thee an outward complemental bleſſing, becauſe thou didſt bleſs him outwardly. As the Apoſtle directs ſervants, Eph. 6.6. Not with eye ſervice, as men pleaſers. Satan makes Job an eye-ſervant to God, or as if, like thoſe of whom Chriſt complaineth, Matth. 15. in the words of the Prophet, He had drawn nigh to God with his lips, while his heart was far from him. The heart of Job hath been far enough from thee, he only bleſſed thee with his lips, and to thy face. Indeed this interpretation hath a fair face, but touch it by a ſerious examination, and it will be found without a heart. The conſtruction of Grammar is quite againſt it, and for us to change the Text, and make it to ſpeak in the Preterperfect tenſe, of a thing paſt, whereas the words are in the Future tenſe, of an act to be done for the time to come, is too much boldneſs with Scripture. Therefore though that opinion hath a plauſible ſence in it, yet I ſhall lay it by, and take the ordinary tranſlation, that he indeed intended this, that Job would break forth into blaſphemous revilings of God, if God did but try him with an affliction.

And when he ſaith that Job would do it to his face, the meaning of it is, that he would do it openly: he will Curſe thee openly, he will Curſe thee boldly, he will not go behind the door to tell tales of thee, but he will ſpeak of it before all the world, that thou art a cruel God, an unjuſt God, and a hard maſter, he will tell ſuch tales of thee, even to thy very face. We have a like ſpeech, Gal. 2.11. When Peter was come to Antioch, I withſtood him to the face, (ſaith Paul) that is, openly; I did not go behind his back to tell Peter his own, but I told him it to his face, plainly, openly before them all, (as it is explained, verſ. 14.) I ſaid to Peter before them all, that were then preſent. Jerome (becauſe he would not have Peter receive ſuch an open reproof, judging it would be a diſparagement to Peter, to be rebuked by Paul) gives a quite contrary ſence of thoſe words of Paul; I withſtood him to his face, that is, ſaith he, I did ſpeak ſomewhat roughly to him before them, but there was no ſuch thing in my heart, I did it but to his face, very ſlightly, leſt I ſhould offend the Jews, whoſe Apoſtle Peter was; and I did it to his face, a little, that I might ſatisfie the Gentiles who were ſcandalized by Peters walking: otherwiſe in my heart I had no quarrel with Peter: he and I agreed well enough. As if Paul had made but a ſhadow fight (ad faciendum populum) to delude the people. But we muſt not be thus wiſe: I withſtood him to his face, is not oppoſed to withſtanding him cordially, but to a withſtanding of him ſecretly, or behind his back. So here he will Curſe thee to thy face; that is, he will Curſe thee (as the Greek Scholiaſt hath it) openly, and impudently; himſelf indeed was afraid leaſt his ſons had curſed God in their hearts, but for all this his niceneſs, and ſeeming fear of his childrens ſinning in ſecret, he will Curſe thee with impudence, he will not only Curſe thee in his heart, but the Curſe will break out at his lips: Out of the abundance of his heart, his mouth will ſpeak blaſphemy againſt God. He will Curſe thee to thy face.

φανερῶς, ἀναισχύντως.

We may give ſome exemplifications, what it is to curſe God, to blaſpheme God thus to his face. You may read what it is, Mal. 3. 14. Your words have been ſtout againſt me, ſaith the Lord, you have ſpoken to my very face: why, what had they ſpoken to the Lord? What have we ſpoken, ſay they, ſo much againſt thee? Ye have ſaid, It is vain to ſerve God, and what profit is it that we have kept his Ordinance, and that we have walked mournfully before the Lord of Hoſts? &c. This is to curſe God to his face: when the wayes of God are blaſphemed, and the worſhip of God reported as unprofitable, when men ſay it is in vain to ſerve God, when they caſt aſperſions and bring up an evil name upon an holy duty, this is to blaſpheme God. They did only ſpeak againſt the ſervice of God, and they thought they had not blaſphemed God in it, Wherein have we ſpoken againſt thee? Yes, ſaith God, you have ſpoken againſt me, in that you have ſpoken againſt and diſcredited my wayes. So, if Job had ſaid the wayes of God are unprofitable, and I ſee now it is in vain to ſerve God and to fear him, this had been blaſphemy and curſing of God to his face. David was near upon the very brink of this blaſphemy, Pſal. 73. 13. when he ſaid, I have cleanſed my heart in vain, and waſhed my hands in innocency, becauſe (ſaith he) I am plagued every morning; the judgments and afflictions that were upon him, began to make him break out thus. But he preſently befools himſelf for ſuch ſpeeches, and by that repairs God in his honour.

Secondly, To quarrel and be angry with the Providence of God, as if he were not wiſe, or juſt, or good in his diſpenſations either to particular perſons, or to the Church, this I ſay likewiſe is a curſing, a reproaching of God.

Thirdly, To curſe the ſervants and people of God, is to curſe God; If he that touches them touches God, then he that curſeth them curſeth God too. And God is curſed in any of theſe ſences two wayes, firſt, by detracting from himſelf, his worſhip, his works, or his ſervants, the good they have; or by faſtning on them, and aſperſing them with the evil which they have not.

He will curſe thee to thy face.

Obſerve two or three points from this,

Firſt, Satan can only gueſs at the hearts of men.

He would undertake and enter warranty with God that Job would blaſpheme, if God did but touch him, but he was deceived: Satan did but conjecture at moſt, and ſpeak at a venture; If he did not lye knowingly, I am ſure he did but gueſs ignorantly. Satan knows not what is in the heart, that's God's peculiar, that's God's Cabinet. God knew there lay ſincerity in the heart of Job all the while, although Satan would ſtand to it, that nothing was there but hypocriſie.

Secondly, We may note, ſeeing Satan, accuſing him of hypocriſie, would have him afflicted,

That, Affliction is the tryal and touchſtone of ſincerity.

When God doth afflict you, then he doth bring you to the touchſtone to ſee whether you are good mettal or no, he doth bring you then to the furnace, to try whether you be droſs or gold, or what you are. Affliction is the great diſcoverer, That unmasks us. Satan was not out in the thing, he hit upon the righteſt way that could be; if any thing would diſcover Job, affliction would. Indeed ſome are diſcovered by proſperity and outward abundance. The warm Sun makes ſome caſt off that cloak, which the wind and the cold cauſed them to wrap cloſer about them. Some, when they have gotten enough from God, care not for God; and when the fiſh is caught, they lay by the net: for they do but go a fiſhing with Holineſs, and the profeſſion of Religion, and when they have their ends, there's an end of their profeſſion. Affliction and the croſs try others: Some will hold on with God as long as the Sun ſhineth, as long as it is fair weather; but if the ſtorm ariſe, if troubles come, whether perſonal or publick, then they pull in their heads, then they deny and forſake God, then they draw back from, and betray his truth; what they, ſuch and ſuch men; No, not they. Trouble makes the great tryal; bring Profeſſors to the fire, and then they ſhew their metal. This courſe Satan took with Job. He knew Job had been abundantly tryed by fulneſs and abundance, and theſe did not draw his heart from God, he muſt therefore now try another way. It is an excellent paſſage in the Church-hiſtory, concerning Conſtantius the father of Conſtantine, that to the end he might try the hearts of his Courtiers, he proclaimed, that all they who would not forſake the worſhip of the true God, ſhould be baniſhed the Court, and ſhould have heavy penalties and fines laid upon them: preſently upon this (ſaith the ſtory) all that were baſe, and came to ſerve him only for ends, went away, forſook the true God, and worſhipped Idols. By this means he found out who were the true ſervants of God, and whom he meant to make his own; ſuch as he found faithful to God, he thought would prove faithful to him. What this exploratory decree of Conſtantius effected in his Court, the ſame did that which the Apoſtate Julian ſet forth in good earneſt againſt the Chriſtians. He no ſooner cauſed it to be proclaimed, that whoſoever would not renounce the Faith, ſhould be diſcarded his ſervice, and forfeit both life and eſtate to his high diſpleaſure; But preſently upon the publication of that decree, they who were indeed Chriſtians, and they who had only the title of Chriſtians, preſented themſelves, as it were, on a common ſtage to the view of all men. Such as theſe are Willows, not Oaks. And as it was with Naomi and her two daughters in law, Orphah and Ruth: All the while that ſhe was Naomi, beautiful, and had enough, they both ſtay with her: but when once Naomi became Marah, bitter, and empty, then Orphah took her leave of her, but Ruth abides with her. Here was the tryal whether Orphah or Ruth had the ſincerer affection to Naomi; Ruth loved her mothers perſon, Orphah her eſtate and outward preferments. While Religion and Proſperity go together, it is hard to ſay which a man follows; but when once they are forced to a ſeparation, where the heart was, will ſoon be maniſeſt. The upright in heart are like Ruth, whatſoever becometh of the Goſpel, they will be ſharers with it in the ſame condition; be it affliction, or be it proſperity; be it comfort, or be it ſorrow; be it fair weather, or be it foul; be it light, or be it darkneſs, they will take their lot with it. This is a clear truth, that, whatſoever was the cauſe of our doing a thing, that being removed we ceaſe to do it; if outward comfort and accommodations in the world, be the cauſe why we follow Chriſt in the profeſſion of his Goſpel, then as ſoon as ever they fail, our profeſſion will fail too. When zeal is kindled only with the beams of wordly hopes, when worldly hopes fail, our zeal is extinct, and our indeavour is cut off with our expectation.

Αὐτίκα ὡς ἐν χωνευτηρίῳ ὄντες Χριστιανοὶ καὶ οἱ νομιζόμενοι φανεροὶ πᾶσιν ἐγίνοντο. Socrat. lib. 3. cap. 13.

We are next to conſider the Lords grant of Satans motion.

And the Lord ſaid unto Satan, behold all that he hath is in thy power, only upon himſelf put not forth thine hand. So Satan went forth from the preſence of the Lord.

We have in this verſe. Firſt, Gods Commiſſion, or his permiſſion unto Satan, behold all that he hath is in thy hand. And ſecondly, His limitation of the Commiſſion, Only upon himſelf put not forth thine hand. Thirdly, Satans ſpeedy execution of his Commiſſion, So Satan went forth from the preſence of the Lord.

The Lord ſaid unto Satan, all that he hath is in thy hand,] thy power, ſo we tranſlate it: the word in the Original is, all is in thy hand. Satan moved that God would put forth his hand againſt Job; and God puts Job into Satans hand. Leſt Satan ſhould cavil that God had toucht him but lightly, he puts him into Satans power, and lets him do it himſelf, who would do it throughly. The hand (as we before noted) is put for power; and when any thing is put into the hand, it is put into the power or diſpoſition of another, Exod. 4. 21. Thou ſhalt do all the wonders before Pharaoh which I have put into thy hand. And John 3. 35. The Father loveth the Son, and hath given all things into his hand. This phraſe of giving or putting into the hand, is taken either for good or for evil. Sometime the putting of a thing into ones hand, is only for the managing and diſpoſing of it for good. As Gen. 39. 7, 8. Joſeph ſaid that his maſter had committed all that he had into his hand, that is, to take care of it, and to order it for his maſters benefit, profit, and honour: But often, to put or to give into the hand, is for evil, to do what you will with perſons or things, to puniſh or to afflict them, Judg. 6. 1. God delivered the Iſraelites into the hand of Midian, that is, he left them to the power of the Midianites, to tyrannize over and vex them: And verſ. 7. God delivered Midian into the hand of Iſrael, that is, he gave Iſrael power over them to deſtroy or afflict them. So here, he gave all into the hand of Satan, that is, he gave Satan leave to diſpoſe of Job's eſtate as he pleaſed. As if God had ſaid to Satan; Thou haſt leave to do what thou wilt with Job's outward eſtate, ſpoil it, plunder it, deſtroy it, conſume it, fire it; thou haſt free leave, All that he hath is in thy hand.

Dan. 1. 2.

We ſhall note a point or two from that. You ſee, as ſoon as ever Satan had made his motion, God preſently anſwereth, All that he hath is in thy hand.

It is not alwayes an argument of Gods good-will and love, to have our motions granted.

Many are heard and anſwered out of anger, not out of love. The children of Iſrael required meat for their luſts, and God gave it them, he did not withhold from them their deſire, they were not ſhortned of their luſts, they had it preſently: many times his own ſervants call and call again, move and move again, and obtain no grant: For this thing I beſought the Lord thrice, ſaith Paul, yet Paul could not have what he ſought. Satan did but move once, and preſently all that Job had was in his hand.

Multi irato Deo exaudiuntur, multis propitius Deus non tribuit quod volunt, ut quod utile eſt tribuat, Auguſt.
2 Cor. 12. 8.

But further, that which is chiefly here to be obſerved is,

That until God gives commiſſion, Satan hath no power over the eſtates or perſons of Gods people, or over any thing that belongs unto them.

Neither our perſons nor our eſtates are ſubject to the will either of men or Devils. Chriſt muſt ſay, All that he hath is in thy hand, before Satan can touch a ſhoe-latchet: As Chriſt ſaid, Joh. 19. 11. unto Pilate, when he ſpake ſo ſtoutly, Knoweſt thou not that I have power to crucifie thee, and power to releaſe thee? He thought that he had all power in his hand: but Chriſt tells him, Thou couldſt have no power at all againſt me, unleſs it were given thee from above. If the Devils could not go into the ſwine, much leſs can they meddle with a man, made after Gods Image, till God gives them leave. Every ſoul that hath an intereſt in Chriſt may ſuck comfort and conſolation in the ſaddeſt, in the ſorrowfulleſt day, from the breaſt of this truth. If Satan and wicked men cannot move till Chriſt ſaith, go; nor wound, till Chriſt ſaith, ſtrike; nor ſpoil, nor kill, till Chriſt ſaith, their eſtates, their lives are in your power: ſurely Chriſt will not ſpeak a word to their hurt, whom he loves, nor will he ever ſuffer his enemies to do a real dammage to his friends. Beſides it may fill the ſoul with unſpeakable joy, to remember, that while a man is ſuffering, the will of Chriſt is a doing.

Thirdly, Satan doth very wickedly (according to his nature,) in moving, that Job may be afflicted. He moveth in malice and in ſpight: God knew what his heart and intent was, and yet grants it. We may note from hence,

That which Satan and evil men deſire ſinfully, the Lord grants holily.

The will of God, and the will of Satan, joyned both in the ſame thing; yet they were as different as light and darkneſs, their ends were as different as their natures. Though it were the ſame thing they both willed, yet there was an infinite diſtance between them in willing it. The will of Satan was ſinful, but the power given Satan was juſt: Why? Becauſe his will was from himſelf, but his power was from the will of God. Satan had no power to do miſchief but what God gave him; but his will to do miſchief was from himſelf. Therefore we find that the ſame ſpirit is ſaid to be an evil ſpirit, and to be a ſpirit from the Lord, and yet the Lord doth not partake at all in the evil of the ſpirit, as 1 Sam. 16. 14. The Spirit of the Lord departed from Saul, and an evil ſpirit from the Lord troubled him. An evil ſpirit from the Lord; how was it an evil ſpirit, if it were from the Lord? can the Lord ſend forth an evil from himſelf who is only good? In that he was evil, that was from his own will; but that he had power to trouble Saul, that was from the Lord: So here, Satans will and intent were moſt wicked, theſe were from himſelf; his power to afflict Job was from God, and that was good. Satan willeth Job ſhould be afflicted for his deſtruction; God willeth it only for his tryal and probation. Satan deſireth it, that God may be blaſphemed; but God willeth it, that himſelf might be glorified. Satan willeth it, that ſo others in his example might be ſcandalized and diſheartned from entring into the ſervice of God, ſeeing how ill he ſped; but God willeth it, that others might be ſtrengthened and incouraged to enter into his ſervice, beholding a man under ſuch heavy preſſures, and yet not ſpeaking ill of God or of his wayes. Satan willeth it, hoping thereby Job would diſcover his hypocriſie; but God willeth it, knowing that he would therein diſcover his integrity. So then, though the ſame thing was willed, yet there was a vaſt diſproportion in their ends and intentions; and though the power by which Satan did afflict Job was from God, yet the evil intent with which he afflicted him was from himſelf. Thus we ſee how God without any ſtain or touch of evil grants this, which Satan did moſt wickedly deſire. It followeth, Unus idemque ſpiritus & Domini appellatur & malus: Domini per licentiam poteſtatis juſtæ! malus per deſiderium voluntatis injuſtæ, Greg.

Satanæ voluntas ſemper iniqua eſt, ſed nunquam poteſtas injuſta, Greg.
Deus adeo bonus eſt ut nullo modo mala permitterit niſi inde majora bona eliciturus eſſet.

Only upon himſelf thou ſhalt not put forth thy hand.

God gives a Commiſſion, but it is with a limitation, there is a reſtriction in it; Only upon himſelf, &c. that is, not upon his perſon, not his body, thou ſhalt not afflict that with diſeaſes; not his ſoul, thou ſhalt not afflict that with temptations. Hence note,

That God himſelf ſets bounds to the afflictions of his people.

He limits out how far every affliction ſhall go, and how far every inſtrument ſhall prevail: as he doth with the Sea, Hitherto (ſaith he) thou ſhalt come, and no further, here thou ſhalt ſtop thy proud waves; ſo he ſaith to all the afflictions of ſingle perſons, or whole Nations, hither you ſhall come, and no further. Only upon himſelf thou ſhalt not put forth thine hand. This limitation reſpects; Firſt, The degree or meaſure, thus far you ſhall afflict, that is, in ſuch a degree, to ſuch a height, and no higher. Secondly, It reſpects the time, thus far, that is, thus long, ſo many years, or ſo many dayes you ſhall have power, and no longer. God leaves not either the meaſure, or the time, the degree or the continuance of any affliction in the hand of Satan or his adherents: We read (Rev. 6. 10.) That the ſouls under the Altar cry, How long Lord? how long? They cry to God how long? they knew that he only had the time in his hand, he only could tell how long, and it ſhould be as long as he pleaſed, How long Lord? They cryed not to cruel tyrants, how long will ye perſecute? but Lord, how long will it be before thou come to revenge? And ſo David, Pſal. 31. 15. My time it is in thy hand, ſpeaking of his afflictions. There is no affliction but it is in the hand of God, for the continuance of it, as well as for the manner of it; and as no enemy, man or devil, can make thy croſs greater, or longer, or heavier, ſo no friend, man or Angel, can make thy croſs lighter, or leſſer, or ſhorter then God himſelf hath appointed; Only upon himſelf ſhalt thou not put forth thine hand, thou ſhalt not move an inch further, not a hairs breadth further. As our afflictions for the matter of them are by the will of God, (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, 1 Pet. 4. 19. While you ſuffer (ſaith he) according to the will of God: thoſe words, according to the will of God, note not only the righteouſneſs of ſuffering, that it muſt be in a good cauſe, but alſo the ſpring from whence thoſe ſufferings come, they are Ex voluntate Dei, ſo Mr. Beza tranſlates it, they are out of the will of God. Now, I ſay, as they are out of the will of God, or from the will of God, ſpringing from his will, and flowing from his diſpenſation of things in the matter of them) ſo alſo in every circumſtance; God himſelf gives thy croſs length, and breadth, and thickneſs; he fills thy cup of ſorrow, he directeth how many drops to a drop, ſhall be put into it, thou ſhalt not have a drop more then God preſcribes, and (which is more comfortable) knows will be for thy good.

Secondly, Obſerve, That Satan is boundleſs in his malice toward the people of God.

If God did not ſet him bounds, he would ſet himſelf no bounds, therefore ſaith God unto him, Only upon himſelf, &c. He had a mind to have gone further, he would have been upon Job himſelf, as well as upon his eſtate, if God had not ſtop'd and curb'd him. Therefore the Apoſtle gives that aſſurance for the comfort of the people of God, 1 Cor. 10. 13. God (ſaith he) is faithful, who will not ſuffer you to be tempted above that you are able: As if he ſhould ſay, Satan would with all his heart lay more upon you, then you are able to bear; Satan would break your backs if he were let alone, but God will not ſuffer it. Satan hath a boundleſs malice againſt the people of God. Some obſerve this from his name Leviathan, Iſa. 27. 1. In that day the Lord with his great and ſtrong Sword ſhall puniſh Leviathan the piercing Serpent. Leviathan is put there for Satan, and for all the inſtruments of Satan. Now Leviathan ſignifieth in the Hebrew an augmentation, an addition, or an increaſe: And Satan is ſo called, becauſe (ſay they) he ever deſires to lay more burdens upon, to increaſe the afflictions, troubles and temptations of Gods people, he never thinks he hath done enough againſt them. His thirſt to work miſchief is never quenched, but ſtill he deſires to do more, he would fain have his Commiſſion inlarged to do more miſchief in the world. Therefore God is ſaid not to ſtrike after their ſtroak, in the ſeventh verſe of that 27. of Iſa. Hath he ſmitten him as he ſmit thoſe that ſmote him? In the Hebrew it is, He hath not ſmitten him according to the ſtroak of thoſe that ſmote him: according to their ſtroak, noting that the ſtroak of Leviathan, and the ſtroak of his inſtruments, is an unmeaſurable ſtroak, a boundleſs ſtroak, they would never give over ſtriking: They think the wound is never deep enough, nor blood ſhed enough; but ſaith the Prophet, verſ. 8. God doth it in meaſure, ſo that he oppoſeth their ſtriking to Gods afflicting by the meaſure of it. God keepeth his afflictions in ſuch a bound and compaſs, he afflicts in meaſure; but Satans ſtroak, and the ſtroaks of wicked men, are without all meaſure, that is, without all moderation: unleſs God ſtop them, they would never make an end.

Dicitur Leviathan, i.e. Additamentum ſive augmentum, nam nullo noſtro malo contentus eſt, nullam poteſtatem ſibi ſatis eſſe putat, plus ſibi poteſtatis addi nobis malorum plus inferri ſemper poſtulat. Pineda.

Laſtly, Obſerve how Satan is by this proved a deceiver, he intended more then he ſpake; you may ſee it plainly in this, becauſe God put a reſtraint upon him. Touch all that he hath, ſaith Satan; that referred to his poſſeſſions and outward eſtate, as if that had been the mind of Satan in the motion, do but afflict him in his outward eſtate, I deſire no more to make this trial: now when the Lord ſaith, All that he hath is in thy hand, there he grants him the motion in the letter of it: but the Lord God ſaw that Satan had a further reach, when he ſaid, Touch all that he hath, which words ſeem to extend no further then his eſtate; but had not God limited and reſtrained him, he by an indefinite grant to his motion, had likewiſe fallen upon his perſon, that was the great morſel he gaped after all this while, he would have been doing with Job himſelf, elſe there was no need of this limitation, Only upon himſelf put not forth thy hand; Satans fingers itcht to be medling with Job, though his words called for what he had, not for himſelf.

And Satan went forth from the preſence of the Lord.

As ſoon as he hath leave, and his Commiſſion, he is gone preſently, He went out from the preſence of the Lord. The word is, he went out from the face of the Lord: Now the face of the Lord in Scripture it is taken ſometimes for the eſſential glory of God, that inacceſſible Majeſty of God, Exod. 33. ult. Thou canſt not behold my face. Sometimes the face of God is put for the favour and love of God, Cauſe thy face to ſhine upon thy Sanctuary which is deſolate, Dan. 9. 17. and cauſe thy face to ſhine upon thy ſervant: So in many other places the face of God is put for the favour of God, becauſe as the favour and love of a man is ſeen and diſcovered in his face, ſo there is ſomewhat in thoſe dealings of God which diſcover God; he is ſaid to make his face to ſhine upon his people, when he doth diſcover by any act of his, that he loves and favours them; that is the ſhining of his face upon them. The face interprets the heart, and ſhews the meaning of the ſpirit: ſo in thoſe things which interpret ſomewhat of the love of God to us, God is ſaid to make his face ſhine upon us. On the other ſide, the face of God is put ſometimes for the anger and wrath of God, becauſe anger is ſeen in the face too; ſo in thoſe things by which God diſcovereth his anger, he is ſaid to ſet his face againſt men: there is an expreſs place for it in this ſenſe, Lam. 4. 16. The anger of the Lord (the Hebrew is, the face of the Lord) hath divided them; that is, the Lord hath done ſuch things as have the character of anger upon them, that do repreſent and hold forth nothing but the anger of the Lord unto a people, and that anger of the Lord is called the face of the Lord unto a people. Thirdly, by the face of the Lord in Scripture, we may underſtand the ordinances and the worſhip of God, becauſe in them and by them, God is revealed, manifeſted and known to his people, as a man is known by his face: So in the Old Teſtament, coming to God in thoſe inſtitutions, was called appearing before God, becauſe in them God had promiſed to manifeſt himſelf unto his people. Laſtly, the face of God is put for the common and general preſence of God in the world, by which he filleth heaven and earth, Pſal. 139. 7. Whither ſhall I go from thy preſence?

Index animi vultus.

Now when it is ſaid that Satan went forth from the face of God, or from the preſence of God, it cannot be underſtood in the firſt or in the ſecond ſenſe, for he cannot ſo come into the preſence of God, or before the face of God: before his face of glory, or before his face of favour, Satan never came, nor ever ſhall. And as the preſence of God is taken for his worſhip; ſo Satan cares not to come into his preſence. Laſtly, as the face of God ſignifies his common and general preſence in the world, ſo Satan cannot poſſibly go out from his face, Whither ſhall I go from thy preſence? nor men, nor devils are able to go out of the preſence of the Lord, in that ſenſe, for he filleth heaven and earth.

Pſal. 139.

Then theſe words, He went out from the preſence of the Lord, are ſpoken after the manner of men. When a ſervant cometh to his Maſter to receive Commiſſion to do ſome buſineſs, and hath his errand given him, then he goeth out from the preſence of his Maſter about his buſineſs. So Satan comes here upon a buſineſs unto God, he makes a motion, and deſireth to have ſuch power put into his hand, to do ſuch and ſuch things: the Lord grants it, and ſo ſoon as ever he had his diſpatch, he goeth out of the preſence of the Lord. So that the meaning is only this, that Satan left off ſpeaking with God, left off moving God any further at that time, and went out to execute that which he got commiſſion to do, as ſervants go out from the preſence of their Maſters, when they have received warrant or direction what to do. While a ſervant is in expectation of his meſſage or errand, ſo long his eyes are upon his Maſter, Our eyes wait upon thee, O God, as the eyes of ſervants look unto the hands of their Maſters, Pſal. 123. 3. The eyes of ſervants wait upon the face of their Maſter till they have received their meſſage, and then they go out from their preſence.

Hominum more loquitur, à quibus ſervi exeunt, ut mandata exequantur quæ ab illis acceperant.

It notes the ſpeed that Satan makes when he receives power from God to afflict, or to chaſten and try any of his children, he makes no ſtay, preſently he goeth out from the preſence of the Lord. Satan is ſpeedy and active in executing any power that is committed unto him againſt the people of God, againſt any particular member, or againſt the Church in general: As ſoon as ever he hath but his Commiſſion to afflict, he is gone about it inſtantly: As the good Angels in Heaven are deſcribed to have wings, becauſe as ſoon as ever they have received a command from God, they are upon the wing, they fly, as it were, to fulfil the will of God; and in that ſenſe go out of his preſence: So Satan and the wicked Angels are upon the wing too in that ſenſe, as ſoon as ever they have received power, they preſently put it in execution.

And we may in this make Satan himſelf our pattern. As we pray that the will of God may be done on earth as it is in heaven, in heaven by the good Angels: So in this ſenſe (I ſay) we may deſire that we may do the will of God with as much ſpeed as the evil Angels. It is not unwarrantable to learn from Satan ſpeedily to be doing about the will of God.

VERS. 13, 14, 15.

And there was a day when his ſons and his daughters were eating and drinking wine in their eldeſt brothers houſe.
And there came a meſſenger unto Job, and ſaid, The Oxen were plowing, and the aſſes feeding beſides them.
And the Sabeans fell upon them, &c.

IN the former context we ſhewed you the affliction of Job, moved by Satan, and permitted by God, Touch all that he hath, is Satans motion: All that he hath is in thine hand is Gods permiſſion. From this 13. verſe to the end of the 19. the afflictions of Job are particularly deſcribed; and we may obſerve ſix particulars in the Context concerning his afflictions.

Firſt, The time or ſeaſon of his afflictions, And there was a day when his ſons and daughters were eating and drinking wine in their eldeſt brothers houſe, verſ. 13.

Secondly, The inſtruments or the means of his afflictions. Satan who undertook the afflicting of Job, ſtands as it were behind the door, he doth not appear in it, but ſets on others. His inſtruments were firſt cruel and bloody minded men, the Sabeans, verſ. 15. The Chaldeans, verſ. 17. Secondly, thoſe active creatures, devouring fire and ſtormy winds; the fire, verſ. 16. the wind, verſ. 19.

Thirdly, The matter of his affliction, or in what he was afflicted, it was in his outward eſtate.

Fourthly, The variety of his afflictions: he was not ſmitten in ſome one thing, in ſome one part of his outward eſtate, but he was afflicted in all; his Oxen, his Aſſes, and his Camels were violently taken away, his ſheep burnt up by the fire, his ſons and his daughters over-whelmed and cruſhed by the fall of an houſe, all his ſervants attending upon theſe, ſlain, conſumed, deſtroyed, excepting only one from every ſtroke, to be the ſad relator or meſſenger of theſe calamities.

Fifthly, The ſuddenneſs of his afflictions, they came all upon him in one day.

Sixthly, The unceſſantneſs of the report of theſe afflictions, the ſound of them all was in his ears at once: as they were all brought upon him in one day, ſo they are all told him in one hour, yea by the ſtory it doth appear, there were but very few moments between the firſt and the laſt. For the Text ſaith, that no ſooner had one meſſenger ended his doleful news, but another begins, nay, they did not ſtay ſo long as to let one another make an end; but the Text ſaith, While the former was yet ſpeaking, there came another and ſaid; and ſo while the next was yet ſpeaking, there came another and ſaid; and while he was yet ſpeaking, another, &c. So that Satan did not give Job ſo much as the leaſt minute of intermiſſion to breath a while, or recollect himſelf. His troubles both in the acting and in the reporting, were cloſe linked together, like a chain, one with another, and he within them all faſt bound, and yet free.

Theſe are obſervable, thorough the whole Context concerning this great affliction of Job. Now we will conſider the afflictions themſelves, their ſeveral parts, and open the words in which they are preſented to us.

Verſ. 13. And there was a day when his ſons and daughters were eating, and drinking wine in their eldeſt brothers houſe.

Eccleſ. 3.1.

And there was a day.] To every thing there is a ſeaſon (ſaith Solomon) and a time for every purpoſe under the Sun. God hath a time for his purpoſes, God hath his day: Man hath a time for his purpoſes; and ſo hath Satan: any day will not ſerve his turn, he picks and chooſeth. There was a day, it intimates a day extraordinary, and there is an expreſs addition in the Original which puts an emphaſis upon it, and makes it more then a day, there was that day, or that ſpecial day: So it is uſed 2 Kin. 4.8. And it fell on a day that Eliſha paſſed to Shunem, or upon that day, a notable day wherein ſo many great things were done.

היום

But what day was this? It is explained in the words, in the latter part of the verſe. It was a notable day, for it was a day, or that day, When his ſons and his daughters were eating, and drinking wine in their eldeſt brothers houſe.

There are three things in thoſe words, which prove that this was an extraordinary day.

Firſt, It was a feaſting day, and feaſting dayes are extraordinary dayes.

Secondly, It was an extraordinary, not an ordinary feaſting day; For it is ſaid, they were eating, and drinking wine. In the beginning of the Chapter (where the feaſts of Jobs children are deſcribed) it is ſaid only, That his ſons went every one their day, to eat, and to drink: But here it is ſaid, that they did eat, and drink wine; which notes an extraordinary feaſt. For ſtill in Scripture, when we read of a banquet of wine, or a feaſt of wine, an extraordinary feaſt is meant. Queen Eſther invited the King and Haman to a banquet of wine; not that there was nothing but wine at the banquet, but that addition doth imply, that it was a plentiful banquet, a ſolemn banquet. It is more to make a banquet of wine, then to make a banquet, though ſcarce any banquet is made without wine. So when there wanted wine, the ſolemnity and glory of the feaſt was thought to be blemiſhed, They have no wine, ſaith the mother of Chriſt unto him at the marriage feaſt in Cana. And when the Spouſe would ſet forth the wonderfulneſs of ſpiritual delights, which ſhe had from Chriſt, ſhe expreſſeth it thus, He brought me into the banqueting houſe, the Hebrew word is, he brought me into the houſe of wine; the houſe of wine notes extraordinary ſpiritual refreſhing. What a banquet had the Spouſe for her ſoul there? Chriſt called her to eat and drink abundantly, to be filled with his love. See the like Iſa. 25. 6. So Jobs children were eating, and drinking wine, &c. they were at a plentiful and and ſolemn feaſt that day.

Eſther 5.6.

John 2.4.

Cant. 2.4.

Thirdly, It was a day of feaſting in their eldeſt brothers houſe, that is another thing which proves it was an extraordinary feaſt day. It was a feaſt, and a feaſt of wine, and a feaſt of wine in their eldeſt brothers houſe, who had a larger eſtate, a fuller portion, and to anſwer the dignity of his primogeniture, ought to make a more ſolemn feaſt then the reſt did: This was the day that Satan picks out and chooſes to bring all theſe ſad afflictions upon Job, an ordinary day would not ſerve his turn; without doubt this was not the immediate day or time, after which he got that Commiſſion from God, All that he hath is in thine hand; Satan went away, he would have been at it as ſoon as he could, but yet he waiteth for a ſpecial time wherein he might do it with greateſt advantage: and that is the point I ſhall obſerve from this.

That Satan obſerveth and watcheth his time to faſten his temptations moſt ſtrongly upon the ſoul.

He watcheth a day, there was a day, and there was not a day in the whole year, upon which he could have done it with greater advantage then upon that day. As the mercies of God are exceedingly endeared to us by the ſeaſon in which they come to us: When they come to us in our ſpecial need, how ſweet is a mercy then! And as our obedience is exceedingly commended to the acceptation of God, when it is upon a fit day, when it is on the day, wherein he calls for and expects it: And as our ſins are exceedingly aggravated, by the ſeaſon and time wherein they are committed: What, ſin upon this day? A day of trouble, a day of humiliation? As Eliſha rebuked Gehazi, Is this a time to receive money, and to receive garments? &c. Is this a time for thy heart to run out ſinfully after the world? So likewiſe the temptations of Satan and the afflictions which he brings upon the ſervants of God, are exceedingly imbittered by the ſeaſon; and he knows well enough, what ſeaſons will make them moſt bitter. And what can more imbitter a cup of ſorrow, then to have it brought us upon a day of rejoycing. Solomon tells us, that as he that taketh away a garment in cold weather, and as vinegar upon nitre, ſo is he that ſings a ſong to an heavy heart. If joy be troubleſome in our ſorrows, how troubleſome is ſorrow in the midſt of our joyes, Prov. 25. 20. Then, Satan could never have found out ſuch a time as this: Muſt he needs be afflicting the Father, when the children were a feaſting? Could he find out no other time but this? Muſt his tears be mingled with their wine? Muſt the childrens rejoycing day be the Fathers mourning day? Muſt Satan needs ſhew his malice againſt the Father, when the children were ſhewing their love one to another? It was a love-feaſt. Thus he did with Chriſt; it is obſerved that when Chriſt had faſted forty dayes and forty nights, and afterwards was an hungry, then the Tempter came, he layes hold of this advantage, he would not come till he was hungry, to perſwade him to turn ſtones into bread. What a ſtrength had this temptation from the ſeaſon? Who would not make bread for himſelf if he can, when he is hungry? Had Chriſt been full, there had not been ſuch an edge upon, ſuch a weight in the temptation. How many doth Satan provoke to turn ſtones into bread, when he comes to them in their hunger? Thou art in a ſtrait, like to ſtarve and periſh, turn ſtones into bread, that is, procure thy ſelf meat and proviſion by unlawful and ſinful wayes; This is indeed to turn ſtones into bread.

2 Kin. 5.26.

So here at this time when Job was rejoycing (as doubtleſs he did) to ſee the love and unity of his children; now at this time Satan attempts to turn their bread into a ſtone, to bruiſe and break the heart of their tender Father. Afflictions preſs moſt when they are leaſt expected.

Let us obſerve then this mixture of malice and cunning in Satan, in chooſing his time. To carry a man from one extremity to another, puts him upon the greateſt extremity: To make the day of a mans greateſt rejoycing to be the day of his deepeſt ſorrows, this is cutting, if not killing ſorrow. To be brought from extream ſorrow to extream joy ſuddenly, doth rather amaze then comfort the ſpirit of a man: It is ſaid that when the Lord turned again the captivity of Zion, the people were like them that dream; the change was ſo great, ſo ſudden, that they were rather aſtoniſhed and amazed then comforted with it, for a while. So, much more to be hurried from extream joy to extream ſorrow, from the borders of comfort to the brink of death on a ſudden, is not ſo much to afflict a man, as to confound and diſtract him. This courſe Satan takes with Job.

Pſal.126.1.

It were well if we could be wiſe in this reſpect to imitate Satan, to chooſe out our day to do good when there is greateſt probability of ſucceſs, as he choſe out his day to do miſchief: It is the Apoſtles rule, as you have opportunity, do good; if we could be wiſe to lay hold upon opportunities, it would be a wonderful advantage to us. As a word fitly ſpoken is a word upon the wheel; ſo a work fitly done, is a work upon the wheel, it goeth on, takes upon the heart both of God and man. Let us conſider whether now we have not a ſeaſon, whether this be not a day that holds forth to us a glorious opportunity. Surely we may preſent this day unto you, as a day to be doing in. Let us therefore be as quick in this our day to do good, as Satan was in that day to do hurt. This is a day wherein great things are a doing, and grievous things are a ſuffering by many of our brethren, therefore you ſhould be working this day, make a day on't. This is a day in which ſons of Belial, men that will not bear Chriſts yoke, are combining to break it, and to caſt his cords from them. Then joyn this day, to help Chriſt; elſe, as Mordecai ſaid to Eſther, If thou altogether holdeſt thy peace at this time (this was a day for Eſther to work in) then ſhall their enlargement and deliverance ariſe to the Jews from another place, but thou and thy fathers houſe ſhall be deſtroyed: So I may ſay to you in reference to the preſent opportunity, if you altogether hold your peace, hold your purſes, and hold your hands at this time, at ſuch a day as this, enlargement will come to the Church ſome other way; but you may be deſtroyed, who think to hold & keep your peace either by ſaying or doing nothing: If ever you will appear, this is a day to appear in to do good. Let us be wiſe to manage and improve our day; that it may never be ſaid of us, as our Lord Chriſt did of Jeruſalem: If ye had known, even ye, in this your day, the things which belong unto your peace, Luke 19.42. It is a ſadder thing to have had a ſeaſon and not to know it, (ſc. not to uſe it,) then not to have had it. Solomon tells us, *Eccleſ.*8.6. That, Becauſe to every purpoſe there is a time and judgment, therefore the miſery of man is great upon him. Miſery cannot be great to a man, becauſe there is a time for every purpoſe; but becauſe men are either ſo blind that they cannot ſee, or ſo ſluggiſh that they will not make uſe of the proper time for every purpoſe. Thus the Preacher himſelf expounds it, Chap. 9.12. For man alſo knoweth not his time: as the fiſhes that are taken in an evil net, and as the birds are taken in a ſnare, ſo are the ſons of men ſnared in an evil time, when it falleth ſuddenly upon them. Conſider what Solomons experience taught him: Let not your inadvertencie of theſe times, make you a new experiment of that ancient truth, and leave men that ſhould be wiſe, eſpecially that pretend to wiſdom, to be numbred among, and compared with a ſilly bird, a ſilent fiſh.

Gal.6.10.

Eſth. 4.14.

Then again, Foraſmuch as it was the day of their great feaſt, of their feaſt with wine, upon which this great affliction aſſaulted Job; Obſerve,

> That, The faireſt and cleareſt day of our outward comfort may be clouded and overcaſt before the evening.

It was a fair day as ever began in Job's family, a feaſt, and a feaſt with wine, and that, in the eldeſt Brothers houſe, and yet all was darkneſs before night.

This is true in reference to ungodly men, great and terrible judgments fall ſuddenly upon them; their light is turned into darkneſs in a moment, as Chriſt compares it to the dayes of Noah, and the dayes of Lot: As it was (ſaith he) in the dayes of Noah, they did eat, they drank, they married wives, they were given in marriage, until the day that Noah entred into the Ark, and the Flood came and deſtroyed them all. And as it was in the dayes of Lot, &c. Both which, are in two words ſet out by the Apoſtle: When they ſhall ſay peace and ſafety; then ſudden deſtruction cometh. Thus it is with ungodly men, their Sun often ſets at noon; when they ſay, yea, when they conclude all's well, then judgment mixt with wrath, is at the door. This is a truth alſo in reference unto godly men, and the Churches of God, all their outward comforts may be clouded in a day, while they are eating and drinking, not ſinfully, but in a holy manner; ſuppoſe, as the Apoſtle adviſeth, to the glory of God: yet even at that time, all may preſently be taken away. And therefore, as the Apoſtle adviſeth, Rejoyce as if you rejoyced not in the Creature, and eat as if you did not eat, and buy as if you poſſeſſed not; Why? For the faſhion of this world, and the Scheme of this world paſſeth away; you ſee it did with Job: in what a goodly faſhion was his worldly eſtate in the morning? how was it dreſt and adorned in perfect beauty, in all its excellencies (as we heard it before deſcribed) yet, before night all the faſhion of it paſt away, and the beauty of it was quite blaſted: therefore, you that have great Eſtates, and good Eſtates, Eſtates well gotten, and well governed, be not high-minded, truſt not in uncertain riches; if riches encreaſe, and if they increaſe in a right way, yet ſet not your hearts upon them; for the faſhion of worldly things quickly paſſeth away. Riches make themſelves wings to flie away, when thou art making doors and locks, bolts and bars, to keep them in. That for the Time, in Verſe 13.

1 Theſ.5.3.

1 Cor. 10. 31.

1 Cor.7.30.

1 Tim. 6. 17.

Pſal.62.10.

But what did Satan upon this day? That is ſet down in ver. 14, and ſo on.

And there came a Meſſenger unto Job, and ſaid, the Oxen were plowing, and the Aſſes feeding beſide them.

There came a meſſenger.] The Jewiſh Rabbins, and ſome of the Fathers tell us, that theſe Meſſengers were Devils, evil Spirits, in the likeneſs of men: But ſurely the Opinion hath little likeneſs with truth; therefore with Beza, I lay it by, and reject it amongſt the Tales of the Rabbins: Theſe Meſſengers were really the eſcaped ſervants of Job, as we ſhall ſee afterward.

Now the Meſſenger beſpeaks Job thus, The Oxen were plowing, they were hard at their work; and the Aſſes were feeding beſides them: The word in the Hebrew is this, the Aſſes were feeding at their hand, or at hand. To be at hand, doth note nearneſs: In our Language we ſay, ſuch a thing is at hand, or ſuch a man is at hand, the day of our fear is at hand, when we mean, they are near: The Lord is at hand, Phil. 4. 5. ſc. nigh unto us for our help. So, 2 Theſ. 2. 2. It is applied alſo to nearneſs of place, as well as of time, Neh. 3. 2. where the building of the wall of Jeruſalem is deſcribed, it is ſaid, Next unto him built the men of Jericho, the Hebrew is, at the hand of him built the men of Jericho; that is, next to him in place.

Now the Meſſenger deſcribeth all in ſuch a poſture, The Oxen were plowing, and the Aſſes feeding; by this to aſſure Job of the care and diligence of his ſervants about his buſineſs, for the ſecuring of his Cattel, and improving of his ground. As if he ſhould have ſaid, This ſad affliction which is come upon thee, did not come through our negligence or improvidence, we were about our buſineſs, according to our ſeveral places; the Oxen were plowing, and the Aſſes were feeding by them; they were not careleſly left to danger, but our eye was upon them; yet notwithſtanding they were all ſurprized and taken away.

From this relation of the poſture of Job's Servants and Cattel at the time when this affliction fell upon them, we may obſerve thus much,

> That, All our care and diligence cannot ſecure outward things unto us.

Afflictions may take us in the midſt of our beſt and moſt honeſt endeavours. A man may be looking to, and ordering his eſtate, and yet at the very time, while his eye is upon it, he may ſee it take its flight like an Eagle towards heaven; while he is ordering of it, he may ſee diſorder and confuſion coming upon it; while he is ſetling of it by honeſt care, he may quickly ſee it unſetled, removed, and all broken in pieces, as it was here with Job; he was in a very good way, his ſervants were honeſtly employed, but ſuddenly all is gone; the Oxen were taken away, and the Aſſes that fed by them. But who made this attempt? The Meſſenger informs that in the next words:

And the Sabeans fell upon them.

ותפל From נפל

The Sabeans.] The Hebrew is, Saba fell upon them; the countrey put for the people, Saba for the Sabeans: As we uſe to ſay, Spain made war, and France made war; that is, the Spaniards made war, or the French made war; ſo it is ſuch an expreſſion, Saba fell upon them, that is, the people inhabiting Saba.

Fell upon them.] The word noteth a mighty violence; they came upon them as from above, they come powring down upon them like a ſtorm. There is ſuch a phraſe in war, when they go violently upon a place, they are ſaid to ſtorm the place, to ſtorm the gates of a Caſtle, or of a City; ſo here, they fell upon them, that is, they came violently upon them like a ſtorm. In Prov. 1. 27. Deſtruction is deſcribed to come upon wicked men like a whirlwind.

Sabæos autem Arabas intellige, qui latrociniis dediti erant; unde poſterior ætas eos Saracenos appellavit, non a Sara, ut quidam ſomniant; ſed a Saras, verbo Arabico, quod furari & latrocinari ſignificat. Unde Saric, Fur, Latro. Druſ. in loc.

The Sabeans were a people (as is concluded by moſt Interpreters) inhabiting Arabia Fœlix, near the Countrey where Job dwelt: And for the manners of this people, it is obſerved by Hiſtorians, that they were a people famous only for robberies, a people that lived by pillage and plundering of their neighbours; ſuch a people they were: Theſe Sabeans fell upon them, they took away thy Cattel, and have ſlain thy ſervants with the edge of the Sword.

Here it may be queſtioned, how or why theſe Sabeans at ſuch a time ſhould fall upon the eſtate of Job? What hurt had Job done them? Job lived in a fair way with all his neighbours, and kept good quarter and correſpondence with them, he was not a man of war or contention; how cometh it to paſs that theſe fell upon Job's eſtate, and took it away, and upon that day too, in this nick of time?

2 Sam. 14. 19.

As when the Widow of Tekoah had told a fair tale to David, about the bringing back of Abſolom, the King asked her, Is not the hand of Joab with thee in all this? So when you ſee ſuch men, Sabeans and Caldeans falling upon the eſtate of Job, you may demand, Is not the hand of Satan in all this? Yes no doubt. Theſe Sabeans fall upon Job's eſtate, but Satan firſt fell upon the Sabeans, and by ſtrong temptations provoked them to do this ſervice.

But how could he prevail upon the Sabeans, that they ſhould come and do his buſineſs now at this time?

2 Tim. 2. 26.

The Apoſtle telleth us, that wicked men are led captive by Satan at his will. Satan doth lead men captive at his will, while they are, as they conceive, conquerors, riding in triumph, doing their own will. Theſe Sabeans came to execute their own deſigns, but Satan had a deſign upon them, he brought them thus to ſpoil the eſtate of Job.

But what could Satan do? How could Satan prevail with theſe? Can he force men to be his Inſtruments, to execute his deſigns upon the people of God? Or hath he Sabeans and Caldeans, Nations and People at his beck, or under his command?

Eph. 2.

No, Satan cannot force or compel them againſt their wills; but as that Scripture ſaith, he leads them captive at his will; and as another Scripture, he is a Prince of the power of the ayr, and he works in the children of diſobedience; yea, he works like a Prince, mightily and powerfully in the children of diſobedience. Though he cannot conſtrain them, yet he can work mightily in them to effect what he hath to do.

But how doth he bring them about thus readily and ſuddenly to act what he projects?

Thus; Firſt, He finds out the temper and diſpoſition of the perſons: That Satan can do; he is a great Naturaliſt, and hath a great deal of help to his skill, long experience; by both, he can go very far in diſcovering the diſpoſitions of men, which way their ſpirits tend; and he found out, that theſe Sabeans were a people given to robbery and ſpoil, and ſo fit miniſters for him to work by in his deſign of ſpoiling the eſtate of Job. Secondly, When he hath found out the natural temper or ſtate of a mans heart, he can lay a bait of temptation ſutable to that inclination and deſire: finding out a people given to ſpoil, he preſently ſets before them rich ſpoils; theſe are a taking object: See, yonder is a brave prize for you, yonder is a rich man, his eſtate will be good plunder, yonder are Oxen and Aſſes ſtore, there's good booty to be had. Thus finding out their diſpoſition, he preſents or holds up an object to them, which hits it fully. Thirdly, Satan deals with man to draw him to his purpoſe a degree further, ſc. by injecting and caſting into the mind the motion to do this: He not only preſents ſuch and ſuch a thing, ſuch and ſuch an opportunity, but he caſts in and injects the motion. As it is ſaid of Judas, that the Devil put it into his heart to betray Chriſt. The Devil, being a Spirit, hath acceſs to our ſpirits, and can convey himſelf into them, and inſtill his ſuggeſtions. As the Lord Chriſt did breath upon his Diſciples, and ſo they received the holy Ghoſt, and were filled with the Spirit; ſo Satan breaths filthy ſuggeſtions into the ſpirits of men, and fills them with all manner of wickedneſs, malice, unrighteouſneſs; he fills them with the ſpirit of Hell: Why hath Satan filled thy heart? ſaith Peter to Ananias. Satan had filled his heart to lie to the Holy Ghoſt. Thus he inſtilled theſe thoughts of gain by robbery and murder, into the Sabeans and Caldeans, and filled their hearts brim full: Then they reſolve to act it with the hand, and ſo they become his inſtruments. Laſtly, Satan can do ſomewhat more then inject and ſuggeſt ſuch thoughts, he can mightily irritate and provoke, and ſtir up the heart to be willing to give entertainment to ſuch a motion. He not only barely preſents his temptation, but vehemently backs it, and will give no reſt to a man, till he yields it: As it is ſaid of his tempting David, that Satan ſtood up and provoked David to number the people; he did not only inject ſuch a thought into David, but he provoked him; he never let him alone, but followed him, ſolicited him to it. This Satan can do; and yet he cannot preſs men to take up Arms for his deſigns; all thoſe that fight under Satans Colours, are Voluntiers; he never conſtrains any, neither can he; the will is never forced by him, neither can it be. Satan uſes no compulſion beyond a moral perſwaſion well ſet on; he can but vex us (as the Midianites did Iſrael) with his wiles; He is an Achitophel, not an Alexander; a Machiavil, not a Cæſar.

Joh. 13. 2.

Acts 5. 3.

2 Chr. 21. 1

This is the manner of Satans working in the children of diſobedience. All theſe things he can do; yet I believe he is not alwayes put to do all theſe upon every one over whom he prevailes; ſome come to this work on eaſier terms then others: He needs not provoke and ſolicit them, a ſuggeſtion wins them, the very ſight of an object overcomes them: yea, ſome ſtand ready offering their ſervice unto Satan, and ſelling themſelves to work any wickedneſs he will employ them in. I have ſhewed you the moſt that Satan can do; I conceive he had not much to do with theſe Sabeans, to invite them to this war: That which is in motion, is eaſily moved: And as we ſay, He muſt needs run whom the Devil drives; ſo the Devil needs not drive them, who are running of themſelves.

It being opened, what theſe Sabeans were, and how they came into the ſervice of Satan, what made them take up Arms, as it were, in his cauſe; we may obſerve from hence, > Firſt, That wicked and ungodly men, while they ſatisfie their own luſts, are but doing the work of Satan, and executing his deſigns.

Theſe Sabeans, though they did not think it, yet they came upon Satans errand: So God, when he doth juſtly uſe wicked men to puniſh or correct his people, they do their own will, and they have their own way; but God hath his way too, he over-rules them to effect his buſineſs at that time: As it is ſaid of the King of Aſſyria, O Aſſyrian, the rod of mine Anger, I will ſend him againſt an hypocritical Nation, and againſt the people of my wrath will I give him charge; howbeit, he meaneth not ſo, neither doth his heart think ſo, Iſa. 10. He hath purpoſes of his own. So they that are agitated by Satan, and provoked by him, they think not ſo; they think not they are doing the will and work, the dirty drudgery of Satan; but the truth is, they do nothing elſe all the while. You are of your Father the Devil, and his luſts will you do; ſaith Chriſt to the Jews: while they do their own, they fulfil the luſts and deſigns of Satan. As it is ſaid in the Revelation, The Devil Rev. 2. 10. ſhall caſt ſome of you into priſon; it was not the Devil in perſon, it was the Devil in his ſeconds or ſervants; and theſe men little thought that they did the Devils ſervice at that time: If one ſhould have come and told them, you are now doing the Devils work, and undertaking a piece of ſervice for him, you are ſo many inſtruments and agents for Hell; they would not have believed it: but the truth is, it was the Devils work, and they did it ſo deviliſhly, that, from both, it is ſaid the Devil did it; he caſt ſome of them into priſon. It is a fearful thing to perſecute or oppreſs the people of God; ſuch, in ſerving their own luſts, are indeed the right hand of Satan, the Devils hirelings.

Secondly, Foraſmuch as Satan will have Sabeans and Caldeans to afflict Job's eſtate (he could have deſtroyed all himſelf if he pleaſed. Good Angels have mighty power, and ſo have wicked Angels too, if God will let them alone to put out their power; therefore they are called Principalities and Powers. Eph. 6. Satan had leave, he might have taken what courſe he would with the eſtate of Job; he doth not call in the Sabeans and the Caldeans to this work, becauſe he could not do it himſelf; no, it is becauſe he would work by others, he would have inſtruments.) Note hence,

That, Satan loveth to draw others to be partakers with him in his deſigns.

Though he can do his work alone, yet he will have man joyn with him in it, if he can: And in this he imitates God himſelf, who hath an almighty power, is able to do all things alone, if he pleaſe; yet uſually he calleth in inſtruments. He is able to convert alone by the motion of his Spirit; but he will have Preachers to convert by the Miniſtry of the Word. He is able to protect his people from their enemies, by his own ſtrength; yet he will have Armies muſtered, to do it by. And why doth God chooſe to work thus? There is a double good in it. He doth it, that he may do good two wayes at once. Firſt, His creature is ſaved and relieved; that is one good. Secondly, Men who are employed as inſtruments, are honoured and reſpected; they having given help to God in ſuch a cauſe, (ſo he interprets it, a coming forth to help the Lord againſt the mighty) God gives them honour in the eyes of all his ſervants; there is another good. So Satan, while he ſetteth men awork, Sabeans, Caldeans, and others, to do miſchief, he doth a double miſchief at once; he doth miſchief to Job, or others whom he afflicts; and he doth miſchief to his inſtruments; he makes theſe ſin, he makes others ſuffer: If he carry on the work alone, they ſuffer, but others do not partake in the guilt of the ſin; but now when he uſeth inſtruments to effect his wicked deſigns, he makes one miſerable, and the other wicked. This is one of Satans methods, he will work by means, and do his buſineſs by the hands of men, that he may at once do a double miſchief.

Thirdly, In that theſe Sabeans and Caldeans, are obſerved in Hiſtories to be a people given much to robberies and ſpoil, and theſe are the men whom Satan picks out for this buſineſs; Obſerve,

That, Satan ſuiteth his temptations to mans natural temper and inclination.

Whenſoever he tempteth, he takes this advantage, if he can diſcover or obtain it. He is wiſer then to ſet ſail againſt wind and tide, to row againſt the ſtream; therefore he labours all he can, to find which way the ſtream of every mans affections runs; and to what ſins his Relations, his Calling, or his Opportunities lay him moſt open and obnoxious; accordingly he layes his Snares, and ſpreads his Net. When he meets with a proud man, him he tempteth with high thoughts: When he meeteth with a covetous man, him he tempteth to the love of the world; he layes a golden bait of profit before his eyes: The adulterous, he leads to the Harlots houſe. For howſoever it be true, that every man hath in him a principle ſuting to every ſin, yet it is a truth too, that every man is not equally active for, or diſpoſed unto every ſin; and every man hath not every particular ſin predominant in him: now Satan, when he ſeeth what is predominant in any man, then he faſhioneth and frameth a temptation ſutable: He perceived theſe Sabeans were given to rob and ſpoil, and he ſheweth them a deſirable booty.

And have ſlain thy ſervants with the edge of the ſword.

This a further aggravation of the affliction; they did not only fall upon Job's Cattel, and took them away; but they ſlew his Servants. A mans ſervants are nearer to him then his Cattel, then his Oxen and his Aſſes; ſervants are next unto our Children. So that this was a heightning of Job's ſorrow, not only are your Cattel gone, but your Servants are ſlain; and they are ſlain (ſaith he) with the edge of the ſword: the word in the Hebrew is, they are ſlain with the mouth of the ſword.

We read in Scripture ſometimes of the face of the ſword, and ſometimes of the mouth of the ſword; as, Iſa. 31. 8. where we tranſlate, they ſhall flee from the ſword, the Hebrew is, they ſhall flee from the face of the ſword. The like Text you have, Jer. 25. 27. Now when the Scripture ſpeaks of the face of the ſword, it is meant of war coming, or war preparing and approaching. But the mouth of the ſword is war inflicted, war acted. This phraſe, the mouth of the ſword, is uſed to ſhew, that the ſword is a great devourer, Deut. 32. 42. I will make mine arrows drunk with blood, and my ſword ſhall devour fleſh. War hath a terrible face, it hath a wide mouth, and ſharp teeth; They have ſlain thy ſervants with the edge of the ſword; the mouth of the ſword hath devoured them.

At this day we have great cauſe to have our hearts deeply affected with this thing. There hath been (as it were) the face of the ſword a great while looking towards us, but now there is the very mouth of the ſword gaping at us; yea, tearing, gnawing, and devouring the fleſh and bones of thouſands amongſt us. Where the ſword comes, it will devour: war is a great judgment, one of Gods ſore judgments, the ſoreſt of all Gods outward judgments. David chooſeth the Peſtilence rather then the ſword; the Peſtilence is a devourer, but the ſword is a greater devourer. And though the Prophet Jeremiah, in his Lamentations, makes Famine a ſorer judgment then the Sword (Chap. 4. 9.) They that be ſlain with the ſword are better then they that be ſlain with hunger. Yet the ſword is in this worſe then famine, becauſe uſually it is the cauſe of famine. The ſword cuts off food, the ſupport of mans life, as well as the life of man. While the ſword is making it ſelf fat, it hath famine in the belly of it.

We need not go to Jeremiah or Joſephus for the proof of this in Jeruſalems Babylonian or Roman deſolations; ſad Germany, bleeding Ireland, are near woful witneſſes and ſpectacles of it at this day. The Sword hath opened a way for Famine to enter both; and which of the two hath eaten moſt fleſh, is hard to determine. Let us cry earneſtly to God, that the mouth of the Sword may be ſtopped, or continued open, only to devour thoſe, who would devour the man who is more righteous then they: Let us pray that blood may be ſpared, or none but corrupt blood ſpilt. Spare thy people, O Lord: It is (I confeſs) one of the ſaddeſt prognoſticks, in my obſervation, againſt this Nation, that God hitherto hath made little difference. Our Sword hath not yet been taught from Heaven to diſtinguiſh of men. Precious blood hath been drawn, and men, whoſe very hairs were all numbred (that is, highly prized) by God, have been numbred among the ſlain. It muſt ſatiſfie us, that the will of God is ſo. The anſwer which David gave Joab's Meſſenger, is good ſetling counſel now (2 Sam. 11. 25.) Let not this thing diſpleaſe thee; (He ſpeaks this after the fall of noble Uriah) for the ſword (not by accident, but decree; not caſually, but providentially) devoureth ſo and ſuch (as the Hebrew elegance hath it) one as well as another; ſo we tranſlate. It is mercy, we are not all conſumed by this eater; as in the Text ye may read all the ſervants of Job were, excepting one, only one got out of the mouth of the ſword; it eat up all ſaving one, and he was ſaved, that by the report of the deſtructive ſword, he might deſtroy Job himſelf.

And I only am eſcaped to tell thee.

רק אני לבדי

The word in the Original, is double; tantum ego, ſolus ego, only I; I alone am eſcaped: as if the man ſhould have ſaid, between horror and amazement, much ado I had to get away without loſing ſomewhat of my ſelf; I only ſingle, gle, ſingle I got away and eſcaped. The ſword was very hungry, when but one man of all Job's ſervants eſcaped the teeth of it.

But how cometh it to paſs that this one man eſcaped?

Certainly, as I ſaid before, the hand of Satan was in this alſo: For howſoever the Lord ordered and diſpoſed all theſe things, yet he let Satan work in his circle, in his compaſs, to contrive things as he pleaſed himſelf, the moſt aptly he could imagine, to afflict and trouble Job; therefore there is ſomewhat in it, no good-will (I believe) to Job, that this one man had the favour of quarter or mercy of an eſcape.

It was not out of any compaſſionate reſpect to Job, that one of his ſervants comes home alive. It was rather to increaſe the affliction of Job, and for the perfecting of his ſorrows; this man was not ſlain, that Job may be more deeply wounded. There are two Reaſons, which may be aſſigned, why one man eſcaped out of every one of theſe calamities.

Firſt, That the report of this affliction might come ſuddenly to him. A man that eſcapes out of ſuch a danger, needs no driving; his fear will add wings to his feet, he will run home amain.

Secondly, For the certainty of it. Reports fly abroad, they may be falſe; Fama mendax, Fame is a liar. Job might have had ſuch reports from his neighbours in the Countrey, all your Cattel are ſeized upon, and all your ſervants are ſlain; and Job might ſlight it, and ſay, This might be but a rumour, I give no credit to it; therefore Satan lets one of his own ſervants come frighted home with the news, one that was there, one that was an eye-witneſs, one that Job knew, one that had no reaſon, much leſs the boldneſs to bring falſe tales to him; that ſo the report coming ſpeedily and certainly, his heart might be ſmitten preſently. It is ſome abatement of an evil, to have but a colour to doubt of it. If we can but lay hold of any circumſtance which renders an evil report improbable, and may for a while ſtrengthen our unbelief of it, we may in that interim get more ſtrength of Faith to bear it, when we ſee it is certain and unqueſtionable. There was no mercy in ſuch a ſparing.

And we may obſerve out of it, that which Solomon ſpeaks of the mercies of the wicked is moſt true of Satans, The very tender mercies of Satan are cruel, the beſt of his mercies, his ſparings are woundings; he never ſpareth but with an intent to do further hurt. Jobs afflictions had not gone ſo deep, if this man had not been left to bring the meſſage.

It followeth,

Verſ. 16. While he was yet ſpeaking there came alſo another and ſaid, the fire of God is fallen from Heaven, and hath burnt up the ſheep, and the ſervants, and conſumed them, and I only am eſcaped alone to tell thee.

In this verſe we have the ſecond charge which this great enemy gives Job, While he was yet ſpeaking there came alſo another. Afflictions ſeldom go alone; And therefore when one affliction is ended, look another ſhould begin, and labour to prepare for it. Job having received this meſſage of the loſs of his cattel and death of his ſervants, while the meſſenger was yet ſpeaking, a ſecond comes with a ſadder ſtory then that. Satan would not give him the leaſt breathing or intermiſſion; while he was yet ſpeaking; one evil treads upon the heel of another; as wave overtakes wave in the ſea; ſo it was here, here was wave after wave, to over-whelm his ſpirit. And as it is ſaid in the Revelation, concerning him that ſate on the white-horſe, that he rid out conquering and to conquer, there was no intermiſſion of his victories; ſo Satan goeth forth afflicting and to afflict, vexing and to vex, tempting and to tempt, he will never give over. While he was yet ſpeaking, there came alſo another, and ſaid, the fire of God is fallen upon thy ſheep.

The fire of God.

Why is it here called the fire of God? Some conceive it is called the fire of God, becauſe ſent from God: that is aſcribed to God, which comes from God, as that Gen. 19. 24. where it is ſaid, that the Lord did rain fire and brimſtone upon Sodom out of Heaven from the Lord: or Jehovah did rain from Jehovah fire upon Sodom to conſume it: And Levit. 10. 2. it is ſaid, That a fire went out from the Lord and conſumed Nadab and Abihu. Elijah procures fire from Heaven to conſume the Captains that came from the King to take him, 2 King. 1. 10, 12. The Pſalmiſt ſpeaking of the plagues of Egypt (Pſal. 105. 32.) ſaith that the Lord ſent flames of fire in the land; So ſome expound that place, Pſal. 104. 3. He maketh his Angels ſpirits, and his Miniſters a flame of fire, that is, he uſeth flames of fire for his Miniſters, for his meſſengers. God ſometime ſends a fire on his errands, though we know that place is applyed to the Angels by the Apoſtle, Heb. 1. 7.

But here rather it is called the fire of God in another regard; for howſoever this fire was ſent of God, as all afflictions are; yet becauſe the immediate kindler of it was Satan, he had the power put into his hand; therefore this was not a fire (in that ſenſe as thoſe other fires are ſaid to be) ſent from God: But it may be called (as uſually in Scripture) the fire of God, becauſe of the ſtrangeneſs of the fire, it was a wonderful, an extraordinary fire; and ſo it is very ordinary in the Hebrew to uſe the name of God, El, Elohim or Jehovah, as an Epithite, as an additional word to heighten the excellence or rareneſs of things. We find that phraſe often, A man of God. The Hebrews ſay, to call one a man of God, is as much as to ſay, he is an extraordinary man, a man of an excellent ſpirit, a Prophet, a holy man: In that Pſalm where the Church is ſhadowed under the ſimilitude of a Vine, it is ſaid, She did ſend forth her branches like the goodly Cedars: So we tranſlate it; the Original word is, She ſent forth her branches as the Cedars of God, that is, excellent Cedars, tall and extraordinary Cedars. In Pſal. 36. 6. comparing the love of God to great Mountains, Thy loving kindneſs is as the great mountains, the word is, like the mountains of God. Pſal. 65. 9. Thou refreſheſt it with the river of God, that is, with an excellent River. Cant. 8. 6. ſpeaking of love and jealouſie, Love is ſtrong as death, jealouſie is cruel as the grave, the coals thereof are coals of fire, which hath a moſt vehement flame; the word in the Original is a flame of God, the coals thereof are coals of fire, the flame of God, that is, as we tranſlate it, a vehement flame. So here the fire of God, that is, a ſtrange fire, an unheard of, an unuſual fire, a vehement fire, ſuch a fire as had not been ſeen nor obſerved before. Therefore the Hebrews call extraordinary things the things of God; becauſe indeed all the wonders and excellencies, all the glory and goodneſs that is in creatures, is but a footſtep, a print or drop of that excellency and glory and power that is in God; therefore every thing that is moſt excellent, is aſcribed unto God. It is moſt equal that his name ſhould be ſtampt upon all excellent things in the creature, who is the cauſe of all creature-excellence. This fire being a ſtrange and extraordinary fire, is ſaid to be the fire of God.

Pſ. 180. 10.

This fire of God is conceived to have been ſome terrible flaſh of Lightning, which in a moment deſtroyed and conſumed the ſheep and ſhepherds. And this is more probable, becauſe it is ſaid to fall down from Heaven, that is, out of the Air; for ſo often in Scripture, Heaven is put for the Air, the middle region of the Air, where Satan hath great power; therefore he is called the Prince of the Air; and he can do mighty things, command much in the Magazine of Heaven, where that dreadful Artillery, which makes men tremble, thoſe fiery Meteors, Thunder and Lightning, are lodged and ſtored up. Satan let looſe by God, can do wonders in the Air: He can raiſe ſtorms, he can diſcharge the great Ordnance of Heaven, Thunder and Lightning, and by his Art, he can make them more terrible and dreadful then they are in nature. If the ſkill and art of man can heighten natural things, then much more the ſkill of Satan. I doubt not, but many fearful impreſſions are made in the Air by Devils, carrying Nature (by Gods permiſſion) far above its own courſe; and theſe are properly Marvels or Wonders (ſuch as the Magicians wrought in Egypt, by the help of Satan) for Miracles are quite out of the Devils Sphear: But he can do wonders; and ſuch was this fire falling from Heaven, &c. A Marvel, a Wonder, is Nature mightily improved: a Miracle is Nature totally croſſed, if not contradicted. Obſerve this for the nature of that fire; the effect of it follows in the next words.

Fulgur maximum. Jun.

It hath burnt up the ſheep and the ſervants, and conſumed them.

The word in the Original is, It did burn them and eat them up. Fire is a devouring Element. Devouring Fire, as before a devouring Sword, theſe were devouring judgements upon Job. Yet it doth not neceſſarily infer that the ſheep were all burnt to aſhes; but that the ſheep were all killed by that flame of lightening that came from Heaven; for it is ſaid of Nadab and Abihu (of which we ſpake before) that a fire went out from God, and did conſume them; it is the ſame Original word that is here in the Text, A fire went out from God, and did eat them up, yet we know their bodies were not conſumed, for they were carried out to their burial, and their garments were upon them. So that this conſuming doth not note the burning of things to aſhes, but a ſtriking of them to death; it is a devouring fire, becauſe it is a deſtroying fire, it takes away life: and thus lightenings kill rather by peircing and penetrating, then by conſuming and devouring.

But now here it will be queſtioned for the further opening of this, why Satan chooſes thus to conſume the Sheep with fire? why doth he not rather uſe ſpoylers to take them away? He could doubtleſs have got the Sabeans to have fetched away the flocks of Sheep, as well as the droves of greater Cattle; he could have procured them eaſily; why then doth he cauſe fire from Heaven to come down, the fire of God to conſume them?

I anſwer, his reaſon for this was to put the greater ſting into the affliction. He would not have the Sheep taken away after the ſame manner that the Oxen and Camels were, that he might aggravate Jobs trouble, and provoke him if he could to be paſſionate againſt God, yea and (for that was his great deſign) to blaſpheme God; therefore he procures fire from Heaven to fall upon the Sheep, thereby to beget an opinion in Job that God was now become his enemy as well as man. When we ſuffer from man, then the afflicted ſoul flies to God, makes his complaint and moan to him, as doubtleſs Job did when he heard of thoſe cruel Sabeans, and what they had done; but leſt Job ſhould reſort in his thoughts to Heaven, and comfort himſelf in God again, the next meſſenger telleth him that God is his enemy too, that the fire of God is fallen upon the Sheep; an extraordinary fire; as if he ſhould ſay, God fighteth againſt thee as well as the Sabeans; Alas now to whom ſhould Job make 1Sam. 2.25 his moan! That ſpeech of Eli, concerning ſin may well be applied to ſuffering, If one man ſin againſt another, the Judge ſhall judge him: but if a man ſin againſt the Lord, who ſhall intreat for him? So if a man ſuffer from men, he may go unto God; But if God himſelf do appear to be an enemy and to fight againſt us, to whom ſhall we go? Indeed Job knew how to go to God, though he did appear as an enemy; but that is the greateſt ſtraight, and to do thus notes the greateſt ſpiritual both skill and ſtrength. Hence obſerve,

That Satans great deſign againſt the people of God or any ſervant of God, is to provoke them to ill thoughts of God;

To perſwade them that God is their enemy, to bring the love and good will of God into ſuſpition. Therefore he cauſeth this great fire, and (it is like) formed the ſervants language in that cutting phraſe, The fire of God is fallen upon the Sheep. Thou canſt not put this off, as thou mighteſt do the other, and ſay, this is but the malice or the covetouſneſs of the Sabeans, that rob'd me of my goods, and ſlew my ſervants; No, thou ſhalt ſee now that God himſelf is angry, Heaven frowns upon thee, the fire of God from Heaven conſumes thee. Turn over the Records of all Antiquity, and ſee whether God ever dealt thus with any, but thoſe curſed Sodomites upon whom God rained fire from Heaven: Thou who comeſt ſo near them in the puniſhment, haſt reaſon to judge thy ſelf not far behind them in ſin.

Secondly obſerve, Thoſe afflictions are moſt grievous wherein God appears to be againſt us.

The malice of Devils and the rage of men may be endured; but who can ſtand before God, when he is angry? If God doth but withdraw his comforts, the ſoul ſinkes under ſmalleſt tryals; how then can it ſtand if God ſhould reveal his wrath againſt us, when we are in great trials?

It may here be queſtioned, why the Sheep were conſumed with fire, rather then any other of his Cattel, rather then any other of his ſubſtance.

There are two things in that. Firſt, The Sheep were uſed in Sacrifice. When the dayes of their feaſting were ended, Job offered Sacrifice, and the Sheep chiefly were offered in Sacrifice. Now Satan by conſuming the Sheep hoped to faſten this upon Job, if poſſibly he could, that God was angry with his very Sacrifices, God was angry with his ſervices. As if he ſhould ſay, Doeſt thou think that the offering up of thy Sheep in Sacrifice hath been pleaſing to God? Certainly if the fire of thoſe Sacrifices had delighted God, if he had ſmelt a ſavour of reſt in them (as he is ſaid to have done, when Noah offered Sacrifice after the Flood, Gen. 8. 21.) he would never have ſent a fire from Heaven to conſume them. That is conceived by Expoſitors to be an eſpecial reaſon why the Sheep were conſumed, namely to caſt Job upon this apprehenſion, that his very Sacrifices were rejected of God; that he might conclude of himſelf (as Solomon ſaith of the wicked) that his Sacrifices were an Prov. 15.8. abomination unto the Lord; and to ſhew that God would now have no more of his Sacrifices, God himſelf made one Sacrifice of them all. But Origen brings in Job excellently retorting this ſuggeſtion upon Satan: I ſacrificed now one, and then another of my Sheep to God; but now bleſſed be God, who hath accepted all my flock as one burnt-offering.

Againe, the Sheep were conſumed by fire, as to make Job conceive that his former ſervices were rejected, ſo to take him off and diſcourage him from offering any more ſuch ſervices; to make him deſpair of ever thriving in the way of thoſe duties: and conclude ſurely God is ſo angry now, that all my ſervices, all my ſacrifices will never appeaſe him, nor profit me: therefore I were as good lay by theſe duties as perform them, when I get no good. This is a dangerous temptation; if Satan by ſuch prejudices againſt holy duties, can cauſe us to lay them by, the day is won: for then the ſoul is left naked and unarm'd. We have not then ſo much as a bulruſh in our hands to ſmite him, or a paper breſt-plate to ſecure our ſelves. If we give over praying and ſeeking, we have no ground to expect Chriſt either aſſiſting or protecting us. That for the ſecond affliction.

Verſ. 17. While he was yet ſpeaking, there came alſo another, and ſaid, the Caldeans made out three Bands, and fell upon the Camels, and have carried them away, yea, and ſlain the ſervants with the edge of the Sword, and I only am eſcaped alone, to tell thee.

This is the third affliction, the taking away of the Camels, the deſtroying of the ſervants that waited upon them. There is not much to ſtay upon in this, having before opened moſt of the paſſages of it in the 15. verſe.

While he was yet ſpeaking, there came alſo another, and ſaid, the Caldeans made out three Bands.] Caldeans ſometime note a condition or a rank of men, ſuch as were Diviners, Southſayers and Aſtrologers, theſe are in Scripture called Caldeans. As the Indians called ſuch skilful perſons Gymnoſophiſts, and the Perſians called them their Magi, and the Romans called them Augures, ſo the Aſſyrians called them Caldeans. When Nebuchadnezzar dreamed a dream, it is ſaid, that he ſent for the Diviners and the Aſtrologers, and the Caldeans; Dan. 2. 3. and afterward the Caldeans take up all, he ſaid to the Caldeans, and the Caldeans ſaid to the King: the Caldeans, were put for all thoſe that undertook the Art of divining and interpreting dreames. But here by the Caldeans, are to be underſtood, not a condition of men, but a Nation of men, or the people inhabiting Chaldea: frequently ſpoken of by the Prophets, and deſcribed to the life by the Prophet Habakkuk, Chap. 1. Hab. 1. 6,7. where the Lord threatned to ſend the Caldeans againſt his people, and then deſcribes them, That haſty and bitter Nation, their Horſes are ſwifter then the Leopard, and more ravening then the evening Wolves: Such a kind of people they were who were ſtirred up by Satan to take away the Camels of Job.

Theſe are ſaid to make out three Bands to ſpoyl. They were a people like the Sabeans, delighting in war and robbery; ſo much the Etymologie of their Name Chaſdim (which is the word in the Original) implieth, being derived from Sadad, which ſignifieth to rob and ſpoyle. Theſe were a wicked generation, yet theſe prevail over the eſtate of Job. Victory doth not always attend a juſt cauſe. The way of the wicked often proſpers, and the way of theſe wicked Caldeans proſpered ſo often, that the Prophet Habakkuk complains to God as one ſcandaliz'd at it: Thou art of purer eyes then to behold evil, and canſt not look on on iniquity; wherefore lookeſt thou upon them that deal treacherouſly, and holdeſt thy tongue, when the wicked devoureth the man that is more righteous then he? If ever we ſhould be brought upon a like caſe, to argue it thus with God, or (as Jeremy did, chap. 12. 1.) to plead with God about his judgments, let us remember to eſtabliſh our hearts (before we open our mouthes) with the Prophet Jeremies concluſion in that place, Righteous art thou O Lord, though the wicked devour the man that is more righteous then he. It is very rare that God makes one good man his rod to ſcourge another: he uſually makes the worſt of men his rod, his ſtaffe, his ſword, to inflict either trials or judgments upon his people. The durty Scullion ſcowres the Silver veſſel, and makes it both clean and bright for his maſters uſe.

VERS. 18, 19.

While he was yet ſpeaking, there came alſo another and ſaid, thy Sons and thy Daughters were eating and drinking Wine in their eldeſt Brothers houſe.

And behold there came a great wind from the Wilderneſs, and ſmote the four corners of the houſe, and it fell upon the young men, and they are dead; and I only am eſcaped alone to tell thée.

THis was, as the fourth and laſt, ſo the greateſt of all Satans aſſaults, the moſt fierce and terrible charge that Job had all the day, and Satan reſerves this untill the evening, till Job was ſpent and ſpiritleſs, as he hoped. I ſhall note this in general from it.

That Satan uſually keeps his greateſt ſtrength and moſt violent temptations unto the laſt.

When he thinks we are at the weakeſt, then he cometh with the ſtrongeſt aſſaults. If Satan had ſent Job word of the death of his Children firſt, all the reſt would have been as nothing to him: he would not have regarded the loſs of his Cattel, when he heard that all his Children were cruſhed to death by the fall of the Houſe. As ſome one great evil falling upon us, takes the heart off from having any ſenſe or joy in a leſſer good; ſo one great evil ſwallows up the ſenſe and feeling of a leſſer evil: that great evil which fell upon the Wife of Phineas, when ſhe heard that the Ark of God was taken, afflicted her ſo extreamly, that ſhe could not at all rejoyce in the birth of her ſon, ſhe had no ſenſe of that. Here was therefore the cunning of Satan, leſt Job ſhould have loſt the ſmart of the leſſer afflictions, leaſt they ſhould have been all ſwallowed up in the greater, he brings them out in order, the leaſt firſt, the greateſt is reſerved for the laſt. We obſerve in War, that when once the great Ordnance are diſcharged, the Souldiers are not afraid of the Musket: ſo when a great battery is made by ſome thundring terrible judgment upon the Soul, or upon the Body, or Eſtate of any man; the noyſe and fears of leſſer evils are drown'd and abated. Therefore Satan keeps his greateſt ſhot to the laſt, that the ſmall might be heard and felt, and that the laſt coming in greater ſtrength might find the leaſt ſtrength to reſiſt it.

And that this was a greater affliction then any of, or then all the former, is ſo clear that I ſhall not need to ſtay long in the confirming of it; only to quicken the point a little, take notice of the greatneſs of it in five reſpects.

Firſt, It appeareth without controverſie to be the greateſt of all, becauſe it was upon his Children: a mans Children are more then all that he hath in the world: a mans Children are himſelf, every child is the Father multiplied; a Son is the Fathers bowels: and therefore when Paul wrote to Philemon concerning Oneſimus, whom (ſaith he) I have begotten in my bonds; (ſc. to the faith of Chriſt) Receive him who is mine own bowels: A ſpiritual Son is the very bowels of a Miniſter; he doth but allude to a natural Son, a Son is the very bowels of the Father. This affliction reached unto the very bowels of Job himſelf; Satan had no leave to afflict the body of Job, and yet you ſee he afflicts him in his very bowels.

Phil. v. 12.

Secondly, The greatneſs of it is ſeen in this, his Children were all taken away. To looſe all our children, is as grievous as to looſe an only Child: Now that is made a cauſe of the higheſt ſorrows, Zach. 12. 10. They ſhall mourn for him, as one that mourneth for an only Son: that is, they ſhall mourn moſt bitterly. Now as the meaſure of mercies may be taken by the comforts which they produce; ſo we may take the meaſure of an affliction by the ſorrow which it produceth, and that is the greateſt affliction which cauſeth the greateſt ſorrow.

Thirdly, It was a further greatning of the affliction, that they were all taken away ſuddenly. Had death ſent them a ſummons, by its uſual meſſenger ſickneſs, but a day before to prepare themſelves, it had much ſweetned the bitterneſs of this cup; but to hear they were dead before he knew they were ſick, yea when he thought they were merry and rejoycing, how ſad was this?

Fourthly, That they died a violent death, by a mighty wind caſting the houſe down upon them. Had they died in their beds (though ſuddenly) it had been ſome eaſe to the Fathers heart: violent death had an impreſſion of wrath upon it. And men can hardly judge well of thoſe, who fall by ſuch judgments. Suſpition will ariſe, if cenſure paſs not, from better men then Barbarians, if they ſee a Viper on the hand of a Paul, Act. 28. It is more then probable from our Saviours queſtion, that thoſe eighteen upon whom the Tower of Shiloe fell, and ſlew them, were commonly ſuppoſed greater ſinners, or ſinners, above all men that dwelt in Hieruſalem, Luk. 13. 4.

Fifthly, They were all taken away when they were feaſting; and this did exceedingly aggravate the affliction upon Job, that his Children were all deſtroyed feaſting; for you know what the thoughts of Job were concerning his Children at their feaſting; after they had done, he offered burnt-offerings according to the number of them all, for he ſaid, It may be my Sons have ſinned and curſed God in their hearts. Now at this time, when Satan knew that Job was moſt ſolicitous leſt his Children ſhould ſin, at that time doth he deſtroy them; that ſo their Father might be afflicted with the thought, that his Children died unreconciled to God, that they died with ſin upon them unrepented of: That they died a double death, death at once ſiezing upon both ſoul and body. This then was a further degree of Satans malice, to wound, vex and grieve the ſpirit of Job unto the utmoſt. How ſadly and paſſionately did David lament Abſaloms death? Some conceive that this was the head of the Arrow that pierced him, becauſe he feared his Son died in a ſinful condition, he was ſuddenly taken away in his rebellion, unreconciled either to God or man. Such a thought might fall upon Job's heart; my Children are ſuddenly dead, and dead feaſting, it may be they forgot God, it is poſſible they ſinned in feaſting, and curſed God in their hearts: Alas my Children died before they could ſo much as think of death: I fear they are gone rejoycing to Hell, where they ſhall weep for evermore. Doubtleſs Satan did or might faſten ſuch a temptation upon his heart who was ſo tender of his Childrens ſouls, and ſo fearful of their ſinning in feaſting. So then it is clear from all theſe particular conſiderations, that this was the greateſt affliction.

Be prepared then, not only to receive another affliction, but to receive a greater affliction, and have thoughts of receiving the greateſt affliction at the laſt. Satan will come with his ſtrongeſt aſſaults when thou art weakeſt. At the time of death when he ſeeth he can do no more, but that he muſt then do it, or never do it, then thou ſhalt be ſure to have the ſtrongeſt temptations.

It ſhould therefore ſtir up the people of God, ſtill to look for more and more ſtrength to bear afflictions and tentations, and to beg from Chriſt the greateſt ſtrength at laſt, becauſe they may juſtly fear the greateſt temptations at laſt. If as Satan doth greaten his temptations, Chriſt doth greaten his aſſiſtance, we ſhall be able to bear them, and be more then conquerers over them.

So much of this fourth charge in the general; I ſhall now open the words more particularly (for thoſe in the 18. verſe I ſhall not need to ſay any thing of them, they have been handled before at the 13. verſe, which runs thus; And there was a day when his Sons and his Daughters were eating and drinking wine in their Eldeſt Brothers houſe:) The 19. verſe deſcribes the manner of this trial; And behold there came a great wind from the Wilderneſs, &c.

And behold.] Ecce, or behold, in Scripture notes more then ordinary matter following. Firſt, Great things call for attention. Secondly, That which is ſudden and unexpected, calls us to behold it. Thirdly, Rare things, things

Ecce adverbium demonſtrandi uſurpatur in rebus notabilibus.

ſeldom ſeen, invite all to ſee and wonder at them. Here is matter of admiration: what God threatens in the Law, he ſeems to fulfil upon Job, I will make their Plagues wonderful. There is no Ecce prefixed to any of the former three afflictions; but this as being the moſt ſtrange and terrible, comes in with Ecce, And behold ———

Deut. 28. 59

There came a great Wind.] It was a Wind, and a great Wind that came. The Wind is elegantly ſaid to come (as the Sun) out of his chamber, and rejoycing as a ſtrong man to run a race, Pſal. 19. 5. Hence the word which the Latines uſe for the Wind, is derived from a word that ſignifies to come; becauſe the Wind comes with force and violence. The Wind (in the nature of it) is an exhalation ariſing from the Earth, drawn upwards by the power of the Sun and other Heavenly bodies: but meeting and conflicting a while with the cold of the middle region of the Air, is beaten back again; and being ſo light that naturally it cannot deſcend, and ſo reſiſted that it cannot peaceably aſcend, it takes a courſe between both, ſlanting with mighty violence through the Air. Thus Philoſophers teach. This Wind is ſaid to have been a great Wind: great in quantity, much Wind, a large Wind; great alſo in quality, a vehement, boiſtrous, angry Wind.

Ventus à violentia & vehementia nomen habet, quod veniat abundè, & magna vi irruat in unum aliquem locum. Magir. Phyſ.

Further, this Wind is deſcribed by the Coaſt or Quarter from which it breathed.

From the Wilderneſs.] Or as the Hebrew is, from beyond the Wilderneſs, from the other ſide of the Wilderneſs this Wind came.

מעבר המדבר A regione deſerti, vel à trans deſertum.

Winds are differenced by the quarters or points of the Heavens out of which they blow. This Wind is deſcribed by the place from whence it came, from the Coaſt out of which it was raiſed, it was from beyond the Wilderneſs.

There were many Wilderneſſes. Here Wilderneſs is ſet down indefinitely. There was the Wilderneſs of Maon, and the Wilderneſs of Ziph, and many other Wilderneſſes ſpoken of in Scripture. What Wilderneſs was this?

It is conceived, that this was either the Wilderneſs of Idumea, or Edom, ſpoken of 2 Kings 3. 8. or elſe it was Arabia the Deſart, which is by way of eminency called The Wilderneſs. It came from the Wilderneſs, that is, it came over that part which is called Arabia deſerta, or Arabia the wild.

When it is ſaid, this Wind came from the Wilderneſs, the Coaſt is cleared, but the cauſe and ſtirrer up of this Wind is concealed. A Wind came from the Wilderneſs; but how this Wind was raiſed, and this ſtorm was blown up, there is no mention. We muſt charge it on him who was the contriver and directer of all this miſchief; Satan, Prince of the Air, raiſed up this mighty Wind.

Winds are ſaid ſometimes to come from God; As Exod. 10. 13. The Lord brought an Eaſt-wind upon the Land of Egypt that it was covered with Locuſts, (one of the Plagues of Egypt.) And verſe 19. The Lord turned a mighty VVeſt-wind which took away the Locuſts. And Numb. 11. 31. There went forth a VVind from the Lord, and brought Quails from the Sea. Jonah 1. 4. The Lord ſent out a great VVind into the Sea. The Heathens (who divided the World among ſundry Gods) gave the Winds to Æolus, whom they ſuppoſed to have them all ſhut up and lockt cloſe in his lodge, till he gave them command to fly abroad. It is an argument of a divine power to rule the Winds. Who is this, ſay thoſe Sea-men, Math. 8. 27. that even the Winds and the Sea obey him! As God only cauſeth the Sun to ſhine, and the Rain to fall, ſo the Winds to blow. The Wind is Originally in the hand of God, He gathers the Wind in his fiſts (ſaith Agar of God,) and ſendeth it which way he pleaſeth. But the Winds were put for that preſent into the hand of Satan, and he had leave to raiſe a ſtorm for this ſpecial purpoſe. So then, there came a great Wind from beyond the Wilderneſs, that is, Satan ſtirred up a mighty Wind in thoſe parts and quarters, which came——

Prov. 30. 4.

And ſmote the four corners of the houſe, and it fell upon the Young men, and they are dead.] Here we ſee what was the work of this Wind. As it is deſcribed by the Region from whence the Wind came, ſo by the effects which it wrought being come; It ſmote the four corners of the houſe: The Hebrew word is the ſame uſed verſe 11. Touch all that he hath. According to Satans ſence, this Wind touched the four corners of the houſe. The corners of the houſe are the ſtrength of the houſe, and the four corners are all the ſtrength. Chriſt is called the corner ſtone, becauſe he is the ſtrength and binding of the Church, he holds all together. This wind ſmote the four corners at once. It may ſeem very ſtrange, that one Wind, a Wind deſcribed to come out of one quarter, a Southern wind, as this is conceived to have been, coming from the Wilderneſs, that this one Wind ſhould ſtrike all the four parts of the houſe together: muſt it not be a Wind from the four quarters of Heaven which ſtrikes the four corners of a houſe? I anſwer, this was an extraordinay Wind, there was a wonder carried on the wings of this Wind; therefore you have an Ecce of admiration, a Behold ſet in the beginning of this relation; This Wind did not work according to the ordinary rate of Winds. Or we may ſay, It was a Whirle-wind, that tempeſtuous Whirle-wind, which Philoſophers call Typhon; ſuch a Wind as whirles about in a circle, and ſo it might fetch in or aſſault all the parts and corners of the houſe with one blaſt. Further, We muſt take notice, that Satan was in this Wind: He acted and wrought mightily with it for the ſure and ſuddain effecting of this dreadful overthrow, the Devil ſpirited this Wind. The Wind (though, for the quickneſs and power of it, called a ſpirit) is a dull and weak thing compared to a ſpirit.

There came a great wind from the Wilderneſs, and ſmote the four corners of the houſe, and it fell upon the Young men, and they are dead.

But what became of his three Daughters? did they eſcape? They are not named, but they alſo were involved. It is uſual in Scripture, under one Sex, the ſuperiour Sex, to compriſe both. All Job's Children periſhed under the ruines of that falling houſe. Hence Obſerve, Firſt, That Satan being left at his own diſpoſe, can raiſe and enrage ſtormes and tempeſts.

It is ſaid, Pſal. 148. 8. That ſtormy winds and tempeſts fulfil the will of God. The winds go often on Gods errand; but as often as the Lord gives leave, theſe ſtormy winds and tempeſts fulfil Satans will; not his alone, much leſs againſt the will of God. Satan cannot raiſe ſo much wind by his own power as will wave a feather; but when God ſaith go, do ſuch and ſuch things, then the winds likewiſe fulfil his will: And then he can raiſe wind enough to move Mountains, and raze the foundations of the proudeſt and ſtrongeſt buildings. It is reported that ſome wicked wretches trade with Witches for winds, they buy winds of the Devil: A moſt abominable merchandize; and the Lord doth anſwer them juſtly, to let them have what they pay for, winds of the Devil; as he ſpeaks in the Prophet, I alſo will chuſe their deluſions. When men will be deluded, and go down to Hell for help, God will chuſe their deluſions, ſaying in his wrath, you that think the Devil can give you a wind, the Devil ſhall give you a wind; a wind by which you ſhall ſayl at once to the port of your hope, and to the pit of deſperation; a wind which (unleſs you repent) will carry you into that lake wherein there is no water, a lake burning for ever, And the breath of the Lord like a ſtream of brimſtone kindling it.

Iſa. 66. 4.

Secondly, Obſerve here, from the effect of this wind;

That a violent and ſudden death, it is no argument of Gods anger or diſfavour.

Here all Job's Children were deſtroyed ſuddenly and violently, yet it was not in wrath towards the Children, but for a trial unto the Father. When they told Chriſt of ſome whoſe blood Pilate had mingled with their Sacrifices; Think not (ſaith he) that either theſe or thoſe upon whom the Tower of Shiloe fell and ſlew them, were ſinners above all men that dwelt in Jeruſalem; I tell you, except ye repent, ye ſhall all likewiſe periſh. As there is no judging of the ſins of men, by ſuch kind of exigents and events, ſo neither of the wrath of God; yet how many by ſuch appearances judge unrighteous judgment, being as barbarous as thoſe Barbarians of Malta, who ſeeing a Viper coming out of the heat, and faſtening on Paul's hand, they (concluding he muſt die preſently) cenſured him to be a murtherer, whom though he had eſcaped the Sea, yet vengeance followed on ſhore, and would not ſuffer to live. We muſt not ground our judgments upon the works of God, but upon his Word. In externals there is the ſame event to all, Eccleſ. 9. Men cannot not be diſtinguiſh'd for eternity by what they ſuffer, but by what they do; not by the manner of their death, but by the tenor of their lives. This is a certain truth, That man can never die an evil death, who hath led a good life. There is nothing makes death evil, but the evil which followeth death, or the evil that goes before death.

Luk. 13. 1.

Acts 28. 3.

Thirdly, Here was death, a ſtrange and ſudden death ſurpriz'd the Children of Job, and this when they were feaſting, when they were eating and drinking wine in their eldeſt Brothers houſe. We may obſerve from that alſo by way of admonition, Chriſtians had need to take heed, and be holy in feaſting.

While we are eating and drinking, we may be dying: therefore eating and drinking, we had need be holy. Take Luk. 21.34 heed to your ſelves (ſaith Chriſt) leſt at any time your hearts be overcharged with ſurfeiting and drunkenneſs; take heed leſt at any time, becauſe at any time the day may come upon you unawares. That day, whether it be a day of general calamity, or perſonal, may come upon you unawares. It becomes us to be holy in all manner of converſation, though we had an Aſſurance of our lives: But ſeeing in what manner of converſing ſo ever we be, death may ſurpriſe us, and we have no aſſurance of our lives in our greateſt joyes, how holy ſhould we be? Whether you eat or drink (ſaith the 1 Cor. 10.31 Apoſtle) or whatſoever you do, do all to the glory of God. Have God in your eye, let him be your aim. It is pro- Zach. 14.21 phesied concerning the latter times, That every pot in Jeruſalem and Judah ſhall be holineſs unto the Lord. The very pots in Jeruſalem ſhall be holy, that is, men at their pots ſhall be holy, to note that they ſhould be holy in their eatings, in their drinkings: not holy only when they were praying, and holy when they were hearing, but holy in thoſe ordinary natural actions of eating and drinking, holy at their Tables, and at all their refreſhings with the Creature. Then indeed there is holineſs in the heart, when there is holineſs in the pot; and 'tis but need, there ſhould be holineſs in the pot, when there may be death in the pot.

We may obſerve ſomewhat more generally from all theſe four ſore afflictions conſidered together. As firſt, We ſee how quickly the beauty of all worldly bleſſings may be blaſted. Job in the morning had an eſtate, as great and as good as his heart could deſire in worldly things; there was luſtre and ſtrength in and upon all he had, but before night he had nothing but ſorrow to ſup upon; he had no retinue of ſervants left, but four, reſerved only to report his loſſes. In one day all's gone. It is added as an aggravation of Babylons down-fall, that her judgments ſhall come upon her in one day, Revel. 18.8. Therefore ſhall her plagues come in one day, death, and mourning, and famine, and ſhe ſhall be utterly burnt with fire, for ſtrong is the Lord God who judgeth her. In one day all the beauty of Babylon ſhall be blaſted. We need not now trouble our ſelves to think Babylon is in a great deal of ſtrength, and beauty, and glory; ſurely there muſt be a long time ſpent in contriving and acting the deſtruction of Babylon; no, the Lord can blaſt her beauty and deſtroy her power in a day; and the Text ſaith, he will do ſo, In one day all her plagues ſhall come upon her. That which Babylon hath been gathering many years, ſhall be ſcattered in a moment. She thinks that by her wiſdom and policy ſhe hath laid ſuch a foundation of her own greatneſs as ſhall never be ſhaken; And therefore concludes, I ſit a Queen, and am no widow, and ſhall ſee no ſorrow. Yet all her ſtrength ſhall not hold out one day, when God in his diſpleaſure ſhall lay ſiege againſt her walls. So when ye look upon other great and mighty, proſperous and flouriſhing enemies, ſuch as flouriſh like green bay trees, remember the Lord in one day can wither their branches and kill their roots, yea root them up. Certainly the ſtrength of the Lord is as mighty for the deſtroying of his enemies, as it is for the afflicting of his own people: if he ſometimes gives Commiſſion to take away all their comforts in a day, when their eſtates are higheſt and ſtrongeſt built; Surely he will at laſt give Commiſſions for as ſpeedy a diſpatch againſt the eſtates of his greateſt enemies.

And this may be unto us all, matter of Admonition, to prepare for changes, to eſteem creatures as they are, periſhing ſubſtance. Who ever had an eſtate better gotten, better bottom'd, or better managed then Job? yet all was overthrown and ſwept away in a moment. We can never expect too much from God, nor too little from the creature.

Laſtly, We may learn from the fore-going ſtory of theſe afflictions, conſidering that Satan was the contriver and engineer, who ſet all a work,

That Satan is mighty both in power and policy for the effecting of his deſigns, if God give him liberty and leave.

You ſee he doth not fail nor miſs in the leaſt, he brings every affliction upon Job in the perfection of it: and he doth not bungle at it, or do his work by halves, but he is quick and ſpeedy, both in laying the plot and executing it. There is nothing in this inferiour world able to ſtand before him, no creature, no man, if God let him alone. The good Angels can match, yea and maſter devils, there is no doubt of that: but if God ſtop his Angels, and withdraw his hand, the Devil would quickly over-run all the world. We wreſtle Eph. 6: not with fleſh and blood, but with principalities and powers. Evil ſpirits are called powers in the abſtract, they have not only a power, they are not only powerful, (hence called principalities, ſuch as have great authority and ſoveraignty (as it were) over others) but they are called Powers. It is not an empty title or a naked name that is given them, but they are filled and cloathed with ſtrength proportionable. Satan is a mighty Prince commanding in the ſpirits of wicked men (there's his throne) he can kindle their luſts and inflame their ſpirits, ſet them on fire from Hell, and then cauſe them to go on with a rage (in doing miſchief) as high as heaven. He can lead men captive at his will, 1 Tim. 2. 26. though not againſt their own will. Yet to ſhew the efficacy of his actings, he is ſaid to lead them captive at his will, to do his will and execute his devilſhips deſigns. It is admirable what Satan can do upon wicked men, who are his willing vaſſals and bond-ſlaves; if he ſpeak the word, they go; if he ſuggeſt, they ſubmit; if he move, they obey. And likewiſe we ſee what a mighty Prince he is in the air, all the Elements and the Meteors ſtoop to his direction. He cannot only command men who have reaſon, but he can command the fire, the water, the winds, the thunders, therefore he is called the Prince of the powers of the air; thoſe powers Eph. 2. 2. that are in the air he can command. For though it be true that Satan of himſelf cannot make one ſparkle of fire, or ſo much as one breath of wind, yet if he be let looſe and unchain'd, he can go to Gods Magazin of thunder, ſtorms and tempeſts, he can fetch out ſuch ſtore of all theſe, and ſo enrage them, that no man is able to withſtand their violence.

The Apoſtle taxes all natural men, that they live without Eph. 2.12. God in the world, that is, they live without a ſenſible apprehenſion of the Majeſty, of the Power, and Holineſs of God, they are not affected with God in the world. I may ſay in a ſence unto many godly men (and it may be a reproof unto them) that they live without the devil in the world, that is, they have not ſuch apprehenſions of the power, and policy, and ſleights of Satan, as they ought to have. We do not know, or apprehend as we ought, and as we might, who the Devil is, or what his power is. I do not ſpeak this, as if I would have any meditate and pore upon the power of Satan, ſo as to be afraid of him, that's no part of my intent: but it is for this end, that our hearts might be raiſed up to bleſs God, who doth bind up ſuch an enemy, and bound ſuch a power, who if he were let alone, would do us miſchief an hundred times in a day. Nay he would unquiet and unſettle the whole world. This is the reaſon why we ſhould conſider the power and policy of Satan, to bleſs God, who ſtops the mouth of this Lyon, ſo that he cannot ſtir to do that miſchief, unto the which his nature doth at once incline and inable him.

VERS. 20, 21, 22.

Then Job aroſe, and rent his mantle, and ſhaved his head, and fell down upon the ground, and worſhipped,
And ſaid, Naked came I out of my Mothers womb; and naked ſhall I return thither: the Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away, bleſſed be the Name of the Lord.
In all this Job ſinned not, nor charged God fooliſhly.

THeſe three verſes contain the third Diviſion of the Chapter, as we ſhewed in the Analyſis of it. We have ſeen in the firſt, the character of Job in his proſperous eſtate, and the deſcription of his proſperity. We have ſeen his afflictions in the cauſes, in the time, in the inſtruments, in the matter, and in the manner of inflicting them. In this third part we have the carriage of Job, how Job took it, how he behaved himſelf in this ſad condition. And likewiſe how God took it that Job did ſo behave himſelf. So then,

We may note two things in the general out of theſe three verſes.

1. We have the carriage of Job, his behaviour.
2. We have the teſtimony of God concerning his carriage and behaviour.

The carriage and behaviour of Job is laid down, verſe 20, 21. And concerning his carriage, the Text gives us to conſider,

1. What Job did.
2. What Job ſaid.

Firſt, What he did, and that is in the 20. verſe, and there we find mentioned five diſtinct actions of Job upon the receiving of the relation of his affliction.

1. He aroſe.
2. He rent his mantle.
3. He ſhaved his head.
4. He fell down upon the ground.
5. He worſhipped.

Secondly, What he ſaid, and that is in the 21. verſe, And he ſaid, Naked came I out of my mothers womb, and naked, &c.

His ſayings contain two ſtrong and undeniable argumental Propoſitions, and one clear Concluſion, flowing naturally from them both, or from either of them; by which he doth acquit the Lord in his afflicting of him, and alſo ſupport and ſtrengthen his own ſoul under thoſe afflictions.

The teſtimony of God concerning Job's carriage is in the 22. verſ. The Lord comes in, as it were, like an Umpire to determine who got the day, which is reſolved when he ſaith, In all this Job ſinned not, nor charged God fooliſhly. Theſe words expreſly ſet the Laurel of Victory upon the head of Job. Satan undertook that Job (if touched) would curſe God; now ſaith God, look upon him touch'd, ſee what he hath done, examine all his actions that are paſt, obſerve what he hath ſpoken, weigh every word that hath come out of his mouth in the ballance of truth and reaſon, and when thou haſt done both, tell me whether he hath yet curſed me. I pronounce, that in all he hath done, in all he hath ſaid, Job hath not charged God fooliſhly. That in the general for the ſum of the Context, and for the parts of it.

To begin firſt with what Job did, his actions.

Then Job aroſe and rent his mantle, &c.

Then.] Job ſtood out the three former aſſaults unmoveably, but when he had received the fourth, then his bowels were moved, And then, &c.

Job aroſe.] This was his firſt action. To ariſe is properly an act of one that ſitteth; he is ſaid to ariſe, that before did ſit or lie. But yet in Scripture to ariſe, is not alwayes taken ſo ſtrictly, neither is it in this place. To ariſe, in the Scripture language notes two things. Firſt, the ſpeedineſs of doing a thing: when a man doth a thing inſtantly or preſently, he is ſaid to ariſe to do it, to ariſe and do it, though he were ſtanding or walking before. This is an Hebraiſm, He aroſe and rent his mantle, that is, He preſently rent his mantle upon the hearing of theſe meſſages, eſpecially the laſt. And ſo you have the word in divers places, as Judg. 20. 18. The Children of Iſrael aroſe, and went to the Houſe of the Lord; that is, they went preſently up to the Houſe of the Lord, 2 Sam. 14. 31. Then Joab aroſe and went to Abſolom; the meaning is only this, that upon the receiving of that Meſſage, he went with ſpeed, he made no delayes: And Nehem. 2. 18. when Nehemiah exhorted them to the great work of building the Houſe of the Lord, the people ſhewing their willingneſs and readineſs, expreſt it thus, Let us riſe up and build, that is, let us build (as we ſay) out of hand, ſpeedily.

Secondly, To ariſe, implies the courage, conſtancy and ſtrength of thoſe who undertake or go about a buſineſs, they ariſe and do it, that is, they do it with ſpirit: So here it may import as much concerning Job in his ſufferings, He aroſe and rent his mantle, that is, though he heard all theſe ſad relations, yet his ſpirit was not overwhelmed, he was not drowned in thoſe ſorrows, he did not ſink down under them, but he aroſe and rent his mantle, &c. as if he had raiſed himſelf up to wreſtle with the temptation and the tempter, to wreſtle with Satan himſelf. In this ſenſe the Lord is ſaid to riſe, Iſa. 33. 8, 9. where there is that ſad deſcription of the Land, The Earth mourneth and languiſheth, Lebanon is aſhamed, &c. now will I riſe, ſaith the Lord, now will I be exalted; that is, now will I come and ſhew my ſelf with a mighty power for the deliverance of my people. I will be exalted, and they ſhall rejoyce. That Prayer of the old Church, Ariſe, O Lord, and let thine enemies be ſcattered, hath the ſame intendment, deſiring the Lord to go forth armed with ſtrength for the help of his people and the ſubduing their enemies. Thus Job aroſe, bound with a fourfold cord of affliction: he raiſed himſelf up like Sampſon, though in humility, yet with ſtrength and courage. And ſo it is oppoſed to the ſinking of the ſpirit under troubles, as you know the ſpirit of Eli did, 1 Sam. 4. 18. There was ſad tidings brought to Eli concerning the death of his Sons, and the taking of the Ark; the Text ſaith, As ſoon as he heard theſe things, he fell down backward, he had no ſpirit, no ſtrength left in him, he did not ariſe and rend his garment, but he ſunk down and brake his neck. When Nabal heard of the danger that his churliſh and inhoſpitable anſwer had almoſt drawn upon him, 1 Sam. 25. 37. His heart died within him, and he became as a ſtone. When all that Job had, was dead and gone, his heart lived, yea he was (erecto animo) of a raiſed ſpirit, not only when he aroſe, but when he fell upon the ground: for then he worſhipped, and worſhip is the lifting up of the ſoul to God: In the worſhip of God while the body is upon the knee, the mind is or ought to be upon the wing.

And rent his mantle.] That is the ſecond act. Renting of garments is very often ſpoken of in Scripture, and we find it eſpecially in theſe two caſes. In caſe of extream ſorrow, and in caſe of extream indignation.

In caſe of extream ſorrow, and that of two kinds; either in the ſorrows of afflictions, or in the ſorrows of repentance; in both theſe we find renting of the garments.

For the ſorrows of outward affliction; ſo we read frequently of renting garments: When Jacob heard of the death of Joſeph, when his Sons brought him home the bloody Coat, ſaying (but falſely) that ſurely their brother was torn with wild beaſts; he preſently rent his garment. And when the relation of the death of Saul was brought to David's ear, to expreſs his ſorrow, He took hold on his clothes and rent them, and likewiſe all the men that were with him: And ſo again afterward at the funeral of Abner, David rent his clothes, and gave order to all the people that were with him to do the like. In great funerals or fatal mournings, it was uſual among the Hebrews to rent their garments. This alſo was a frequent cuſtom among the Heathen, as the Poet deſcribes a Mourner in his mixt lamentations for private and publick loſſes; he went with his garments torn, being aſtoniſhed at the death of his Wife and the ruine of the City. Many ſuch Inſtances there are amongſt their ancient Hiſtorians.

Gen. 37. 34

2 Sam. 1. 11.

2 Sam. 3. 31.

—It ſciſſa veſte Latinus, Conjugis attonitus fatis urbiſque ruina. Vir. Æn. 12

Herodotus l. 1. records the like geſtures among the Lacedemonians. And Livy among the Sabines. l. 1.

Secondly, It was uſed in token of Repentance, when ſorrows for ſin brake forth and multiplied, Joſh. 7. 6. When Joſhua humbled himſelf upon the defeat, flight and ſlaughter of the Iſraelites before Ai, it is ſaid, He rent his clothes, and fell to the earth: This renting of their garments was in reſpect of the outward affliction, but withall in token of repentance; for Joſhua and the people humbled themſelves with faſting. So when the Book of the Law was read to Joſiah, and he ſaw how far they had departed from the rule and word of God, it is ſaid, He rent his clothes, and he was afraid, he humbled himſelf, and his heart was tender before God.

2 Chron. 34. 20.

But it may be objected, that in Joel 2. v. 13. when we are exhorted to rent the heart, we are ſtopp'd from renting the garment, Rent your hearts, and not your garments, in the caſe of Repentance.

For anſwer to that I ſay, the Not there is not an abſolute prohibition of renting the garment, it is not ſo much a negation, as a direction, Rent your hearts, and not your garments, that is, Rent your hearts rather then your garments, or, Rent your hearts more then your garments, or, be ſure that you rent your hearts whatſoever you do with your garments. Negations do not alwayes quite deny a thing; In the 2 Cor. 3. 6. take an Inſtance for it, where the Apoſtle treating of the preheminence of the Goſpel in the new diſpenſation, ſaith, Who hath made us able Miniſters, not of the letter, but of the Spirit. Not, there doth not deny, as if the Miniſters of Chriſt did not ſpeak and publiſh the letter of the word: for the letter of the word is the veſſel wherein the Spirit is contained, and unleſs we ſpeak the letter to the ear, the Spirit cannot in an ordinary way come into the heart; therefore underſtand the Apoſtles meaning thus, He hath made us able Miniſters, not of the letter, but of the Spirit; that is, he hath made us Miniſters rather of the Spirit then of the letter, or more of the Spirit then of the letter, becauſe of the promiſe of the plentiful effuſion of the Spirit, after the aſcenſion of Chriſt.

A further Inſtance we have in that ſpeech of God, I will have mercy, and not ſacrifice; that is, rather mercy then ſacrifice. Sacrifice is not rejected, but mercy is preferr'd. So Rent your hearts, and not your garments, that is, rather rent your hearts then your garments: For otherwiſe you find that not only it was lawful (as in the former places) in times of repentance and ſorrow to rend the garments, but they are taxed becauſe they did not repent and rend their garments. The not renting the garment is charged as a conviction of an unrent heart. When the roll of curſes that Baruch wrote from the mouth of Jeremiah was read before Jehojakim and his Courtiers, the King cut the roll with a pen-knife and caſt it into the fire, their impenitence is thus deſcribed, Yet they were not afraid, nor rent their garments, neither the King, nor any of his ſervants, that heard all thoſe words. As if it had been ſaid, this was a time that called them aloud to rend their garments, to humble themſelves and repent before the Lord, when they heard ſuch words as theſe (cloathed with their own ſin and Gods wrath) read unto them; but they did it not; Yet they were not afraid, neither did they rend their garments. So then, renting of the garment was uſed as a ceremony of repentance, as a ſhadow of godly ſorrow; It had nothing in it ſelf to move God, only it teſtified the greatneſs of their grief, that their hearts did rend as their garments were rent.

Jer. 36. 24.

Further, Renting of the garment was uſed in caſe of extream indignation. Indignation is anger and ſorrow boyl'd up to the height; it is as it were the extract and ſpirit of them both: And it is ſtirr'd eſpecially when the ear of a man is filled with a voyce of blaſphemy, or his eye with a ſpectacle of bold tranſcendent wickedneſs againſt the Lord. Word being brought to Hezekiah of the blaſphemy that Rabſhakeh had belched out againſt God, when he heard how he had reproached the living God, in ſaying, who is the God of Jeruſalem that he ſhould deliver it out of my hand? the Text ſaith, that Hezekiah rent his clothes with indignation; that report fill'd him with a mixture of grief and anger; he was grieved that the holy Name of God was blaſphemed, he was angry with the blaſphemer: theſe cauſed holy indignation, and this the renting of his garments. Thus alſo when Paul and Barnabas had reſtored the Criple at Lyſtra, the ſuperſtitious Lyſtrians would have done ſacrifice to them as Gods; which when the Apoſtles Paul and Barnabas heard of, and ſaw the preparations (Oxen and Garlands brought to the Gates) for that abominable Idolatry, They rent their clothes, and run in among the people, ſaying, Sirs, why do you theſe things? we alſo are men of like paſſions with you. They rent their clothes with indignation, being grieved and vext to ſee men ſo beſotted, and God ſo diſhonoured,

1 King. 19. 1.
Iſa. 37. 1.

Acts 14. 13.

This act of Job in the Text, renting his garments, may refer to either of theſe, it may refer to all theſe. If it be demanded why did Job rend his garments? I anſwer, firſt, He rent his garments for the greatneſs of that ſorrow that was upon him in regard of his outward affliction. Secondly, He rent his garments, to teſtifie his deep humiliation under the hand of God, with repentance for all his ſins. Thirdly, He rent his garments, being filled with indignation at thoſe blaſphemies which Satan ſuggeſted to him: This latter I clear thus; you know it was the main deſign, the very plot of Satan to provoke Job to blaſpheme God, do this ſaith he, Touch all that he hath, and he will curſe thee to thy face. He did promiſe this to himſelf, and did undertake with God to bring Job to that height of impatience. If ſo, then there is no queſtion, but as theſe meſſengers of ſorrow came to him, ſo Satan came with them, and pointed every meſſage with this or the like poyſonous ſuggeſtions. Now ſee what a Maſter you ſerve, now blaſpheme God; why ſhouldeſt thou make ſcruple of thinking, or of ſpeaking evil of him, who hath poured out all theſe evils upon thee? Never ſtand ſo much upon his honour, who ſtands ſo little upon thy comfort. It is no queſtion but Satan provok'd Job in ſome ſuch manner. He was not wiſe to promote his own ends, unleſs he did ply him with temptations to blaſphemy. Now Job being moſt ſenſible of theſe temptations, it being to him (as afterwards to holy David, Pſal. 42. 10.) as a Sword in his bowels, while the Enemy ſaid unto him, Where is now thy God, he ariſes with indignation and ſoul-abhorrence of theſe injections, rending his garments, &c. That for the ſecond act. The third follows.

And ſhaved his head.] Shaving of the head was uſed ſometimes to expreſs ſorrow, ſometimes to expreſs bondage, and I find it uſed in Scripture in oppoſition to both theſe, ſc. in times of joy and liberty.

Firſt, Shaving of the head was uſed as a note of ſorrow, Iſa. 15. 2. The Lord ſpeaking by his Prophet of the great affliction that ſhould come upon the Jews, ſaith, On all their heads ſhall be baldneſs, and every beard cut off; that is, they ſhall mourn, that's the meaning of it. And Iſa. 22. 12. In that day did the Lord God of Hoſts call to weeping, and to mourning, and to baldneſs; that is, to ſhaving of themſelves or cutting off their hair; the meaning of it in joyning baldneſs and mourning was only this, to ſhew that there ſhould be extream ſorrow and mourning in the Land; The Lord called to mourning and baldneſs, that is, to an exceeding great mourning, ſuch as thoſe mournings uſed to be when they ſhaved their heads. And the Prophet puts in this as an aggravation of their ſin, that when the Lord called for ſuch a mourning as was joyned with baldneſs and ſhaving the head, that then there ſhould be joy and gladneſs, ſlaying Oxen, and killing Sheep, eating fleſh, and drinking wine. See this more clear, Jer. 7. 29. when the Prophet fore-ſhews the great affliction of Jeruſalem, he thus beſpeaks them, Cut off thine hair, O Jeruſalem, and caſt it away, and take up a lamentation. To add one inſtance more, Mic. 1. 16. In caſe of their ſore affliction, the Prophet ſaith, Make thee bald and pole thee for thy delicate Children, enlarge thy baldneſs as the Eagle: The meaning of all is, mourn bitterly, or mourn greatly for thy delicate Children; thy delicate and ſweet Children they are deſtroyed, mourn greatly for them, enlarge thy baldneſs as the Eagle; As the Eagle, becauſe the Eagle (as Naturaliſts obſerve) caſteth her feathers, and her head is many times quite bald, therefore it is ſaid here, enlarge thy baldneſs as the Eagle, that is, be exceeding bald, cut off all thy hair in that great mourning. We may illuſtrate this by a contrary rule given by this Prophet Jeremy, and likewiſe by Ezekiel, when mourning was forbidden, Jer. 16. 6. where he ſpeaks of ſome that ſhould die and have none to mourn for them, he ſaith, They ſhall not lament for them, nor make themſelves bald for them, Ezek. 24. 17. Make no mourning for the dead; what followeth? Bind the tire of thine head upon thee; when they ſhould keep on their hair, their tire, that was an argument that there was no mourning.

Further we find, that the cutting off the hair, the ſhaving of the head, was a ſign of bondage and reproach. When David ſent Meſſengers to Hanun, Samuel records, that Hanun took the Meſſengers and ſhaved off the one half of their beards, and cut off their garments in the middle, and the men were exceedingly aſhamed; now the ſhame was not only becauſe their beards were half cut off; for if that had been all, they might quickly have cut off the other half, and have delivered themſelves from the ſhame; for they were at liberty: but it is therefore ſaid that the men were greatly aſhamed, becauſe amongſt them it was a mark of ſhame and ſlavery to be ſhaven. Hereupon David giveth order that they ſhould tarry at Jericho, till their beards were grown; it was a diſhonour to be ſhaved: And it is noted in Plutarch concerning Demoſthenes, that when he had a mind to ſit cloſe at his ſtudy, and would not go abroad, or be interrupted by viſits of friends at home, that he would ſhave himſelf, that ſo he might be aſhamed to go forth or ſee any body, but be conſtrained to keep to his Book for two or three months together, till his hair were grown again: The bondage and reproach that Nebuchadnezzar brought upon Tyrus is thus deſcribed, Every head was made bald. And Ariſtotle obſerves, that the hair was a token of liberty. Thus the ſhaving of the head in Job might be a ſign both of his ſorrow and great reproach that was come upon him, being one now that was ready to be mocked and made the ſcorn and by-word of the world, as we ſee afterward he was, during this affliction.

2 Sam. 10. 4.

Ezek. 29. 18.
Crinis eſt libertatis argumentum. Ariſt. 1. Rhetor.

Yet it is conſiderable from Scripture example, that the cutting off the hair, and ſhaving of the head, had not alwayes either of theſe ſignifications hitherto diſcuſs'd, but did vary according to the diverſity of places and of times. In the Book of Geneſis, we read that cutting and ſhaving of the hair, was a token of joy and liberty both together. When Joſeph was delivered out of priſon, it is ſaid, That he ſhaved himſelf, and came to Pharaoh. And it is noted concerning Mephiboſheth, as a matter of his ſorrow for David's abſence, that he let his hair grow. He trimmed not his beard, being much troubled at the Kings abſence. I confeſs neither of theſe Inſtances come home enough to the point: both of theſe neglecting the care and culture of their bodies in their troubles, now being delivered, prepare themſelves by ſhaving and trimming the hair for the preſence of thoſe Kings. But in ſome Nations, ſhaving hath been a mark of Honour; All the Roman Emperors were ſhaved, till Nero. And it was an ancient Proverb, Thou art a ſlave, for thou weareſt locks or long hair.

Gen. 41. 14.

2 Sam. 19. 24.

*Aul.Gel.l.*3 c. 4. Servus es & comam habes.

There is an Objection that may be made concerning this act of Job, (becauſe afterward it is ſaid, That in all this Job ſinned not) whether or not Job might ſhave his head without ſin? for you have an expreſs rule to the contrary, Lev. 19. 27. chap. 21. 5. You ſhall not round the corners of your heads, neither ſhalt thou mar the corners of thy beard. And ſo you have it again in Deut. 14. 1. that they ſhould not cut their hair, or make any baldneſs upon their heads for the dead, namely, by ſhaving or cutting off the hair. How is it therefore here that Job ſhaved himſelf for the death of his children, and in regard of thoſe great troubles that were upon him?

I anſwer briefly for that, firſt, Job lived (as we have cleared when we ſpake of the book in general) before that Law was given, which did prohibit the cutting of the hair in that manner.

Secondly, It appears in thoſe places, where thoſe Laws are ſet down, that the Lord did forbid only conformity to the Heathen; they muſt not ſhave or cut themſelves, as the Heathen did, who cut their heads round like a globe (as it is obſerved concerning them) and were wont to dedicate their locks to their Idol-gods. That vain faſhion and groſs ſuperſtition were the things forbidden in that Law of Moſes.

Vovebant cincinnos in honorem dæmonum. Heſych.

Thirdly, Though the Jews were forbidden to ſhave their heads, as mourning for the death of their friends; yet (in the judgment of learned Junius) the ſhaving of their heads was not only permitted, but commanded in caſe of mourning for ſin, or in times of ſolemn repentance and humiliation. He inſtanceth in two places before mentioned. Firſt, The Prophet Iſaiah reproving the unſeaſonable mirth and deſperate ſecurity of the Jews in a time of publick trouble and treading down, tells them, In that day did the Lord God of Hoſts call to weeping, and to mourning, and to baldneſs, and to girding with ſackcloath, Iſa. 22. 12. Secondly, There is counſel given anſwerable to that reproof by the Prophet Micah, chap. 1. 16. Make thee bald, and pole thee for thy delicate children, enlarge thy baldneſs as the Eagle, for they are gone into captivity from thee.

Etſi calvitium induci pro mortuo interdictum eſt in lege, tamen certum eſt in ſancta reſipiſcentia calvitium probari atque imperari. Jun. in Iſa. 22. 12.

We will obſerve ſomething from theſe two actions, the renting of his garments, and the ſhaving of his head. Theſe refer to the expreſſion of his ſorrow for thoſe loſſes in eſtate and the death of his Children: As the other two actions, his falling upon the ground and worſhipping refer to the expreſſion of that homage and honour that he tendred up to God in the midſt of theſe ſorrows. From thoſe two acts of ſorrow learn we,

Firſt, That when the hand of God is upon us, it becometh us to be ſenſible of it, and to be humbled under it.

Job hearing theſe ſad relations, doth not ſtand out ſtoutly, as if nothing had touch'd him: but to ſhew that ſorrow did even rend his heart, he rent his garments; to ſhew that his affliction touch'd his ſpirit, he ſhav'd his head. There are two extreams that we are carefully to avoid in times of affliction; and the Apoſtle doth caution all the Sons of God againſt them both in one verſe, Heb. 12. 5. My ſon, deſpiſe not thou the chaſtening of the Lord, nor faint when thou art rebuked of him. Thoſe are the two extreams, deſpiſing and fainting when God doth correct. He would not have us deſpiſe his chaſtening, to ſay, I do not regard this, let God take all if he will: If my eſtate muſt go, let it go; if my children die, let them die; this is a deſpiſing of the chaſtening of the Lord, and God cannot bear it, that we ſhould bear it thus lightly. There is another extream, that is, fainting: If when goods are taken away, the heart be taken away; and when children die, then the ſpirit of the Parent dies too; this is fainting. Take heed of theſe two extreams. Job walks in the middle, in the golden mean between them both. He doth not careleſly deſpiſe, neither doth he unbelievingly faint: he riſeth up, and he rents his garments. He would have it known that he fainted not under the ſtroke, and he would have it known that he felt the ſtroke; he was not like a ſtock or a ſtone, he would not carry it with a Stoical apathy, but with Chriſtian fortitude and magnanimity. Senſleſs ones are taxed, Jer. 5. 3. Thou haſt ſtricken them, and they have not grieved. Such are compared by Solomon to him that lies down in the midſt of the Sea, or as he that lieth upon the top of a maſt; ſecure and careleſs in the greateſt dangers. They have ſtricken me, ſhalt thou ſay, and I was not ſick; they have beaten me, and I felt it not, Prov. 23. 34, 35. The Prophet Hoſea reproves the like; Strangers (ſaith he) have devoured his ſtrength, and he knoweth it not; yea, gray hairs are here and there upon him, and he knoweth it not, ch. 7. 9. That is, he is in an afflicted, in a declining condition, and yet he layeth it not to heart. A man may out of the greatneſs of his ſpirit (but not out of the careleſneſs of his ſpirit) ſay as Luther once did, when things went very ill, If the World will go thus, let it go thus. Otherwiſe it is a moſt unbecoming temper to be ſtricken of God, and not to tremble, at leaſt to take it to heart. When God afflicteth us, then we ſhould afflict our ſelves, and be humbled: when Gods hand is upon us, our hands (in this ſence) ſhould be upon our ſelves: We muſt bear our croſs upon our backs, we muſt not make a fire of it to warm our hands. Indeed the Apoſtle exhorts to rejoyce in tribulation, and it is an excellent thing to rejoyce in tribulation; but we muſt not ſlight, much leſs make a ſport of tribulation. Rejoycing ariſeth from a holy ſatisfaction that the ſoul hath in the dealings of God with us: But ſleighting ariſeth from an unholy contempt, or at the beſt from a ſtupid inſenſibleneſs of Gods dealings with us. The former hath in it the height of wickedneſs, and the latter hath not the leaſt degree of goodneſs. It is no vertue to bear what we do not feel.

Secondly, Obſerve, That in times of affliction we may expreſs our ſorrows by outward geſtures, by ſorrowful geſtures.

Job was not only ſorrowful, but he acts ſorrow, he puts himſelf into mourning poſtures, he rents his garments, he ſhaves his head, down he falleth upon the ground. It is no hypocriſie to appear what we are: it is hypocriſie to appear what we are not. We uſe to ſay, he mourneth truly that mourneth without a garment; but if a man mourn in truth, a mourning garment is comely. To mourn in our clothes, and laugh in our ſleeves, is both ſinful and baſe. Now Job mourned indeed; the ſhaving his head, and renting his garment, was but to keep an outward correſpondence with what he was within. Therefore take heed of cenſuring thoſe, who in great ſorrows uſe ſorrowful geſtures, ſtriking upon their breaſts, tearing their hair, or the like. Only let all take heed of exceſſive and immoderate mourning; mourn not like Rachel, who would receive no comfort; mourn not like the Heathen, who had no hope. To be above paſſions will be our happineſs in Heaven, to rectifie paſſions is much of our happineſs on earth: To be without natural affections, is to fall below a man; to ſteer and mannage them, is one of the heights of a Chriſtian.

Thirdly, We ſhewed, that this renting of his garments might have reference to his repentance: whence note,

That when God afflicteth us with ſufferings, we ought to afflict our ſelves, to humble our ſouls for ſin.

Smarting times are good repenting times, and worldly ſorrow ſhould get the company of godly ſorrow. It is not ſafe to be alone with worldly ſorrow, that works death; but if we mingle a few tears for ſin, and our unkindneſs to Chriſt with thoſe tears, then they will refreſh us. We get by loſſes in our outward eſtate, when they lead us to look to the loſſes, and repair the breaches of our ſpiritual eſtate. No queſtion but Job at this time fell a ſearching of his heart, and a trying of his wayes, renewing his repentance, and aſſuring of his peace with God. When afflictions cauſe us to return thus into our own breaſts, they have then a ſweet influence, a bleſſed operation upon us.

Laſtly, Obſerve, That thoughts of blaſphemy againſt God ſhould be caſt off, and rejected with the higheſt indignation.

Job rent his garments, when Satan ſollicits Job to rent the name of God with reproach and curſings. Thoughts diſhonouring God muſt needs be vexing to every good heart. Nothing touches a godly man, like that which touches God. When the glory of God is engaged and concern'd, he cannot contain. So much for thoſe two acts, He rent his garments, and he ſhaved his head.

The two other acts are,

1. He falleth upon the ground. 2. He worſhippeth.] The Original words do both ſignifie a bowing to the ground; He fell upon the ground, and bowed; ſo ſome tranſlate it; you ſhall ſee the reaſon by and by: He fell upon the ground and worſhipped, that is, He fell upon the ground to worſhip. To fall upon the ground is a geſture of worſhip; and not only is it a poſture of worſhip, when the worſhipper mourns; but it is likewiſe a poſture of worſhip, when the worſhipper rejoyceth. Great joy as well as great ſorrow tranſports a man in his next actions. It is ſaid, *Matth.*2. 10, 11. that the wiſe men, when they found Chriſt, rejoyced with exceeding great joy, and preſently, they fell down, and worſhipped him. Neither is this poſture peculiar to worſhip in times or upon occaſions of extraordinary joy and ſorrow, (unleſs in the degree of it) for the ordinary invitation was, O come let us worſhip and bow down, let us kneel before the Lord our Maker, Pſal.95. 6. I ſaid, in the degree, for to fall down is more then to bow down. Falling down in worſhip proceeds not only from ſorrow, but from joy; when the heart is filled with joy, then we fall down and worſhip. And it is probably * obſerved, that the ancient Prophets and holy men, the Servants of God, were called Nephalim (from Nephal, which is the Original word of the Text) Cadentes or Proſtrantes, that is, proſtrates or fallers, becauſe in their worſhip they uſually fell upon the Earth to humble themſelves before God. And becauſe adoration was ſo commonly made by falling to the ground, by bowing the head, by bowing the knee, by bowing the whole body, therefore the ſame Original word which the Hebrews uſe for worſhipping, doth properly ſignifie to bow down the body. And that phraſe to bow the body, as it is often joyned with worſhipping; ſo ſometime to bow the body, put alone, doth ſignifie to worſhip, 2 Kings 5. 18. When I bow my ſelf in the houſe of Rimmon, ſcil. when I worſhip, &c. So likewiſe the Greek word to worſhip hath the ſame ſence in it, for that word ſignifies (as a learned Writer obſerves upon it) to bow after the manner of dogs, that crouch at the feet of their Maſters for favour, or for fear. So in worſhip, the people of God crouch down and abaſe themſelves at Gods feet, as not worthy in themſelves to eat the crumbs under his Table.

* Bolduc in loc.

וישתחו à radice שחה

προσκυνέω Quod eſt more catellorum ad pedes alicujus, tanquam Domini totum ſeſe proſternere ſubjectionis gratia. Zanch.

Yet we are not to look upon this, as if it were the only true and acceptable worſhip-geſture; for we ſhall find in Scripture, that there were worſhip-geſtures with which God was well pleaſed. Some have worſhipped God ſtanding, ſome ſitting, ſome walking; all theſe are worſhip-poſtures. For ſtanding, we find it, 1 Kings 8. 22. at the Dedication of the Temple; Solomon ſtood before the Altar of the Lord, and made that Prayer. For ſitting, we have, 2 Sam. 2. 18. When Nathan brought that Meſſage unto David, concerning the building of the Houſe of God, that it ſhould be deferred till his Sons time, the Text ſaith, That David went in, and ſate before the Lord, and ſaid, Who am I, O Lord? And in the end, he ſaith, Therefore have I found in my heart to pray this prayer unto thee. We alſo find walking in Prayer, Gen. 24. 63. Iſaac went into the field to pray. He walked and prayed; we tranſlate it, to meditate; but in the margin of your books, you find it, to pray, as being nearer the Hebrew. So that walking, and ſitting, and ſtanding, are likewiſe praying-geſtures, or poſtures of holy worſhip: But chiefly that poſture of bowing down the body, or bending the knee, is the worſhip-poſture; ſo it follows in the Text.

שוח

He fell upon the ground, and worſhipped.

And worſhipped.] To worſhip, is to give to any one the honour due unto him: So the rendring unto God that Love, that Fear, that Service, that Honour which is due unto him, is the worſhipping of God; that is the Scripture-definition, Pſal. 29. 2. Give unto the Lord the honour due unto his Name: Then follows, by way of expoſition, Worſhip the Lord in the beauty of holineſs; that is, in his holy Temple, in his beautiful Sanctuary, or, in the comely honour of his Sanctuary. So that worſhip is the tendring of honour to the Lord, in a way honourable to him; namely, according to his own will and laws of worſhip: which is intimated by coming to worſhip him in his beautiful Sanctuary, where all things about the Service of God were exactly preſcribed by God. And then there was beauty or comely honour in the Sanctuary, when all things were ordered there by the rule of his preſcription; varying and departing from which, would have filled that holy place with darkneſs and deformity, notwithſtanding all the outward luſtre and beauty had been preſerved.

The worſhip of God is twofold; there is internal worſhip, and there is external worſhip. Internal worſhip, is to love God, to fear God, and to truſt upon him; theſe are acts of inward worſhip, theſe are the ſum of our duty, and Gods honour, contained in the firſt Commandment: And ſo you may underſtand worſhip in the Text: Job fell down and worſhipped; that is, preſently upon thoſe reports, he put forth an act of love and holy fear, acts of dependance and holy truſt upon God, in his Spirit, ſaying to this effect within himſelf, Lord, though all this be come upon me, yet I will not depart from thee, or deal falſly in thy Covenant. I know thou art ſtill the ſame Jehovah, true, holy, gracious, faithful, all-ſufficient; and therefore behold me proſtrate before thee, and reſolving ſtill to love thee, ſtill to fear thee, ſtill to truſt thee; thou art my God ſtill, and my portion for ever. Though I had nothing left in the world, that I could call mine, yet thou, Lord, alone art enough, yet thou alone art all. Such doubtleſs was the language of Job's heart, and theſe were mighty actings of inward worſhip.

Then likewiſe there is external worſhip, which is the ſum of the ſecond Commandment, and it is nothing elſe but the ſerving of the Lord according to his own Ordinances and inſtitution, in thoſe ſeveral wayes wherein God will be honoured and ſerved; this is outward worſhip; and as we apply our ſelves unto them, ſo we are reckon'd to worſhip God. Job worſhipped God outwardly by falling to the ground, by pouring out ſupplications, and by ſpeaking good words of God (as we read afterward) words tending to his own abaſement, and the honour of God, clearly and fully acquitting and juſtifying the Lord in all thoſe workes of his Providence and diſpenſations towards him.

This is worſhip both internal and external. Internal worſhip is the chief; but God requireth both: and there is a neceſſity of joyning both together, that God may have honour in the world. Internal worſhip is compleat in it ſelf; and pleaſing unto God without the external: The external may be compleat in it ſelf, but is never pleaſing to God, without the internal. Internal worſhip pleaſes God moſt, but external honours God moſt; for by this God is known, and his Glory held forth in the world. External worſhip is Gods Name. Hence the Temple was called the place where God put his Name, ſc. his worſhip; by which God is known, as a man, by his name: They that worſhip God, muſt worſhip him in ſpirit and in truth: In ſpirit; that is, with inward love and fear, reverence and ſincerity. In truth; that is, according to the true rule preſcribed in his word. Spirit reſpects the inward power, Truth the outward form. The former ſtrikes at hypocriſie, the latter ſtrikes at Idolatry: The one oppoſes the inventions of our heads, the other, the looſeneſs of our hearts in worſhip.

Obſerve further, that it is only ſaid, Job fell down and worſhipped; nothing is ſaid of the Object to whom he did direct his worſhip, or whom he did worſhip. The Object is not expreſt, but underſtood, or preſuppoſed: And indeed worſhip is a thing ſo proper and peculiar to God, that when we name worſhip, we muſt needs underſtand God; for nothing but God, or that which we make a god, is, or can be worſhipped. Either he is God whom we worſhip, or (as much as in us lies) we make him one. What Creature ſoever ſhares in this honour, this honour (ipſo facto) ſets it up above, and makes it more then a Creature.

The very Heathens thought every thing below a God, below worſhip: therefore there needed not an expreſſion of the Object. When the Text ſaith, Job worſhipped, that implies his worſhip was directed unto God; yet there is a kind of worſhip which is due to Creatures.

There is a Civil worſhip mentioned in Scripture, as well as Divine worſhip. Civil worſhip may be given to men. And there is a twofold Civil worſhip (ſpoken of in Scripture.) There is a Civil worſhip of duty, and there is a Civil worſhip of courteſie: That of duty, is from Inferiors to their Superiors, from Children to their Parents, from Servants to their Maſters, from Subjects to Kings and Magiſtrates. Theſe gods muſt have Civil worſhip; as, Gen. 48. 11. When Joſeph came into the preſence of Jacob his Father, he bowed down to the ground; this was a Civil worſhip, and a worſhip of duty, from an Inferiour to a Superiour. And it is ſaid of the Brethren of Judah, Gen. 49. 8. When Jacob on his Death-bed bleſſed the twelve Tribes, Thy Brethren ſhall worſhip thee, or, bow down to thee. It is the ſame word uſed here in this Text. Judah's honour was to wield the Scepter; the government was laid upon his ſhoulders: now he being the chief Magiſtrate, all the reſt of the Tribes, all his Brethren muſt worſhip him, or give Civil honour unto him.

Secondly, There is likewiſe a worſhip of Courteſie; which is from Equals: when one Equal will bow to another, or when a Superiour (as ſometimes in courteſie he will) bows down or worſhips his Inferiour: As it is noted concerning Abraham, that when he came before the men of the Countrey of Heth, he bowed himſelf; now Abraham was the Superiour, he was a Prince and a Great man; yet coming before the men of the Countrey, he bowed himſelf: and it is the ſame word. Gen.23.12.

So then this Civil worſhip may lawfully be given unto men: But as for Divine worſhip, that is proper and peculiar unto God; that Glory he will not give to graven Images, Man or Angel, and therefore we muſt not. Hence we find, that when Cornelius and John did act their Civil worſhip a little too far, they were preſently taken off, for fear they ſhould intrench upon the Divine worſhip. Civil worſhip, when it is exceſſive, and goeth too far, is ſinful; as in Acts 10. 25. Luke relates, that as ſoon as Peter came in, Cornelius met him, and fell at his feet, and worſhipped him: the worſhip was to Peter; for we are not to think that Cornelius was ſo groſly ignorant, as to take Peter for a god, and to give him Divine worſhip; but the meaning of it is, that he fell down at his feet, and gave him an honour and reſpect beyond what he ought to have done, he was exceſſive in it; therefore Peter takes him off: Stand up (ſaith he) I my ſelf alſo am a man; I am a man as thou art, though an Apoſtle, give me ſuch reſpect as becometh a Miniſter of Chriſt; take heed that you give me no more then belongeth to a man. So the Angel, Rev. 22. 8. When John falleth down at his feet and worſhippeth, he takes him up; See thou do it not, ſaith he, for I am thy fellow-ſervant: This is too much for man, worſhip God, as it is in the end of the Verſe; ſuch worſhip belongeth properly and peculiarly unto God.

So much for the opening of theſe two latter actions of Job in reference unto God. We ſhall now give you ſome Obſervations. He fell down upon the ground, and worſhipped. You ſee how Job divides himſelf and his Affections in this time of his affliction; part he beſtowed upon his Children and Servants, and Loſſes, they ſhall have his ſorrow and tears; He rent his mantle, and ſhaved his head; but they ſhall not have all: God ſhall have the better part, his love, his fear, his truth, his body to bow to him, and his ſoul to worſhip him. Learn from hence, Impendit liberis & ſervis luctum, Deo proſtrationem & adorationem Pined. in loc.

That, A godly man will not let Nature work alone, he mixes or tempers acts of Grace with acts of Nature.

We muſt not ſorrow as thoſe that are without hope (ſaith the Apoſtle) qualifie ſorrow with hope; theſe mixt, do well. A man muſt not ſorrow for outward things, as though we had nothing elſe to do, but to ſorrow; he muſt remember he hath a God to worſhip and honour. Job beſtows ſomewhat upon his Children, but more upon his God; while his body fell to the Earth, his heart was raiſed up to Heaven: He fell down and worſhipped.

Secondly, Obſerve, That, Afflictions ſend the people of God home unto God; Afflictions draw a godly man nearer unto God: Then Job fell down and worſhipped.

Afflictions are a great advantage to the ſervants of God; for when the world frowns moſt, then they beg moſt for the ſmiles of God; when the world is ſtrange to them, and will not look on them, then they get more familiarity, and cloſer communion with God, they ſeek his face. Wicked men in their afflictions, in their ſorrows, are either quite drowned in, and overwhelmed with them, ſo that there is nothing but ſorrow, as we ſay, a la mort; or elſe they go out to help themſelves with worldly refreſhments; trouble drives them to ſin, it may be as low as Hell, to ſeek relief. The more poor they are, the more wicked they are; ſuch are not poor as Job, though they are as poor as Job. Job's poverty ſent him to God, rich in mercy. He fell down and worſhipped.

Thirdly, Learn, That, That the people of God turn all their afflictions into Prayers, or into Praiſes.

When God is ſtriking, then Job is praying; when God is afflicting, then Job falls to worſhipping. Grace makes every condition work Glory to God, as God makes every condition work good to them who have Grace.

Job falleth down and worſhippeth: Whence obſerve,

Fourthly, That, It becometh us to worſhip God in an humble manner.

Though God (as we ſhewed before) may be worſhipped in another poſture, yet we ſhould rather chooſe that poſture which is moſt humble, and may lay our bodies as low as our ſouls, if it may be. There were ſome lately amongſt us, who cried aloud, as great Patrons for humble poſtures in worſhip; and all were cenſured for a ſtiffe neck and an Elephants knee, who refuſed to bow with them, or to bow their way. I may well add, their way; for Gods way of bowing, was neither queſtioned, nor refuſed; all their humility in bowing, went but one way; they muſt bow towards the Eaſt, and towards the Altar at leaſt, if not to it. Some of their ſtomacks, I believe, would have digeſted that before this time, eſpecially, being a little helped with a diſtinction.

Laſtly, We may here obſerve, That, Divine worſhip it is Gods peculiar.

Papiſts have worſhip for Creatures, and they have a diſtinction for it, but no Scripture for it. They tell us of Latria, which is, they ſay, worſhip proper only to God; and their Dulia, which is for Saints; and then their Huperdulia, which is for the Virgin Mary, and for the Sign of the Croſs. Thus they make vain diſtinctions, which God and the Scripture make not. Vain Diſtinctions are good enough to maintain vain Superſtitions. They that invent a worſhip, muſt invent a Doctrine to maintain it by. Some perhaps may ſtumble at that Text, Rev. 3. 9. where this promiſe is made to the Church of Philadelphia, Behold, I will make them of the Synagogue of Satan, which ſay they are Jews, and are not, but do lie; behold, I will make them to come and worſhip before thy feet, and to know that I have loved thee.

Object. May not worſhip then be given to a Creature?

Anſw. This worſhip may be taken for Civil worſhip; namely, for that ſubmiſſion which the Enemies of the Church ſhall be forced by the power of Chriſt to make unto her; as was promiſed by the Prophet, Iſa. 60. 14. The ſons alſo of them that afflicted thee, ſhall come bending unto thee; and all they that deſpiſed thee, ſhall bow themſelves down at the ſoles of thy feet.

Anſw. 2. If this be Divine worſhip, then worſhipping at the feet of the Church, notes worſhipping in the Church, not worſhipping of the Church. The worſhip is not terminated in the Church, but in Chriſt; who dwells and rules in the Church, who is both Head and Husband of the Church. Theſe enemies being convinced of the preſence of Chriſt in his Church, ſhall worſhip him. This David propheſies of Chriſt, ſpeaking in his own perſon, Pſ. 18. 43, 44. Thou haſt made me the head of the Heathen, a people whom I have not known ſhall ſerve me; as ſoon as they hear of me, they ſhall obey me; the ſtrangers ſhall ſubmit themſelves unto me. That of the Apoſtle, will more illuſtrate this ſence; who, ſpeaking of the great benefit of propheſying in a known tongue, concludes his Diſcourſe thus; If all propheſie, and there come in one that believeth not, or one unlearned, he is convinced of all, he is judged of all. And thus are the ſecrets of his heart made manifeſt; and ſo falling down on his face, he will WORSHIP God, and report that God is in you of a truth. The worſhip then is not given to the Church, but to God, who in ſuch Ordinances, or other acts of his power and goodneſs, is evidently revealed, as preſent in the Church.

So much for the actions or geſtures of Job, what he did: He rent his mantle, and ſhaved his head, and fell down upon the ground, and worſhipped.

Now we come to his words, to that which Job ſpake, in the two laſt Verſes.

Verſe 21. Naked came I out of my Mothers womb, and naked ſhall I return thither.

Verſe 22. The Lord giveth, and the Lord taketh, bleſſed be the name of the Lord.

Words are, or ought to be the Interpreters of the heart, and the comment of our actions. This ſpeech of Job, doth indeed interpret his heart, and expound the meaning of his former actions. This ſpeech (I ſay) of Job is the true comment of his own actions; for ſome ſeeing Job renting his garments, and ſhaving his head, and caſting himſelf down upon the ground, they might not know the meaning of all this; they could not read his heart in theſe ſtrange behaviours; they might not underſtand what his intentions were; probably they might judge that he was enraged and mad, that he was diſtracted or drunk with ſorrow; that he was either deſperate or impatient at the report of thoſe loſſes. Therefore now to confute all ſuch ſurmizes, he ſpeaks forth the words of truth and ſoberneſs. And by that which he ſaith, ſets ſo fair and true a gloſs upon his actions, as might then render them, not only rational and ingenuous, but holy and gracious in the eyes of all men, as they were before in the eyes of God, who knew his heart. Satan was now like the ſervants of Benhadad before Ahab, watching for words; he had done his buſineſs, and now he was trying how it would work, what the event and iſſue would be; he hearkned when ſome irreverent ſpeech ſhould come from the mouth of Job; he looked preſently that he ſhould blaſpheme God: he could not but ſmile ſurely, when he ſaw him renting his garments, and ſhaving his head, and falling down on the ground: O now it works! I ſhall hear him blaſpheme and curſe God preſently. He that is thus diſtempered in the carriage of the other members of his body, will not ſurely be able long to rule (that unruly piece) his tongue. One undutiful or diſhonourable word caſt upon God, would have been muſick to Satans ear, and joy to his heart; he would have catched it up as nimbly, as the men before ſpoken of, did Brother Benhadad, from the mouth of Ahab. But how blank look'd Satan? how was he cloathed with ſhame, at the fall of thoſe words from Job? Naked came I out of my mothers womb, &c.

What David ſpake concerning the words of his Enemies, (Pſal. 55. 25. Their words were ſmoother then butter, but war was in their heart; they were ſweeter then honey, and ſofter then oyl, yet were they drawn ſwords) we may ſpeak of theſe words of Job, conſidered in reference unto Satan, and in reference unto God. Theſe words of Job in reference unto God were as ſweet as honey, as ſmooth as butter. For this breath had nothing in it, but meekneſs and patience, humility and holineſs, in all which God delights: but in reference to Satan they were as drawn Swords, as poyſon'd Arrows; Satan was hardly ever ſo ſmitten before, as he was by theſe words of Job. There is no word in this ſentence, but gave Satan the lye, and refuted all his ſlander. And in the cloſe Job gives him the deepeſt ſtab of all, it was a Dagger at the very heart of the Devil, when he heard him ſay, Bleſſed be the name of the Lord. No words could be utter'd upon the longeſt ſtudy, more croſs to Satans expectation, or more anſwerable to the former teſtimony of God; and therefore the Lord Crowns all, both his actions and his ſpeeches with a new teſtimony; In all this Job ſinned not, nor charged God fooliſhly.

So much of Job's words in general, I ſhall now examine them diſtinctly in the parts.

Some conceive that Job at that time ſpake out his mind more largely; but that the Holy Ghoſt, in the penning of this ſtory, did gather and ſum up the ſtrength of all his ſpeech into theſe two concluſions.

Beza. in loc.

Naked came I out of my Mothers womb; and naked ſhall I return thither.

The Lord giveth, and the Lord taketh away, bleſſed be the name of the Lord.

We will conſider the words a little, firſt, in the Grammatical ſence of them, and then we will conſider the reaſon of them: For here they are uſed Logically, as a ſtrong and mighty argument, both for the ſupporting of his own ſpirit under thoſe afflictions, and for the juſtifying and acquitting God in ſo afflicting him.

Naked came I out of my Mothers womb, &c.

Naked.] There is a twofold Nakedneſs, there is an internal Nakedneſs, and there is an external Nakedneſs; there is a Nakedneſs of the Soul as well as of the body. The Nakedneſs of the Soul is, when it is deveſted of all it's gracious ornaments and endowments. When Job ſaith, Naked came I out of my Mothers womb, and naked ſhall I return thither; it referreth eſpecially to the nakedneſs of the Body: for though it be a truth that Job came naked into the world in regard of his Soul, yet he knew he ſhould not go naked out of the world in regard of his Soul. Seeing then he referreth nakedneſs to his going out of the world as well as to his coming in; therefore it cannot be here meant of an inward nakedneſs: his Soul came naked in, but he knew his Soul ſhould go out cloathed. Neither can it be meant of a then preſent ſpiritual nakedneſs; for Job was never ſo richly and gorgeouſly attired in his Soul, never appeared in ſuch glorious ornaments of grace, as when he was ſtript of all worldly comforts. Therefore the nakedneſs here is bodily nakedneſs, that which Moſes ſpeaks of Gen. 2. 25. deſcribing our firſt Parents, They were both naked, ſaith he, the man and his Wife, and they were not aſhamed. Yet that nakedneſs and this which Job ſpeaks of (though they were both bodily and external) were very different and unlike: for that nakedneſs of Creation needed no covering, nakedneſs was then an ornament. Man was richly attired when he had no garments. The nakedneſs of Creation was the abſence of cloathing, or a not uſing of cloathes, it was not the want of cloathing. But the nakedneſs Job ſpeaks of, is the nakedneſs after the Fall properly; where nakedneſs importeth not only a not having of cloaths, but want of cloathing; and ſo nakedneſs is a part of that curſe and puniſhment which followed ſin. Naked came I out of my Mothers womb, that is, I came into the world in a ſad and miſerable condition, weak and poor: And ſo nakedneſs is put not ſtrictly as oppoſed only to cloathing, but we may take it more largely for the want of all outward comforts whatſoever, I came a poor deſtitute creature into the world, I had not only no cloathing upon my back, but I had no comfort for my body; I brought neither Sheep nor Oxen, nor Children nor Servants into the world with me, I had none of theſe things, nothing to help me of my own, when I firſt ſet footing into the world.

Some Naturaliſts conſidering this kind of nakedneſs, have fallen out into great complaints againſt Nature, or indeed rather againſt the God of Nature; as Pliny in the Preface to his ſeventh Book of his natural Hiſtory, doth as it were chide with Nature for turning man into the world in ſuch a helpleſs forlorn condition; as if man were dealt with more hardly then any other creature, then any beaſts of the Field or fowls of the Air. Other creatures, ſaith he, come into the world with Hair, or Fleeces, or Briſtles, or Scales, or Feathers, or Wings, or Shels, &c. to defend and cover them; but nature caſts man naked upon the naked ground. This he ſpake, not conſidering that nakedneſs was once no trouble;

Natura noverca unum hominem animantium cunctorum, alienis velat opibus. Cæteris variè tegumenta tribuit, teſtas, cortices, coria, ſpinas, villos, ſetas, pilos, plumam, pennas, ſquammas, vellera; truncos etiam arboris cortice interdum gemino à frigoribus & calore tutata eſt, hominem tantum nudum, & in nuda humo natali die abjecit. Plin. Nat. Hiſt. l. 7. in the Preface.

trouble, but rather an honour and an ornament; and this he ſpake, not knowing whence or how that kind of troubleſom nakedneſs came into the world: And this he ſpake, not obſerving as he might, how many wayes God had provided for the help and ſupply of that nakedneſs; giving man underſtanding and reaſon, inſtead of weapons and cloathes, which alſo are a means for the procuring of all things neceſſary for the ſupporting of that naked and weak periſhing condition.

שמה

Naked ſhall I return thither.] The difficulty that is in this lyeth only in that word Thither; the doubt is, what place he means, or whither? What into my Mothers womb? There is no ſuch return, as Nichodemus ſaid, Shall a man that is old go into his Mothers womb, and be born again? Some anſwer it thus, The Adverbe [thither] doth not neceſſarily refer to the literal antecedent: but in Scripture ſometimes Relatives refer to ſomewhat in the mind or in the thought of the ſpeaker, and not to that which was before ſpoken by him; as that of Mary ſheweth, Joh. 20. 15. when ſhe cometh into the Garden, and finds that Chriſt was riſen; ſhe meeteth Chriſt, and ſuppoſing him to be the Gardiner, ſaith unto him, Sir, if you have born him hence; Him, what him? There was no antecedent mentioned to which Him ſhould relate, only Maries mind was ſo full of Chriſt, that ſhe thought every one would underſtand, what him, or whom ſhe ſpake of: as if none could ſpeak of or think any thing but of Chriſt only. Therefore ſhe made the relation to that which was in her own ſpirit, and not to what was formerly expreſt. So ſome Interpreters make the [thither] to be God or the grave, I ſhall return unto God, or I ſhall return to the grave, to the houſe of the grave, as the Chaldee paraphraſe hath it. For they ſuppoſe Job had his mind full of thoſe thoughts, therefore he may make a relation to that.

Joh. 3.

Quod dicitur nudus revertar illuc, intelligitur in illum ſtatum quem habuit in utero matris. Aquin. in loc.

Another conſideration for the clearing of it is this, that ſuch Adverbs of place as this is, do not only ſignifie place, but a ſtate or a condition, wherein any one is, or to which any thing or perſon is brought; as it is ordinary in our ſpeech to ſay, hither have I brought the matter, that is, to this ſtate or to this condition: So when Job ſaith, Naked ſhall I return thither, that is, I ſhall return to ſuch a condition or to ſuch an eſtate, as I was naked before, ſo I ſhall return to ſuch a ſtate of nakedneſs again.

Neq; novum eſt ut nomen proprium cum figurato eodem filo atq; eadem oratione conjugatur. Sanct.

Magna parens terra eſt. Ovid.

But thirdly, that which may more clearly carry it, the thither which Job here ſpeaks of may be underſtood of the earth or the grave; Naked came I out of my Mothers womb, and naked ſhall I return thither; to the womb of the earth, which is the grave: and ſo there may be in the latter a reference unto the former, taking the one properly, and the other improperly; taking the earth for his Mothers womb, in an improper ſence, ſc. the earth which is the common Parent from whence we all came, and to which we all return; the earth ſhall receive and take in all mankind again; when man dyes, the earth opens her bowels and receiveth him in; and which makes her once more a Mother, the earth at laſt being, as it were, with Child, or rather big with Children, ſhall travel in pain, and groaning to be delivered, ſhall by the mighty power of God, bring forth mankind again. There ſhall be a mighty birth from the womb of the earth at the laſt day. In Scripture the reſurrection is called a birth, in the day of the reſurrection mankind is anew begotten by God and mankind is anew, born: that clears it, Pſal. 2. 7. Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee; which words are applied by Paul, Act. 13. 12. to the reſurrection of Chriſt. God hath fulfilled the promiſe made unto the Fathers, unto us their Children, in that he hath raiſed up Jeſus again; as it is alſo written in Pſalm 2. Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee. And as Chriſt, ſo all men, but eſpecially all Chriſtians ſhall be again begotten by the power of God, and born from the womb of the earth in the day of their reſurrection.

So much for the underſtanding of thoſe words, Naked came I out of my Mothers womb, and naked ſhall I return thither.

I ſhall collect ſome Obſervations from them two wayes. Firſt, As they contain a general truth. Secondly, As they are an argument or a reaſon for the ſupport of a man in ſuch a ſad condition as Job was then reduced unto. In the former way obſerve, Firſt, That every man is born a poor, helpleſs, naked creature.

The ſoul is naked of all that is good, there is not a rag of grace upon it, when we come into the world. Our bodies are naked too, ſo that we are born with nothing upon us, but only an ugly dreſs of ſin, ſuch as may juſtly make God loath us, and us a terror to our ſelves. Naked came I into the world: this one thought well taken in and fully digeſted, will lay pride in the duſt; this thought that we were born thus naked, will ſtrip us of all high and proud thoughts of our ſelves.

Secondly, Naked ſhall I return. Note,

When death cometh, it ſhakes us out of all our worldly comforts and poſſeſſions.

Death is called an uncloathing, 2 Cor. 5. 4. We that are in this Tabernacle do groan, being burdened, not for that we would be uncloathed, that is, not that we would dye. Death is called an uncloathing, becauſe it pulleth all outward things off from a man; it pulleth off all his rayment, his riches, his lands, his honours; yea death uncloathes the very bones, our fleſh wears off quickly in the grave. We have a uſual phraſe among us, and it is a very proper one: when a rich man dies (we ſay) he left a great eſtate, he leaves it indeed, for he cannot carry it with him, he muſt go out naked, how well cloathed ſo ever he was while he was here. The Apoſtle doth more then intimate, that ſome rich men do ſcarce believe this for ſound doctrine; he ſpeaks as if he would beat them off from ſome thought of carrying the world with them out of the world; while they live they are buried in their riches, and when they die they hope their riches will be buried with them, yea and riſe with them again. Such a conceit (I ſay) the Apoſtle ſeems to meet with, for in 1 Tim. 6. 7. having ſaid, We brought nothing with us into this world, he addeth in the next words, and it is certain we can carry nothing out; he doth not ſay, we brought nothing into the world, and we can carry nothing out, as Job here ſpeaks; but as if Jobs aſſertion had come into queſtion in Pauls time, he ſaith, we brought nothing into this world, and it is certain, never doubt of the truth of it, we can carry nothing out; we ſhall go out as we came in. Many, as the Prophet Habakkuk ſpeaks, Chap. 2. 6. lade themſelves with thick clay: But, as the queſtion there follows, how long? This lading muſt be laid down again. If riches end not before thee as thine, they muſt end with thee. Yet if any would carry riches and cloathing out of the world, it will be their wiſdom to labour for ſpiritual riches, for ſpiritual cloathing; when ſuch die, as they ſhall not be found naked, ſo they ſhall not go out naked: All your other cloathing and riches muſt be left on this ſide the grave, but get ſpiritual cloathing and riches, and you ſhall go out of the world adorn'd and enrich'd for ever; the cloathing of grace, the robe of righteouſneſs, a veſture of ſpiritual ornaments will endure to all eternity.

Thirdly, Note here further, how the Holy Ghoſt deſcribes the life of man, Naked came I into the world, and naked ſhall I return.

The life of man is nothing elſe but a coming and a returning.

Here is nothing ſaid of ſtaying or abiding; We have here no continuing City; while we are here, we can hardly be ſaid to continue here, and after a few dayes we ſhall not be here at all. It is but a coming and a going, it is but a flood and an ebb, and then we are carried into the Ocean of eternity.

We may yet conſider the words as they are an argument (and ſo I ſhall note two things from them). So Job uſes them as an argument both to ſupport himſelf, and to acquit God. Then Obſerve, Firſt, That a godly man in his ſtraits ſtudieth arguments to acquit and juſtiſie God in all his dealings with him.

Job could not have found out upon longeſt ſtudy a better argument for the acquitting of God then this is: I have as much as I brought, then what wrong is done me in all this? As wicked men when they fall into ſtraits or troubles, eſpecially when they fall into ſin, ſtudy arguments how to ſhift themſelves out, and lay all the blame upon God; as Adam and Eve, our firſt Parents in Paradiſe, (there it began) when they had ſinned and were naked, they began to deviſe ſhifts how to put it from themſelves, and to faſten the fault upon God. David on the other ſide labours to clear God, if ever he ſhould be ſtript naked, Pſal. 51. 4. I will confeſs my ſin, that thou mayſt be juſtified when thou ſpeakeſt, and clear when thou judgeſt. Weigh the reaſon why David confeſſeth his ſin in that Pſalm, I do it, ſaith he, that I may by this means acquit God, whatſoever God ſhall do with me hereafter, whatſoever affliction God ſhall bring upon me; men it may be will begin to judge God for it, and to ſay that he hath dealt hardly with me, notice having been taken, what an eminent ſervant of God I have been. Behold, ſaith he, I confeſs my ſin before thee, that thou maiſt be clear when thou judgeſt; or as the Apoſtle Paul quotes the place, according to the Septuagint, Rom. 3. 4. That thou mighteſt overcome when thou art judged. David knew men would be apt to judge God, if they ſaw him afflicted; and therefore to ſtop their mouths, or to give God the day againſt them, he confeſſes his ſin; thereby ſhewing cauſe why God might chaſtiſe him, either for correction of ſin paſt, or prevention of ſin to come.

Secondly, As the argument referreth unto Job himſelf, we may Obſerve this,

> That the conſideration of what we once were, and of what at laſt we muſt be, may relieve our ſpirits in the greateſt outward afflictions of this life.

Art thou for the preſent in a naked condition? Conſider thou waſt naked once, and ere long ſhalt be naked again: Conſider the two extreams, the beginning and the ending, and that will bear thee up in the middle condition. There is many a man that complains, and ſaith, I have nothing but the cloaths upon my back left me, and they are but rags, but mean ones neither: Why! With nothing but the cloaths upon thy back? Know O man thou waſt born with nothing but thy skin upon thy back. Conſider this, and leave complaining; this was one thought which helped Job to bear this burden, the want of all. And the Apoſtle Paul uſeth this argument to the very ſame purpoſe, 1 Tim. 6. 6. having ſaid, That godlineſs with contentment is great gain; he ſubjoyns preſently this argument of Job, for ſaith he, we brought nothing into this world, and it is certain that we ſhall carry nothing out. To conſider what (not long ago) we were, and what very ſhortly we muſt be, will mightily work the ſoul to contentation in what eſtate ſoever we are. It follows,

The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away.

This is the ſecond argument which Job uſeth to both the former purpoſes; and it is a more ſpiritual and ſublime argument then the former. A man who hath nothing in him but nature, may ſay as much as Job did before, though he could never ſay it with Job's ſpirit; for though godly perſons uſe natural arguments and common reaſons, yet being concocted in their ſpirits, they become heavenly and ſpiritual. Natural men (I ſay) or Heathens have taken up ſuch an argument as that; as when word was brought to a Heathen Philoſopher, that his Son was dead, I know (ſaith he) that I begot a Son mortal, and ſubject to death; he did but look back to the common condition of man, and ſupported himſelf. But now I ſay this ſecond argument is higher, it is not an argument bottomed upon the frailty of nature, but upon the ſovereignty of God: this argument is grounded upon the equity of divine providence and diſpenſations. The Lord (ſaith he) hath given, and the Lord hath taken away.

Scio me mortalem genuiſſe.

The Lord hath given.] Every good and every perfect gift is from above, James 1. 17. What gifts doth Job here mean? He means good and perfect gifts in their kind; but not the beſt and moſt perfect kind of gifts. The Lord once gave me thoſe Oxen, thoſe Sheep, all theſe outward things that now I am ſtripped of, The Lord hath given. A gift is any good freely beſtowed; when we receive a thing which another was not ingaged to beſtow, that is a gift. Now God doth not only give us thoſe tranſcendents, grace and glory, faith in Chriſt here, and the fruition of Chriſt hereafter: not only are theſe gifts, I ſay, ſent in from God, and undeſerved by us; but outward things, riches and honour, children and ſervants, houſes and lands, theſe are the gifts of God likewiſe; we have not the leaſt creature comfort of our own, we have nothing of our own but ſin. What haſt thou, that thou haſt not received? is a truth concerning every thing we have, even to a hoof or a ſhoe-latchet. We are indebted unto God for our ſpirituals, for our temporals, for all. We muſt ſay of all, little or much, great or ſmall, The Lord hath given.

How did the Lord give Job all his riches and eſtate?

The Lord doth give either immediately or mediately. When Job ſaith, The Lord hath given, we are not to underſtand it, as if the Lord had brought ſuch a preſent to him, and ſaid, here take this eſtate, take theſe cattle, theſe ſervants; but God gave them mediately by bleſſing the labours of Job. So when the Lord proſpereth us in our honeſt endeavours, and labours, and callings, then the Lord giveth us outward things.

The Lord hath given. Job doth not ſay, by my ſtrength and diligence, my policy and prudence, I have got this eſtate; as the Aſſyrian ſaid, Iſa. 10. 13. By the ſtrength of my hand have I done this, and by my wiſdom, for I am prudent. Job takes no notice of himſelf; he was not idle, yet he ſpeaks as if he had done nothing, The Lord hath given.

This ſhould teach us in the firſt place to acknowledge the Lord as the fountain and donor of all our outward comforts. When you get wealth, do not ſay, this I have gotten (ſuch language is barbarous in divinity) but ſay, this, The Lord hath given. We find an expreſs caution to this purpoſe given by Moſes from God, not only againſt the former language of the tongue, but of the heart; when the Jews ſhould come to Canaan, and ſhould grow rich and great there. When thou haſt eaten and art full, then thou ſhalt bleſs the Lord. Beware thou forget not the Lord thy God, for the good land which he hath given thee, and ſay in thy heart, my power, and the might of my hand, hath gotten me this wealth; but thou ſhalt remember the Lord thy God, for it is he that giveth thee power to get wealth: It is he that giveth thee power. Many who are perſwaded that God gives them grace, that God gives Heaven and Salvation; are hardly perſwaded, or at leaſt do not ſo well conſider it, that God gives riches, &c. their hearts are yet ready to ſay, that they have gotten this wealth, they have gotten this honour. It is a ſweet thing when a man looks upward for theſe lower things, and can ſay on good grounds, that his earth hath dropt down to him from Heaven, The Lord hath given.

Deut. 8. 10, 11, 17, 18.

Further, when Job ſaith, The Lord hath given, it is an argument of his own juſtice and equity in getting: Job did not enrich himſelf by wrong, by grinding the face of the poor. If he had done ſo, he could not have ſaid, The Lord hath given. So much as we get honeſtly, we may look upon as a fruit of Gods bounty. Look into your eſtates, and whatſoever you have got by wrong dealing, take heed of ſaying, this is of Gods giving, for ſo you make God himſelf a partner in your ſins. God ſometime gives when we uſe no means, but he never gives when we uſe unlawful means. What God ſaid concerning the ſetting up of thoſe Kings, Hoſ. 8. 4. They have ſet up Kings, but not by me; he ſaith of all, who enrich themſelves by wrong, they have gotten riches, but not by me. When men leave the rule of juſtice, God leaves them: And though unlawful acts are under the eye of Gods providence, yet they are not under the influence of his bleſſing. Wicked men thrive often, but they are never bleſſed; their proſperity is their curſe.

Thirdly, It is obſervable, that when Job would ſupport himſelf in the loſs of his eſtate, he calls to mind how he came by his eſtate; and finding it all given in by the bleſſing of God upon his honeſt labours and endeavours, he is ſatisfied. Note,

> That, what we get honeſtly, that we can part with contentedly.

He that hath got his eſtate by injuſtice, can never leave it with patience. Honeſty in getting cauſeth quietneſs of ſpirit in looſing outward things. Keep a good conſcience in getting the world, and you ſhall have peace when you cannot keep the world. Whereas a wrong-doer and a wrong-dealer, is in ſuch a day under a double affliction; he is afflicted with his preſent loſs, and he ought to be afflicted for his former gain.

Fourthly, Theſe words, the Lord hath given, being rightly handled, will be as a ſword to cut off four monſters or monſtrous luſts, which annoy all the world; or as a medicine to cure four diſeaſes about worldly things. Two of theſe luſts are ſtrongeſt in the rich; and the other pair aſſault the poor. The poor pine either with diſcontent, becauſe they have ſo little; or with envy, becauſe others have ſo much. The rich ſwell with pride, becauſe they have abundance, or they are fill'd with contempt of thoſe that are in want. Let the rich ſeriouſly weigh this ſpeech, it will cure them of pride, Charge them that are rich (ſaith the Apoſtle, 1 Tim. 6. 17.) that they be not high-minded. You ſee how ſubject rich men are to this inflammation of pride. But with what doth he prick this Bladder? It is with this thought, that God gives all riches; Let them truſt in the living God, who giveth us all things richly to enjoy. That argument of the Apoſtle, 1 Cor. 4. 7. If thou haſt received it, why doſt thou boaſt? is as ſtrong and as true in regard of temporals, as of ſpirituals. Conſider ſeriouſly that your eſtates are the gift of God, and down falls pride. If you come honeſtly by them, they are the gift of God; if you come diſhoneſtly by them, they are the gifts of Satan; and you ought to be aſhamed of them, and reſtore them, not to boaſt, or be proud of them.

Then ſecondly, It will cure the rich of all contempt of others. What the Apoſtle James obſerved and cenſured in the rich of thoſe times, is found by too much experience among the rich at this day; Ye have deſpiſed the poor, chap. 2. 6. Conſider it is the Lord who gave, and he gave as a Lord, freely; he might have given thine eſtate to that poor man, and have left thee in that condition thou ſo much deſpiſeſt in thy brother: God gave him as much as his wiſdom thought fit; and it ſeems he hath given thee more then thou art fit for: In deſpiſing him, thou doſt aſperſe the diſpenſation of God, and whilſt thou woundeſt him in his poverty, thou woundeſt God in his providence. Conſider it is the Lord that gives, and then be unconvinced, if you can, that while you contemn man in his wants, you queſtion God in his wiſdom; buſie thy ſelf hereafter in praiſing him who gives All, and leave deſpiſing him who hath received leſs.

Then likewiſe let the poor look upon this Text, and it will cure them of two diſeaſes, into which they often fall, and by which they are much endangered, even in the vitals of Grace; Diſcontent, and Envy. It is the Lord that giveth, that ſhapes and cuts out your condition, why then ſhould you not be contented with his allowance, and be thankful in your lot? If your eſtates be proportioned from above, you ought to be content with your portion. Ignorance or Inadvertency from whom we receive, cauſeth murmuring at what we have. Do not think thou haſt leſs love from God, becauſe thou haſt leſs allowance from God. The power of God is as much acted in making a Fly, as in making an Elephant; and his love may be as much, and is often more acted in giving a penny, then in giving a talent. Know this thou who art a child of God, if thy portion be but a penny, it hath upon it the Image and Superſcription, a Fathers love, which is better then life.

This alſo will cure the poor of envy: many times the poor have an evil eye of envy at the rich; they cannot bear it, that others have ſo much, and they ſo little: Conſider, it is the Lord that giveth. This argument Chriſt uſeth, Mat. 15. 20. to him that was angry that they who came at the latter end of the day, had as much as he; May not I do with mine own what I will? Is thine eye evil, becauſe mine is good? The envious eye is an evil eye; envy is the diſeaſe of the eyes. This Text is one of the beſt Medicines that ever was preſcribed. Wilt thou be ſick, becauſe another is in health; and make thy Brothers happineſs the ground of thy miſery? Do not think that all is loſt, which is not caſt into thy lap; or that thy eſtate is leſs or worſe, becauſe thou ſeeſt one having a greater, or a better. Muſt God ask thee leave, or ask thy counſel, how, and in what meaſure to diſtribute his favours? Were all but well Catechized in this one Principle, that God gives all, it would ſoon diſpel this malignant vapour, and all would reſt ſatisfied, not becauſe they or others have received thus or thus, but becauſe God hath thus diſpoſed to all.

Obſerve one thing more;

If the Lord give us all, then we ſhould be willing to give back ſomewhat unto the Lord again.

And this conſideration that God gives us, will make us willing to give unto God. What is the reaſon that many are ſo unwilling to give ſomewhat unto God? It is becauſe they will not underſtand that they are beholding to God for all. If they were perſwaded of their receipts from him, a little Oratory might perſwade a gift from them, in the cauſe of God; eſpecially when God intreats them, who may of right command them; when he is content to take it as a courteſie, who may ſend for it by authority, and expect it as a duty. God himſelf, who fills and enjoyes all things, hath ſometimes (in a ſenſe) need of your eſtates. Chriſt, who is Lord of Heaven and Earth, is ſometimes in want of a penny. Chriſt tells you of his wants and poverty, Mat. 25. and ſhews how and when he is relieved. And as Chriſt wants in a Member, ſome particular Believer; ſo he often wants in his whole Body; which is the Church, or whole company of Believers. If you have any ſpiritual wiſdom, to diſcern times and ſeaſons, you may know, that now Chriſt wants money (as I have explained) now God (in his cauſe) hath need. He goes about (in thoſe who ſolicit his cauſe) and asks a relief at every one of your doors. Now then do but conſider, when any thing is asked for the Lords ſake, that the Lord gave all; this will be a key to unlock your cheſts; this will at once untie your hearts and your purſes. Will you let Chriſt want, ſhall the cauſe of God want, while you have it, whereas what you have, God gave? It is expreſs concerning Nabal, that this was the reaſon why he would not part with a loaf of bread to relieve David and his Army, 1 Sam. 25. 11. Shall I take my bread and my water, and my fleſh that I have killed for my ſhearers, and ſend them to a fellow, I know not who? You ſee the man was all in his poſſeſſives, my bread, and my water, and my fleſh; he never thought that God had any ſhare or intereſt in his eſtate, that God gave it; therefore he would not give to a ſervant of God. You ſhall ſee on the other hand, how David's munificence, and that of the Nobles with him, 2 Chron. 29. ſprung from this root, the acknowledgment that nothing was their own, it came in all from God; when they had offered ſo willingly and bountifully towards the building of the Temple, David ſhews the Mine which yielded ſo much treaſure; even this we have digged in all this while: All things come of thee, and of thine own we have given thee, verſ. 15. They confeſſed that all came of God, they were but Stewards, he was the Owner; and his own they could not with-hold from him. God giveth us the uſe of the creature, but he keepeth the right to them in his own hand; when we have the poſſeſſion of them, he hath the property. Wherefore let the conſideration, that God giveth all, make us ready and open-handed to give unto God, when he calleth and requireth it at our hands.

And the Lord hath taken away.] When God gives, it is an act of bounty; and when he takes, it is an act of juſtice; for he is Lord, ſovereign Lord in both. But why doth Job here charge this upon God? The Lord hath taken. Was it not told him by the meſſengers, that the Caldeans and Sabeans came and took away his cattel, plundered and pillaged his eſtate? They told him, that the fire conſumed his Sheep, and the wind blew down the houſe upon his Children: Why doth Job ſay, The Lord hath taken? What! will Job charge all thoſe robberies upon God himſelf? Doth not this look like the blaſphemy that the Devil hoped would have come out of Job's mouth?

I anſwer, when Job ſaith, The Lord hath taken, it doth but ſet forth the ſupream power and ſovereignty of God, in ordering all things; and (as we opened before) that God gave the commiſſion to Satan, or leave to ſpoil him, or elſe Satan could not have touched one of the dogs of his Flock. Job knew that God had all men and Devils, fire and wind, all creatures in his hand. He ſaith, the Lord hath taken; becauſe none could take, but by the will of God; and he was ſatisfied, that God willed that in righteouſneſs and in judgment, which they acted with ſo much cruelty and injuſtice. Is there any evil in the City, and the Lord hath not done it? Amos 3. 6. Every evil of affliction or of trouble, is ſaid to be the Lords doing, becauſe it cannot be done without the Lord. Wicked men, in all their plots, and in all their ſucceſſes, are either the rod of God, to chaſten his people for their ſins; or elſe they are as Gods furnace, to try his peoples Graces, and purge them from their ſins. Thus the hand of the Lord is in all our ſorrows, The Lord, ſaith Job, hath taken away.

We ſhould from hence learn, In all our afflictions to look beyond the Creature.

In all the evils we either feel or fear, let our hearts be carried up unto God. As then we rightly enjoy outward bleſſings, when thoſe bleſſings carry us up unto God, when, upon creatures, our hearts are raiſed up to heaven: So then we make a right uſe of afflictions, of croſſes and troubles, when we are led by croſſes (in our meditations) unto God. Job doth not ſay, The Lord hath given, and the Caldeans have taken away; the Lord hath enriched me, and Satan hath robbed me; but, as if he had never made any mention of Satan or Caldeans, of fire or wind, he ſaith, The Lord hath given, and the Lord hath taken. He doth not fall out with man, or complain of the Devil, he is not angry with chance or fortune, with ſtars or conſtellations; many, in the troubleſom evils which they ſuffer, are apt to flie out upon all creatures, and upon all cauſes, rather then to caſt an eye upon God; whereas indeed, we ſhould not take either good or evil out of the hand of any creature. There were ſome of old, Marcion, and his followers, who could not reliſh this Doctrine, nor endure that we ſhould carry our evils, and lay them before Gods door, and ſay, The Lord hath done this: therefore they found out two beginnings; that is, two Gods, rather then they would make the ſame God the author of ſuch extreams (as they thought) of good and evil: They ſaid, there was one God that was a good God, and another an evil God; the one, a giving God, the other, a taking God; the one a loving God, a merciful God; the other, an angry God, a ſevere God. Many of the Heathen taught better Divinity then thoſe Hereticks: for they feigned, that their Jupiter had two great veſſels placed at the entrance of his Palace, whereof the one was filled with Good, and the other with Evil: Theſe he diſpenſed according to the dictate of his own will, among the ſons of men. And they painted Fortune in two forms, with two faces of contrary colours, the foremoſt white, the hindermoſt black; to ſignifie, that good and evil, which they ſhadowed under white and black, come both from Goddeſs Fortune: which comes near that language in the Prophet, Iſa. 45.7. I form the light, and create darkneſs; I make peace, and create evil. And we are taught to look upon the ſame God, as the ſpring and fountain of all good, and of all this ſort of evil. Though it be a truth (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks) that the ſame fountain cannot ſend forth bitter water and ſweet, take it in a natural or moral ſence; yet the ſame fountain may ſend forth bitter and ſweet, take it in a civil ſence; that is, the ſame may be the author of outward corrections, and outward favours. God is not the fountain of good and evil in a moral ſence, ſo nothing but good floweth from him; but take it in a civil ſence, and ſo both good and evil, bitter and ſweet come from the ſame fountain.

Conſider the words, as they are an argument, and then ſee their ſtrength to the purpoſes, for which Job doth eſpecially here apply them: 1. The acquitting or juſtifying of God. 2. The ſupporting and comforting of himſelf: and ſo we may note from them,

First, That, The abſolute ſoveraignty of the Lord over us, is enough to acquit him from doing us any wrong, whatſoever he doth with us.

Job ſaith only this, The Lord hath given, and the Lord hath taken: he is the ſovereign Lord, therefore I have no reaſon to complain; he doth it, upon whom I have laid no engagement, upon whom I have no tie at all, to do this or that for me; he doth it who may reſolve the reaſon of all his actions into his own will; he is the Lord. God cannot injure his creature; therefore the Apoſtle hath recourſe to that only, in Rom. 9. for the anſwer of all cavils and objections againſt Gods dealing with man; Hath not the Potter power over the Clay? The ſoveraignty and ſupremacy of the Lord is enough to bear him out whatſoever he doth, with or to his creatures. O man, who art thou that replieſt againſt God?

Then again, it is as ſtrong for the ſecond end; for the ſupport of the ſoul in bearing evil: conſider that it is the Lord that giveth, and the Lord that takes. The thought of Gods ſoveraignty over us, and over ours, may quiet our ſpirits in all that he doth unto us or ours. As it doth juſtifie God, ſo it doth quiet us: Hear David, Pſal. 39.9. I was dumb, ſaith he, and opened not my mouth, becauſe thou didſt it: He doth not ſay, I was contented becauſe thou dealteſt thus and thus with me; but, I was dumb, and opened not my mouth, becauſe thou didſt it; that it was the act of God, the ſovereign Lord, ſatisfied him; he had not a word to ſay, becauſe God did it. So Job here, The Lord hath taken away, is, as if he had ſaid, I could not have born this at the hands of any creature, but at the hands of my ſoveraign Lord, that may diſpoſe of me and mine, and do what he pleaſeth; at his hands I not only bear it, but take it well.

Joſeph had not a word of diſcontent to vent againſt his Brethren, being thus reſolved; It was not you that ſent me hither, but God, Gen. 45. And David layes aſide all revenge againſt railing Shimei, on this ground, So let him curſe; becauſe the Lord hath ſaid unto him, curſe David, 2 Sam. 16.10. A godly man cannot be angry at the doing or ſpeaking of that which pleaſeth God, that it ſhould be done or ſpoken. And it takes away all complaining, That the Lord hath taken away.

Bleſſed be the Name of the Lord.

The Septuagint, and ſo the Vulgar, from them, inſert here another Sentence between theſe two; The Lord hath taken away, bleſſed be the name of the Lord: reading it thus, The Lord hath given, and the Lord hath taken away *: as it pleaſeth the Lord, ſo cometh things to paſs, bleſſed be the name of the Lord; but we have no more in the Hebrew, then our own Tranſlation gives us.

* ὡς τῷ κυρίῳ ἔδοξεν οὕτως ἐγένετο. Sept.

Bleſſed be the Name of the Lord.] This is the triumphant concluſion which floweth from the former Propoſitions; this is the iſſue and reſult of them both: a concluſion as oppoſite to Satans deſign, (as the two Poles of the heavens are one againſt the other. Satan waited to hear Job conclude with blaſpheming the name of the Lord; and now he heareth Job conclude with bleſſing the name of the Lord. How did this vex and ſting Satan? This one word of Job did wound Satan more then all the afflictions which Satan procured, wounded Job. Though I return naked, though all be taken from me, yet bleſſed be the name of the Lord.

Bleſſed be the Name of the Lord.] The Name of God in Scripture, is taken, Firſt, For God himſelf. The name of a thing, it is put for the thing named, Pſal. 44.5. Through thee we will puſh down our enemies, through thy name we will tread them down that riſe up againſt us. Through thy name, that is, through thee: Through thee and through thy name, are the ſame. So, Pſal. 48. 10. According to thy name, ſo is thy praiſe, that is, thou art praiſed like thy ſelf; as thou art in thy ſelf, ſo thou art or oughteſt to be praiſed by thy people; the name is put for the perſon. You have it clearly, Acts 1. 15. The number of names together, were about an hundred and twenty; that is, the number of perſons, ſo many perſons, becauſe numbred by their names.

Secondly, The Name of God is often in Scripture put for the Attributes of God.

Thirdly, The Name of God is put for his Ordinances or worſhip: Go ye now to my place which was in Shiloh, where I ſet my Name at the firſt, Jer. 7.12. that is, where I firſt ſet up my publick worſhip; becauſe as a man is known by his proper name, ſo is God by his proper worſhip. And therefore falſe worſhip is the ſetting up of a ſtrange god. When we miſtake the name, we miſtake the perſon.

Fourthly, The Name of God is that reverence, eſteem and honour, which Angels and men give unto God. As we know amongſt us, the report and reputation that a man hath among men, is a mans name; what men ſpeak of him, that is his name: ſuch an one hath a good name, we ſay; ſuch an one hath an ill name; that is, men ſpeak or think well or ill of ſuch perſons. So, Gen. 6.4. When Moſes deſcribes the Giants, he ſaith, they were men of renown; the Hebrew is, they were men of name, becauſe the name of a man is the opinion he hath amongſt men; as a man is eſteemed, ſo his name is carried, and himſelf is accepted in the world. So the name of God is that high eſteem, thoſe honourable apprehenſions, which Angels and Men have of God; ſuch as the thoughts and ſpeeches of men are for the celebration of Gods glory and praiſe, ſuch is his name in the world. Bleſſed be the name of the Lord.

אנשי
השם

By bleſſing God, we are to underſtand, either, firſt, what we expreſs in word concerning God. God is bleſſed by his creatures, when his goodneſs, and greatneſs, and mercy, and bounty, and faithfulneſs, and juſtice, are publiſhed with thankſgiving and praiſe. Or God is bleſſed likewiſe, when we have high, and great, and glorious thoughts of God; when we inwardly fear, and reverence, and love, and honour God, then we bleſs God. The one is to bleſs with the tongue, the other to bleſs with the heart. The tongue bleſſing without the heart, is but a tinckling Cymbal: the heart bleſſing without the tongue, makes ſweet, but ſtill muſick; both in conſort, make that harmony which fills and delights Heaven and Earth. When Job ſaith here, bleſſed be the name of the Lord, we are to underſtand it both wayes; that Job ſpeaks out the bleſſing of God with his mouth, and likewiſe he had high and reverent thoughts of God. His heart and tongue met at this work and word. Bleſſed be the Name of the Lord.

We may note from hence, That, God is worthy of all praiſe and honour, not only when he doth enrich and ſtrengthen us, when he fills and protects us; but alſo when he doth impoveriſh and weaken us, when he empties and ſmites us, when he gives us up to the will of our enemies, to the will of Devils and wicked men, even then God is to be bleſſed.

It is a good thing, and it is our duty to bleſs God, when we are rich, and when we are full; as, Deut. 8. 10. When thou haſt eaten, and art full, then thou ſhalt bleſs the Lord: But it is a far better thing (yet but our duty) to bleſs the Lord when we are poor and weak, when we are empty, and have nothing to eat; then to bleſs the Lord, is the breathing of an excellent ſpirit indeed, 1 Theſ. 5. 18. In every thing give thanks: Let God do what he will with his children, they have cauſe to thank him, as he is God in himſelf, bleſſed for evermore. When God thunders in judgments ſo loud, that he breaketh the Cedars, and ſhakes the Wilderneſs, then to give unto the Lord the glory due unto his name, and in his Temple to ſpeak of his glory, argues a ſpirit highly ennobled, and glorious in Grace, Pſal. 29. Therefore his children ſhould not reſt in this, that they bear afflictions, but they ſhould labour to bring their hearts to bleſs and glorifie God in, and for the afflictions that they bear. And a ſoul that thus honoureth God, ſhall aſſuredly receive honour from God. That which the Apoſtle ſpeaks of the Saints ſuffering perſecution, is true of them in any kind of holy ſuffering, the ſpirit of Glory and of God doth reſt upon them, 1 Pet. 4. 14. The Spirit of God is ſpoken of, as if it were unſetled or unquiet, and knew not where to fix it ſelf, till it had found ſuch a ſoul; like Noah's Dove, that went hovering about, and knew not where to reſt the ſole of her foot, till it came to the Ark; ſo the Spirit of God is expreſt, as hovering about from perſon to perſon, from place to place, as if it could not reſt any where, till he found a ſoul triumphing and bleſſing God in affliction; at leaſt lying quietly under affliction, till God takes it off, and there the Spirit reſts and ſettles it ſelf.

Obſerve further, that Job here bleſſeth God in his afflictions, and that makes the difference; his afflictions now are good unto him.

If we bleſs God in our afflictions, then our afflictions are bleſſings unto us.

We have ſo much bleſſing in our affliction, as we can bleſs God for our affliction. There is a mighty power in this ſpeech, I bleſs God; it changeth evil into good: here is an heavenly Alchimy (as we may ſpeak) whatſoever affliction you touch with bleſſing God, you turn that affliction to a bleſſing; if you have an Iron yoke of affliction upon you, do but touch it with bleſſing God, it turneth it into Gold. When you have a heavy croſs upon you, ready to weigh you down, do but touch the croſs with this word from the heart, , and it makes it as a Crown of Glory upon your heads. Thus, (I ſay) you may turn every evil into good, every affliction into a comfort and a bleſſing, if you can but touch it with bleſſing the Name of God.

We will come to the Concluſion.

In all this Job ſinned not, nor charged God fooliſhly.

This teſtimony the Lord giveth concerning Job, both in reference to what he did, and what he ſpake. In all this, in renting his mantle, in ſhaving his head, in falling to the ground, in worſhipping, in ſaying, Naked came I out of my mothers womb, and naked ſhall I return thither; The Lord hath given, and the Lord hath taken away; bleſſed be the Name of the Lord. In all this Job ſinned not, neither charged God fooliſhly, God himſelf puts all the actions, and all the ſpeeches of Job into the ballance, and finds not any lightneſs in them; he bringeth all that he hath done, and all that he hath ſaid, to the touchſtone, and finds them pure metal. The holy Ghoſt, the great and infallible moderator of this cauſe and queſtion between Job and Satan, determines, That in all this Job ſinned not, neither did he charge God fooliſhly.

But it will be objected, Is there any man that ſinneth not? or, is there any man that ſinneth not in every thing? How then are we to underſtand what the holy Ghoſt pronounceth, In all this Job ſinned not? Is any man ſo holy, or can his heart be kept in ſo holy a frame, as to do and ſpeak ſo much, without any touch of ſin, without any ſpot of defilement? Job's queſtion, chap. 9. affirms, that no man can do any one act purely pure; Who can bring a clean thing out of that which is unclean? Now Job himſelf in his nature, was unclean, he had uncleanneſs in him; how then was a clean thing brought out of Job? Whence had he ſuch a priviledge above his brethren, as not to ſin in doing and ſuffering ſo many things?

There are ſome Popiſh Commentators, who would build the Tower of perfection upon this and other the like Scriptures; ſcil. That a man may in this life be freed from all ſin. For the refuting this ſence, and clearing of the Text, I will give you the reſolution in a diſtinction or two.

Firſt, If we conſider ſinful actions, they are of two ſorts. There are actions ſinful in the matter, when the very thing done is a ſin; as, to ſteal, to lie, to be drunk, to commit adultery, and the like; the very thing done is a ſin materially. There are other actions that are ſinful in the formality or manner of doing; ſo a good work in the matter, may be ſinful in the manner of doing. We do not aſſert that all the works of regenerate perſons are ſins, as if they were ſinful actions, or that all that they do is ſinful in the matter; for that were a reproach to the Spirit of Chriſt, that were a reproach to the Grace of Chriſt, by which they being regenerated, act and do theſe things. But we poſitively affirm, that to the works of regenerate perſons, to their beſt works ſome defilement cleaves; ſo that though the action be not ſinful, yet there is ſome ſin in the action. There is a great deal of difference between a ſinful action, and ſin in an action: We have rhat difference expreſly, Exod. 28. 38. Where the High Prieſt is ſaid to bear the iniquity of the holy things: holy things, yet iniquity in them; holy things in the matter of them, yet iniquity in the manner of performing them.

Now when it is ſaid here, In all this Job ſinned not, we are to underſtand it firſt thus; Here were no ſinful acts in the matter of them, ſuch as Satan did promiſe to himſelf, and did undertake with God, that Job would ſpeak and break out into: Satan was confident that Job would blaſpheme and curſe God to his face; this was an act of an high nature, ſinful in the very matter of it, an act abominable. In all this Job ſinned not ſuch a ſin; he was not tranſported by paſſion or impatiency to reproach and curſe the living God.

Secondly, In Scripture-language we are ſaid not to ſin, when we do not commit ſuch & ſuch ſins; as is clear in that inſtance about David, of whom this tranſcendent teſtimony is given, 1 Kings 15. 5. That he turned not aſide from any thing the Lord commanded him all the dayes of his life, ſave only in the matter of Uriah the Hittite: a high expreſſion of his holineſs. What then? ſhall we think that David never ſinned at all, but in that matter? No, the meaning of it is, that David never fell groſly or foully, but that time; in compariſon of that act, all the reſt of the life of David went for ſo holy, as if he had lived without any ſin at all. In this ſenſe the Apoſtle John giveth the command not to ſin, 1 John 2. 1. I write unto you little Children, that you ſin not (it is a poſſible precept in an evangelical ſence) that is, that you ſin not as wicked men do, who can do nothing elſe but ſin. In this ſence, Job ſinned not; he carried himſelf like an holy perſon, like an obedient child of God, like one born of God (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks) whoſe Character and priviledge it is, that he cannot ſin. Such have the bleſſing of impotency in the unregenerate part, ſo that they cannot ſin ſtrongly; though as yet they have not that ability, in their regenerate part, not to ſin at all.

1 Joh. 3. 9.

The Septuagint adds to this clauſe, He ſinned not before the Lord, or againſt the Lord. The Vulgar adds thoſe words, with his lips. Neither of them mend the ſence of the Hebrew Text; and the latter makes it worſe. For it is a higher and clearer teſtimony to ſay, In all this Job ſinned not, then to ſay, In all this Job ſinned not with his lips; for he might ſin in thought,&c. though it be moſt true which the Apoſtle James ſpeaks, chap. 3. 7. If any man offend not in word, the ſame is a perfect man.

Or charged God fooliſhly.] The Tranſlations are ſomewhat different; the Septuagint thus, He did not caſt any folly upon God; others, He did not offer any thing unſavoury of God; another, He did not accuſe or complain of God: The word in the Original is, He did not give; we tranſlate, He did not charge.

ὐκ ἔδωκεν ἀφροσύνην τῷ Θεῷ. Sept.
Non dedit inſulſum Deo. Ar. Mont.
ὐκ ἐμέμψατο τῷ Θεῷ. Olym.
תפלה Proprie inſulſitas.

The word which we tranſlate adverbially [fooliſhly] is a Noun in the Original; yet it is fully enough to the ſence, He charged not God fooliſhly, or, he charged not God with folly, ſo it is rather in the Original. That word which is here tranſlated folly, ſignifieth in the general, any thing that is indebite diſpoſitum, any thing that is unduly diſpoſed, any thing in diſorder: And we find it in Scripture referred divers wayes.

Firſt, It is put for unſavoury meat, without ſalt or ſauce; as, Job 6. 6. Can that which is unſavoury, be eaten without ſalt? The word [unſavoury] there, is the ſame with this, here rendred folly or fooliſhly.

Secondly, It is uſed for mortar that hath not a due temper or mixture in it; as, Ezek. 13. 14. I will break down the wall that ye have dawbed with untempered mortar; mortar that is not well tempered, is unfit for uſe.

Thirdly, It is put for any rude, undigeſted or indiſcreet ſpeech; as, Lam. 2. 14. Thy Prophets have ſeen vain and fooliſh things for thee; they have ſeen fooliſh and unſavoury things for thee. Hence the word is uſed to expreſs madneſs; becauſe madneſs is the height of folly, being without any ſeaſoning, without any temper, a thing that hath no taſte of wiſdom or goodneſs in it, Jer. 23. 13. I have ſeen folly in the Prophets of Samaria; that is, they are unſavoury, their ſpeeches are untempered mortar, they are fooliſh and vain. So then, he did not charge God with folly, or charge God fooliſhly, hath this ſenſe, Job did not ſpeak any thing raſhly, or unbecoming the Majeſty of God, or charge him in the leaſt, to have dealt unwiſely or unjuſtly with him. As if the Lord had ſaid, Satan, thou didſt expect that Job ſhould now at this time have charged me home, and have laid load upon me with complainings, for dealing thus with him; thou expectedſt that he ſhould have broken out into the dialect of hell it ſelf; ſuch words as theſe, Why, what have I done againſt God, that he ſhould deal thus with me? Is this the wages that I ſhall receive for the work and ſervice I have done him? Will he diſcourage and diſhearten others from coming on to his ſervice, by my ſad example? Is it juſtice in God, that I, who have lived ſo innocently, ſhould be thus extreamly afflicted? Could the Lord find out no ſwearers, no drunkards, no adulterers in the world, to let Satan looſe upon, but he muſt needs turn him looſe upon me? Had he no other Butt in the world to ſhoot the arrows of his indignation at, but at an innocent breaſt? Is this a juſt God, who uſes his ſervants thus? Or, if he be omniſcient and omnipotent, why then did he not protect me from Satans rage? Why did he not defend me from the violence of thoſe evil men? Such kind of ſpeeches, or to this effect, Satan expected Job would have uttered raſhly againſt the Lord: but he is deceived; Job hath no ſuch thought, much leſs did he ſpeak ſuch words, either againſt the juſtice, or wiſdom, or power of God; he charges no folly upon God, the only wiſe God, but gives him glory; ſaying, Bleſſed be his Name, whatſoever he doth with me or mine.

Learn from hence, firſt, what blaſphemy is, or what it is to curſe God:

> To curſe God, is to charge God with folly, or with doing things fooliſhly and raſhly.

For theſe expreſſions expound one another. Satan ſaid Job would curſe God; the holy Ghoſt ſaith, Job hath not charged God fooliſhly; therefore that is a definition of Gods own making, plainly declaring what it is to curſe God: Yet every ſpeech or act unbecoming the Majeſty, Wiſdom and Power of God, doth not preſently denominate a man a blaſphemer: There may be blaſphemy in what is ſpoken, and yet the perſon ſpeaking, not a blaſphemer. Job himſelf ſpake many things afterward unadviſedly in the heat of diſpute; but he blaſphemed not. Blaſphemy or curſing of God, properly taken, is ever joyned with an intent to caſt reproach upon God. As every one is not a liar, that telleth what is not true; but he that telleth an untruth, knowing it to be an untruth, with an intent to deceive and wrong others. So he that thinks or ſpeaks a thing unbecoming God, with an intent to reproach or ſlander God, and his wayes, this is blaſpheming indeed.

> Secondly, Obſerve, Impatience under, and murmuring at the croſs which God layes upon us, is a charging of God with folly.

Murmuring againſt God, queſtions the wiſdom of God. Complaints have a charge in them. We tax what is done, while we ſubmit not to what is done. When we lie under Gods hand quietly and ſilently, then we ſpeak the praiſe of God, then our carriage aſcribes all wiſdom, honour and glory unto him.

Thirdly, In that it is ſaid by way of excellency concerning Job, that in all this Job ſinned not, referring it to his behaviour under theſe afflictions; as if the holy Ghoſt had ſaid, it is matter of admiration that in this, in all this Job ſhould not ſin. Note from hence,

> That, It is an high act, one of the higheſt acts of Grace, to be compoſed in thought and word under great afflictions.

In all this Job ſinned not; as if he had ſaid, it had not been much for Job, not to ſin in other things; but in this affliction, in this diſtreſs, being ſo put to it, being thus tried, in all this not to ſin, is Grace, almoſt to a miracle.

> Laſtly, Note this, What is well done by us, ſhall be ſure to receive a fair teſtimony from God.

When Job had carried himſelf diſcreetly, and ſpoken diſcreetly, the Lord hides not this in darkneſs, he ſhuts it not up in ſilence; but proclaims the innocency and uprightneſs of his carriage in this preſent paſſage of his life, as he had done before, concerning the whole courſe of his life and converſation, that he was perfect and upright. The Apoſtle publiſheth, Glory, and honour, and peace, to every man that worketh good, Rom. 2. 10. They that carry themſelves well either in ſuffering, or in working for God, ſhall have glory, and honour, and peace from God. No man needs blow a trumpet in his own praiſe, when he hath done well; as the Phariſees did, Mat. 6. What we do well, the Lord himſelf will report to all the world: In all this Job ſinned not, nor charged God fooliſhly.

And ſo we have done with this third part of the Chapter, and with this whole Chapter; which contains (as you have heard) thoſe three generals, the deſcription of Job's properous eſtate, the deſcription of his trials and afflictions, and the deſcription of his carriage under thoſe afflictions. Now when he is come off from this aſſault without wound, without any touch of ſin, Satan perceiving himſelf defeated and fruſtrated in this attempt, will not yet give it over, he is reſtleſs, he will attempt him once more. We ſhall find him in the next Chapter, at the Aſſembly again, renewing his motion for a ſecond aſſault; that he may have leave to lay his ſiege nearer and cloſer to Job; preſuming, that though he had not prevailed at firſt, yet he ſhall at the ſecond charge; let me charge him but once more, and then ſee his fall, he will curſe thee to thy face.

CHAP. II. Verſ. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6.

Again there was a day when the Sons of God came to preſent themſelves before the Lord, and Satan came alſo among them to preſent himſelf before the Lord.

And the Lord ſaid unto Satan, from whence comeſt thou? and Satan anſwered the Lord and ſaid, from going to and fro in the earth, and from walking up and down in it.

And the Lord ſaid unto Satan, Haſt thou conſidered my ſervant Job, that there is none like him in the Earth, a perfect and an upright man, one that feareth God, and eſcheweth evil? and ſtill he holdeth faſt his integrity, although thou movedſt me againſt him to deſtroy him without cauſe.

And Satan anſwered the Lord, and ſaid, skin for skin, yea all that a man hath will he give for his life.

But put forth thine hand now, and touch his bone and his fleſh, and he will curſe thee to thy face.

And the Lord ſaid unto Satan, Behold he is in thine hand, but ſave his life.

AS the Prophet Ezekiel, when in viſion he had been ſhewed one abomination, was led forward to a ſecond, and a third, and a fourth, with, Come ſee a greater abomination then this, or thoſe. Or as the Angel proclaimeth in the Revelation, One woe is paſt, and another woe is at hand. The ſame may we ſay concerning this Hiſtory of Job's ſorrows. Having ſhewed you his firſt affliction in the former Chapter, I muſt now lead on your attentions, with, Come behold a ſecond, a greater then that; and having ſhewed you one woful day, I muſt now ſhew you a ſecond; Again there was a day when the Sons of God came to preſent themſelves.

Ezek. 8.

This whole Chapter preſents us in the general with Job's ſecond tryal: About which we may obſerve theſe particulars.

1. The occaſion of it.
2. The cauſes of it.
3. The manner of it.
4. The conſequents of it.

1. The occaſion of it was Satans appearing at that heavenly Seſſion; and being there queſtioned about that former affliction of Job, he anſwers with ſlander, and deſireth that Job may be brought about to a ſecond trial.

2. The cauſes of this affliction (as of the firſt) are two.
   1. God. And
   2. Satan.

1. God permitting and limiting it.
2. Satan provoking and then inflicting it. Both are laid down in the words of the context now read, to the end of the ſixth verſe.

3. The manner of this affliction, was the ſtriking and ſmiting of Job's body with a ſore and noyſom diſeaſe, which you have contained in ver. 7, 8.

4. The Conſequents of this affliction, or what followed upon it, and thoſe are three.
   1. His Wives ſinful counſel, ver. 9. As ſoon as ſhe ſaw him thus ſmitten, What (ſaith ſhe) doſt thou ſtill retain thine integrity? Curſe God and dye. There's her counſel.
   2. His wiſe and holy reply, ver. 10.
   3. His Friends loving viſit, ver. 11, 12, 13. They hearing of the affliction of Job, came from a far Countrey, to ſee him, and to comfort him.

Theſe are the diſtinct parts of the whole Chapter.

Theſe ſix verſes decipher the occaſion and the cauſes of Job's affliction; Satan inciting and provoking the Lord; and the Lord permitting and limiting Satan.

The three firſt contain the ſame matter which we have opened and explained in the former Chapter, and they are almoſt word for word the ſame; therefore I ſhall not need to ſtay long upon them: Only I ſhall enquire a little further about two things.

Firſt, About the day of this great appearance. And ſecondly, About the perſons appearing, who are ſaid to be the Sons of God.

To the former of theſe, the Jewiſh Doctors contend much, That this was the firſt day in the recourſe or return of the year: intimating, if not contending, that the firſt day of every year was as Gods day of general Audit, in which he conveen'd or called together his Angels, to give him an account of all the paſſages and diſpatches of the year paſt, and to give them inſtructions what to do the year coming; which opinion I leave under the cenſure of a learned interpreter, as groſs and groundleſs.

Nimis craſſum eſt. Merc.

Others fix it upon the laſt day of the week, affirming that this was the Sabbath day. And that this was a Convention or Aſſembly of the Church on Earth for the ſolemn worſhip of God upon that day, which is here called, A preſenting themſelves before the Lord; in concurrence with which opinion, the Sons of God muſt needs be interpreted holy men. I find ſome affirming, that men are not called the Sons of God in all the old Teſtament, but the Angels only: And ſo they take that Text, Gen. 6. 2. The Sons of God ſaw the daughters of men, &c. for the Angels, either good or bad, who being taken with the beauty of thoſe daughters, aſſuming bodies, came into them, of whom came the Giants. A conceit as monſtrous as thoſe Giants, and fitter for a Fabuliſt then a Divine. On the other extream, * Chryſoſtom denies that the Angels are at all called the Sons of God.

Conveniens videtur ſuiſſe feſtum Sabbathi: quod tunc & commune erat omnium fidelium idemque celeberrimum. Bolduc.

* In his Homily on Gen.6.2.

We may walk ſafely in a middle way between theſe two. For both Angels and men are called the Sons of God: Why Angels are called the Sons of God hath been ſhewed, Chap. 1. v. 6. Men are called the Sons of God for two reaſons; either for their power, or greatneſs; ſo they, *Gen.*6.2. might be called the Sons of God, becauſe great and powerful on the earth. Or rather ſecondly, for their piety and holineſs, by which they reſemble God, and in which they ſerve God as a Son doth the Father. Indeed the Apoſtle affirms, that the priviledge of ſonſhip was brought in by the Incarnation of Chriſt, who is ſaid, In the fulneſs of time to be made of a woman, &c. That we might receive the adoption of Sons, Gal. 4. 5. But in Scripture a thing is ſpoken of as newly done, when it is more fully done, Joh. 7. 39. The Holy Ghoſt is ſaid not to be given at that time, becauſe he had not been ſo plentifully given. And the Apoſtle to the Hebrews ſpeaks, as if the way into Heaven had been but then opened, becauſe it was then more clearly opened, Heb. 9. 8. So we are ſaid to receive the adoption of Sons, when Chriſt came in the fleſh, becauſe then our Son-ſhip was more apparent, though before it was as real.

So then according to this Interpretation the ſence of the words is, That upon the Sabbath day, when the Servants of God, the faithful of that age and place were met together to celebrate the publick worſhip of God, Satan, (the evil ſpirit) who is ever ready to oppoſe and reſiſt us, to interrupt and hinder us, when we appear before the Lord in holy duties) came alſo among them to preſent himſelf before the Lord.

I propoſe this as an opinion to which my own inclination is not ſtrong. Theſe words with the context (as was noted in the former Chapter) ſeeming to me, rather a repreſentation of Gods providence towards man, then a deſcription of mans worſhip tendered unto God.

Again there was a day.

It may be yet further enquired how much time paſſed between the firſt and this ſecond day of appearance. Some affirm, it was the immediate day after: others, the immediate Sabbath after. A third opinion defers it to the year after; Satan cunningly delaying the buſineſs all that while, to the intent he might more fully ſee how the former affliction wrought, what effects it had or would have upon Job, before he attempts a ſecond.

The Text reſolveth us in neither of theſe, but leaveth it indifferent and undetermined, ſaying only, Again there was a day. It is moſt probable that there was ſuch a diſtance of time between theſe two afflictions, as was competent to a full diſcovery of Job's ſpirit, under the firſt. As when Chriſt was tempted, and had foyled Satan in that tempta on, it is said, The devil departed from him for a ſeaſon; he left him probably, to ſee what effects might follow upon the former temptation: So Satan having tempted Job, and tempted him by a temptation, though one in the general, yet with a four-fold aſſault, four ſeveral Meſſengers, making (as it were) four charges upon him, he leaveth him for a ſeaſon, and again when there was a day, he returns to renew the aſſault and battery. Luke 4.13.

I ſhall paſs over the two verſes following, in all that they contain, opened in the former Chapter. But in the latter end of the third verſe, there is ſomewhat added very material, where the Lord beſpeaks Satan concerning Job, Haſt thou conſidered my ſervant Job, that there is none like him in the Earth, a perfect and an upright man, one that feareth God and eſcheweth evil? (This was the Character which God gave of him before in the former Chapter, but now he goeth on) And ſtill he holdeth faſt his integrity, although thou movedſt me againſt him to deſtroy him without cauſe. This is ſuper-added to his teſtimony, his commendation is enlarged. Job (you ſee) hath gained in this conflict: he was deſcribed before as an holy man, now he is deſcribed as a tryed man, as an approved Souldier. Job hath obtained this honour in the former combat with Satan, a glorious addition to his character: As the patience and other graces of Job did increaſe, ſo did the teſtimony of God increaſe concerning him. Note from this addition only in the general thus much,

That ſuch as honour God, God will honour.

If we do any new or further ſervice for God, God will add ſome further honour and reſpect unto us. If we do, or ſay, or ſuffer any thing extraordinary for God, God will ſay, or do ſomewhat more then ordinary concerning us. The old character did not ſerve, when Job had done this new ſervice. God will never conceal any of our graces, no nor the improvement of any of our graces. If we ſpeak but a word for God, we ſhall hear of it again; God takes it and pens it down, as it is ſaid, Mal. 3.16. They that feared the Lord, ſpake often one to another; and the Lord hearkened and heard, and a book of remembrance was written; God ſets it down preſently: So he recorded what Job had ſpoken, and gives it him in at the next meeting with Satan. We can never looſe either by doing or ſuffering for God. All ſhall be recompenced to the utmoſt farthing. As it is uſual with Kings and great men of the world, for great ſervices done them (eſpecially in wars and battels) to make additions to the titles of honour, to give ſome new motto's, or put ſome new devices in the Coat-armour of thoſe who ſerve them. Thus doth God here. Job having play'd the man (as we ſay) or rather the Saint in that former combat, he hath a new title of honour put into his ſtile: Now it is not only Job, a man that feareth God and eſcheweth evil; but Job a man that holdeth faſt his integrity.

Conſider the words themſelves,

And ſtill he holdeth faſt his integrity.

The words (And ſtill] or to this preſent time, may have a double reference. Firſt, barely to the time paſt: Job was not only a perfect and a ſound man in former times, but he is ſo ſtill, ſo at preſent. Or rather ſecondly, it refers to the affliction and loſſes he had ſuffered; as he was in former times, ſo he is at this time; as he was in proſperous times, ſo he is in troubleſome times: When the day was light and clear to him, Job was a perfect man; and now the day hath nothing but darkneſs and gloomineſs in it, Job is a perfect man ſtill; though wounded in his eſtate, and broken in his outward comforts, yet he is as ſound and whole in his ſpirit, as ever he was. Though Cattel, Servants, Children be dead and gone, beſpoil'd and loſt; yet grace is ſafe, and faith triumphs, He ſtill holdeth faſt his integrity.

Holdeth faſt.] This which we tranſlate by two words, is but one word in the Hebrew. Our language is not comprehenſive enough to expreſs the fulneſs of that word, in a word. Job doth not only hold his integrity, but he holdeth it faſt: the word implyes a ſtrength in holding, to hold a thing firmly. And more, the word hath a further Emphaſis in it; it ſignifieth not only to hold a thing by that degree of ſtrength, wherewith formerly we did hold it; but it doth import thus much, to wax ſtronger in the holding of it, to prevail or increaſe in ſtrength. As when David ſent Joab to number the people, Joab was unwilling, and ſaid to the King, Now the Lord thy God add unto the people an hundred-fold; but why doth my Lord the King delight in this thing? Then it follows, Notwithſtanding the Kings word prevailed againſt Joab. That which is there tranſlated, And his word prevailed, is the ſame with this we tranſlate here, Holdeth faſt; the Kings word did take a prevailing hold upon Joab, or held him faſt to the doing of the Kings command, though he would have got off from the buſineſs: So we may underſtand it here, Still he prevaileth or waxeth ſtronger in his integrity. מחזיק 2 Sam. 24. 4.

The ſame word is uſed by the Prophet Malachi, chap. 3. 13, 14. Where God convinceth thoſe proud ſpirits that puffed at his ſervice, Your words (ſaith he) have been ſtout againſt me. That which we tranſlate, have been ſtout, is the ſame with this in the Text of Job; Your words have been ſtout, that is, they have grown ſtronger and ſtronger againſt me and my wayes; you are confirm'd in wickedneſs; whereas your hearts ſhould have been brought down and humbled, you are increaſt and hardned in your obſtinacy and rebellion. Such is the ſtrength and meaning of the word in this place. Job by this oppoſition grows more ſtrong and ſtout in his integrity, he is ſo far from being daunted, that he is encourag'd; he is as he was, nay more then he was, he is increaſed, Still he holdeth faſt his integrity.

His integrity.] It is a word of the ſame root with that uſed, Chap. 1. ver. 1. There was a man in the Land of Uz, and this man was perfect; and theſe words illuſtrate and expound one another; to be a perfect man, is to be a man of integrity: there, he was a perfect man; now, he is a man holding faſt that perfection, namely, his integrity.

From this firſt branch obſerve,

Firſt, That Satan in all his temptations plants his chiefeſt battery againſt ſincerity.

Hence it is here expreſt, that Job ſtill held faſt his integrity, as if the Holy Ghoſt would intimate this unto us, that Satan pulled more at that, then at his eſtate. Satan did not care at all to pull Job's Oxen from him, or his Sheep from him, or his Children from him, but to pull his grace from him; therefore it is ſaid, Job held that faſt: Without queſtion Satan aſſaulted that moſt, which Job held moſt; the thing that Satan aimed at, was not to make Job a poor man, but to make him a ſinful man; and he would never have troubled himſelf to rob him of his riches, but only in ſubordination to the robbing him of his graces: That was the booty Satan look'd for. Satan look'd at his cattel, only as pay for his Army of Sabeans, and Chaldeans: but he look'd upon his grace (if he could have got it from him) as pay for principalities and powers. As grace gotten or improv'd is the joy of Angels: So if grace could be ſtoln away or deſtroy'd, it would be the joy of Devils. This was Satans hope.

Secondly, Note this,

That whatſoever a godly man looſeth, he will be ſure to lay hold of his graces, he will hold ſpirituals, whatever becomes of temporals.

He will be ſure to take faſt hold of theſe, when all is going; when riches are going, when children are going, when friends are going, when liberty is going, yea when life is going too, then he layes faſt hold upon his integrity; and ſaith (as Jacob to the Angel) I will not let thee go; and he ſaith it without exception: for he knows he cannot be bleſſed if that go. Integrity is his Benjamin, all the Children he hath ſhall go, but this ſon of his right hand muſt not; For indeed his life is bound up in the life of grace: And if he part with that, he muſt lye down with ſorrow in his grave. Wherefore he is reſolved not to part with that, whatſoever he parts with. As it is with a man at Sea in a Shipwrack, when all is caſt over-board, the corn that feeds him, and the clothes that cover him, yet he ſwims to the ſhore, if he can, with his life in his hand. Or as it is with a valiant Standard-bearer, that carries the Banner in war, if he ſees all loſt, he will wrap the Banner about his body, and chuſe rather to dye in that as his winding ſheet, then let any man take it from him, or ſpoil him of it, he will hold that faſt, though he loſe his life for it. So doth Job here, ſo doth every one that is of Job's heavenly temper and ſpiritual reſolution: in the greateſt ſtorm, in the hotteſt aſſault, he will wrap himſelf round about with his integrity, wind that about him, and will not let it go: Kill him if you will, deſtroy him if you will, he will never part with his integrity, though he part with life. Indeed there is nothing elſe can ſtand a man inſtead to any purpoſe; if that be loſt, all's loſt. A man that is in danger of drowning will lay hold upon any thing, upon a ſtraw, upon a ruſh, though it have no ſtrength to ſupport him: Men in danger will lay hold upon ſomewhat; they that are wiſe will lay hold upon the Rock, upon that which will do them good in an evil day; They will lay hold upon Chriſt, they will lay hold upon promiſes (in laying hold upon our integrity, all that is done) then they are ſure to live: for Wiſdom (that is Chriſt) is a Tree of life to all that lay hold upon her, Prov. 3. 18.

Thirdly, It is conſiderable, that this word is uſed for the laying hold upon our weapons, either to defend our ſelves or to offend and aſſault our Enemies, Pſal. 35. 2. David prays, that God would take hold of Shield and Buckler, and ſtand up for his help. We may note from hence,

That integrity is our arms.

Integrity is a Chriſtians weapon. Job layes hold upon his integrity as a Sword to wound his Enemy, and as a Shield and Buckler to ſave and defend himſelf.

Fourthly, From that expoſition of the word, that it ſignifieth not only to be ſtrong, but to prevail, it ſignifieth an overcoming power; he doth hold faſt, that is, he prevaileth with his integrity. We may Note,

That grace doth not only oppoſe, but conquer Satan and all his temptations.

He doth prevail in his integrity (ſo the Hebrew may be rendred in the letter.) Sometimes (you know) there is a war and oppoſition, when there is no conqueſt; a war may be carried on divers years in a Nation, or between Nations, when there is no abſolute victory on either ſide: as we ſee by woful and lamentable experience in Germany, where there hath been oppoſition, one ſide againſt another above theſe twenty years, and yet no ſide hath prevailed. But as grace makes war, ſo grace gets the better, grace gets the day, and will ſhortly make a final conqueſt; yea, there is not only a conqueſt (ſaith the Apoſtle, Rom. 8.) but through Chriſt we are more then Conquerors.

In the fifth place, I told you that the word ſignifies, to increaſe in ſtrength; he holdeth faſt his integrity, or he increaſeth in ſtrength in his integrity. Note hence,

That, True grace gains by oppoſition.

True grace is increaſed the more it is aſſaulted. Satan comes a purpoſe to deſtroy Job's graces, Job waxeth ſtronger in his graces. True grace will do ſo in whomſoever it is. Hypocrites (who have but a ſhew of grace, painted grace) fall off in times of trial, in times of temptation; that which only ſeemeth to be ſomewhat, cometh to nothing, but that which is ſomewhat, cometh to more.

Laſtly, Conſider the Emphaſis of the words. God ſpeaks of this in a kind of admiration; he putteth a greater Emphaſis upon this then upon the other part of Job's character.

Verſe 3. Haſt thou conſidered my ſervant Job, that there is none like him in the Earth, a perfect and an upright man, one that feareth God and eſcheweth evil? and ſtill he holdeth faſt his integrity.

God ſpeaks of it, as a matter of wonder, a rare thing. From this obſerve,

That to hold our integrity in evil times, is not only good, but admirable.

It is that which doth even (as we may ſo ſpeak) provoke God himſelf to an admiration. It is a truth, whether it be in regard of perſonal troubles, or national troubles; to hold faſt and keep cloſe to God in ſuch diſtreſſes is admirable. To continue good, while we ſuffer evil, is the height and crown of goodneſs: As it is that which putteth one of the greateſt aggravations upon the ſinfulneſs of men, that they will hold faſt their ſins in the middeſt of judgments. The Prophet Amos, with much elegancy of ſpeech and vehemency of ſpirit, urgeth this againſt the Jews, Chap. 4. I have given you cleanneſs of teeth, yet have ye not returned unto me: I have with-holden the rain, yet have ye not returned unto me: I have ſmitten you with blaſting, yet have ye not returned unto me: I have ſent among you the peſtilence and the ſword, yet have ye not returned unto me, ſaith the Lord.

The Prophet Jeremy takes up the ſame argument, having before ſpoken of judgments ſent upon them, Yet (ſaith he) they hold faſt deceit, and refuſe to return, (Chap. 8. 5.) they held faſt deceit, though they were afflicted, that aggravated their ſinfulneſs. Now (I ſay) as it makes ſin out of meaſure ſinful, to hold it faſt when God afflicteth; ſo it makes grace out of meaſure gracious, putteth a wonderful ſplendor and glory upon it, if we hold faſt our grace, when troubles and afflictions meet us in the holding of it forth; and God will put an Emphaſis upon ſuch a one for grace, as he did upon Ahaz for his ſin, 2 Chron. 28. 22. In the time of his diſtreſs did he treſpaſs yet more againſt the Lord; This is that King Ahaz; that brand is put upon him. So there is an honour ſtamp'd on Job in this teſtimony, That in the time of his diſtreſs, he did yet more good; This is that Job: To ſerve, believe, and love God more in diſtreſs, this is integrity to a wonder, this draws the heart of God toward ſuch, & makes them truly glorious in the eyes of godly men.

That which follows in the text, doth yet more advance the honour of Job in this victory, Still he holdeth faſt, &c.

Though thou movedſt me againſt him to deſtroy him without cauſe.

ותסיתני

Though thou movedſt me.] The word here uſed to move, ſignifieth more then a bare motion, it carries in it a perſwaſion, and more then a bare perſwaſion, it carries in it a vehement inſtigation: As when a man doth perſwade a thing by arguments and ſtrong reaſons; that is the force of the word; as in that place, 1 Kings 21. 25. There was none like Ahab which did ſell himſelf to work wickedneſs in the ſight of the Lord, whom Jezabel his wife ſtirred up: ſtirred up is the word in the Text, thou movedſt me; Jezabel moved Ahab, incited him, never gave him over, by arguments and reaſons, by this conſideration and that conſideration, to do wickedly in Iſrael: So here, Satan did, as it were, ply God with arguments and reaſons to inſtigate him againſt Job, Thou didſt move me againſt him. Satan is a cunning Orator, and knows how to handle a matter, that it may take with greateſt advantage.

Some may queſtion, how can this be? Will God be moved by Satan? Is not the Lord unchangeable? Have Satans words and arguments ſuch power with God, to move him to do a thing?

I anſwer it two wayes: We may clear it firſt thus; As the Saints and people of God in Prayer are ſaid to move God, and to prevail with God, they are ſaid to carry a buſineſs with God. Now you know what they do in Prayer, they do not only ſpread a Petition barely before God, but they ſtrengthen it with all the arguments they can, argument upon argument, pleading upon pleading; yet the Lord himſelf is not ſtirred, he is not changed at all by the Prayer of his people; it is not to be thought that the Lord upon the Prayers of his people, takes up any new thoughts, or puts on any new reſolutions to do this or that; for a mercy that is but a day old in regard of our Prayer obtaining it, is an eternity old in regard of God purpoſing it; therefore God is not changed at all; but he is ſaid to be moved to give or do, as or when we pray, becauſe he giveth and doth what he himſelf had purpoſed to give, when we ſhould pray: for as God from all eternity did purpoſe to give give to his people ſuch and ſuch mercies, ſo he did purpoſe and decree, to give them when they prayed. Now then as it is in regard of his peoples prayer and ſeeking for mercy, they move God; but it is only the bringing forth of that which he had in his heart from all eternity to do for them: So here in this caſe, God had a purpoſe from all eternity to try Job, and likewiſe he did purpoſe the way and the means of it, that it ſhould be done upon the motion and inſtigation of Satan. For although God cannot be moved by any to do a thing, which before he intended not, he is unchangeable: yet as by his eternal will and counſel, he doth produce things in time; ſo likewiſe from eternity he did order and will the manner of their producing, he purpoſed to do good for his Church upon the ſupplications of his Servants, and ſometimes to afflict his Church or Servants at the inſtigation of Satan.

Quanquam Deus à nullo poteſt moveri, ad aliquid volendum de novo, cum ſit immutabilis: tamen ſicut voluntate æterna producit aliquid in tempore, ita ab æterno voluit modum producendi.

Secondly, This place [thou movedſt me againſt him] is to be underſtood by a figure, very frequent in the Scripture; God ſpeaking of himſelf after the manner of men; becauſe as men uſually when they do a thing, or are moved by others to do it, and by perſwaſions are ſometime prevailed with, to do that which they intended not an hour before. So God is ſaid to do a thing upon motion, though he intended it from eternity, often deſcending to expreſs himſelf by that which is common to men, though his manner of doing it be tranſcendent, infinitely beyond men,

From the force of this word ſo explained, Thou movedſt me againſt him: Obſerve,

That Satan is an earneſt and importunate ſolicitor againſt the People and Church of God.

He without ceaſing provokes God againſt them, he bends his wit, and ſtrains his language to the height, in pleading againſt them, to get them delivered up into his hands, or into the hands of his inſtruments.

And if Satan be thus zealous, ſo importunate a ſollicitor againſt the Saints; It may teach us to be as earneſt and zealous for the Saints. Satan doth not only move, but he moveth by arguments, he incites: It is not enough to pray by propoſing our deſires, but we muſt pray enforcing and preſſing our deſires; ſuch a holy unquietneſs of ſpirit, is expreſſed by the Prophet, Iſa. 62. 1. For Zions ſake will I not hold my peace, and for Jeruſalems ſake will I not reſt, &c. Such was that required of the Watch-men ſet upon the walls of Jeruſalem, which ſhould never hold their peace day nor night: Ye that make mention of the Lord, or ye that are the Lords remembrancers, keep not ſilence, and give him no reſt till he eſtabliſh, and till he make Jeruſalem a praiſe in the earth, Iſa. 62. ver. 6, 7. This duty is now doubled on us by the great afflictions and greater fears of Sion. When Chriſt was in his Agony, he prayed more earneſtly, Luke 22. 44. And when his Church is in an Agony, we ought to pray more earneſtly. At ſuch a time we muſt mingle more fire with our Prayers, we muſt pray more fervently. At ſuch a time we muſt mingle more water with our Prayers, we muſt pray more repentingly: We muſt with Jacob, (Hoſ. 12.) weep and make ſupplication. At ſuch a time we muſt mingle more faith with our Prayers, we muſt pray more believingly. In a word, at ſuch a time every Prayer muſt be a pleading, yea a wreſtling with God, a wreſtling with reſolution not to let him go until we have got a bleſſing, till we prevail with God to deſtroy his Churches Enemies, as Satan in the Text moved God to deſtroy Job, his ſervant and his friend. So it follows, Thou movedſt me againſt him to deſtroy him.

לבלעו

To deſtroy him.] The word Deſtroy ſignifieth to ſwallow up, or to devour: You have it Gen. 41. 4. where it is ſaid, That the ſeven lean ears, and ſeven lean kine, did devour or eat up the ſeven full ears, and the ſeven fat kine. And Exod. 7. 12. the Text ſaith, That Moſes his rod did ſwallow up the rods of the Magicians. Pſal. 124 3. Unleſs the Lord had been on our ſide, they had ſwallowed us up quick. In all theſe places it is the ſame word we have here, Thou movedſt me to deſtroy him.

In the former Chapter, where Satan deſired God to touch Job, I ſhewed what kind of touches Satan deſired to lay upon the people of God; you ſee it now cleared by God himſelf, Thou movedſt me to deſtroy him, to ſwallow him up. Thy words were moderate and diminitive, do but touch him, but thy intentions were bloody and deſtructive, Thou movedſt me to deſtroy him, to make an end of him, that was thy meaning.

Without cauſe.] But will the Lord, the wiſe God, do any thing without cauſe? A wiſe, a prudent man will not do any thing without cauſe; though Satan may be ſo brutiſh and unreaſonable to move God to do a thing for which there is no cauſe, would the Lord be ſo perſwaded, by his motion, to do it without cauſe? The Text ſeemeth here to ſpeak ſo, Thou movedſt me to deſtroy him without cauſe; and God hearkened to his motion before, and gave him up all his eſtate, to do with it what he pleaſed.

חנם

Briefly to clear this. Without cauſe. It is the ſame original word uſed in the former Chapter, Doth Job ſerve God for nought, or without cauſe (as was then opened): ſo here, Thou movedſt me againſt him to deſtroy him without cauſe, or thou movedſt me againſt him for nothing, or for nought.

We may conſider this phraſe of ſpeech [without cauſe] three wayes. Firſt, in reference unto Satan. Secondly, in reference unto God. Thirdly, in reference unto Job himſelf: From each of theſe conſiderations light will ſhine into this point.

First, In reference unto Satan. God tells Satan, Thou moveſt me againſt him without cauſe; that is, Job never gave thee any cauſe why thou ſhouldeſt make ſuch a motion againſt him; Job had never wronged thee, or done thee any hurt, as David ſaith of his Enemies, They are mine Enemies without cauſe, I was never injurious or unjuſt unto them. So Satan was Job's Enemy without cauſe; Job never gave him occaſion: Indeed the holineſs and goodneſs of Job was Satans grief, and Satans trouble; but for any other trouble or wrong Job never did him; therefore without cauſe, it was in reference unto Satan.

Secondly, In reference unto Satan, without cauſe; that is, Thou didſt not alledge any ſufficient cauſe, or charge him with any particular crime; thou didſt only bring in a general ſuſpition againſt him; there was not ſo much as a common fame (as you know it was a courſe to accuſe men upon common fame.) So ſaith God here, It was nothing but a ſuſpition raiſed out of thine own brain (as indeed thoſe common fames, that we heard of not long ſince, upon which many were accuſed, yea condemn'd, were only ſuſpitions born in the brains of thoſe men.) So here Job was charged meerly upon the ſuſpition of Satan; there was no crime directly alledged, nor any evil report in the world againſt him; cauſe was not ſhew'd legally; therefore without cauſe thou movedſt me againſt him.

Thirdly, In reference unto Satan, without cauſe; that is, It now appeareth upon the tryal, that thou didſt move me againſt him without cauſe; that which thou didſt pretend to be the cauſe, was not found in Job: thou pretendeſt he was an hypocrite, and ſerved me for himſelf; now thou ſeeſt thy ſelf confuted; it appeareth he did ſerve me for nought, ſincerely, and not for his own ends: He is no painted ſepulcher, no rotten ſelf-ſeeker.

If we conſider the words in the ſecond place with reference unto God, Thou didſt move me againſt him without cauſe, then we muſt take heed of thinking that God doth any thing without cauſe: No, the wiſe God doth every thing in number, weight and meaſure; he doth every thing upon great reaſon, upon the higheſt reaſon. God will not do the loweſt thing, but upon the height of reaſon; he doth the leaſt thing upon greater reaſon then the greateſt Politicians in the world do the greateſt. Therefore God had reaſon, important reaſon, to give Job up to be afflicted. He did it for the tryal of Job, he did it for the magnifying of his free grace, and the graces of his free Spirit, in his weak Creature; he did it that Job might be ſet up as an example of patience, he did it to diſcover the ſlander of the Devil; therefore he did it for ſtrong reaſons; it was not without cauſe, in reference unto God himſelf.

Laſtly, If we conſider it in reference unto Job, it was not abſolutely without cauſe neither; for though there was not that cauſe in him, which Satan pretended, namely, groſs hypocriſie: yet if the Lord ſhould ſearch and ſift him narrowly (as if he ſhould ſearch and ſift the holieſt of his Servants, his pure eyes, and holy nature, would find ſin enough in them, which might juſtifie him, or ſhew to his Juſtice ſufficient cauſe (take the ſin in it ſelf) not only to afflict them temporally, but to lay his hand upon them for ever.) Should God (I ſay) have tryed him throughly, and looked upon ſin in it ſelf, he might find cauſe to afflict him in regard of his ſin. So then abſolutely in reference unto Job, it was not without cauſe, God might have found cauſe in regard of his ſin.

But there were other cauſes in reference unto Job, it was to try Job, to exerciſe Job; it was that Job might have further honour after the tryal: There might have been a reaſon in ſin (if the Lord had marked iniquity.) And there were were many reaſons in reference to his good, why the Lord did leave him thus in the hands of Satan to be afflicted.

To wind it up: If we look upon Satan, then it was without that cauſe he pretended; it was without any direct charge, it was a meer ſuſpition, Job had never wronged him. But if we reſpect God, it is not without cauſe; God doth all things for weighty reaſons. And if we reſpect Job, God (poſſibly, yea eaſily) might have found a ſin in him (any ſin in it ſelf conſidered would do it) as the cauſe of his affliction: And he had other actual reaſons, in reference both to the being and improvement of his graces, why he left him thus in the hands of Satan.

Hence we may learn, Firſt (in that God ſaith, Thou movedſt me againſt him, to deſtroy him without cauſe)

> That pure, or rather impure malice, ſtirreth Satan againſt the people of God.

Though he alwayes pretends ſomewhat in them, yet the cauſe is in himſelf. God now diſcovers he doth nothing but out of very malice, pure malice againſt his Servants. Satan hath two names in Scripture, noting his two ſpecial works, Temptation and accuſation. He ſollicits good men to do evil againſt God: Hence he hath his name, the Tempter. He ſollicits God to conceive evil of good men; and hence he hath his name, the Slanderer, or Accuſer.

ὁ πειράζων, διάβολος.

> Secondly, note, That God doth afflict his people ſometimes without reſpect unto their ſins. Thou didſt move me againſt him without cauſe.

It was not in regard of his hypocriſie, or of any thing thou didſt charge him with, why I did afflict him and lay my hand upon him. Though all men have alwayes ſin enough to be the meritorious cauſe, yet oftentimes ſin is not the moving cauſe of their afflictions. When the Diſciples put that queſtion to Chriſt concerning the blind man, John 9. 2. Maſter, who did ſin, this man or his parents, that he was born blind? Jeſus anſwered, neither hath this man ſinned nor his parents (not as if either of them were without ſin, but to ſhew that they had not ſinned as to this purpoſe, ſc. their ſin was not the cauſe of this blindneſs, and therefore in the next words, he aſſigns the cauſe) But (ſc. he was born blind) that the works of God ſhould be made manifeſt. Afflictions are alwayes from ſin, but not alwayes for ſin. Neither are they at all for ſin (upon believers) by way of the leaſt ſatisfaction to the juſtice of God (that chaſtiſement Chriſt hath ſo fully born, (Iſa. 53.) that no Believers finger ſhall ever ake in that ſence. But they are often afflicted for ſin by way of purgation, or prevention.

> Thirdly, note, That God will at the laſt give teſtimony for the clearing of the innocency of his Servants againſt all Satans malicious accuſations.

God himſelf gives teſtimony here a ſecond time concerning Job, Thou didſt move me againſt him without cauſe; thou didſt move me to it, but it is clear, and I give my ſentence, there was no ſuch cauſe as thou didſt ſuggeſt againſt him, why I ſhould deſtroy him.

When the Lord had thus called Satan to account concerning Job, whether he had conſidered him both in his radical graces, and in this additional grace, the holding faſt of his integrity; Then Satan comes forth to anſwer this alſo. Haſt thou (ſaith God) conſidered my ſervant Job, that there is none like him in the earth, a perfect and an upright man, one that feareth God and eſcheweth evil? And ſtill he holdeth faſt his integrity, although thou movedſt me againſt him, to deſtroy him without cauſe? Yes ſaith Satan in ver. 4. And Satan anſwered the Lord and ſaid, Skin for ſkin, yea all that a man hath will he give for his life. But put forth thine hand now and touch his bone and his fleſh, and he will curſe thee to thy face.

Here is Satans anſwer, with his motion upon it.

By his anſwer he labours to blot and obſcure the glory which Job had gained in the former battel; and by his motion he labours to bring him about unto a ſecond tryal. As by his anſwer in the former Chapter (a little to compare him with himſelf) Satan ſlandered Job's actions, ſo by his anſwer here he ſlanders Job's ſufferings. There it was for ſomething that Job ſerved God, and here that which Job had ſuffered is nothing.

It is Satans trade (and he hath many children of the ſame occupation) to ſlander and to ſlight whatſoever the Servants of God, either do or ſuffer. Before he ſlandered Job's active obedience, now he ſlanders his paſſive obedience. What is this? (ſaith he) tuſh, Skin for ſkin, yea all that a man hath will he give for his life: It is a ſlight trial that he hath paſt yet; what great matter is it if he hold faſt his integrity; who would not, who could not hold faſt, for any thing that hath been done to him yet? Let us try him again.

For the clearing of this we will examine the words.

Skin for ſkin, yea all that a man hath will he give for his life.

We ſee here that malice is ſteeped in wit, Satan anſwereth by a Proverb, Skin for ſkin, &c. A proverbial, quick, ſharp ſpeech, the general ſence of which and Satans intendments are very clear.

The general ſence of this proverbial ſpeech is this;

> That life is the moſt precious treaſure; that a man will part with any thing upon theſe terms, The ſaving of his life. That all a man ſuffers comes not very near him, while that is out of danger.

Such is the general ſence; and Satans intendment in ſpeaking this, is as clear; namely, that as Job before had ſerved God for his wealth, ſo now he doth ſerve him for his breath; that as before Job kept cloſe to God, that he might enrich him; ſo now Job keeps cloſe to God, leſt he ſhould deſtroy him. He ſeemeth to hold faſt his integrity (ſo you tell me) but it is only that he may hold faſt his life; He ſerved you before for wealth, and now he ſerves you for breath. His fear of looſing that makes him humble himſelf, and give many thanks: ſearch him to the bottom, and you will find him ſtill a mercenary ſervant, holding his integrity that he may hold in with thee, and live. This is the general drift of Satan.

But to give the ſpecial meaning of his words doth ſomewhat trouble Interpreters, Skin for ſkin, and all that a man hath, will he give for his life.

Firſt [Skin for ſkin] Some interpret it thus, A man will venture the ſkin of one member to ſave the ſkin of another, which being cut off, or wounded, his life is more in danger. As for inſtance, if a blow come at a mans head, he will hold up his hand, or his naked arm, he will venture the ſkin of his hand to ſave his head: And the reaſon is, becauſe his life is more in danger, if he be wounded in his head, then in his hand. Here is ſkin for ſkin; he gives the ſkin of a member which is further off from the ſeat of life, to ſave the ſkin of that member which is ſo near the ſeat of life.

Secondly, By ſkin in the former place, ſome underſtand all the outward eſtate that Job had. It was uſual in thoſe times to expreſs all riches by the word ſkin, and the reaſon of it was this, becauſe (as was obſerved before) their ſubſtance was Cattel, and ſo from the ſkin of their Cattel, they did denominate their eſtates. Or as others, becauſe their money was made of ſkins, and ſo they did expreſs their wealth and riches under the word ſkin. Anſwerable to which cuſtom, the Latin word for houſhold-ſtuffe, or houſhold goods, is derived from that word which properly ſignifies a ſkin, becauſe either they were wont to wrap up their goods in ſkins, or becauſe they did put a great value upon ſkins, and ſo their whole outward perſonal eſtate was comprehended under that notion. Hence that common Proverb amongſt the Ancients, Thou ſpendeſt out of another mans ſkin. To be liberal out of another mans eſtate, was called a being laviſh upon another mans ſkin. And then ſkin in the ſecond place doth ſignifie the man himſelf, or the perſon of a man: the thing containing, or that which covereth, being put for the whole, by a Synechdoche; the ſkin for the whole man. And it is uſual in good Authors to put the ſkin for the whole man; as to look to the ſkin, is to look to the whole body. Take it thus, that ſkin in the firſt place is all outward Æs alienum habere dicitur, & qui aureos debet, & qui corium forma publica percuſſum, quale apud Lacedæmonios fuit. Sen. de Ben. l. 5. c. 14.

Supellex à pelle.

Ludis de alieno corio (i.e.) ex alieno liberalē te præſtas.

Pelliculam curare jubes. Hor. l. 2. Sat. 5.

In cute curanda plus æquo operata juventus. Hor. Ep. 2. l. 1.

ward things; and skin in the ſecond, is taken for the skin that covereth the body; and ſo the ſence runs thus, skin for skin, &c. that is, a man will give all his outward eſtate, to ſave the fleſh upon his back; that is, to ſave his life. As if Satan had ſaid, this act of Job, which is ſo cried up, and made a matter ſo conſiderable, being examined, will be found as ordinary as the high-way. It being common, to a Proverb, for a man to part with all, that he may preſerve himſelf.

Zanchius.

There is a third Expoſition much laboured by a learned Interpreter; who, by skin, in the firſt place, underſtands not generally all his eſtate; but more eſpecially his apparel, his cloathing, which at the firſt were made of skins, and were uſed long after for cloathings, by Princes and great men, in divers Countries; from which the ſence of the Proverb is thus given, skin for skin, &c. A man will part with his cloaths, caſt them off willingly, eaſily, that he may ſave the skin of his body, ſave his life: And ſo he expounds it by that act of Job in the former Chapter, ver. 20. where it is ſaid, that Job rent his mantle, and caſt it off; as if Satan had alluded unto that; and ſaid, no marvel if Job humbled himſelf to the duſt, and renting his garment, caſt that away, when he heard all was taken from him: Job parted with the skin, his garment, that he might move thee to compaſſion, and ſo ſave his other skin, the garment which cloaths his fleſh; which he fear'd thou wouldſt rent by wounding, and ſo let out his trembling ſoul, his beloved life.

בעד עור
בעד עור

A fourth gives this interpretation of the words, skin for skin, &c. The Original Prepoſition, which we tranſlate (for) is often in Scripture likewiſe tranſlated (upon) as, in 2 Kings 4. 5. The Widow went from Eliſha, and ſhut the door upon her and upon her Son. So in other places. Then the ſence is made out thus; skin upon skin, and all that a man hath, will he give for his life; that is, if a man had never ſo many skins, if it could be ſuppoſed he had an hundred skins one upon another, he would let all be taken off to ſave his life. That place is expounded as a parallel, John 1. 16. where it is ſaid, that, of Chriſts fulneſs we receive grace for grace; that is, grace upon grace, or abundance of grace, all the grace we have; this grace and that grace, faith, and love, and patience, and humility; every grace, all grace you receive from Chriſt. Thus ſome illuſtrate theſe two places one by another. So Satan ſaith of Job here, skin for skin, that is, skin upon skin; a man will give all his skins, ſuppoſe he had many, he would part with all: or take skin for never ſo much of his outward eſtate, he will let all go to ſave his life.

וכל

There is yet another interpretation given of this, skin for skin, yea, all that a man hath will he give for his life; take the words comparatively, we tranſlate it, yea all he hath. That copulative particle, in the Hebrew, is rendered ſometime and, ſometime yea, ſometime ſo; according to which laſt acception, the ſence ſtandeth thus: as a man will give skin for skin, ſo a man will part with all he hath for his life. We find ſome Scriptures wherein this particle is taken in the very ſame ſence: To give you inſtance, Prov. 25. 3. there the Hebrew reads it thus, The heavens for height, the earth for depth, and the heart of Kings is unſearchable: Now this is clear, that the ſenſe is comparative, and it is thus to be given, as the heaven is unſearchable for height, and the earth for depth, ſo the heart of the King is unſearchable: ſo verſ. 25. of the ſame Chapter, it is thus read out of the Original, word for word, Cold water to a thirſty ſoul, and good news from a far Countrey; now we tranſlate it according to the ſenſe, and make it a compariſon thus, As cold water to a thirſty ſoul, ſo is good news from a far Countrey. Thus alſo we interpret this place, and it carries a good ſence, skin for skin, and all, &c. As a man would give skin for skin, one outward thing for another (for they take skin in both places for outward things, for the goods of this life) as a man would give or barter away one commodity for another; ſo a man will give all outward things for his life: Life is more valuable to all outward things, then any one particular thing is to another. It is ordinary to a Proverb, among men in danger, to ſay, ſpare my life, and take my goods. How willingly doth the Mariner in a ſtorm, unlade his Ship, and caſt all his rich wares over-board, that he may preſerve that precious Jewel, his Life? As a godly man will give life upon life, a thouſand lives (if he had them) rather then loſe his ſoul; ſo a natural man will give skin upon skin, gold upon gold, treaſure upon treaſure, that he may ſave his life. Let life lie at the ſtake, and a man will give all things he hath in the world for it, and think he hath a good bargain.

Here are five Expoſitions you ſee offered; the two latter to me ſeem the moſt clear, howſoever every one of them hath a fair ſence in it; and ſo we are agreed upon the general; which is only to ſet forth the excellency and preciousneſs of life: there cannot be any miſcarriage in pitching upon either of theſe interpretations. I ſhall give you ſome Notes from hence.

Firſt, Obſerve what a bleſſing life is. Skin for skin, and all that a man hath, will he give for his life.

Life is the moſt precious treaſure, the moſt excellent thing in Nature.

And let me tell you, life is the treaſure that is now ſo much digged for; there are many abroad that are digging for your precious lives. Conſider what lies at ſtake, and what will you give for the ſecuring or reducing of it? Have we not cauſe to ſay of ſome of our bloody brethren, as Jacob did, Gen. 32. 12. when his brother Eſau was marching towards him? I fear him (ſaith he) leſt he will come and ſlay me, and the mother with the Children: loſs of life was the thing Jacob feared. And Heſters ſpeech in her Petition to the King, imports that all other loſſes might have been born, but loſs of life, chap. 7. 3, 4. Let my life (ſaith ſhe) be given at my petition, and my people at my requeſt; for we are ſold, I and my people to be deſtroyed, to be ſlain, and to periſh; but if we had been ſold for bond-men and for bond-women, I had held my tongue. See how ſhe wrought for life, for her own life, and the life of her people, and thought liberty not worth the asking for, compared with life. Moſes made many demurs and excuſes; I am not eloquent, &c. when God gave him commiſſion to go into Egypt; but we hear of no delayes at all, when once God had ſaid, Return into Egypt, for all the men are dead which ſought thy life, Exod. 4. 19. God had not ſpoken thus, if he had not known there was ſuch a ſcruple in his mind, which would have galled him worſe in his travels to Egypt, then any pebble in his ſhoe.

Secondly, If life be the moſt precious thing, the richeſt Jewel in the world; then in the next place, learn to value your lives. You ſee how Satan values life here, out of an ill intent, only to extenuate and undervalue all the ſufferings of Job; he ſets his life at a very high rate, that he might make all his loſſes of no rate, not worth the ſpeaking of. Let our intent be good, and then it is good for us to value our lives high, and to ſell them at as dear a rate as we can, if we muſt ſell them. You know what Solomon ſaith in the perſon of a natural man, A living Dog is better then a dead Lion; Eccleſ. 9. 4. We read what is ſaid of the woman in the Goſpel, that had ſpent all ſhe had on Phyſitians: What was it for? Only to reſtore her health; which is a degree below life. Certainly if ſhe ſpent all that ſhe had, to obtain health, which is only the comfort of life, ſhall not we ſpend a part of that we have, to ſave our lives? As ſhips in danger to be wreck'd in a ſtorm, are often preſerved by caſting ſome of their rich lading into the Sea; ſo it is poſſible, yea probable, that the caſting away of ſome of your eſtates in this great ſtorm, may be a means to ſave both your ſhip and your lives; your eſtates kept, may ſink the Veſſel, and then you muſt ſink with it, and certainly die or ſwim for it; and hardly live. When Eſau (Gen. 25. 32.) was hungry, and could not obtain a meſs of pottage from his brother, but upon very hard terms, the ſale of his Birth-right; Sell me thy Birth-right, ſaith Jacob; a precious Jewel indeed, which Eſau ſhould have valued more then his life; he comes to his price on this ground, Behold I am at the point to die, and what profit ſhall this Birth-right do to me? He was prophane Eſau for ſaying ſo; that's the Apoſtles ſtile, Heb. 12. 16. It was prophaneneſs to prefer one morſel of meat before his Birth-right; becauſe the Birth-right was a ſpiritual priviledge as well as natural: but there is no meer natural bleſſing, but we may both in wiſdom and conſcience part with, to keep our lives, when we are ready to die; ye may ſay, what will this eſtate, theſe riches do us good? If that, your eſtates may be the price of your lives, ye have reaſon, and it is your duty to part with them willingly; give ſome, give all; for what will theſe riches do you good, when you are ready to die, or already dead?

Further, be ready to give more then your eſtates for your lives. Give ſome of your blood for your lives; that's more: Skin for skin, and all that a man hath, will he give for his life. And which is yet more, give a limb for your lives. The whole is better then a part: And which is higheſt of all, venture your lives to ſave your lives. That which I intend, is only this; do not barter away your lives upon mean rates, upon low terms. If it comes to it (as we have great cauſe to fear it will, we ſee many have been put to it already) ſell your lives as dear as you can. Indeed there are none in ſo great danger to loſe their lives, as they that will not venture their lives. That of Chriſt, is true in this ſence alſo, he that will ſave his life, ſhall loſe it; ſuch ſaving tends to undoing; yea, it tends to death. And whoſoever will (venture to) loſe his life, ſhall (moſt probably) find it, Matth. 16.25. Let it not be ſaid that you died to ſave charges; let it not be ſaid, that you died to ſave your skins, or to ſave your blood; yea, let it not be ſaid, that you died to ſave your lives: I mean, that you feared to hazard your lives for the ſecuring of your lives. Give all that you have for your lives, venture life and all; your ſafety depends upon this hazard; by ſuch a noble liberality, you are in the faireſt way, not only to ſave all you have, but to gain more then you have.

Thirdly, If your lives be ſo much worth, what are your ſouls worth? What is this life, which is valued thus above all that a man hath? The Apoſtle James makes the queſtion, and gives the anſwer, It is even a vapour that appeareth for a little time, and then vaniſheth away, Jam. 4. 14. A mans breath it is but in his noſtrils, it is gone preſently; yet you ſee, in a true value, all the world is below that. If you are to eſteem your lives ſo, at what price will you ſet your ſouls? To ſave your lives, and ſave your ſouls, are two things. A man may ſave his life, and yet loſe his ſoul; yea, many labour to ſave their lives in doing that, which will be the loſs of their ſouls, poor creatures. Therefore look to that, ſet a high rate indeed upon your immortal ſouls; when eſtates, and liberties, and lives are called for, count them all as traſh, that you may ſave your ſouls; hazard not your ſouls: If life be more worth then all the world, the ſoul is more worth then a thouſand lives; What will it advantage a man to gain the world, and loſe his ſoul? Or what ſhall a man give in exchange for his ſoul? Mat.19.26. The truth is, a man ſhall not gain much to get the whole world, and loſe his life; that loſs is a loſs irreparable, irrecompenſible from the creature. Nature teacheth us to prize our lives above the world, and Grace teacheth us to value our ſouls above our lives. Therefore how unnatural are they that prefer a little profit before their lives? but O how ungracious are they, who prefer a little profit before their ſouls! Some will ſin (as we ſay) for ſix pence; ſelling their own ſouls (as thoſe falſe Prophets did the ſouls of their people) for handfuls of Barlie, and for pieces of bread, Ezek. 13. 19. And whereas a man ſhould give all for his life, they will give their ſouls for a thing of nought. Know therefore the worth of your ſouls. Jeſus Chriſt thought ſouls worth his life, and therefore died to ſave ſouls. How much then do our ſouls tranſcend our own lives? And if Chriſt laid down his life to ranſom ſouls, do you rather lay down a thouſand lives (if you had them) then endanger your ſouls, either by acting ſin, or by ſubmitting unto errour. In that caſe, let eſtate go, let liberty go, let life, let all go; for life hath not ſo much preheminence over all, as the ſoul hath over life.

Fourthly, If your lives are worth ſo much, then what is the Goſpel worth? If a man would give all for his life, what ſhould he give for his Religion, to maintain and uphold that in the purity and power of it? Life is a precious thing, a thing of great value; but when the Goſpel comes in competition, then life is a poor commodity; and our breath but a periſhing vapour. Such was the judgment of that great Apoſtle, Acts 20. 24. when the Holy Ghoſt had witneſſed in every City, that bonds and afflictions did abide him, in preaching the Goſpel; he thus reſolves, But none of theſe things move me; neither count I my life dear unto my ſelf, ſo that I might finiſh my courſe with joy, and the miniſtry which I have received, to teſtifie the Goſpel of the grace of God. His life came to a low rate in his eſteem; how cheap was life, when the Goſpel was ſpoken of? I count not my life dear, ſaith Paul: as all other outward things are mean and low, compared with life; ſo life it ſelf is mean, a low thing, in compariſon of the Goſpel. This life is but the life of the body, but the Goſpel is the life of the ſoul. Many men live, but no ſoul lives on this ſide, or without the Goſpel. Now if you will offer much to ſave your lives, will you not offer much more to ſave the Goſpel? In and about this, we may make the beſt improvement of Satans argument, Skin for skin, and all that a man hath, ſhould he give for the Goſpel, for Goſpel-Ordinances, for Goſpel-priviledges, for Goſpel-light. Where, or for what will you venture and bid high, if not for the precious Goſpel?

Laſtly, If life be worth all, then hereby we may take meaſure of the love and bounty of Chriſt to poor ſinners, who not only ſpent himſelf in all to his life, but ſpent life and all, that they might not periſh; the grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt was exceeding great towards us; That though he was rich, yet for our ſakes he became poor, 2 Cor. 8, 9. That though he was in the form of God, and thought it no robbery to be equal with God, yet he made himſelf of no reputation, Phil. 2. 6, 7. But how ſuperabundant was his Grace towards us, that though he was the Prince of life, Acts 3. 15. Yet became obedient unto death, even the death of the Croſs, Phil. 2. 8. that we might live. If a man loves his life, ſo that he will give skin for skin, and all that he hath, to redeem it; then, O how did Chriſt love his Church, who gave not only his riches, and his reputation, but his life alſo for its redemption.

VERS. 5, 6, 7, 8.

But put forth thine hand now, and touch his bone and his fleſh, and he will curſe thée to thy face.

And the Lord ſaid unto Satan, behold, he is in thine hand, but ſave his life.

So Satan went forth from the preſence of the Lord, and ſmote Job with ſore boyles, from the ſole of his foot unto his crown.

And he took him a pot-sheard to ſcrape himſelf withal, and he ſate down among the aſhes.

IN this fifth Verſe, Satan goeth on, and makes a motion unto God (as we obſerved his method in the former Chapter) But put forth thine hand, and touch his bone and his fleſh, and he will curſe thee to thy face. This is Satans motion. In the ſixth Verſe, we have a grant of this motion, bound up yet with a limitation, as it was in the former Chapter.

For the motion; But put forth thine hand now, and touch, &c. What it importeth, to put forth the hand, that was opened in the former Chapter, ver. 11. where we have the ſame expreſſion; therefore we ſhall not ſtay upon it here. Conſider now only that which is differing, a new object, upon which the hand muſt be put forth, and which Satan deſireth might now be touched. It is the laying of his hand, not upon his Cattel, or upon his Eſtate, or upon his Children, but upon his fleſh and his bone; Touch his bone and his fleſh; that is, afflict his body: The Bone and the Fleſh are the two chief parts, the material parts of the body; of them the whole Fabrick doth conſiſt: the bone, it is as the timber in this houſe; and the fleſh, it is as the lime and mortar filling it up. Touch this, ſaith Satan: And in that he ſaith, touch his bone and his fleſh, he intends and requires a deep and a ſore affliction upon his body; for if he had ſaid only thus, touch his fleſh, that had been an affliction upon his body: For we know often in Scripture, the fleſh is put for the whole body, and ſometimes for the whole man: therefore Satan is not ſatisfied with an expreſſion general, but he putteth it in direct and expreſs terms, Touch his fleſh and his bone; that is, touch him ſo, as the pain and diſtemper may ſink into his very bones, into his very marrow, touch him thus, and then you ſhall ſee what he will do.

The Bone it ſelf is a part without feeling; yet to touch the bone, imports the greateſt pain that can be felt. Touch his bone and his fleſh, and then, ſaith he,

He will curſe thée to thy face.

What it is to curſe to the face, hath been opened already, in the former Chapter, at ver. 11. and I muſt refer you thither for the ſence of this phraſe; only in a word, take it thus, He will curſe thee to thy face, is, as if Satan had ſaid thus; Though Job did bleſs thee when he had a full eſtate, and though he did bleſs thee when thou didſt empty him of his eſtate, and tookeſt all his goods from him; yet if thou do but touch his body, and afflict his bones, he will break forth into curſed language, both concerning thy perſon, and concerning thy ſervice.

I will only mind you further of that which is here ſecretly couched in this expreſſion, Touch his bone and his fleſh, and he will curſe thee to thy face: here is a ſecret imprecation involved; he tacitly ſubjects himſelf to the curſe of God, if Job curſe not God. As if Satan ſhould have ſaid, If he do not curſe thee to thy face, then do ſo and ſo to me; and think thus and thus of me: If you would have the meaning of Satan from the language of his Children, you may take the plain Engliſh of it thus, Touch but his bone and his fleſh, and damn me, if he do not curſe thee; ſend me to Hell preſently. Satan indeed kept this curſed imprecation cloſe wrapt up in that form of ſpeaking; but now his Children ſpeak it out: If you would have Satans heart from the mouths of the ſons of Belial, a curſed and curſing generation amongſt us, the plain Engliſh of it is this, God damn me, ſend me to Hell preſently, if he curſe thee not. Satan we ſee, was more modeſt then theſe ſons of impudence and perdition; who openly imprecate upon, and devote themſelves unto the wrath of God almoſt every word; theſe do not only imitate, but exceed the Copy which Satan ſets them here, by bold blaſphemy and horrid execrations.

And he will curſe thee to thy face. We may from hence obſerve,

Firſt, Satan had tried in vain to make Job curſe God: Now he attempts a ſecond time. Note,

> That, When Satan cannot prevail againſt us by one means, he doth not deſpair of prevailing by another.

He gives not his cauſe over for loſt, becauſe he cannot carry it at firſt, he will try and try again. As it was with Balak, Numb. 23. when he ſent for Balaam to curſe the people, and ſaw the buſineſs did not proſper or ſucceed according to his malice, Balaam could not curſe them; he brought him to another place; Come (ſaith he) I pray thee, I will bring thee to another place, peradventure it will pleaſe God, that thou maiſt curſe me them from thence; though you could not do it in one place, you may in another. So Satan, if he cannot work his will one way, he will try a ſecond or a third. Num. 23. 27.

Satans unweariedneſs in a bad cauſe, when it ſucceeded not, reproves thoſe who are ſo ſoon weary of a good one, if it ſucceed not: Many are ready to give up, if one means will not do it; they caſt off hope, and ſay the cauſe is deſperate. If one, or two, or three, or many means we uſe, fail, we ought to try ſtill; never deſpair of the end, while the work is good, and the means are fair. In the morning ſow thy ſeed (ſaith the Preacher) and in the evening with-hold not thy hand; for thou knoweſt not whether ſhall proſper, this or that. I may add, with-hold not thy hand in the evening, though thou ſeeſt the morning-ſeed doth not proſper; this may have a bleſſing, though that had not. Eccl. 11.6.

> Secondly, Obſerve, Satan trieth another way, and he trieth a way more probable and efficacious for his ends then the former.

When a weaker will not do it, he provides ſtronger means. As God in puniſhing or chaſtening ſinners, when a leſſer judgment will not humble them, he ſends a greater; God cometh not only with another, but with ſorer judgments; If he will not yet for all this hearken unto me, then I will puniſh you ſeven times more for your ſins. So Satan, when by one temptation he cannot overcome, prepares not only another, but a ſtronger; he aſſaults them more and more: he not only muſters new forces, but more compleat, to foil the ſoul. This ſhould teach us, when we cannot ſubdue a corruption in our own hearts by one means, then to ſeek a better: And when by one prayer we cannot obtain a bleſſing, then to pray again, and to pray better; to pray with more life, with more faith, with more humility; then mix more fire with prayer, more zeal and fervency of ſpirit; mix more water with prayer, as Jacob, Hoſ. 12. wept and made ſupplication; above all, mix more of Chriſt in prayer, go out in his name and ſtrength. When Balaks firſt meſſengers could not obtain Balaam to come with them, Balak was not diſcouraged or put off; but (ſaith the Text) Balak ſent yet again Princes, more, and more honourable, Numb. 22. 15. Let not us be diſcouraged if our firſt prayers (which are our Meſſengers to God) are not anſwered; but let us ſend more and more honourable, more ſtrong cries, more ſpiritual deſires, which may take upon the heart of God. Why ſhould Satan do more againſt us, then we will do for our ſelves? Lev. 26.

Thirdly, Note this for our own caution,

> That, We muſt not only expect continued or renewed afflictions and aſſaults from Satan, but we muſt expect greater and greater afflictions and aſſaults from Satan.

He hath ſome aſſaults that are but as Footmen, he will bring out his Horſemen at the next bout; And if having run with Footmen, they have wearied thee, how wilt thou contend with Horſes? Jer. 12. 5. Be ready then, not only to run with the Foot, but to contend with Horſes; prepare your ſelves for other, for more violent charges then you ever felt. Satan will, if he can, lay a cloſer ſiege to thy ſoul, then ever he hath done: As that one evil Spirit returned into the perſon out of whom he was gone, Luke 11. 24. with ſeven Devils worſe then himſelf, ſo he often returns with ſeven temptations, worſer, and ſtronger then before.

Fourthly, Obſerve what Satan picks out to be the matter of this ſecond and ſtronger temptation; it is, to pinch Job in his fleſh, to pinch his body. Note from hence,

> That, The pain of the body is very powerful to diſquiet and trouble the mind.

Satan is very confident to trouble and vex the mind of Job, by caſting darts and diſeaſes into his body. Phyſitians have a Rule, That the manners of the mind follow the temper of the body; and it is a more certain Rule, That the mind is much carried according to the diſtemper of the body; when the body is diſtempered, the mind is ſeldom at reſt; the body and ſoul are ſuch near neighbours, that they cannot but ſympathize in each others ſufferings. Some interpret that place of the Apoſtle, Gal. 4. 13, 14. concerning the weakneſs and ſickneſs of his body; You know (ſaith he) how through infirmity of the fleſh I preached the Goſpel. We may ſafely joyn it with thoſe other troubles, afflictions and reproaches which he endured, and were ſo great a diſadvantage to his acceptance in the world. So the meaning is, that though his body was infirm, though he had many weakneſſes upon him, yet he preached the Goſpel. And then it follows in the next verſe, My temptation which was in the fleſh you deſpiſed not: obſerve, he calleth his bodily infirmity a temptation; the afflictions of the body, are great temptations to the ſoul. It is very conſiderable to this purpoſe, what the Apoſtle James ſaith, when he ſpeaks of the ſeveral conditions of the Saints, and their duties in them, chap. 5. 13, 14. Is any man afflicted? let him pray; (he ſpeaks that in general) Is any man merry? let him ſing Pſalms. Is any man ſick? Is he pained by ſickneſs in his body? What ſhall he do then? He doth not ſay, Is any man ſick? let him pray; but, Is any man ſick? let him call for the Elders of the Church, and let them pray over him: As if he ſhould ſay, a ſick man is very unfit to pray himſelf, though for himſelf; he hath need to call others to pray with him, and for him; he hath enough to do, to wreſtle with his pain, and conflict with that affliction: In other afflictions, let him pray; but if he be ſick, let him ſend for the Elders of the Church, and let them pray over him. A diſeaſed body unfits the mind for holy duties. The prayer of ſick Hezekiah is called chattering: Like a Crane or Swallow, ſo did I chatter, Iſa. 33. It was rather chattering then praying; ſuch a diſquietneſs and uncompoſedneſs was upon his ſpirit, through, or by the infirmity of his fleſh. Pain is a piercing ſhaft in Satans quiver of temptations: Though the ſpirit of a man will ſuſtain his infirmity, yet oftentimes, a wound in the body, wounds the ſoul; and the diſeaſes of the fleſh, make the ſoul ſick: A wounded ſpirit no man can bear; and a wound in the body, is a burden too heavy for many men. Pro. 18. 14.

And if it be ſo, then the pain and the weakneſs of the body is no advantage to repentance and returning unto God. How pitifully are they miſtaken, who put off repentance till their bodies be in pain, till they are ſick and weak; they do it upon this ground, becauſe when they are in pain, they think they ſhall repent with more eaſe. Obſerve, if Satan thinks to have ſuch an advantage upon a holy man, as to make him blaſpheme when he is in pain, doſt thou think pain will be an advantage to thy repentance? It is ſaid, that at the pouring out of the fourth Vial, Rev. 16.9. when God did ſmite the inhabitants of the earth, and ſcorched them with great heat, that they blaſphemed the Name of God (they did that which Satan preſumed Job would do) and they repented not to give him glory. It is a woful thing to put off repentance to a pained body: pain in its own nature fits us rather to blaſpheme and turn from God, then to return to him. Never think to have help for the cure of your ſouls, by the diſeaſes of your bodies: uſually we find, that either ſick perſons repent not, or theirs is but a ſickly repentance. At the moſt, pain can but reſtrain your luſts, it can never heal them. The actings of ſome ſins are quickened by diſeaſes: At the moſt, a diſeaſe can but abate the acts of ſin, it can never deſtroy the life of it. Death it ſelf cannot kill ſin: The ſins of wicked men live when they are dead: the grave cannot conſume them, no nor the fire of Hell waſt their ſtrength: the ſins of unbelievers ſhall remain, not only in their guilt, but in their power to all eternity. So much of Satans motion. But put forth thy hand now, and touch his bone and his fleſh, and he will curſe thee to thy face.

Verſe 6. And the Lord ſaid unto Satan, Behold, he is in thy hand, but ſave his life.

Here we have the Lords grant unto that motion of Satan, He is in thy hand, but ſave his life: Thou mayeſt do with his bone and his fleſh what thou wilt, He is in thine hand. We have opened what it is to have a thing put into the hand, in the former Chapter, where the ſame expreſſion is uſed, therefore I ſhall paſs thoſe words here. Note only this, that the Lord ſaith here, He is in thy hand, to prevent Satans cavil: as if he had ſaid, Thou moveſt me to touch his bone and his fleſh; well, leſt thou ſhouldeſt ſay, that I have dealt too gently with him, and have ſmitten him with favour, I will put the rod or ſtaffe into thine hand, do thou with his bone and his fleſh what thou canſt, ſpare him not. We know the Lord is able to ſtrike ſtronger ſtrokes, and give deeper wounds infinitely then Satan can, if he pleaſeth; yet, the love of God to his children, ſtops his hand and breaks the blow: He corrects in judgment, and debates in meaſure, Iſa. 27.8. when he ſtrikes his Children, he ſtrikes them as Children, gently: Thus (2 Sam. 7.14.) ſpeaking of David's family, If he commit iniquity (ſaith God) I will chaſten him with the rod of men; the word there uſed is Enoſh, which ſignifies a weak man; I will chaſten him with the rod of a weak man, of one that hath but a weak arm or hand, the hand of a ſickly frail man: A weak, a ſickly man cannot ſtrike very hard. Thus ſaith God, I will chaſten thy children, if they commit iniquity: they ſhall rather ſee my care, then feel my power in their corrections. Now (I ſay) leſt Satan ſhould pretend partiality, God puts Job into Satans hand, and gives him liberty to lay on as hard as his hand, acted with utmoſt malice, could ſmite him; thou haſt liberty to ſmite him into the very valley of the ſhadow of death; to bring him ſo near death, that he may look into the graves mouth, but no further.

Save his life.] Here is Satans Chain, the limitation or reſtraint of his power. When God puts any of his Servants into Satans hand, he keeps Satan in his own hand. And as all the Elect are in Gods hand, to keep them from taking hurt, ſo the Devil is in Gods hand, to keep him from doing hurt to his Elect. Save his life.

נפש

The word Nepheſh here uſed, ſignifieth properly the ſoul; and the ſoul is in Scripture often put for the life; becauſe the ſoul is the ſpring, the fountain of life; life is derived or diffuſed into the body from or by the ſoul: and as ſoon as the ſoul is parted from the body, life departs. Hence both this Hebrew word, and the Greek word ψύχη, have their names from breathing or reſpiring: For life goes out when breath goes out; when we ceaſe breathing, we ceaſe living. Our life is but a blaſt, a breath; The Lord formed man out of the duſt of the earth, and breathed into his noſtrils the breath of life, and he became a living ſoul, Gen. 2.7. This is that vital ſpirit by which all quick things move; therefore Beaſts, Birds, Fiſh, and creeping Things, are called living ſouls, Gen. 1.20,24. And this life is called the blood, becauſe it is contained or carried in the blood, Gen. 9.4. Further, it is very obſervable, that the Hebrews call the body ſeparated from the ſoul, or a dead corps, Nepheſh, Num. 5.2. c.9.10. c.19.11. Hag. 2.14. Though the life be quite gone out, departed from the carkaſs or body of a dead man, yet that dead body is called life or ſoul; to note that it ſhall live again, and that the ſoul ſhall return unto it: The myſtery of the Reſurrection from death was implyed in the name of the dead. We find alſo that the Heathens called a dead body, a ſoul; poſſibly from ſome glimpſe of the Reſurrection. We lay up a ſoul in the grave ſaith the Poet. Animampue ſepulchro condimus.

Virg. Æn. 3

But how is this work put into Satans hand, The ſaving of his life? What is Satan become a Saviour? what ſalvation can we expect from him, whoſe name is Apollyon, and Abaddon, Rev. 9.11. both which ſignifie a Deſtroyer. Shall we ſend to the Wolf to ſave the Sheep? or to the Vulture to ſave the Dove? Deſtruction is the delight of Satan, and it is his way; as he hath no hope to be ſaved himſelf eternally, ſo no will to ſave others temporally.

Obſerve, That here to ſave life, notes only a ſparing from death; not a delivering from deſtruction, but a forbearing to deſtroy. Satan ſaved his life negatively, that is, he did not take it away: he cannot ſave poſitively, or reſtore that which was ready to periſh; he doth not ſave as a deliverer, but as a murtherer, who would kill his brother, but cannot. He ſaves, not for want of will, but for want of power: when he is forced to ſpare, his nature is to devour. This devouring Lyon hunts for the pretious life, even when God ſaith, Save his life.

Servat animam quia eam non perdit. Druſ.

It may be queſtioned here, Why Satan (for that is implyed) deſired ſo to deſtroy the life of Job? God would never have limited and chained him up, but that Satan had a mind to ſuck his blood, or afflict him unto death.

Theſe two Reaſons may be given, why Satan would have his life.

The one might be this; Becauſe it was a thing doubtful with him (though he bragged much of it) whether he ſhould attain his end or no, to make Job curſe God; when therefore he ſaw he could not overcome his ſpiritual life, it would have been ſome revenge to him to deſtroy his natural life. As ſome wicked ones, his Agents, when by all their treats or flatteries they cannot make a man ſin, which is to deſtroy his ſpiritual life, their revenge breaks forth againſt his natural life, to deſtroy that: This is the method of perſecution, firſt to attempt the death of the ſoul, by drawing or terrifying unto ſin; and if they fail of that, then death is inflicted on the body.

Or again in the ſecond place, he being doubtful in himſelf (though he made no doubt in words) whether his plot would be ſucceſsful, to make Job curſe God; he (I ſay) doubting this deſign might not draw him to ſin, reſolved to take away his life, that ſo Job might never have told tales of his victory, or have reported his conqueſt to the world. At leaſt by his death he might obſcure the buſineſs, and bury it with ſome ſlander: ſaying that Job dyed with diſcontent and grief; that he blaſphemed God when he dyed, that he wiſhed for death, and could not hold out any longer. Much like that device of ſome Jeſuits, who have blown it abroad, that our moſt zealous oppoſers of Romiſh errors, whom they could never move, either by writing or diſputing, while they lived, have yet recanted all when they dyed. Wherefore leſt Satan ſhould have drawn a curtain over the glory of Job's victory, by aſperſing him after his death, the Lord ſaith, Save his life, Job ſhall ſurvive his troubles, that matters may come to light, and a true report be made and left upon record both of thy implacable malice and enmity, and of his invincible patience and ſincerity.

And this may lead us yet further to conſider, why God was ſo careful of that precious part, his life.

For ſome may ſay,

Had it not been glory to God, and honour to Job, (like that of Martyrdom) if he had dyed under the hand of Satan, holding faſt his own integrity, bleſſing God even unto death?

I grant this, but yet God knew that the ſaving of his life would be more advantagious both to himſelf and his Job, for thoſe ends: wherefore he ſaith, Save his life, deſtroy him not.

Firſt thus, God intended to make Job a Monument of mercy, as well as a Monument of ſuffering; he intended to ſet him up to all the world, as one, in whom they might behold the goodneſs of God in raiſing up, mixt with his wiſdom in caſting down; that men might learn hope from Job, as well as patience from Job. Therefore ſaith God, Save his life, I have ſomewhat elſe to do with him; I will raiſe him up again, and in him an everlaſting Monument both of his patience in ſuffering, and of my own power in reſtoring. Indeed if he had dyed in the conflict, and left his bones in the field, he had been a wonderful example of conſtancy: but he had not been ſuch an example of mercy, if his life had not been ſaved.

There may be this in it too, Save his life, ſaith God, I will have him preſerved in this combat, his courage and carriage in it is my delight. God loveth to ſee his people holding out, tugging and continuing in ſuch aſſaults and temptations. If any thing in the world gives delight to God, this is the thing that delighteth him. The Heathen thought this the ſport of their Gods: Seneca, in his Book of Providence, ſpeaking of Cato, and other gallant Roman ſpirits, ſaith, the gods delighted to look upon them in their conflicts with Fortune. To ſee them wraſtle with ſome great calamity, with ſome great danger, was ſuch a ſpectacle, as would draw off Jupiter from his greateſt buſineſs. It is a moſt certain truth, that the moſt true God doth love and delight to ſee his Children wraſtling with ſome great calamity: to ſee a poor man, who is but fleſh and blood, wraſtling with principalities and powers, with the Devil and powers of darkneſs; this is a ſight God himſelf (as we may ſo ſpeak) rejoyceth in. When Abraham had finiſhed that great combat about ſacrificing his Son, he calleth the place Jehovah-jireh, the Lord will ſee, or the Lord doth ſee, the Lord doth behold; as if that had been a ſight which God himſelf came down to look upon. As when ſome great man or ſtrange ſhew paſſeth by, we go out to ſee it; ſo God cometh down upon Mount Moriah to ſee a ſight: And what was it? To ſee Abraham in that great temptation aſſaulted and overcoming. Here was a ſpectacle for the great Jehovah, and therefore he calls the place Jehovah-jireh, the Lord hath ſeen. I doubt not but this place alſo of Job's tryal, might have born the ſame name. As the Lord will be ſeen in the mount of our afflictions to provide for us, ſo he will ſee us in the mount of our afflictions, to pleaſe himſelf. The Pſalmiſt deſcribeth God looking down from Heaven upon the children of men, to ſee if there were any that did underſtand, that did ſeek God, Pſal. 53. 2. Surely then if any do ſeek God, much more if they ſuffer from him, or for him, in a holy manner, he will look down from Heaven to ſee them.

Spectant dii magnos viros cum calamitate aliqua colluctantes. Ecce ſpectaculum, ad quod reſpiciat operi ſuo intentus Deus. Sen. de Cat. *c.*2. de Prov.

Gen. 22. 14.

Thirdly, I will note that as another ground why God would have his life ſpared, becauſe he had much uſe of him, when he was in that condition, full of ſores and ſcabs.

> A godly man is never in ſuch an eſtate, but God hath ſome uſe of his life.

Therefore ſaith God, Save his life, though he be full of ſores, or rather from the crown of the head to the ſole of the foot one continued ſore: though he be a moſt lamentable creature, and cannot wag hand or foot in any ſervice of man, yet ſpare his life, for he may thus ſtand me in very great ſtead, and do me more ſervice then many thouſands, who (as we ſpeak) are ſound wind and limb, and have not one blemiſh upon the whole body. A godly perſon is ever uſeful to God; though he cannot ſtir a limb, yet his life may be uſeful to God: whereas a wicked man, though ſtrong and healthy, though furniſh'd with outward comforts and accommodations, is altogether unſerviceable; he will not do God a ſtroke of work, though he have received great pay and wages aforehand. A godly man will ſerve God in and by his poverty, in and by his ſickneſs, when diſeaſed, when diſtreſſed, when nothing is to be ſeen upon him but ſcabs and boils. Grace will work through all the defects and decayes of nature. And when the life of nature can ſcarce move one member of the outward man upon the earth, the life of grace moves all the members of the inward man toward Heaven. Though the outward man periſh, yet the inward man is renewed day by day, 2 Cor. 4. 16.

Laſtly, God ſaved his life, as a puniſhment and vexation upon Satan. The Talmudiſts are vouched to affirm, that it was not ſo grievous to Job to be afflicted in his body, as it was to Satan when God reſtrained him from deſtroying his life. As if a man ſhould be permitted to crack the glaſs, but he muſt not ſpill the wine. That his life muſt be kept whole in him, was Satans wound. It is a torture to malice not to do the utmoſt miſchief. So much for the clearing of theſe words, Behold he is in thine hand, but ſave his life.

From the Lords grant, obſerve,

> Firſt, That God doth oftentimes give up the bodies of his faithful Servants, to be abuſed and tormented by Satan and his inſtruments.

He is in thine hand, thou mayeſt do with him what thou wilt, on this ſide death. Touch his fleſh and his bone, or touch his fleſh to the bone; ſtrike as hard, wound as deep as thou canſt. It is ſaid, Revel. 2. 10. That Satan ſhould caſt ſome of them, that is, of the Servants of God, into priſon. God gave up their bodies to Irons and Fetters, to the Stocks and Shackles: He permits thoſe bodies, which are Temples of the Holy Ghoſt, to be thruſt into dungeons and the chambers of death.

Therefore do not think it ſtrange to ſee the bodies of the Children of God put into cruel and bloody hands; though they are veſſels of honour, and Temples of the Holy Ghoſt, yet God may give up thoſe bodies to be defiled and polluted with the outrages of the moſt abominable wretches. Conſider what the Apoſtle ſpeaks of the Jewiſh Martyrs, Heb. 11. How were their bodies abuſed and mangled? They were ſtoned, they were ſawn aſunder, they were ſlain with the ſword: they wandered about in ſheep ſkins and goat ſkins, being deſtitute, afflicted, tormented: of whom the world was not worthy. Their bodies had not a houſe to dwell in, nor garments to put on, in whoſe ſouls God himſelf dwelt, and had put upon them the garment of Salvation. Who is able to expreſs, yea, to conceive what ſtrange inventions of cruelties have been brought into the world to vex and torment the bodies of the Saints? The ſtories of the Primitive times are full: but the Fathers of the Romiſh Inquiſition have exceeded them all. Satan here invents a ſtrange diſeaſe as an engine to torture Job's body, in that he mixt the rack and the wheel, the ſword and the ſaw, the fiery gridiron and the boyling oyl: The pain of a thouſand deaths was heighten'd in that malignant deſtemper.

Secondly, He is in thine hand, but ſave his life, ſaith God. The matter wherein Satan is limited is life; thence note,

> That life and death are in the hand of God.

It is truth, that all we have is in the hand of God; but God keeps our life in his hand laſt of all, and he hath that in his hand in a ſpecial manner. So David expreſſes it, Thou holdeſt my ſoul in life; though the ſoul continue, life may not continue; there is the ſoul, when there is not life; life is that which is the union of ſoul and body; Thou holdeſt my ſoul in life; that is, thou holdeſt ſoul and body together. So Daniel deſcribes God to Belſhazzar, Dan. 5. 23. The God in whoſe hand thy breath is, and whoſe are all thy wayes, haſt thou not glorified. The breath of Princes is in the hand of God; and the ſame hand holds the breath of the meaneſt Subject: This may be matter of comfort to us in ſuch times as theſe are, times of danger, and times of death; when the hand of man is lifted up to take thy life, remember thy life is held in the hand of God. And as God ſaid here to Satan, Afflict the body of Job, but ſave his life; ſo God ſaith ſtill to bloody wretches, who are as the limbs of Satan, The bodies of ſuch and ſuch are in your hands, the eſtates of ſuch and ſuch are in your hands, but ſave their lives. The life of a man is never at the mercy of a creature; though it be a common ſpeech of men, when they have a man under them, Now I have you at my mercy. Though ſome brag as Laban did to Jacob, It is in the power of my hand to do you hurt; yet God often checks them (as he did Laban) from ſo much as ſpeaking hurt, Gen. 31. 29. but the God of your Father ſpake unto me yeſter-night, ſaying, Take thou heed, that thou ſpeak not to Jacob either good or bad. Creatures, though full of love, cannot ſpeak good; and though full of malice, they cannot ſpeak bad. If God forbid: then much leſs can they do us hurt, and leaſt of all hurt hurt our lives, if God with-hold. David triumphs in his intereſt in ſuch a God, Pſal. 68. 20. Our God is the God of ſalvation (that is, of deliverance, of outward deliverance (for that is eſpecially there meant) and unto God the Lord belong the iſſues from death, or the goings out from death, that is, God hath all wayes that lead out from death in his own keeping, he keepeth the key of the door, that lets us out from death; when a man is in the valley of the ſhadow of death, where ſhall he iſſue out? where ſhall he have a paſſage? No where, ſaith man, he ſhall not eſcape; but God keepeth all the paſſages; when men think they have ſhut us up in the jaws of death, he can open them, and deliver us, To him belong the iſſues from death: It is an alluſion to one that keepeth a paſſage or a door: And God is a faithful keeper, and a friendly keeper, who will open the door for the eſcape of his people, when they cry unto him. It is expreſt ſo in Pſal. 141. 7. Our bones are ſcattered at the graves mouth: as when one cutteth or cleaveth wood upon the earth, that is, we are even ready to die, to be put into the grave. What then? But mine eyes are upon thee, O God the Lord: in thee is my truſt, leave not my ſoul deſtitute. Keep me from the ſnare which they have laid for me. Let the wicked fall into their own nets, whilſt I withall eſcape; that is, make me a way to eſcape: As if he ſhould ſay, Thou haſt the key of the gate, by which we may iſſue out from death: Lord, I look that thou ſhouldeſt now open it for me.

Pſal. 66. 9.

Let it comfort us that God hath our lives, and the iſſues from death in his own hand. When Satan thought he had Job faſt enough lockt up in the valley of the ſhadow of death, God kept him ſafe, he opened a door and let him out.

Thirdly note, That as God hath life in his hand in a ſpecial manner, ſo he takes ſpecial care of the lives of his people.

Save his life (ſaith God) I will look to that: Pſal. 116. 15. Precious in the ſight of the Lord is the death of his Saints. Precious is their death; not that death it ſelf is precious; a privation hath no preciouſneſs in it: but their life is precious, therefore he will have a great price for their death; God puts off the life of a Saint at a dear rate. Woe unto thoſe who violently and unjuſtly take away that which is ſo precious in the eſteem of God; at one time or other he will make them pay dear for ſuch Jewels.

Fourthly, obſerve, It is mercy to have our lives, though we loſe all things elſe.

You ſee here God ſaith concerning Job, Save his life; I have given thee his eſtate, thou haſt ſpoiled that; now I will leave his body in thine hand, wound that, afflict that, but ſave his life. Here was mercy. Therefore it was a ſpecial promiſe and priviledge made and granted to ſome in times of great publick ſufferings and common calamities, as to Ebed-melech the Ethiopian, Jer. 39. 8. and to Baruch the Scribe, Jer. 45. 5. That their lives ſhould be given to them for a prey; as if God had ſaid, It is no ordinary favour, in times of common danger, to have your lives for a prey; you complain for this loſs and that loſs, and you have cauſe too, but think withall that you have your lives. And why is it ſaid, that they ſhould have their lives for a prey? A prey you know properly is that which we take out of the hand of an enemy, that which was in his poſſeſſion; the lives of theſe perſons were ſaid to be given to them for a prey in thoſe perillous times, becauſe God by his care and providence did (as it were) fetcht back their lives from the hand of the enemy: their lives in natural reaſon were in their enemies hands, but God undertakes to fetch them back, and recover them out of their hands, and ſo they were promiſed to have their lives for a prey. Thus God giveth to many of his people their lives for a prey, and they are to bleſs God in this behalf, whatſoever afflictions and troubles are upon them, that yet they have their lives.

Laſtly, We may hence raiſe our meditations to conſider the wonderful love of God to us in Chriſt: when God ſent Chriſt into the world to ſave ſinners, he put him into the hands of Satan and his inſtruments; yet he doth not ſay (as here) to Satan, Save his life: Afflict him as thou wilt, perſecute him in his cradle; deſpiſe him, ſlander him, revile him, accuſe him, crown his head with thorns, ſcourge him, buffet him, ſpit in his face, &c. but ſave his life: No, this bound is not ſet to the malice of Satan, or the rage of men, God gives them leave to take life and all. Concerning his Servant Job, God ſaith to Satan, Spare his life; but when he ſendeth his Son, he gives no order to have him ſpared, but gives his cruel enemies full ſcope. How wonderful is the love of God, who for our ſakes was ſo expenſive of his Sons life, whenas he thus ſpared the life of a Servant? If Satan had been chained up from taking the life of Chriſt, he had been at liberty to triumph over our lives, to all eternity. We had all died, if God had ſaid to Satan concerning Chriſt, Save his life.

Thus we ſee the Commiſſion of Satan againſt Job, and the limitation of it. Satan was not tied up ſo ſhort as he was in the former Chapter, and yet ſtill he is tied. There he might meddle with Job's eſtate, but not with his body; here he may meddle with his body, but not with his life: Though God lengthen Satans chain, yet he never lets Satan looſe; though he be at more liberty then before, yet he is in cuſtody; there is a But of reſtriction upon him ſtill. It is our comfort, that though Satan (as Philoſophers ſpeak of liquids, water, and the like) cannot keep himſelf in his own bounds, yet he is eaſily kept in bounds by the word and power of God.

Verſe 7. So went Satan forth from the preſence of the Lord, and ſmote Job with ſore boils, from the ſole of the foot unto his crown.

Verſe 8. And he took him a potſheard to ſcrape himſelf withall, and he ſate down among the aſhes.

So Satan went forth from the preſence of the Lord.] He is preſently upon execution, as ſoon as he had his Commiſſion. We have explained theſe words in the former Chapter.

See then what he doth: He ſmote Job with ſore boils from the ſole of his foot unto his crown.

He ſmote Job, ſaith the Text. In the former afflictions Satan had inſtruments to work by: He ſtirred up the Caldeans and Sabeans: he moved the fire and the wind into a conſpiracy againſt Job: Here he (that he might be ſure it ſhould be done fully) doth it himſelf.

He ſmote Job.] When the Devil ſmiteth, he ſmiteth throughly, he ſmiteth home. When Angels ſtrike, they ſtrike to purpoſe. It is ſaid Acts 12. that an Angel of the Lord ſmote Herod, and he was eaten of worms, and gave up the ghoſt. Spirits have mighty power.

He ſmote Job; why, he did not demand to ſmite Job, he did but deſire to have him Toucht: you heard before ſomewhat of that. Satan moves that his fleſh and his bone might be only touched; now, his motion being granted, it is ſaid he ſmote him. There are two things in this ſmiting:

Firſt, It notes ſuddenneſs: He did not afflict him by a diſeaſe that grew upon him by degrees; as you know boils and ſores ordinarily are long a gathering, breeding in, and breaking out of the fleſh; but he was all over full of theſe boils in an inſtant.

Secondly, Smiting intimates the vehemency of it, a killing ſtroke, a deaths wound; the Hebrew word ſignifieth to ſtrike to death. So here was a ſudden ſtroke, and a vehement ſtroke. It muſt needs at once wound both his mind and his body, on a ſudden, in a moment, to be filled with ſores, and covered with a ſcab; he ſaw no cauſe, he had no prognoſticks which might induce a ſuſpition that his body was in ſuch a diſtemper; and ſo it looked the more like an immediate ſtroke from an offended God. Every word hath its weight and emphaſis to add weight and anguiſh to this affliction.

נכה De homine occidit, perdidit.

It may here be queſtioned, how Satan can be ſaid to ſmite? And the ſame doubt ariſeth about this action of good Angels; one of which, as executioner of Gods wrath, ſmote of the Aſſyrians in one night an hundred and fourſcore and five thouſand, Iſa. 37. 36. and another ſmote Herod, Acts 12.

I anſwer, how Angels ſmite is a ſecret that we cannot expreſs, nor fully comprehend. For this and the like expreſſions of ſmiting, are ſuted to the nature of the Patient, not of the Agent; man being a material ſubſtance, is ſuſceptive or capable of ſmiting, or of a ſtroke: But an Angel being an immaterial ſubſtance, cannot ſmite properly, and he is therefore only ſaid to ſmite a man, becauſe we cannot ſignifie an effect or impreſſion upon a body, but by ſuch a word. We know that in the plague or other diſeaſes, when they are immediately inflicted by Angels, man receives a ſtroak, and therefore is ſaid to be ſmitten. But how the Angel gives that ſtroak, or ſmites, is not known. Man may feel himſelf ſmitten by an Angel, but how the Angel ſmites he cannot underſtand. This word is fitted to the recipient, not to the efficient cauſe of the diſeaſe, or plague, or death.

שחן Ulcus ortū ex calore, ſive igne, inflammans corpus. Schind. Vox Hebræa ſignificat ſcabiem fœdiſſimam, qualis eſt Elephantiaſis. Vatab. in loc.

He ſmote him with boyles.] The Hebrew word ſignifieth an ulcer, a burning or an inflaming ulcer, an ulcer that cometh from extream heat, or is extream hot. Satan did (as it were kindle a fire in the bowels of Job, inflamed his blood, and heated the humors of his body, from whence theſe boiles, theſe ulcers, theſe ſores did ariſe. The Grammarians expreſs it ſometime more generally, a filthy ſcab; ſometime more particularly, an ulcer, a boile, ſometime a leproſie; it is indeed any foul diſeaſe breaking out upon the body.

The ſame word is uſed, Exod. 9. 10. where it is ſaid, that God ſmote the Egyptians and the Magicians with boyles. It was one of the plagues of Egypt that was inflicted upon Job; we need ſay no more of it then that, to ſhew that it was a grievous plague, a moſt painful ſore: for it is added in that place of Exodus, that the Magicians could not ſtand before Moſes becauſe of the boiles.

כשחין רע Ulcere peſſimo.

Again, it is not only a ſmiting, and ſmiting with a boile; but there is an Epithite added, he ſmote him with ſore boiles, with an evil boile: among evils ſome are worſe, theſe were the worſt kind of boiles. There are many ſorts of boiles, ſome are not ſo bad as others, though all are bad enough. Now leſt any ſhould think Job's boyles were not the moſt painful and malignant, a word is joyned to expreſs it to the height: in the kind they were boyles, and (intenſive, or) in the degree, they were the worſt and moſt tormenting boyles.

Further in the fourth place, we know it is painful for a man to have one boyle, eſpecially an angry burning one, a boile of the worſt ſort; but it is ſubjoyned, he was ſmitten with boyles, from the ſole of his foot to his crown. To be all over boyles, and to be all over-run with the moſt painful kind of boyles, what a vehement pain muſt this be? From the ſole of his foot unto his crown, there is the extent of this ſtroak. Intenſive, it was the worſt kind of boyle, and Extenſive, it was all over his body, no part free.

From the ſole of his foot unto his crown.] It is uſual in Scripture thus to ſignifie the whole body: as Deut. 28. 35. The Lord ſhall ſmite thee in the knees and in the legs, with a ſore botch that cannot be healed, from the ſole of the foot to the top of the head, or to the crown. And Iſa. 1. 6. when the Prophet would expreſs what a general blow the body politick had received from the hand of God by his judgements, (ſo it is there to be underſtood) he ſaith there were wounds and bruiſes, and putrifying ſores, from the ſole of the foot even unto the head. That is, the whole body politick, the whole State had at one time or other, or all at one time received wounds and blows, and ſtroaks from the hand of God. The extreams comprehend all the parts: That which extends from one extream or outmoſt part to another, is extended through all; from Eaſt to Weſt, is all the world over; and from head to foot, is all the body over. So then Satan ſmote him from the ſole of his foot unto his crown, is, He ſmote his whole body.

All pains and diſtempers were gathered into this one malady, and all parts of his body were ſmitten, as if they had been but one member: only his tongue was untoucht, as is commonly obſerved, That it might be free to blaſpheme God, who had thus polluted the beauty and comlineſs of his body, who had thus imbittered the comforts of his ſoul.

2 Chron. 16. 12.

Job being thus ſmitten, would ſurely look out for help. Though it be exceeding ſinful (with Aſa diſeaſed in his feet) to ſeek to The Phyſitians, and not the Lord; yet it is our duty to ſeek to the Lord and the Phyſitian: To truſt in means is to neglect God; to neglect means is to tempt God. Doubtleſs holy and wiſe Job walkt in a path between theſe two; he neither truſted nor neglected means, but uſed them; yet alaſs it was with Job, as it is ſaid in the Prophet concerning Ephraim and Judah, That when Ephraim ſaw his ſickneſs, and Judah ſaw his wound; then went Ephraim to the Aſſyrian, and ſent to King Jareb: yet could he not heal you, nor cure you of your wound. Though Job (as they in their civil ſickneſs) ſeeing his ſickneſs and his wound, had ſent to this and that Phyſitian; their anſwer would have been, We cannot heal you nor cure you of your wound. His diſeaſe was of the nature of thoſe which are called, The Phyſitians reproach: They could not diſcover any natural cauſe of it, and therefore they could not preſcribe any artificial cure of it. Phyſitians of greateſt value, in Job's caſe, were Phyſitians of no value. And therefore to ſhew that either all had in vain attempted to cure him, or that none durſt undertake the cure, the Text ſaith, That he took a potſheard to ſcrape himſelf withall, and he ſate down among the aſhes.

Hoſ. 5. 13.

Opprobrium medicorum.

Theſe words are a further aggravation of Job's affliction. When he is in this manner ſmitten, ſmitten with boyles, ſmitten with the worſt of boyles, ſmitten with boyles all over, from the ſole of his feet unto his crown: ſurely a man in this pickle had need to have ſome good tendance and looking to; ſuppoſe the Phyſitians and Chyrurgions could not cure him, yet they might eaſe him; if they had plyed him with Fomentations and ſuppling oyles, if they had bound up his ſores with fine linnen, to mitigate and mollifie them: if ſuch applications and attendance had not been a refreſhing to him, yet they would have been a reſpect to him; if they had not been an allay to his pain, yet they would have been an honour to his perſon. But (as this 8. verſe ſhews us) when the man was thus nothing but ſores, he had then nothing to help him: He might ſay (as David afterwards in a ſad condition, Pſal. 142. 4.) I looked on my right hand, and beheld, but there was no man that would know me, refuge failed, or periſhed from me, no man cared for my ſoul. When thus, Lover and Friend, Phyſitian and Chyrurgion, Wife and Servant were far from him, at leaſt in duty and affection; then he is forced to be both Patient and Phyſitian, Sick and Nurſe; he took him a pot-ſheard to ſcrape himſelf withall. Poor man! He who was lately in health, and the greateſt man in the Eaſt, being now ſick, hath nothing left him but a piece of a broken pitcher.

There are four aggravations of his affliction in this.

The firſt is this, That he could get none to dreſs him; he was fain to do it himſelf, ſaith the Text. Neither Wife, nor Servants, nor Friends would meddle with him. A hard caſe!

Then ſecondly, Conſider what a tool he had to do it with. He was left to be his own Chyrurgion, and his dreſſing inſtrument was a potſheard. The word ſignifies, ſometimes a whole earthen pot, ſometimes a broken piece of it, a ſheard as we call it. Here is no mention of fine linnen and ſalves to heal, or of oyle to ſupple theſe ſoares; only a hard pot-ſheard is the tool, and ſcraping is all the Chyrurgery. A hard caſe!

Thirdly, This intimates either that his body was ſo loathſom by reaſon of the diſeaſe, that he was loath to touch himſelf with his hands: As we ſay proverbially in our Language concerning a deformed or filthy creature; a man would ſcarce touch ſuch an one with a pair of Tongs. So, as if Job had ſo abhorred himſelf, that he was loth to touch himſelf with his bare hands, he muſt take ſomewhat, and for want of a better, a pot-ſheard to ſcrape himſelf; he had not the heart (as it were) to touch himſelf, his diſeaſe was ſo foul, that (as we ſay) it turn'd his ſtomack. This ſome give as a reaſon why he took a pot-ſheard, his body was ſo filthy that he was loth to touch it with his hands.

Or as others give the reaſon, his boiles and ſores did ſo over-ſpread and envenome his hands to the very nailes, that it was a pain for him to touch himſelf: his fingers were ſo ſore, that he had ſcarce any uſe of them; this conſtrained him to make a poor ſhift, even to take a pot-ſheard to ſcrape himſelf withall. What a lamentable caſe was this!

Fourthly, There follows yet a further aggravation of his affliction. If a man be ſick and full of ſores, yet if he can get an eaſie bed or ſome ſoft place to lie upon, it is a great comfort. You know how men will remove from bed to bed, from place to place, when they are diſtempered and in pain. But ſee where Job lies, he hath no down-bed nor ſoft pillows, neither couch nor chair to ſit in, but

He ſate down among the aſhes.

There are two expoſitions concerning this; for his ſitting in the Aſhes, may be taken as a voluntary act, or as a neceſſary act. Some take it as a voluntary act of Job, and that he did it Elective; when he was in that condition, he went out and choſe to ſit among the Aſhes; and ſo his ſitting among the Aſhes was a note of his humiliation and abaſement: As often in Scripture, to ſit down in aſhes, is as much as to repent and humble our ſelves deeply before God, to lie in the very duſt; as it is expreſt of Job, (Chap. 42. 6.) when he had ſeen God, I abhor my ſelf, ſaith he, and I repent in duſt and aſhes; alluding to that cuſtom of ſitting in aſhes when they did repent. So you find in that ſolemn humiliation of the Ninivites, Jon. 3. 6. that when word came to the King of Ninive (namely that Jonah had propheſied the ruine of the City within forty dayes) he aroſe from his throne, and he layed his robe from him, and covered himſelf with ſack-cloth, and ſate in aſhes. Chriſt upbraiding Chorazin and Bethſaida, tells them, that if the mighty works which were done in them had been done in Tyre and Sidon, they had repented long ago in ſack-cloath and aſhes, Matth. 11. 22. In great mournings, the Heathen uſed to ſit in or ſprinkle themſelves with aſhes. As Homer reports of Ulyſſes after a Ship-wrack, and of others, whom Druſius hath obſerved on this Text. Iſa. 61. 3. the promiſe is, that God will give beauty for aſhes; that is, they that humble themſelves and lie in aſhes, ſhall have a happy and comfortable reſtauration. So that this act of Job might be voluntary, and a geſture of repentance; ſitting down among the aſhes, to humble and abaſe himſelf before God.

ἕζητο ἐπ' ἐσχάρῃ ἐν κονιςοῖ.

The Papiſts are ſuperſtitiouſly ceremonious in this point at this day: annually obſerving a day which they affect to call Aſhwedneſday, on which they ſprinkle themſelves with aſhes, as a preparatory to their formal Lenton Repentance. But we have not ſo learned Chriſt.

Secondly, We may take it for a neceſſitated act, that he was forced to this, to go and ſit among the aſhes, (or as moſt from the Septuagint tranſlate it, to ſit down upon a dung-hill) and that in two reſpects.

Firſt, In regard of his poverty and want, as if he were ſo bereft and deſtitute of all outward things, that he had not a houſe to put his head in, nor any other conveniencies to make uſe of; but was conſtrained to go out, and ſit upon the dung-hill or amongſt the aſhes.

Secondly, Others rather conceive, that the neceſſity did ariſe from the contagion and loathſomneſs of his diſeaſe, ſo that he was forced to go out of doors, he filled the houſe with ſuch a noiſom ſmell.

Or he was forced to go out as a Leper; concerning whom the Law was afterwards, you know, that they ſhould be put out of the Camp or City; and it was a Law grounded upon reaſon, and the common light of nature, though it had a ſpiritual ſignification, as given to the Jews. The Septuagint ſay expreſly, he ſate upon the dung-hill without the City, as Lepers were wont to be, according to the Law of Moſes; and as we ſee executed in that caſe of Uzziah the King, being a Leper, he dwelt in a houſe by himſelf alone, and was cut off from the houſe of the Lord, 2 Chron. 26. 21.

Levit. 13. 14, 45.

ἐπὶ τῆς κοπρίας ἔξω τῆς πόλεως. Sept.

But that Job ſate either without the City, or upon a dung-hill, is only a conjecture, and beſides the Text. Which way ſoever we take it, it is a great aggravation of Job's ſorrows. Take it for a neceſſitated ſitting in the aſhes abroad, it inferſ, that either he was ſo poor as that he had not an houſe to be in; or that his diſeaſe was ſo contagious that he could not be endured in the houſe. Or take it for a voluntary act, that he did chooſe to ſit in aſhes, it was an aggravation of his affliction; for then it notes that he was in the loweſt, in the ſaddeſt condition that can be imagined: ſitting in aſhes, being an emblem of extream ſorrow, and never uſed but in times of greateſt calamity, publick or perſonal.

So that here every circumſtance is an aggravation of Job's affliction. He was ſmitten by Satan, and he ſmote hard enough: he ſmote him, and he ſmote him with boyles, he ſmote him with the moſt malignant kind of boyles; he ſmote him with ſuch boyles all over, from the ſole of his feet to his crown; and when he was in this conditino, he had no Nurſe, no Chyrurgion, no Phyſitian to help him, he was forced to take a pot-ſheard to ſcrape himſelf: he had no ſoft bed prepared to lye on, nor (as many have thought) houſe to be in; but out of the City, or out of his houſe he muſt, and among the aſhes, upon the dung-hill. Lo, there he ſits. What one ſaid of an exact Hiſtory of a great Prince, That ſurely it was written rather in theory as a pattern or picture of a Prince, then according to the truth of a Hiſtory: So we may ſay of this deſcription of Job's troubles; that ſurely it was written rather as a ſtudied pattern of man's ſufferings, then as an accompliſht Hiſtory of the ſufferings of any man: yea who almoſt can go ſo far in imagination, as Job went in real paſſion? But we will paſs from the deſcription of his ſorrows, to ſome Obſervations upon them.

Zenoph. Cyr. Ad Principis effigiem quam Hiſtoriæ fidem.

Firſt, Here we ſee, That Satan if he be permitted, hath a power ſuddenly to afflict the body with diſeaſes; and that is a power far tranſcending all the power that is in man.

Man is able to wound the body of his brother with a material inſtrument, but all the Tyrants in the world cannot ſmite the body with a diſeaſe, or command a man into ſickneſs; though God ſhould ſay to them, as here to Satan, I give you leave, yet they muſt leave that to Satan: whoſe help is ſometime begg'd by envious wretches, who would kill their brethren without a Sword, and vex them unſeen. Man muſt have a weapon to ſmite, but Satan can ſmite and kill without a weapon, if God ſay the word. Man can ſpill the blood, but Satan can poiſon the blood: he can infect the humors, and taint the ſpirits more ſubtilly, more ſpeedily then the moſt ſkilful poiſoner in Rome. We ſhewed before how ſuddenly Satan can raiſe commotions in the Air, ſtormes and tempeſts there; he can do the like in our bodies: for ſuch are diſeaſes in the body as ſtorms and tempeſts in the Air. Storms make (as it were) a confuſion among the Elements, and are the diſtemper of Nature: diſeaſes make a confuſion among the humors, and diſtemper the conſtitution and ſpirits of the body. It is ſaid of the woman in Luke 13. 16. that Satan had bound her 28. yeares; Obſerve in that, the power Satan hath over the body, if God give him liberty to exerciſe it: as cruel men can bind in chains, and caſt the body into priſon for many years; ſo Satan can bind the body with a ſpirit of infirmity as with a chain.

Secondly, Obſerve this, That health and ſtrength of body are a very great bleſſing.

You ſee Satan deſires to try Job by taking away this bleſſing laſt, and he thought this would make Job curſe God: you may ſee the value of it by his deſire to deſtroy it. Health is the Prince of earthly bleſſings. We ſay, he lives miſerably that lives by Medicines, who to uphold Nature is in the continual uſe of Art. How miſerably then doth he live, whom Art and Medicines cannot reſtore to health, who is diſeaſed beyond the help of Phyſick?

I might mind you likewiſe from this, to remember what frail bodies we live in, even ſuch, as have in them the ſeeds of all diſeaſes. Sin indeed is the ſeed of ſickneſs and of death: And hence it is, that if the humors of the body be a little ſtirr'd, they quickly turn to a diſeaſe; and this houſe of clay is ready to diſſolve and fall. What is the ſtrength of the body, that we ſhould truſt it? or the beauty of the body that we ſhould be proud of it? We ſee in Job, how quickly the ſtrength of it is turned into weakneſs, and the beauty of it into blackneſs. All fleſh is graſs, and all the goodlineſs thereof is as the flower of the field; The graſs withereth, and the flower fadeth, Iſa. 40. 6.

And here likewiſe note this, you that enjoy health of body, whoſe ſtrength yet continues, and your ſelves are free from the bonds of any bodily infirmity: while you hear of one ſmitten with a diſeaſe from the crown of the head to the ſole of the feet, conſider what a mercy you have, who have no pain from the crown of the head to the ſole of the feet; who have not an aking joynt, nor pain ſo much as in a finger. It is like that many of you can ſay you have this bleſſing, you do not know what pain in any one member means; look upon a man, that knew nothing but pain, upon a man that had not one member free, and prize your bleſſing.

Such likewiſe who have pain and infirmities, in one or two, or more parts of the body, may ſee in this ſpectacle cauſe to bleſs God, that they have any part free. To have but one or but a few ſores, is mercy, ſparing mercy, when we behold another nothing but a ſore. Indeed when one member ſuffers, (whether in the body natural or myſtical) all the members ſuffer with it. But compaſſion is not ſo heavy a burden, as paſſion is. And as the ſound members ſympathize in ſorrow with thoſe that are ſmitten, ſo they that are ſmitten, ſympathize in joy with thoſe that are ſound. The eaſe of one part mitigates the diſeaſe of another, and it is an abatement of our troubles to ſee thoſe whom we love in peace. Two are better then one (ſaith Solomon,) for if one fall, the other may help him up; but if both fall, who ſhall help? And if every member ſuffer, there is paſſion in all, but compaſſion in none, much leſs ſupport or help.

Thirdly, Obſerve, Job in this condition was left of all.

Do not think it ſtrange if you be brought into ſuch ſtraights, as to be left alone, when you have moſt need of aſſiſtance. Job was as a man friendleſs, Phyſitianleſs, wifeleſs, ſervantleſs, all forſook him. It is the comfort of the people of God, that they know how to be alone, and yet can never be alone: though they be left of all viſible friends, yet they have an inviſible friend who will viſit them, ſtay with them by day, and watch with them by night; for he hath ſaid, I will never leave thee nor forſake thee. In the Greek there are two negatives to affirm this, that God will not leave his, Heb. 13. 5. And he that hath him alone, hath infinitely more then all the world in one. When Friends and Phyſitians will not come near, when Wife and Children take their leave or ſtand afar off, when Servants hold their noſes, being not able to bear the ſtinch and ill ſavour that cometh from the body; yea, when a man comes to be an abhorring to himſelf; yet at that time God delights in him, Chriſt at that time imbraceth him, and takes him in his arms, and kiſſeth him with the kiſſes of his lips, which are better then wine, yea better then life. Job was never ſo near God, ſo in the boſom of God, as when no creature in the world would ſo much as touch him; Job was never ſo beautiful in the eye of God, as when he had nothing but boiles upon him.

Fourthly, I may preſent you with Job as he was upon his Aſh-hill in want of all things; from thence be admoniſhed,

That the Children of God, his deareſt Servants may come to uttermoſt outward extremities.

When a man is among the aſhes, then he is at the loweſt: what can a man be leſs then that? The Apoſtles were made as the filth of the world, as the off-ſcouring of all things, as ſweepings and offal which are caſt out upon the dunghil; ſo was Job in the ſence of many interpreters. They who are of moſt worth may be uſed as if they were worth nothing. Job was a pearl though upon a dunghil. They who were brought up in ſcarlet embrace dunghils, ſaith Jeremy in his Lamentation for Jeruſalem, Chap. 4. 5. We may ſay, They who are brought up and clothed in better then ſcarlet, even in the robes of Righteouſneſs, and in the Garments of Salvation, may yet be brought to embrace a dunghil. There is no judging by Appearance; No man knows love or hatred by all that is before him or (upon him) Eccleſ. 9.

Laſtly, Look upon Job's ſitting in the aſhes, as a voluntary act, and then obſerve, (which is of much concernment and uſe for us now, in regard of the preſent condition we are in.)

That as the afflicting hand of God doth increaſe upon a people, or upon a perſon, ſo ought the humiliation and repentance of that perſon or people to increaſe.

When the hand of God was upon Job before, he rent his mantle, he ſhaved his head, theſe were acts of great humiliation; but now Job having a nearer and deeper affliction upon him, humbleth himſelf yet more: Then he fell upon the ground, but now he ſitteth among the aſhes. Greater afflictions call to greater humiliation. We ought not only to be humbled when God afflicteth, but to be humbled in a proportion to the affliction: As it is in regard of ſin committed, great ſins call for great ſorrow; and as it is in regard of mercies received, great mercies call for great praiſes: ſo great troubles call us to great humiliations; and ſtill the greater troubles are, the greater our humiliation ought to be. This is one way of accepting the puniſhment of our iniquities, and of improving preſent evils for our everlaſting good. Conſider whether this be not the work of this day.

We have had the hand of God upon the Nation in leſſer judgments heretofore, we have had warning-pieces ſhot off amongſt us; but now we hear the report of murthering-pieces every day. Divers years God made war upon us with the ſword of the Angel; by which thouſands have fallen in our Streets, but now God hath put a ſword into the hands of men. The former ſword was a Favour compared with this; thoſe wounds, a kiſs, compared with this. Both David and experience reſolve it thus. Many of our dear brethren are ſlain and fallen by the ſword, their blood hath been ſpilt like water, and their bones have been ſcattered as when one cleaveth or cutteth wood upon the earth. The ſpoyled cry to us for bread, the ſick and wounded for help and healing. Many Towns have been plundered, many Matrons and Virgins have been raviſhed, many Families have been ſcattered, many Wives and Children deprived of their Husbands and Parents, many Pariſhes bereſt of faithful Paſtours, ſome of our Dwellings turned to aſhes; and is it not time for us, not only to rent our garments, but to ſit in aſhes? do not theſe things call us to eat aſhes like bread, and mingle our drink with weeping. Is it not time for us not only to write, but to act a Lamentation, and to ſay, For theſe things I weep; mine eye, mine eye runneth down with water? There is one thing yet, which may and ought to be a Lamentation to us, beyond all our own ſufferings, namely this, God is diſhonoured, his Name is blaſphemed, his people are reproached. The enemies ſtrike this ſword in their bones, a ſcornful enquiry, Where is now your God? Pſal. 42. 10. Should not tears be our meat day and night (as they were Davids) while they ſay continually, Where is now your God? Pſal. 42. 3. Our not ſitting in the aſhes for ſuch things as theſe will bring us unto aſhes; and if we will not ſit upon the dunghill of our ſins in humiliation, our ſins will bring us and our Land unto a dunghill of deſolation. In this day, as of old by his faithful Prophet (Iſa. 22. 12.) doth the Lord God of hoſts call to weeping, and to mourning, and to baldneſs, and to girding with ſackcloth: And not only to theſe, but to Job's poſture of ſorrow, ſitting in aſhes; the voyce of the rod calleth to this: the voyce of the trumpet heard daily in our Streets, calls to this. We have cauſe to cry out as the Prophet Jeremy, Chap. 4. v. 19. My bowels, my bowels, I am pained at the very heart, my heart maketh a noiſe in me, I cannot hold my peace, becauſe thou haſt heard, O my ſoul, the ſound of the trumpet, and the alarm of war. And becauſe the ſound of the trumpet among us, like that on mount Sinai, Exod. 19. 19. doth not only ſound long, but alſo lowder and lowder; it becomes us, not only to continue our mourning, and our crying unto God, but to cry lowder and lowder. If we increaſe not our humiliations, God will yet increaſe our judgments: if we will not ſit in aſhes, he will bring us to aſhes, and puniſh us yet ſeven times more for our ſins.

2 Sam. 24.

Wherefore receive the counſel of the Apoſtle James, in theſe your afflictions, Be afflicted, and mourn, and weep: let your laughter be turned to mourning, and your joy to heavineſs. Humble your ſelves in the ſight of the Lord, and he ſhall lift you up. God lifts them up who caſt themſelves down: and if (in this ſence) we be afflicted, we ſhall not be afflicted. Chriſt hath purchaſed, Free Grace beſtows deliverance; and we receive it, when we return, repent and believe.

James 4. 9, 10.

VERS. 9, 10.

Then ſaid his wife unto him, Doſt thou ſtill retain thine integrity? Curſe God, and die.

But he ſaid unto her, Thou ſpeakeſt as one of the fooliſh women ſpeaketh: what? ſhall we receive good at the hand of God, and ſhall we not receive evil? In all this did not Job ſin with his lips.

WE have already conſidered out of the former parts of the Chapter Job's ſecond affliction: Firſt, in the occaſion of it: Secondly, in the cauſes of it: And thirdly, in the manner of it, together with thoſe aggravating circumſtances which made his ſorrows out of meaſure ſorrowful. And now we muſt look upon that Jewel among the aſhes, and conſider what befel him there: Theſe things make the fourth part of the Chapter, namely the conſequents of his affliction.

Theſe conſequents, are three:

Firſt, His Wives unſeemly and ſinful counſel, verſ. 9.

Secondly, His wiſe and holy reply, verſ. 10.

Thirdly, His friends viſit to comfort him, verſ. 11, 12, 13.

Firſt, We will diſcuſs his Wives unſeemly and ſinful counſel, Then ſaid his Wife unto him, &c.

There are two Queſtions raiſed concerning Job's Wife.

Firſt, Who ſhe was?

Secondly, How it came to paſs that ſhe was ſpared, when all his outward comforts were removed?

For the firſt, in a word, It is the opinion of many among the ancient Jewes, that Job lived in the time of Jacob the Patriark: And that he took to Wife Dinah, Jacob's Daughter; but I leave the Rabbins to prove that, if they can. Why ſhe was ſpared in the time of ſo general a calamity, may bear ſome further inquiry. For ſeeing a Wife is the chiefeſt of creature comforts, and the very reaſon why God at the firſt did inſtitute that relation, was that man might have a help meet for him: it may ſeem ſomewhat ſtrange why Satan, going about to bring upon Job trouble in its perfection, ſhould leave him that, which is the perfection of all outward comforts, a Wife. What were Job's Oxen, and Aſſes, and Sheep, and Camels to a Wife? And what were his Children to a Wife? When Adam had not only ſuch a number of Cattel, but all the Cattel and Riches in the world in his poſſeſſion, and under his dominion, God ſaw him defective till he provided him a Wife, a Wife was the complement of all. How then cometh it to paſs, that when Satan would afflict Job to the uttermoſt, he leaves him his Wife?

Gen. 2. 20.

To clear this, before we come to examine the words that ſhe ſpake, The Jews, which are the Authors of that aforenamed opinion, that his Wife was Dinah, tell us (to lengthen out the dream) that ſhe was ſpared for Jacob, her Fathers ſake. It is a truth, That Children do often fare the better for holy Fore-fathers. It is no mean priviledge to be born of thoſe that are in Covenant. As God viſits the iniquity of the Fathers upon the Children unto the third and fourth generation of them that hate him, ſo he ſhews mercy to thouſands of thoſe that love him, &c. Exod. 20. 5, 6. but in this place we have no ſtock to graft this truth upon, but a meer imagination. I paſs on.

Secondly, Some conceive that his Wife was out of Satans Commiſſion, that he had nothing to do to meddle with her, ſhe being comprehended under that clauſe of exception in Chap. 1. verſ. 12. All that he hath is in thy power, only upon himſelf put not forth thine hand; his Wife (they ſay) was a part of himſelf, according to that Gen. 2. 24. And they (viz. the Husband and the Wife) ſhall be one fleſh. So that Satan could not ſmite her, but he muſt ſmite Job too; therefore ſhe was exempted, ſay they, and ſet beyond the reach of Satans ſtroak.

Though this may have ſome ſhew of wit in it, and ſomewhat of reaſon too, referring unto the firſt part of Job's affliction; yet there is no ſhew of either in reference unto the ſecond, where Satan had a Commiſſion to afflict his body, his fleſh and his bone; for then ſhe alſo (take it in the ſence before) was comprehended under the Commiſſion of Satan, being (though not as Eve from Adam, bone of his bone, and fleſh of his fleſh, yet) according to the Law of marriage given to all One fleſh with him, Gen. 2. 24.

Therefore in the third place, that which I conceive and agree with others in for the true reaſon why ſhe was ſpared, is this; That ſhe might be a further inſtrument of her Husbands affliction. Satan meant to make uſe of her for his own purpoſe, to drive on the main deſign; and whereas ſhe ſhould have been a help to her Husband, Satan imployes her againſt her Husband; this was his aim, and therefore ſhe was ſpared. Hence one of the Ancients calls her the ſtrongeſt and fitteſt weapon, with which Satan did aſſault, the choiſeſt Arrow in his Quiver, by which he wounded the ſoul and ſpirit of Job. She that ſhould have had her hands buſied in the waſhing, ſuppling, curing, and healing of his wounds, ſmites him with her tongue, a peircing and a poyſon'd inſtrument. The rib was not ſmitten, that it might ſmite the head. Another compares her to a Ladder, by which Satan hoped to ſcale this impregnable Tower, that death might creep in at the window of his ears, by hearing and conſenting to her ſinful perſwaſions.

Chryſoſtom.

Greg. Moral.

Seeing then Satan ſpared Job's Wife, that ſhe might be the inſtrument of this additional affliction, which moſt conclude to be as the ſting of all his afflictions;

Firſt, Note this, That Satans mercies have alwayes ſomewhat of cruelty in them.

He ſpareth his Wife, but it was that ſhe might further vex the Husband. His mercies are like the mercies of wicked men, Their tender mercies are cruel; that is, they are no mercies at all, Prov. 12. 10. There is a puniſhing mercy, and there is a ſparing cruelty among men. Such are Satans ſparings ever lin'd with cruel and bloody intendments.

Planè nullæ. Jun. in loc.

Secondly, Obſerve, That the greateſt outward bleſſings may prove the greateſt outward afflictions.

A Wife is made a croſs, a ſnare. Our greateſt danger may be from our helper; and that which was given for our good, may be to us an occaſion of falling.

Satan can make uſe of our friends to do us hurt by. He tempteth not only by himſelf, but by creatures: and not only by creatures that are at a diſtance from us, but by thoſe who are neareſt in relation, and by thoſe, moſt. He can make a Servant, a Child, a Wife, inſtrumental for our ruine. In this ſence, we may apply that caveat of the Prophet (Jer. 9. 4.) Take ye heed every one of his neighbour, and truſt ye not in any brother. That alſo of Micah, Truſt ye not in a friend, put ye not confidence in a guide: keep the doors of thy mouth from her that lyeth in thy boſom. Yea, take heed of thy own boſom, Satan draws a party from our ſelves, againſt our ſelves.

Quiſque etiam ſibi caveat, ne fiat organum diaboli.

Thirdly, Obſerve, Satan is very ſubtile to make choice of ſuch inſtruments as may do his work moſt effectually.

Of all thoſe that were about Job he could not have picked out any to have carried on his plot ſo powerfully and with ſuch probability of ſucceſs.

Firſt, In regard of her nearneſs, ſhe had opportunity to come unto him, and freedom to improve that opportunity. Saul knew what he did when he married his Daughter to David. I will give him her (ſaid Saul) that ſhe may be a ſnare to him, 1 Sam. 18. 21. Politick marriages are uſually made for temptation, not for comfort: ſnares are tied faſteſt with a falſe lovers knot.

Secondly, The motion or perſwaſion of a Wife, whether to good or evil, are very taking upon a Husbands heart: We ſee it in the firſt Wife that ever was, ſhe by perſwaſions overcame Adam unto ſin, ſhe was the Devils agent for the undoing of her Husband, and the world. Ahab was very wicked, but he had a tempter in his boſom. But there was none like unto Ahab, who did ſell himſelf to work wickedneſs, whom Jezebel his Wife ſtirred up. Unparalell'd wickedneſs is aſcribed to the provocations of a Wife. When a Prince hath given up his affections, and his conſcience, into the hands of a malicious, wanton woman, he will quickly ſell himſelf to ſuch wickedneſs as will be his own trouble, and entitle him (like King Ahab) the troubler of the Kingdom.

1 King. 21. 25.

Thirdly, Satan knew that a wound is deeper, by how much the hand is nearer that ſtrikes it. Afflictions preſs us moſt when they are from our friends. What thou my Son? ſaid Cæſar in the Senate. What thou my Wife? Is thy hand upon me in my own houſe, might Job ſay? The Prophet brings in one queſtioning, What are thoſe wounds? And Chriſt anſwering, Thoſe with which I was wounded in the houſe of my friends, Zech. 13. 6. The height of enmity is thus expreſt, A man's enemies ſhall be the men of his own houſe, Micah 7. 6. This cauſed David to complain ſo bitterly, Pſal. 55. 12. It was not an enemy that had done this, but it was thou my friend, and my equal, and my companion: The friend wounded more then the Sword. So might Job complain, It was not an enemy, it was not a Sabean, or a cruel Chaldean that ſpake this; but it was thou my equal, my friend, my companion; and which is more then all theſe, my Wife, my ſecond ſelf.

I grant that in one ſence the wounds of a friend are precious: Precious are the wounds of a friend, but the kiſſes of an enemy are deceitful. Precious are the wounds of a friend, when a friend doth wound with holy reproof; but when a friend wounds by ſinful counſel, or ſollicitations unto ſin, thoſe are pernicious wounds. If that which is light in us bebe turned into darkneſs (as Chriſt ſpeaks) how great is that darkneſs? So, if that which ſhould be our comfort, be turned into our ſorrow, how great is our ſorrow? Therefore we ſee why Satan ſpared the Wife, that ſhe might be an inſtrument, and a moſt effectual inſtrument, either to prevail upon him, or to vex him in caſe he did not prevail. Doubtleſs Job did not feel ſo much ſmart, when Satan ſmote both fleſh and bone, as now, when his fleſh and bone ſmote him. Thus we ſee the cruelty of Satans mercy: he ſpared Job's Tongue, and he ſpared Job's Wife; he ſpared his Tongue, that Job might have a member free for an inſtrument of ſin, in curſing God; and he ſpared Job's Wife, that himſelf might have an inſtrument to bid him ſin, Curſe God, and die. This was her counſel. Matth. 6.

And his Wife ſaid unto him, Doſt thou ſtill retain thine integrity? Curſe God, and die.

Her words conſiſt of two parts:

Firſt, A ſharp and a ſcornful exprobration.

Secondly, A wicked and ſinful direction.

Her ſcornful exprobration, in theſe words: Doeſt thou ſtill retain thy integrity?

Her ſinful direction, in thoſe words: Curſe God, and die.

Doſt thou ſtill retain thy integrity?

Tantum narrat ſcriptura, quæ mulieris virus & viri antidotum continent.

Words quick and ſhort. It is probable we have here only the compendium, or brief of that diſcourſe which paſſed between Job and his Wife. We have only the poyſon, and the Antidote, as a learned Expoſitor hints it upon this place.

The Septuagint have taken the boldneſs (if they be not falſified) to ſet down his Wifes ſpeech at large, and joyn it in with the body of the Text, thus: A long time being ſpent, his Wife ſaid unto him, How long wilt thou hold out, ſaying, Behold, I wait yet a little while expecting the hope of my Salvation? For conſider, thy remembrance is blotted out from the earth, even thy Sons and thy Daughters, the pains and travel of my womb, whom I have brought forth in vain. Thou thy ſelf ſitteſt here in the rottenneſs of worms, abiding all night in the open air. I poor hand-maid wander from place to place, from houſe to houſe, looking when the Sun will ſet that I may take a little repoſe from the pains and ſorrows which now oppreſs me; but utter thou ſome word againſt the Lord, and die. The Greek Authors comment upon theſe words, as upon the Text it ſelf. But I ſhall wave them wholly. Neither ſhall I ſtay here in the Explication of the words, according to our reading out of the Hebrew, becauſe we have handled them at the third verſe of this Chapter, in the teſtimony which God giveth concerning Job, where he ſpeaks thus to Satan, Haſt thou conſidered my ſervant Job, how that he is a perfect man, &c. and that he ſtill holdeth faſt his integrity? God ſpake it to the praiſe of Job, ſtill he holdeth faſt his integrity; his Wife ſpeaks it to his reproach, and upbraideth him with it, Doſt thou ſtill retain thine integrity? The words ſpoken by both are the ſame, but the ſence and intent of the ſpeakers is quite different. God ſpeaks them in honour to Job: his Wife ſpeaks them in contempt of Job, and therefore ſhe forms them into a Queſtion, a cutting kind of ſpeech, Doſt thou ſtill retain thine integrity? As if ſhe ſhould ſay, What? art thou ſo ſenſeleſs and ſottiſh, ſo ſtupid, ſo mad and ſottiſh, to go on in this courſe ſtill? what haſt thou got by it; where are thy earnings? what is the advantage of holineſs, or what is the profit of integrity, that thou holdeſt and huggeſt it ſo faſt? Doſt thou ſtill retain thine integrity? This I conceive is the ſum of the queſtion, it is an upbraiding, a reproaching queſtion; and from that we may Obſerve,

First, That thoſe things which commend us moſt to God, uſually render us moſt contemptible before the world.

Luk. 16. 15.

Doſt thou ſtill retain thy integrity?] She ſleighteth him and ſcorneth him for this, whereas God highly commends him, ſpeaks it to his praiſe. That which is highly eſteemed amongſt men is abomination in the ſight of the Lord. And that which the Lord eſteems highly, man abominates.

Secondly this, It is the endeavour of Satan and his inſtruments to perſwade, that the profeſſion of holineſs is vain and unprofitable.

Satan hath taught wicked ones, and they (like forward Schollars ſay it without book) ſay it openly, It is a vain thing to ſerve the Lord: Satan would fain infuſe this curſed principle into the hearts of Gods own people, and make them believe their faith is alſo vain. Doſt thou ſtill retain thine integrity? Come take a little counſel at the laſt, work like a wiſe man, wilt thou hold a thing thou canſt get nothing by? Take it on my word, thou canſt not thrive this way, thou canſt make nothing of it, what doſt thou mean to go on madding in ſuch a courſe as this? Thou ſhalt never get bread by it to put in thy head, no nor water to waſh thy hands; all thou getteſt by it, will be a knock, a rod upon thy back, a diſhonour upon thy name. And wilt thou ſtill be ſo ſtrait-lac'd, and hold faſt thy integrity?

Thirdly, Obſerve further from Satans intendment in putting ſuch words as theſe into the mouth of Job's Wife;

That his great deſign is to take advantage from outward troubles and ill ſucceſſes, to diſcourage the hearts, and weaken the hands of Gods people in holy duties.

That was his project, quite to diſcourage Job, and from the ill ſucceſs he had in the ſervice of God, to get him put off his Livery, and give over his ſervice: It is the courſe that the world, inſtructed by Satan (as here Job's Wife was) ſtill holdeth with the people of God. Their language is, why are you ſo preciſe, why ſo hot? &c. Do you not obſerve, you get nothing by your prayers? nothing by your faſting? nothing by your holineſs? All that you have got you may put in your eyes, and ſee never the worſe. Shew us ſome of your gains; what have you got? where are your deliverances? where are your victories? where is your ſalvation? you have prayed till you are almoſt undone, you have faſted till all is almoſt loſt, things are worſe then they were; will you ſtill go on in theſe duties of faſting and praying? of humbling and ſeeking? of waiting and believing? This is the language of Satan, this the Divinity of Hell: And I ſhall anſwer it in one word, It is far better to dye praying, then to conquer blaſpheming. Such doctrine may ſtop up a hypocrites mouth, and weaken his heart from duty: But it will more open the mouths, and enlarge the hearts of thoſe who are ſincere. Will the hypocrite always call upon God, will he delight himſelf in the Almighty? ſaith Job. No, he delights in God no longer, then God gives him worldly delights; nor calls upon God any longer, then ſenſible bleſſings are ſent in unto him: If God ſtayes his hand, he ſtops in duty; he quickly takes up Satans leſſon, and will no longer hold his integrity. But grace ſhews us wages in the work: A godly man hath his fruit in holineſs, and therefore though he receives no outward fruit, he ſtill holds faſt his integrity. But what would Job's Wife advice him to do, in caſe he ſhould let go the holineſs of his life? That follows in the next words; having endeavoured to take him off from one courſe, ſhe directs him to another.

Curſe God, and die.

Here is the ſecond part of her counſel, curſed counſel indeed. Curſe God, and die. It is the ſame Original word which we have opened before, and met with two or three times already. In the proper ſignification it noteth bleſſing, and ſo the word is by many Expoſitors rendred in this place, Bleſs God, and die; Mr. Broughton tranſlates it ſo in one entire ſentence, Doſt thou ſtill retain thine integrity, bleſſing God, and dying? We muſt therefore examine both ſides, that we may find out more fully the ſence of theſe words.

Some take the words in a good ſence, and ſome take them in an ill ſence. Some take the words in a good ſence, Bleſs God, and die; and others who tranſlate, Bleſs God, and die, do yet expound it to an ill ſence.

Firſt, Some make a good conſtruction out of theſe words of Job's Wife, affirming that ſhe gave her Husband wholſom advice, and ſo they render the words, Bleſs God, and die, to this ſence. What? doſt thou ſtill ſtand upon terms with God? wilt thou not humble thy ſelf? ſhouldſt thou not rather Bleſs God? that is, pray unto God, humble thy ſelf, and ſeek his face; ſo to bleſs, ſignifies to pray, to make ſupplication. Thou ſeeſt in what a doleful condition thou art, therefore Bleſs God, make thy humble prayer before God, and die; that is, deſire him to take thee out of this world, to releaſe thee of thy pain; beg that he would cut the thred of thy life, which (to appearance) is the only remedy of all thy troubles; death will be thy beſt friend: Thou mayeſt die with more eaſe, then live as thou doeſt. Thy life is a continual death; it were better for thee to die once, then to die daily.

Mr. Beza is very ſtrong in this opinion, excuſing, yea acquitting Job's Wife, in making this motion to her Husband. He grants indeed that ſhe being deceived and overwrought by Satan, did work ſtrongly for him; yet denies, that either the counſel in it ſelf, or in her intendments was evil. He layes the whole matter thus: That ſhe obſerving her Husbands ſilence under the hand of God, in theſe great afflictions, ſuſpected that he ſtood too much upon his own integrity; that he was too well opinionated and conceited of his own worth; or that this proceeded from ſearedneſs of conſcience, and inſenſibleneſs of Gods dealing, and his own condition; and therefore ſhe adviſeth him to conſider, that ſurely God was very angry with him; to conſider that God had brought all this evil upon him, to humble him; and ſhould he now defend his own innocency? ſhould he either be ſilent and not acknowledge his ſin, or ſtand upon terms with God in defence and juſtification of himſelf? Doſt thou perſevere in thoſe high thoughts of thy ſelf? will not all this bring thy ſtomack down? what? will not thy uncircumciſed heart be humbled? Doſt thou ſtill retain thy integrity? doſt thou ſtill lean upon that broken reed, thy own integrity? Bleſs God; that is confeſs thy ſins, and acknowledge thy tranſgreſſions. (Indeed confeſſing of ſin is the bleſſing of God, it is a giving glory to God, our giving glory to God is our bleſſing of God: Joſh. 7.19. Give glory to the Lord God of Iſrael, and make confeſſion unto him.) Thus bleſs God, that is, confeſs thy ſin, and ſo prepare thy ſelf to die in a holy manner; ſeeing thou art paſt hope of life, addreſs thy ſelf piouſly for death. Thus he; and all upon theſe grounds: Firſt, Becauſe he could not be perſwaded that a Wife, the Governeſs of ſuch a holy family as Job's was, a Wife, the companion of ſuch a holy man as Job was, ſhould be ſo full of the Devil, ſo wicked to ſpeak the Devils words, with the Devils heart. And ſecondly, Becauſe Satan himſelf could not be ſo ſenceleſs as to believe or hope, that ſuch deſperate counſel could ever take upon Job's heart: and therefore he conceives that ſhe adviſed him only, as any one would a dying friend, or a malefactor condemned and ready to be carried to execution, yet perſiſting in his ſin, or unlamenting the wickedneſs which procur'd that ſentence. Her error, ſaith he, was only this, that ſhe judged him wicked, becauſe he was thus ſmitten; and that he truſted upon his integrity, becauſe he held it faſt: whereas indeed Job looked for no good, but out of the hand of Free-grace, and accounted his very Integrity but dung, to the righteouſneſs and redemption of the promiſed Meſſiah.

Teipſum ad mortem ſanctè obeundam comparato, Beza.

But (with humble reſpect to ſo reverend an Author) there are two reaſons ſtrong againſt this Expoſition, in my apprehenſion, which I ſhall propoſe, and ſubmit to the readers judgment.

The firſt is this, It had been quite againſt Satans deſign, that Job's Wife ſhould give her Husband good counſel: For it had been ſo far from being an addition to Job's affliction, that it had been a great abatement of it to hear his Wife ſpeak ſo holily, and adminiſtring ſuch wholſom counſel in the ſubſtance of it, though miſtaken in the application of it to him. And ſurely a heart ſo compoſed as Job's was under all theſe preſſures, would have ſhaped out ſuch an anſwer as this: My dear Wife, I thank thee for thy care and counſel, thou haſt a holy jealouſie over me, that I am not in ſuch a poſture of ſpirit as becomes a dying man. Though there be an error in thy adviſe as applied to me, yet I take it as an error of love, and thy reproof though miſplaced, is very acceptable and precious unto me.

But (which makes my ſecond reaſon;) He reproves her for it, and tells her plainly, Thou ſpeakeſt as one of the fooliſh women ſpeaketh; Whereas if that had been the meaning of her words, ſhe ſpake as one of the wiſe women; like a wiſe woman indeed. It is an act of wiſdom and of love, both to ſuſpect ill of another, when that ſuſpition leads us only to adviſe him for his good. It is an excellent thing when jealouſies are improved into faithful counſels. Surely then Job had never numbred her with the fooliſh women, if that ſpeech of hers had imported only an humble preparation for his approaching death.

In the ſecond place, Some who tranſlate the words, Bleſs God and die, do yet expound them as very ſinful counſel; though the words ſound fair, yet the ſence is made very foul. Theſe underſtand them as an Irony, as if his wife ſcoffing and jeering her husband, had ſaid: Doſt thou ſtill retain thine integrity? bleſs God, and die; thou ſhalt have enough of thine integrity, take thy fill of bleſſing of God; thou art all for bleſſing God, and holding faſt thy integrity; go on if thou wilt, and bleſs God ſtill, and ſee what thou ſhalt get by it; thou ſhalt have no other reward but a wound, thou ſhalt receive no wages of this Maſter but death, bleſs God, and die. Repeat that ſpeech now, which you uſed under the firſt affliction; Repeat again that beloved maxime, with which you ſeem to be ſo much delighted, The Lord hath given, and the Lord hath taken away, bleſſed be the Name of the Lord; you ſhall ſee, it will not fright death away, or be any ſecurity from the grave: you thought when you ſpoke thoſe words firſt, that they would have prevented a ſecond trouble, and that God who ſaw you take the former ſtroak ſo kindly at his hand, would not ſtrike you again: But you ſee, good words are no defence againſt blows: And if thou ſhouldſt be ſo fooliſh, to fly for refuge to the ſame ſubmiſſive language, experience would quickly teach thee, that as before it could not protect thee from this ſore diſeaſe, ſo now it would be no protection from the arreſt of death. Bleſs God, and die.

Some ſtrengthen this ſenſe, from the form of ſpeaking here uſed, which is imperative, Bleſs God, and die: She bids him do it, I, do it and ſpare not. Such expreſſions import a mixture of ſcorn, as Lam. 4. 21. Rejoyce and be glad O daughter of Edom: Here is a grant, if not a command; a ſeeming direction, if not an injunction, to rejoyce and be glad; what is given as the occaſion of this joy? The Cup alſo ſhall paſs thorough unto thee; What cup? A cup of blood, a cup of trembling: And is this to be rejoyced in? Surely in ſuch joy the heart muſt be heavy, and the acting of ſuch mirth is ſorrow: yet he bids her rejoyce; as if he had ſaid, be as merry as you can, yet the the cup ſhall paſs thorough unto thee, thou ſhalt not eſcape. So Eccleſ. 11. 9. Rejoyce O young man in thy youth, and let thine heart cheer thee, and walk in the wayes of thine heart, and in the ſight of thine eyes, (do ſo) but know, that for all theſe things God will bring thee into judgement. Thus here, Bleſs God, and die, Go on I pray, take thy fill of bleſſing God, bleſs him as much and as long as thou wilt, yet I ſee the Image of death in thy face, die thou ſhalt. Mr. Broughton ſeems to incline to ſuch a meaning in his Tranſlation, Doeſt thou ſtill hold thine integrity, bleſſing God, and dying? As if ſhe had ſaid, wilt thou be ſuch a fool, to go on bleſſing God and dying, bleſſing God, while he is killing thee; which was indeed Jobs wiſdom, and his reſolution a little after, Though he kill me, yet will I truſt in him.

Eia quæſo! nunc cum vix reſpirare poſſis, repete tuum, Sit nomen Domini benedictum, & poſtea morere.

So far of thoſe who tranſlate the Text, bleſs God, and die, with that two-fold expoſition upon it; I ſhall now conſider what ſence we are to make out of theſe words as we tranſlate them, and as they are indeed moſt generally tranſlated. Curſe God, and die: This reading of the Text, ſeems moſt anſwerable to Satans deſign, which being to provoke Job to curſe God; it was moſt proper to ſute his Wives ſpirit with ſuch thoughts, and to put his own words into her mouth, Curſe God, and die: This thred is of the ſame ſpinning with the former, and carries Satans plot home upon his own principles; She ſpeaks this adverſaries mind as fully as he could himſelf, when ſhe bids her Husband Curſe God, and die.

But could Job die when he liſted, that ſhe biddeth him Curſe God, and die? What means this Language?

Some interpret her meaning to be this, die by thy own hand, deſtroy thy ſelf; as ſons of Belial uſe to ſay, go hang thy ſelf, murther thy ſelf, make an end of thy ſelf: As God by theſe Plagues is thy Judge, ſo be thou (to end the matter) thy own executioner. Or as others; curſe God, that ſo he may be provoked to take thee out of the world quickly. Or Curſe God, and die, eaſe thy heart ſomewhat, and give it vent by breaking out againſt God in blaſphemies, take this revenge upon him, and then let him do his worſt, Curſe God, though thou die for it.

Ne prius animum exhales, quam multis probris in Deum congeſtis dolori tuo ſatisfeceris. Pined.

Laſtly, Curſe God, that ſo the Magiſtrate taking notice of it, thou mayeſt be cut off by the Sword of Juſtice. We know blaſphemers were ſentenc'd to death without mercy, by the Law of Moſes; and it is not improbable that the light of Nature might carry thoſe Nations, to as high and ſevere a revenge, againſt that higheſt ſin. We know Socrates was adjudged to death by the Athenians (as their natural divinity taught them) for an injurious or diſhonorable ſpeech concerning their gods. I conceive her counſel, Curſe God, and die, had ſome of theſe intendments in it; the beſt of them is bad enough, and ſo bad, that it renders this Objection againſt them all.

It is Objected, That ſurely, any of theſe carry too high a ſtrain of wickedneſs for Job's Wife; ſurely ſhe could not imagine, much leſs have the boldneſs to offer ſuch advice to her Husband.

I anſwer firſt in general, A good man may have a very bad Wife. A Husband cannot infuſe holineſs, or make his Wife good: Marriage doth not change the heart; Marriage with Chriſt doth, but not Marriage with a Chriſtian, or the holieſt man that ever lived. Therefore that reaſon is not cogent.

Secondly, This ſpeech, and a holy perſon, are not altogether inconſiſtent: poſſibly Job's Wife was a good woman, though actually ſhe ſpake thus wickedly. Divers of the Jewiſh Doctors have an opinion, that it was not Job's Wife that ſpake, but the Devil in her likeneſs, I ſhall leave that among their other dreams. It is conjectured by others (though it were not the Devil that ſpake, perſonating his Wife, yet) that it was the Devil ſpeaking in or by the perſon of his Wife, as he ſpake in or by the Serpent, Geneſ. 3. Or as perſons really poſſeſt of the Devil, who ſpeak Satans words, and do Satans works, not their own. Some (I ſay) carry it thus, that ſhe was for that time not only acted, but actually poſſeſt by the Devil, and ſo ſpeaks the Devils language: One of the Ancients is expreſs to this purpoſe, Theſe are the Devils words, not the womans words: which another illuſtrates by that in Geneſ. 3. where it is ſaid, The Serpent ſaid unto the Woman, but it was the Devil that ſpake unto the Woman by the Serpent; ſo here it is ſaid, His wife ſpake unto him, but the truth is, it was the Devil ſpake unto him, in and by his Wife. And if ſo, put the Language into the worſt expoſition given, or give a worſe (if truth will bear it) and it will be no wrong to ſuch an Orator. I believe we cannot expound the words to a higher ſence or ſtrain of wickedneſs, then Satan could ſpeak.

Chryſoſt. Dixit ad eum uxor ejus; uxorem dixit dixiſſe, ſed verè diabolus dixit, Sic namque & olim ait. Dixit ſerpens ad mulierem; ſerpentem dixit dixiſſe, ſed non ſerpens dixit, ſed diabolus qui per ſerpentē locutus eſt, Origen.

But we need not make Satan himſelf the ſpeaker, and yet clear the matter too; though we neither ſay as the Jewiſh Doctors, that it was the Devil perſonally, taking the ſhape of Job's Wife; or as thoſe Chriſtian Fathers, that the Devil did actually poſſeſs her; yet we may ſay (and ſo ſalve the difficulty) that ſhe was mightily over-powred, and acted by the temptation of Satan, to be an inſtrument of temptation, in this groſs manner againſt her Husband: Though ſhe were not acted as the Serpent was, in whom Satan ſpake to Eve; yet we may well ſay, ſhe was acted as Eve by whom Satan ſpake to Adam: Eve ſpake the Devils mind, being prevailed upon by his temptation, to perſwade her Husband to eat againſt the command of God; and Job's Wife overcome by a like temptation attempts the perſwaſion of her Husband to curſe God.

For as it is poſſible for one that is good, to fall into the groſſeſt and moſt blaſphemous temptation himſelf; ſo it is poſſible for one that is good, to be made an inſtrument of ſuch temptations unto others. We may ſee an inſtance near, if not fully reaching this aſſertion, in the Apoſtle Peter, who hearing Chriſt fore-telling his ſufferings, takes him aſide, and began to rebuke him, ſaying, Be it far from thee, Lord: this ſhall not be unto thee, Matth. 16. 22, 23. Peter acted Satans part, in this, againſt his Maſter, though unwittingly, yet ſo wittily, ſo to the life, that he got his name by it; Chriſt ſaid to Peter, get thee behind me Satan: It was Peter's tongue, but Satan tun'd it. Iſaac ſaid of his Son Jacob in Eſau's dreſs, The hands are the hands of Eſau, but the voyce is the voyce of Jacob. Chriſt perceived here Satans counſel in Peter's words, he ſaw the wicked ſpirit through the cloathing of Peter's fleſh; and therefore rebukes the Organ, under the title of the chief Agent, Get thee behind me Satan. Now as Peter, though a holy man and full of good intentions to his Maſter, yet ſpake the Devils mind and language ſo fully, that the Devil himſelf (as to that purpoſe) could ſcarce have mended it; ſo likewiſe Job's Wife might be a godly woman in the main, though abuſed and miſled by Satan, ſhe thus excited her Husband, in the groſſeſt conſtruction thoſe words can bear, to Curſe God, and die.

There is ſomewhat in the Text, which may give us a hint of this: that though ſhe ſpake this, yet Job eſteemed her a good woman; for, obſerve Job's anſwer to this advice. What doth he ſay? He doth not ſay, Thou wicked Woman, thou abominable wretch, why doeſt thou give me ſuch councel; all that he ſaith is this, Thou ſpeakeſt as one of the fooliſh Women ſpeaketh. Obſerve it, he doth not call her fooliſh or wicked Woman, but, thou ſpeakeſt as one of the fooliſh Women; as if he ſhould ſay, How now Wife? what words are theſe that I hear from thee? thou doſt not ſpeak now like thy ſelf, I uſe to hear other Language from thee; thou and I have had other kind of conference, and I have received other kind of counſel from thee then this: Whence is it that thou art ſo unlike thy ſelf? where are thy words ſeaſon'd with Salt, which have ſo often miniſtred grace unto the hearers? thou art degenerated in manners and corrupted in thy ſpeech, thou ſpeakeſt now as one of the fooliſh Women: Intimating, that ſhe uſed to ſpeak wiſely and diſcreetly, or as Solomon deſcribes the vertuous Woman (Prov. 31.26.) that heretofore ſhe opened her mouth with wiſdom; and and now ſhe ſpake only as a fooliſh or wicked Woman; He doth not ſay ſhe was one: one act is enough to aſſimilate, but it is not enough to denominate. Thus much may ſerve to evince, that though we take the words in that worſt ſence, yet it doth not neceſſarily infer, that Job's Wife was a wicked and ungodly Woman, which is the objection againſt that Expoſition.

Non eam ſtultam vocat, ſed in eo ſermone ſtultarum mulierum mores imitatam, quaſi à ſeipſa defecerit, & quaſi in alienos mores & ingenium abierit. Sanctius in loc.

From the words tranſlated, Curſe God, and die, and thus expounded, we may Obſerve;

Firſt, That Satan is reſtleſs and unwearied in this deſign, to bring the people of God to think ill and ſpeak ill of God.

It is that he laboured for, in the carrying on of this whole buſineſs, concerning Job; and every ſtone is turned, every way tryed to accompliſh this propoſed end.

Secondly, In that he perſwadeth Job by his Wife, when he was in this woful condition to Curſe God, and die, Obſerve, That Satan would perſwade us to eaſe our ſelves of troubleſom evils, by falling into ſinful evils.

Job was grievouſly diſeaſed; you ſee the medicine and the cure that Satan preſcribeth, Go ſin, ſaith he, Curſe God, and die; whereas one of the leaſt evils of ſin is worſe then all the evils of ſuffering that can befall us. All ſorrows are more elegible then one ſin. It hath been rightly taught us from Antiquity, that the loweſt degree of a lye (becauſe ſin) is not to be made or admitted (if that medium could be aſſured ſo noble an end) for the ſaving of a World. What a Father and teacher of lyes then is Satan, who directs many a poor ſoul to ſave it ſelf from, or help it ſelf out of a ſmall affliction, by adventuring upon ſome great tranſgreſſion? Curſe GOD, and die.

Thirdly, It is ſinful to wiſh our own deaths, though we are under pains more painful then Death.

It is ſinful to deſire death abſolutely; we may deſire it with ſubmiſſion to the Will of God: To live is an act of Nature; but to be willing to live becauſe God wills it, is an act of Grace: And as it is our holineſs to do the Will of God while we live, ſo it is our holineſs to be content to live, while we ſuffer according to his Will. On the other hand, to die is an act of Nature; but to die becauſe Gods wills it, is an act of Grace: Chriſt is ſaid to be obedient unto death, becauſe he died in contemplation of Gods Decree, and in conformity to his good pleaſure. To die thus, is the duty of a Chriſtian, and the crown of all his obedience. Satan would have us live as we will, and die when we will; he tempts us as much to die when we liſt, as to live how we liſt. Satan puts Job upon it peremptorily, Curſe God, and die, deſire or procure thy own death. To wiſh death that we may enjoy Chriſt, it is a holy wiſh; but yet we muſt not wiſh that neither, abſolutely. The Apoſtle Paul, Phil. 1.23. Deſired to be diſſolved and to be with Chriſt; yet you ſee how he qualifies and debates it. To wiſh for death, that we may be freed from ſin, is a holy wiſh; but yet we muſt not wiſh that abſolutely neither, we muſt refer our ſelves to the pleaſure of God, how long he will let us conflict with our corruptions and with our luſts, with this body of death and ſin which we bear about us. But to wiſh for death, becauſe our lives are full of trouble, is an unholy wiſh; God may, yea and hath as much uſe of our lives in our troubles as in our comforts: We may do much buſineſs for God on a ſick-bed: We may do God as much work when we are bound hand and foot, in a priſon, as when we are at liberty; paſſive obedience brings as much glory to God as active doth: therefore we muſt not wiſh for death, eſpecially not with an abſolute wiſh, becauſe we are under troubleſom evils. And if it be ſinful to wiſh for death, how wicked is it to procure or haſten death, to pull down our houſe of clay, with our own hands, becauſe we are under troubleſom evils?

Fourthly, Obſerve further, Satan would perſwade that death is an end, at leaſt an eaſe, of outward troubles.

Wouldſt thou have an end of thy troubles and of thy ſorrows? Curſe God, and die, here is the remedy. We ſay indeed of ſome remedies, that they are worſe then the diſeaſe, but I am ſure, this is. Death to ungodly ones, it is ſo far from being an end or an eaſe of their troubles, that it is to them (as Chriſt ſpeaks in another caſe) the beginning of ſorrows, the entrance to eternal death, and the very Suburbs of Hell. Yet, how many doth Satan perſwade (when they are in Job's caſe, in great extremities) that death will be the cure of all their troubles?

Fifthly, Obſerve, That Satan would make men willing to die, when they are moſt unfit to die.

You ſee what preparation Satan directs Job unto, he biddeth him Curſe God, and die. Would not Job, think you, have been in a fit poſture, in a fit frame for death, when he had been curſing God? Repent and die, pray and die, humble thy ſelf and die, believe and die; take faſt hold of Chriſt who is our life, our way to life, and die, are the counſels and voice of the holy Ghoſt; but Satans language is Curſe God, and die, ſin and die, be impenitent and die, blaſpheme and die. And it is an experienced truth, that oftentimes they ſeem moſt willing to die, who are moſt unfit, moſt unready for death; you ſhall ſee ſome men venturing, yea caſting away their lives without fear or wit; the whole viſible buſineſs of whoſe lives, hath been nothing elſe but a working out of their own damnation, without fear or trembling: They as it were give diligence all their dayes, to make Hell and reprobation ſure, and yet go out of the World as if they were ſure of Heaven. This is Satans preparation, Curſe God, and dye.

Laſtly, Note this, That the holieſt perſon is lyable to the moſt blaſphemous temptation.

One would have wondred that Satan ſhould ever have ventured to ſuggeſt ſuch a groſs thing as this, to ſo holy a man as Job. But Satan where he hath been often foyled, growes impudent, and will then ſuggeſt ſuch things, not becauſe he hopes to prevail, but becauſe he reſolves to vex ſuch as he cannot overcom. He troubles as much and as many as he can.

So much of the counſel which Job's Wife gave him, reproving him as fooliſh and over-credulous in holding faſt (that unprofitable thing) his integrity; and adviſing him to be worſe then mad or outragious, in curſing God and dying.

Let us now conſider Job's holy and wiſe reply in the tenth Verſe.

But he ſaid unto her, Thou ſpeakeſt as one of the fooliſh women ſpeaketh; what? ſhall we receive good at the hand of God, and ſhall we not receive evil?

Theſe words contain Job's reply, wherein two things are conſidered. Firſt, A reproof. Secondly, A refutation.

אשת הנבלות

Firſt, He rejects her counſel with a ſharp and wholeſom reprehenſion, and then he refuteth her counſel by ſtrong and ſolid reaſon. The reprehenſion in theſe words, Thou ſpeakeſt as one of the fooliſh women ſpeaketh. The reaſon of his reprehenſion in thoſe which follow, What? ſhall we receive good at the hand of God, and not evil?

To begin with the reprehenſion, Thou ſpeakeſt as one of the fooliſh women.] In the Hebrew, woman is not expreſt, it is only a Feminine, as one of the fooliſh ones: we tranſlate it, fooliſh women; that word cometh from Nabal, which ſignifieth properly a thing fallen off like a dried leaf, or blaſted withered fruit, without life, without ſtrength, without ſap and moyſture, exhauſted and killed, thorough exceſs either of cold or heat: and ſo by a Metaphor, it noteth any one without the ſap or juyce of wiſdom, goodneſs, and honeſty; ſuch a perſon, we call, a ſapleſs perſon. Or it ſignifieth one that is vile, and baſe, and low; one that hath a baſe, withered, low, fallen ſpirit, a ſpirit fallen below all noble or holy reſolutions. Nabal, is ſuch a fool, as hath his underſtanding faded, and corrupted in regard of any holy principles, though he may be wiſe in regard of natural principles. Such the Prophet deſcribes, They are wiſe to do evil, but to do good they have no knowledge, Jer. 9. 22. Hence the Latine word (Nebulo) which ſignifies a Knave, is by good Etymologiſts derived from the Hebrew Nabal; becauſe ſuch are dull-heads in goodneſs, and witty only in wickedneſs. Such was he, 1 Sam. 25. 25. Nabal is his name, and folly is with him; that proper name is the ſame with the Appellative here; that's the Maſculine, this the Feminine, Thou ſpeakeſt like a Nabaleſs: We find the word often uſed elſewhere to ſignifie wicked, worthleſs and vile perſons, Pſal. 14. 1. The fool hath ſaid, &c. Deut. 32. 6, 21. at verſ. 6. O fooliſh people and unwiſe, do ye thus requite the Lord? And verſ. 21. They have provoked me to anger by thoſe that are no gods, and I will provoke them to jealouſie by them which are not a people, and move them to anger with a fooliſh Nation; by them which are not a people, by a fooliſh Nation: A fooliſh people that deſerve not the name of a people. Look upon this word in the abſtract, folly is wickedneſs; and to work folly is in the Language of the Scripture, as much, as to work wickedneſs, to work the greateſt wickedneſs. Hence it is ſometime tranſlated villany, Jer. 29. 22, 23. The Lord make thee like Zedekiah and like Ahab, whom the Kings of Babylon roſted in the fire, becauſe they have committed villany in Iſrael. And throughout the Book of Proverbs, the fool and an ungodly man, a wiſe man and a godly man, are (Synonomaes) words ſignifying the ſame thing. Thus Job reproves his Wife, Thou ſpeakeſt as one of the fooliſh women, like one of thoſe who have no wiſdom, no goodneſs, not any ſenſe or ſap of goodneſs in them. But who were theſe fooliſh Women, at whom he aims in this compariſon? that is not clear; ſome conceive he intends the Women of Idumea, thou ſpeakeſt as one of theſe heathen Women, theſe Idumeans; I have heard indeed ſuch Language from them when things have gone amiſs with them; I have heard them curſing their Idols, curſing their gods; I have heard them rail at fate, fall out, and wrangle with Fortune; Thou ſpeakeſt like one of them. Thou takeſt thy pattern in this, from the cuſtom of the Heathen, who uſe their gods courſely, when they think they have but courſe uſage from their gods. If their gods be angry, they will be angry with and revile their gods. Thou ſpeakeſt after the rate of theſe fooliſh women; thou didſt never hear ſuch doctrine in my family, or among thoſe who fear and love the true and ever-living God.

Job you ſee, is now ſomewhat warm in his ſpeech. Job had indured much, and all his ſufferings hitherto hath not ſtirred any paſſion in him but that of ſorrow, as we ſaw in the latter end of the former Chapter: Not any angry poſture, not an angry expreſſion all along; but now, that God and the wayes of God are concerned, Job can hold no longer: this ſpeech of his Wife caſt diſhonour upon both, and now paſſion begins to ſtir, he cannot forbear her though his Wife, Thou ſpeakeſt as one of the fooliſh woman ſpeaketh.

Obſerve, That, Paſſion becometh us in the cauſe of God.

Our Lord Chriſt teaching his Diſciples the true meaning of the Law, tells them, Matth. 5. 22. He that is angry with his brother without a cauſe, ſhall be in danger of the judgment; but he that is not angry when there is cauſe, eſpecially when there is ſuch a cauſe as this, he likewiſe is in danger of the judgment.

Secondly, Job is not only angry with her, but he reproves her, Thou ſpeakeſt as one of the fooliſh women.

It is lawful ſometimes to expreſs holy anger and paſſion by ſharp reproofs.

Juſta ira mater eſt diſciplinæ.

Chriſt who was meekneſs and humility it ſelf, yet when he hath to deal with Phariſees, he can call them a generation of Vipers, painted Sepulchres, blind guides, an adulterous generation, children of the Devil: Anger can hardly be ſilent, and that anger is admirable which ſpeaks and ſins not. He that knows not how to be angry, knows not how to love: And he that knows not how to reprove with love, knows not how to be angry.

You may diſcern love in Job, mingling with and moderating his reproof. Job rebukes his Wife, but it is with the ſpirit of meekneſs. Firſt, He doth not ſpeak poſitively or down right, Thou art a fool, but comparatively, Thou ſpeakeſt as one of the fooliſh women uſe to ſpeak; that ſeems one mitigation or allay of this reproof; yet I confeſs ſuch ſpeaking by way of ſimilitude, hath often in it the force and intent of a direct aſſertion.

Another thing obſervable for the meekneſs of Job, is this; he doth not fall out with the whole Sex, and ſay, ye women are fooliſh, and ignorant, and impatient; but Thou ſpeakeſt as one of the fooliſh women. He doth not charge the whole Sex, he knew there were wiſe women, as well as fooliſh; ſuch Solomon deſcribes, Prov. 31. 26. She openeth her mouth with wiſdom. And we know Abigail the Wife was wiſe, and her Husband was Nabal, a fool. Job doth not lay it upon women in general, he falleth not out with all, becauſe he knew there were ſome fooliſh ones, and becauſe he ſaw his Wife in that act, imitating thoſe fooliſh ones.

There is a third thing mitigating the ſharpneſs of the reproof; Job doth not fall out with, or diſguſt the ordinance of God, becauſe his Wife ſpake thus; he ſaith not, who would marry to be yoakt with ſuch a one as you? It is enough to make one forſwear marriage, to have or hear of ſuch a VVife; better be in any condition then in a married condition. How often do Husbands diſcover this folly? if their VVives diſpleaſe them, preſently the ordinance of God diſpleaſeth them, who would be married? It is very ſad, when mans miſcarriage makes us queſtion or diſrelliſh the inſtitution of God.

In the fourth place, Job is not only not angry with the ordinance of God in general, but he is not angry with the ſpecial act of Gods providence, in his own particular choice. There are many will ſay, if their wives trouble them, I wiſh we had never ſeen the faces one of another, we may curſe the hour we ever met together. Jobs ſpirit was far from this; he was indeed angry with his wife, but he was not angry becauſe this woman was his wife: He doth not reject her becauſe ſhe was bad, but labours to make her better. To convince another of folly, is the readyeſt way to make him wiſe. Thus we ſee, though there were ſharpneſs in the reproof to ſearch the wound, yet there was none to exaſperate the perſon: This reproof was an exact compound of love, and anger, of zeal and knowledge.

From the ground of her counſel, and this reproof compared together, we may Obſerve; That it is an argument of a low and of a fooliſh ſpirit, to judge of any mans condition by Gods outward dealings with him: For, this was it, that ſhe grounded her counſel upon; ſeeing his outward condition, ſhe thought him as a miſerable man, and therefore adviſeth him to curſe God, and die. Thou ſpeakeſt (ſaith he) as one of the fooliſh women. It is an argument of folly and madneſs, to judge a man miſerable becauſe poor, or unhappy, or unhealthy.

Again obſerve, That unworthy and low thoughts of God, argue a low and a fooliſh ſpirit. Thou ſpeakeſt as one of the Nabaleſſes? Thou haſt ſuch low thoughts of God, and ſpeakeſt ſo poorly of God, that at preſent I cannot but number thee among the fools; for as there is nothing ought to be ſo high in our thoughts, as God and his wayes; ſo we ought to have high and reverent thoughts of God and his wayes, whatſoever he doth with us: though we change, yet he and they change not; God is the ſame, and his ſervice the ſame for ever.

Laſtly, Obſerve, That to do or ſpeak wickedly, is to do or ſpeak fooliſhly. Sin is the greateſt folly in the world, ſin is a declining from the rule of right reaſon, both from ſpiritual reaſon and from natural; Lo, they have rejected the word of the Lord, and what wiſdom is in them? Jer. 8. 9. True wiſdom, is to walk by a right rule, to a right end. While we ſin, luſt (in ſome degree or other) is the rule, and ſelf is the end; In both which we joyn hands with folly, and are the companions of fools; Thou ſpeakeſt as one of the fooliſh women, &c.

From the reproof it ſelf, we come to conſider the reaſons of the reproof. Thou ſpeakeſt as one of the fooliſh women ſpeaketh; what? ſhall we receive good at the hand of God, and not evil? Here is the reaſon upon which he grounds his reproof, Shall we receive good at the hands of God, &c. The Hebrew runs thus in the letter, Shall we receive good from God? &c. The emphaſis of the words carry it thus, ſhall we receive good with hand or heart at the hand of God, and ſhall we not in the ſame manner receive evil? The word Cabal, whence this is derived, ſignifieth the receiving of a thing with the hand and with the heart; that is, to receive gladly and thankfully, as it were to kiſs the hand and receive a thing: Or to receive a thing with much reverence and veneration. Hence the Jewes call the Doctrine which is received and tranſmitted from hand to hand, namely their traditional Doctrine, Caballa: That which the word Tradition imports among the Papiſts, the word Caballa imports among the Jewes; Then the meaning of Job is, That good and evil are to be alike received and entertained as from God; that is, they are to be received with the ſame reverence and chearfulneſs. We receive good things chearfully, thankfully, reverently, we kiſs the hand and take them. And ſhall we not receive evil? The words do not refer to the act of receiving, but to the manner of receiving; We ſhall receive evil whether we will or no, but ſhall we not receive it? namely ſo, and ſo, as we receive good, chearfully, thankfully, reverently, reſpecting God and his wayes of providence towards us. And then the queſtion may be reſolved into this affirmative concluſion; That look in what manner we receive good from the hand of God, in the ſame we ought to receive evil. Or thus, Where we have our good, thence we muſt have our evil. One and the ſame hand moderates and diſpenceth both. Wherefore, ſhall we receive good, and not evil?

נקבל A radice קבל Accepit manibus vel animo.

Caballa doctrina per manus accepta & ore tenus ab aliis ad alios tranſfuſa. Merc.

Shall we receive good?] Some interpret the good here to be meant of the good of the next life; ſhall we be in expectation of everlaſting good? ſhall we be in expectation of enjoying Chriſt, and ſeeing the face of God for ever in Heaven? ſhall we be at leaſt in hope of a crown of glory, layed up in ſtore for us? and ſhall we not be willing to receive evils, and digeſt troubles, to bear the croſs a few dayes while we are here? I (ſaith the Apoſtle Paul, Rom. 8. 18.) reckon that the ſufferings of this preſent time, are not worthy to be compared to the glory which ſhall be revealed. Shall we have glory in the eye of our faith, and ſhall we not indure a little trouble in the eye of our ſenſe?

But rather, by good here, we are to underſtand the good things of this life; ſhall we receive good? ſc. outward comforts and proſperity, and ſhall we not receive evil? from whom? Evil from the hand of God.

What Evil? Sooner ſhall the Sun ſend forth a cloud, then God ſend forth any evil properly taken; therefore evil here, is only afflictions, as contradiſtinct to the good before-named: So the ſenſe is, ſhall we receive comforts at the hand of God, and ſhall we not receive afflictions? Afflictions are evil, not moral evil, not natural evil: but they are called evil, either firſt, becauſe they are uſually eſteemed ſo; or ſecondly, becauſe they are ſo to ſenſe; or thirdly, becauſe they are many times abuſed, and ſo in the event they prove evil unto us: laſtly, they are often evil negatively, that is, they do us no good; but they are never evil poſitively in themſelves, or relatively, as they are received from God.

Afflictiones malæ per ſe non ſunt, ſed malæ tantum vocantur quia tales vulgò æſtimantur.

We may take notice (for the further clearing of this paſſage) of the form of the argument. It is propoſed by way of queſtion or expoſtulation, as we render it. What? ſhall we receive good? &c. There is a great deal of force in the manner of propoſing; queſtions are full of quickneſs and ſpirit. Job doth not only give his wife a Logical reaſon, but a Rhetorical reaſon, words with life, to convince her by; What? ſaith he, ſhall we receive good? &c. As if he had ſaid, this were an abſurd thing, once to imagine; a blind man may ſee this, it is ſo plain, and a fool may underſtand it, the reaſon lies all in ſight; That if we receive good from the hand of God, we muſt at leaſt with patience receive evil.

From this reaſon in general, Obſerve, That reproofs come then moſt ſtrongly upon the heart, when they are backed with reaſon. Some reprove with rage, and not with reaſon; with paſſion, and not with wiſdom; they reprove with their wit rather then with their ſpirit. Job mixes reaſon with his paſſion, and gives her an argument, as well as a rebuke.

More particularly, from the matter of this reaſon, Obſerve firſt, That good and evil are both from the hand of God. Give me neither poverty nor riches, ſaith Agur, Prov. 30. 8. both are the gift of God. Poverty is Gods gift as well as riches. If God do not give us poverty, all the world will not make us poor. I form the light, and create darkneſs: I make peace, and create evil: I the Lord do all theſe things; Iſaiah 45. 7. The ſame Prophet teacheth us that theſe two are equally the prerogative of God, and ſuch a prerogative, as equally diſtinguiſheth him from all Idols and falſe gods; Shew the things that are to come hereafter, that we may know that ye are gods: yea, do good or do evil, that we may be diſmayed, and behold it together. No creature hath ever anſwered this challenge, or ever ſhall, *Iſa.*41.23. Creatures do good and evil, as miniſters of Gods will, not as matters of their own. Good of every kind, and all kinds of pœnal evil come forth from God. Indeed, God uſually conveyes theſe to us by the hand of man; but it becomes us to receive them as from the hand of God. Much, both good and evil, comes to us at the ſecond hand, but we ought to take it as from the firſt. This truth well wrought upon our hearts, will make every good we enjoy better, and every evil we feel, not ſo bad. This latter branch ſhall be caſt into a ſecond Obſervation,

Which may be this, To look on evil as coming from the hand of God, will quiet the heart in bearing evil. Shall we receive good at the hand of God, and not evil? And this in two reſpects: Firſt, becauſe of the ſoveraignty of God, he being ſupream Lord, may do what he will: and his will being the ſupream rule of Juſtice he can do no wrong. This notion of God aſſures us, that whatſoever we receive from the hand of God, is juſt and right; hence the inference is natural, If God ſend evil, I muſt receive it quietly, for he ſends it juſtly. Secondly, becauſe of the aſſured faithfulneſs, and love and goodneſs of God to his, even when he ſends them (which are all he ſends) this ſort of evils. As if Job had ſaid, any thing is well-come that cometh from one that loves me, and hath done me good, as God I know doth, and hath done often, and will do for ever. Will not a man take a nominal evil kindly at his hand, from whom he hath received much real good. While we look only upon creatures and what they do, the burthen of trouble is intolerable; but as it cometh from God, from a God that loveth us, we cannot but receive it in love. Afflictions coming from the creature, are as the rod of Moſes upon the ground, a biting, a ſtinging ſerpent: but conſidered in the hand of God, they are as the ſerpent in the hand of Moſes, a rod to correct, and a ſtaff to comfort us. David we know fled from Saul in fear of his life; envious, bloody Saul had threatned to kill him. In his flight, David meets with his beloved Jonathan, and ſaith unto him (1 Sam. 20. 8.) Jonathan, if there be any iniquity in me, ſlay me thy ſelf, for why ſhouldeſt thou bring me to thy Father? He would die rather by the hand of Jonathan, then by the hand of Saul; death from the hand of Jonathan who loved him, was ſweet; whereas from Saul, it had been a bitter cup indeed. Take another inſtance. Elijah flyeth from Jezabel, 1 King. 19. 4. and why doth he flie from her? She ſeeks my life, ſaith he, to take it away. Thoughts of this preſſed him ſo hard, that when he came into the Wilderneſs (the Text ſaith) he ſate down under a Juniper-tree, and requeſted for himſelf that he might die, and ſaid, It is enough now O Lord, take away my life. But Elijah, if thou be ſo willing to die, why doeſt thou fly from Jezebel? ſhe would have given thee thy wiſh preſently, and ſatiſfied at once her own malice, and thy longing: I but death from the hand of a Jezabel was his fear, not his deſire: He could welcome it from the hand of God, but not from the hand of a ſpiteful woman. But you will ſay, death is from the hand of God, though it come by the hand of the creature. True; but as every good we receive, is ſo much the more ſweet, by how much the more we ſee of the hand of God in it, and leſs of the creature; ſo every evil is ſo much the more bitter, by how much we ſee leſs of God, and more of man in it. If God will take away my life, I am pleaſed, but I beg deliverance from the hand of Jezabel: He fled for his life for fear of Jezabel, but he called upon God to die. We may exemplifie this in Chriſt, *Joh.*18.11. The cup which my Father hath given me, ſaith he, ſhall I not drink it? It is poculum charitatis, a grace-cup to poor ſinners, a cup though bitter in it ſelf, though mixt with the wrath of God as a judge, due to ſinners, yet temper'd and ſweetned with a Fathers love everlaſtingly aſſured unto me; I cannot but drink it, it cometh from my Father.

But it may be objected, that I lately aſſign'd it as one reaſon, why Satan ſpared Jobs wife; namely, That ſhe who was his neereſt friend, being made an inſtrument of his affliction, the affliction might be more afflictive and vexatious; And David complains moſt of a friend, that ſmote him, Pſal. 55.

I anſwer, when love turns to hatred, and friendſhip to unfaithfulneſs, when former kiſſes (like that preſent one of Judas) are changed into treachery; this is very wounding and grievous indeed. But when God ſtrikes his friends, he is their friend ſtill; when he afflicts, it is in faithfulneſs, (Pſal. 119. 75.) He is good to us, when he ſends us evil; and he ſends us evil, for our good. To be ſmitten by a friend whoſe very ſmiting is friendſhip, and who heals us by wounding, cannot be offenſive. Hence Davids choice, Let us fall now into the hands of the Lord (for his mercies are great) and not into the hand of man, 1 Sam. 24. 14.

Hence a third obſervation from the ſtrength of the argument and reaſon, may be thus framed; To conſider that all the good we have, deſcends from God, makes it both reaſonable and equitable, that we ſhould bear evil quietly when he is pleaſed to ſend it. Shall we receive good, and not evil? ſaith he. It is Solomons advice, (Eccleſ. 7. 14.) In the day of proſperity be joyful, but in the day of adverſity conſider. What ſhall we conſider! Conſider this, and mark it well, that as the day of proſperity was from God, ſo the day of adverſity is from God likewiſe; for it follows, God alſo hath ſet the one over againſt the other. Therefore ſeeing God hath ſet one over againſt the other, thou muſt take the one well, as well as the other; at leaſt thou muſt bear the latter as patiently, as thou didſt receive the former joyfully. They who have ſhared with others in gains, think it but equal to ſhare with them in loſſes; they ſet the one over againſt the other. And ſo muſt we in reſpect of Gods diſpenſations towards us. If we ſet our preſent wants, over againſt our former fulneſs; our preſent ſorrows, over againſt our former comforts; our preſent ſickneſs over againſt our former health; our preſent war, over againſt our former peace; If we thus ſet the one over againſt the other, our accounts will be ballanc'd, yea our former receits of good will be far greater, and out-ballance our preſent ſufferings of evil. Eſpecially if we remember, that we never deſerved the leaſt part of the good we have received, but we have deſerved more then all the evil that we ſuffer. We may ſay as Ezra did, (Chap. 9. 13.) Thou our God haſt puniſhed us leſs then our iniquities; and we may ſay as Jacob (Gen. 32. 10.) Lord, we are not worthy the leaſt of all thy mercies.

This argument may be of great uſe to us of this Nation, in theſe times of darkneſs and fear. What? ſhall not we receive evil from the hand of God, who have received ſo much good? we have received many years of peace from God, fourſcore years of peace; ſhall we receive ſo many years of peace, from the hands of God, and ſhall we take it ill, if we receive ſome years of war? We have received many years of plenty, ſhall we take it ill if we ſhould have ſome years of ſcarcity? We have had the Goſpel many years, every one ſitting under his Vine, and under his Fig-tree; what, if now, we hold the Goſpel ſtanding upon our guard, or marching in the Field? what if we hold it a while ſitting in Tents, and ſtanding under our diſplaied banners?

Fourthly, Foraſmuch as the ſame word is applied here to expreſs the act of the mind in reference both to good and evil, Obſerve, That outward evils are to be received in the ſame manner, and with the ſame mind that good things are received with. Yet a caution is to be given in with this. There are two ſorts of outward evils or ſufferings: Sin is the cauſe of ſome ſufferings, and grace is the cauſe of other ſufferings, either grace acted, or grace to be tried. Now we are not to receive the evil of ſuffering, whereof ſin is the cauſe, with the ſame mind as we do good; joy and cheerfulneſs doth not become ſuch evils. But when our ſufferings are cauſed by grace, either of thoſe wayes, then it becomes us to rejoyce. The Apoſtle ſaith more, Rom. 5. 3. We glory in tribulation. And again, (2 Cor. 6. 10.) as ſorrowful, yet alway rejoycing. The ſorrow of godly men is like the joy of the wicked, only in appearance: Paul had only a ſhadow of ſorrow, as ſorrowful; but his joy was ſubſtantial and continual, alwayes rejoycing, though his outward eſtate caſt up, amounted but to this, poor, and having nothing. The reaſon is, becauſe God is the ſame in all variety of eſtates: God loves as well when we are poor, as when we are rich, yea as well when himſelf ſmites, as when he heals. He is as good to us when we receive evil, as when we receive good: therefore if God be the ſame, ſurely we ought to be the ſame too, and take it as kindly at his hands, when we are impoveriſht, as when we are inricht; when we are ſick, as when we are in health; when we are in priſon, as when we are free. Shall preſent evils make us either inſenſible of, or unthankful for paſt mercies? Shall preſent troubles be as a grave wherein to bury the memory of all our former comforts? ſhall (as it was in Pharaohs dream) the lean kine, and the blaſted ears of corn, eat up and devour the fat kine, and the full ears? The Heathen Philoſopher cenſures him for a fool, who thinks there is no benefit in benefits, nor bleſſing in bleſſings, except they be preſent: And he brands him as unthankful, who accounts the end of a mercy an injury; or thinks he is wrong'd, when free gifts are not continued. If a Heathen ſaw ſo much obligation, in the paſt benefits of a man; Chriſtians ſhould ſee it much more in the paſt mercies and bleſſings of their God. Wherefore, to conclude this point, with the counſel of the Ancient, Remember the heaps of good things received, weigh the good and the evil together: Thou ſhalt never find any mans life, at all times alike; It is the priviledge of God alone to be without changes; but if thou grieveſt at what is preſent, take comfort in what is paſt. Now thou mourneſt, but heretofore thou didſt rejoyce; now thou art in want, but thou haſt had abundance. We have a ſaying, It is a miſerable thing to have been happy: But a godly man is happy in the mid'ſt of all his miſery; he may ſay with undaunted Luther, Let him be miſerable that can be miſerable, I cannot. He that hath not a God to looſe, nor a ſoul to looſe, cannot be miſerable, whatſoever he looſes; while Chriſt is ſafe, a believer hath no reaſon to be unſatisfied. Thus we have diſcuſs'd Job's anſwer, and have found it full of wiſdom and of holineſs; like thoſe words of the Wiſe, which the Preacher ſaith (Eccleſ. 12. 11.) are as goads, and as nails faſtened by the Maſters of Aſſemblies. Job's words were as goads by the ſharpneſs of reproof, to awake and quicken lazy drones; they were as nailes by the piercing efficacy and ſtrength of reaſon, to confirm and faſten wavering minds.

Ingratus eſt, qui injuriâ vocat finem voluptatis; ſtultus qui nullum fructum eſſe putat bonorum, niſi præſentium, qui non in præteritis acquieſcit,&c. Sen. ad Polyb. c. 29. Baſil. Orat. 11. de patientia.

We have the word and warrant of God for this, in that high Elogium, or commendation given him at the concluſion of all.

In all this did not Job ſin with his lips.

Job reproves his Wife for ſpeaking ſo, and he refutes what ſhe had ſpoken; in both he hits the right: Now In all this did not Job ſin with his lips.

This is the ſame teſtimony for the matter, and almoſt the ſame in words, with that, given of Job's victory, in the cloſe of the firſt dayes battel; and having explicated them in that place, I ſhall but briefly touch them here. In all this did not Job ſin with his lips.

We ſee in general, the holy Ghoſt gives the victory to Job. Satan is foiled, his plot fails, the weapons of his warfare are all broken and ſucceſleſs; all his fiery darts are either quench'd or beaten back upon himſelf: Job ſtands like a mighty rock, or like a houſe built upon the rock, unſhaken, unmoved: He that is held up by everlaſting armes, ſhall ſtand faſt for ever. In all this Job ſinned not.

The words refer to what was paſt; for Job afterward did fail, and ſinned with his lips through vehemency of pain, and heat of diſputation; he ſpake ſome things raſhly, though nothing blaſphemouſly: So he confeſſes, Chap. 42. 13. I have uttered things that I underſtood not. But in all this, ſo far as Job had gone, he had not ſinned with his lips. As Samuel after many victories and deliverances, ſets up a ſtone or pillar with this inſcription, Eben Ezer, The ſtone of help, ſaying, Hitherto hath the Lord helped us (1 Sam. 7. 12.) So here the holy Ghoſt (as it were) erects a pillar, raiſeth a monument of Jobs compleat and glorious victories over Satan, thus engraven, Hitherto, in all this Job hath not ſinned. Yet you may remember, that ſuch ſpeeches concerning the Saints, are to be underſtood in a qualified ſence, not in an abſolute ſence. For, who can bring a clean thing out of that which is unclean? Perfection out of imperfection? Not to ſin, is here our duty, and ſhould be our endeavour, it ſhall be our reward in Heaven. On earth we are ſaid not to ſin, when we deſire not to ſin; as hath been more at larged ſhewed upon thoſe words of the laſt verſe of the former Chapter, In all this Job ſinned not, nor charged God fooliſhly. There read the point handled more diſtinctly. For the opening of theſe words, note only this; that when it is ſaid, In all this Job ſinned not, there is more to be underſtood, then is expreſt; for Job did not only not ſin, but he overcame, and triumphed gloriouſly over Satan: he did excellently, and he ſpake excellently in all this. So then, theſe words carry the ſence not only of a bare acquittal, but of a high approbation: In all this Job ſinned not with his lips.

With his lips.] Some of the Jewes infer from hence, that he ſinned in his heart; becauſe it is ſaid, he did not ſin in words, they conceit there was ſome irregularity in his thoughts. Surely if his heart had been diſorder'd, his tongue would have been diſorder'd too; for out of the abundance of the heart the mouth ſpeaketh, therefore it is rather an argument that his heart was free from ſin, becauſe his tongue was.

In all this Job ſinned not with his lips. That is, he did not murmure, or repine, or blaſpheme; theſe are the ſins of the lips.

Obſerve firſt, Not to ſin, is the higheſt and trueſt, the moſt honourable and laſting victory of all.

This victory God himſelf applauds: the holy Ghoſt will cry you up for ſtrength and valour, when you come off from a temptation untouch'd; you ſhall be recorded for it among Chriſts worthies, In all this Job ſinned not.

And ſecondly, To govern the tongue under great and ſore afflictions, is a high act of grace.

It is ſpoken as matter of wonder; In all this Job ſinned not with his lips. Moſes, you know, was a meek man, yet he was ſo put to it, that he ſpake unadviſedly with his lips; He opened his lips ſo unadviſedly, that God ſhut him out of the temporal Canaan for it: raſh words coſt him dear. David was a very holy man, and very careful over his tongue, Pſal. 39. 1. I ſaid I will take heed to my wayes, that I ſin not with my tongue. I will keep my mouth with a Bridle: And knowing (though as the Apoſtle James teacheth us, We put bits into the Horſes mouthes that they may obey us, we can turn about their whole body, Jam. 3. 3.) that no bridle of his putting could keep his mouth; he puts this work into the hand of God, praying with all earneſtneſs; Set a watch (O Lord) before my mouth, keep the door of my lips. Notwithſtanding all this, we find him ſinning with his lips more then once, Pſal. 73. 13. Verily I have cleanſed my heart in vain, and waſhed my hands in innocency. And again, Pſal. 116. 11. I ſaid in my haſte, all men are liars. Job had the preheminence in this, he ſinned not with his lips, no not when he was afflicted and ſmitten with bitter words: He that offendeth not in words (ſaith the Apoſtle James) is a perfect man, he is a perfect man indeed, who can rule his tongue, and ſo keep the door of his lips, as that he offends not either by ſilence or by ſpeech. The lips do offend both wayes, negatively as well as poſitively, by ſpeaking, and by not ſpeaking: Sometimes ſilence is a loud ſin; not ſpeaking is to ſome, on ſome occaſions, a crying ſin; Job ſinned not with his lips, either by being ſilent when he ſhould ſpeak, or by ſpeaking wherein and when he ſhould be ſilent. And ſo much concerning this ſecond conſequent of Job's affliction: His Wives ſinful counſel, with his prudent and gracious anſwer; ſharply, yet moderately rebuking; ſtrongly, yet lovingly convincing her folly: In and by both, faithfully indeavouring at once to diſcover and cure her error.

The third conſequent of his affliction now follows, namely the viſit of his friends, deſcribed in the three laſt verſes of this Chapter, which leads us into the body of the Book, with all the debates, diſputes and arguments held and maintained with much acuteneſs of wit, and ſtrength of reaſoning between him and theſe three, his friends and viſitants,

VERS.

VERS. 11, 12, 13.

Now when Job's three friends heard of all this evil that was come upon him, they came every one from his own place: Eliphaz the Temanite, and Bildad the Shuhite, and Zophar the Naamathite; for they had made an appointment together, to come to mourn with him, and to comfort him.

And when they lift up their eyes afar off, and knew him not, they lifted up their voice and wept; and they rent every one his mantle, and ſprinkled duſt upon their heads towards Heaven.

So they ſate down with him upon the ground ſeven dayes, and ſeven nights, and none ſpake a word unto him: for they ſaw that his grief was very great.

THeſe three verſes, contain the third general conſequent of Job's ſecond affliction. In the diviſion of the Chapter, we called it his friends viſit. In which viſit we may here obſerve; Firſt, the number of the viſitants. They were three. Now when Job's three friends.

Secondly, We have here the names of theſe viſitants. Eliphaz the Temanite, and Bildad the Shuhite, and Zophar the Naamathite.

Thirdly, We have the occaſion of their viſit: and that was the report of all the evil that was come upon Job. Now when Job's three friends heard of all this evil that was come upon him, then they came.

Fourthly, We have the ground of this viſit: it was a mutual agreement, or a compact made between them; ſo ſaith the Text, For they had made an appointment together to come.

Fifthly, We have the end or the intendment of their coming, what they aimed at, in viſiting Job. And the end is expreſt in the Text to be two-fold.

First, To communicate with him in his ſorrows.

Secondly, To communicate unto him their comforts.

Firſt, To mourn with him. And ſecondly, To comfort him.

The former of theſe two ends, viz. their mourning with him, we have largely ſet down in the two latter verſes; they put that end into act preſently, as ſoon as they came, they fell a mourning with him. And we may obſerve five diſtinct acts of Job's friends ſolemnly condoling or mourning with him.

The firſt act is this, They wept. And to ſhew that it was no ordinary weeping, the Text ſaith, They lift up their voice and wept.

The ſecond act of their mourning was, their renting of their Mantles, And they rent every one his Mantle.

The third act was, the ſprinkling of duſt upon their heads, and the ſprinkling of duſt toward Heaven, which was another aggravating circumſtance of their ſorrow.

The fourth act was, their ſitting down with him upon the ground ſeven dayes, and ſeven nights.

The fifth act of their mourning with him, was their ſilence, And none ſpake a word unto him.

The Cauſe or the reaſon of this ſolemnity in their mourning, the reaſon of theſe five Acts, but eſpecially of the laſt, of their ſilence, is given us in the latter words of the verſe, For they ſaw that his grief was very great, therefore it muſt have great ſorrow, and great ſilence, to wait the fitteſt ſeaſon for the adminiſtring of counſel and conſolation. Thus for the parts and reſolution of the words, contained in theſe three verſes. I ſhall come to the opening of the particulars.

And when Job's three friends.

רעי A radice רעה Pavis, tam ſe quam alios.

The word which we tranſlate (friends) ſprings from a root which ſignifieth to feed a mans ſelf, or others, or to eat together as Sheep eat together; and ſo from the ſame word, a Paſtor or a feeder of Sheep is derived, Pſal. 23.1. The Lord is my Shepheard and feeder. And by a Metaphor it is tranſlated for a friend; becauſe friends do uſually feed together, eat and converſe together: So David deſcribes a friend, Pſal. 41.9. My familiar friend that did eat of my bread. Job's viſitants are thus expreſt, his friends or familiars; The word ſometimes notes only a friend at large, or any neighbour; ſo in the Law, Exod. 20. 16. Thou ſhalt not bear falſe witneſs againſt thy neighbour, or (it is the ſame word) againſt thy friend: there it is taken in a large ſence, for a neighbour, that is, for any beſides thy ſelf, to whom offices of love are due, as Chriſt expounds it, Luke 10. 30. But uſually, it is put ſtrictly, for a ſpecial friend, as in Deut. 13. 6. when he ſpeaks of inticers to Idolatry, If thy friend (ſaith he) who is as thine own ſoul; there is the ſame word, and he ſhews by a circumlocution, whom he means by ſuch a friend, namely ſuch a one who is as thine own ſoul; one that lyeth in thy boſom, and is as near and dear to thee as thy ſelf. I ſuppoſe here in this place, Job's three friends were not friends at large, but intimate and ſpecial friends, or (as we uſe to ſay) boſom friends. And therefore when it is ſaid, Job's three friends, we are not to underſtand it, as if Job had but three, as if theſe were all the friends Job had; but amongſt all his friends, theſe carried away the name, theſe were the chief and choice; Job's three friends. As it is ſaid concerning David's Worthies, 2 Sam. 23. David had many Worthies, but there was a firſt three, a chief three among them all. So here, Job doubtleſs had many friends, a large Catalogue of friends, but in theſe you have the top of his friends, the chief three, the firſt three: Theſe three ſpecial friends came to viſit Job, to mourn with him, and to comfort him.

The occaſion of this viſit, preſents it ſelf next, When theſe three friends heard of all this evil that was come upon Job. [When they heard of it.] The troubles of Job were noyſed all the Country over, yea into ſtrange Countries. Two things are ſwiftly carried about upon the wings of fame, and poaſted about by reports: Firſt, The ſins. Secondly, The afflictions of Godly men. If they fall into any ſin, it will be heard of all a Country, it may be all a Kingdom over: It ſhall be told in Gath, and publiſh'd in the ſtreets of Askelon. Again, if they fall into any great affliction, every one deſcants upon it, and many will paſs deep cenſures. It becomes matter of wonder, that men eminent in godlineſs, great profeſſors, ſuch as have held forth the name, and upheld the truth of Chriſt, that they (I ſay) ſhould fall into great afflictions, is reported, diſcours'd, admir'd all a Country over.

There is nothing that is more talked of, then the trouble that befalleth godly men; When the three friends of Job heard of all this evil that was come upon him.

Nihil ens magis prædicabile quam boni hominis ruino.

When this report about Job came to them, they came to Job, They came (ſaith the Text) every one from his own place. The word Place, is often uſed in Scripture, to ſignifie a Country, a City, or a Region. Now here it is conceived, that the place from whence they came, was not only the place where they dwelt, but the place where they governed. It is frequently aſſerted by the Jewiſh Doctors, with whom the Septuagint agree, and moſt of the Jeſuits are in it too; that theſe three friends of Job's were Kings, either Reges or Reguli, ſuch as had the government of thoſe Countries where they lived. Beza rejects this as a Fable, and telleth us that this opinion hath no footing or foundation in Scripture, but is grounded only upon that uſual boldneſs of the Jewiſh Doctors. But whether they were Kings or Subjects, whether they came from their private dwellings, or from the places of their dominion, needs not trouble us. This is clear, that they were great men, eminent perſons in their Country: and the diſputes which follow, teſtifie that they were men of very great wiſdom and underſtanding, according to all the learning of thoſe times.

Quod autem dicunt Hebrei totidē fuiſſe reges eſt ex audacia illis familiari, Beza.

Theſe three friends of Job's are here ſet forth by name, by a double name. By the name, firſt, of their perſons. Secondly, By the name of their Country, or of their Family. For that's a queſtion, whether the additional name be derived from the Country where they dwelt, or from the Family out of which they were extracted.

Eliphaz the Temanite, he is the firſt. We read Gen. 36. 11. That Eſau begat Eliphaz; that Eliphaz was the eldeſt Son of Eſau, and Eliphaz begat Teman. This Teman, deſcending from Eſau, is ſuppoſed to be the Father or the Anceſtor of this Eliphaz, from whom he is called Eliphaz the Temanite; and ſo Temanite, is a note of the Family from whence Eliphaz deſcended. It is uſual likewiſe in Scripture, to give ſuch additional names from the Countries or places,

Jer. 49.20.
Amos 1.12
Obad. 9.
Hab. 3.4.

Teman regio Principium Edom in terra Gabalitica a Theman filio Eliphaz filii Eſau ſortita vocabulum, &c. Sciendum etiam quod omnis Auſtralis regio Ebræis Theman dicitur (paulo poſt.) Theman juxta Ezekielem civitas Idumææ. Euſebius de locis.

places, and ſo Eliphaz the Temanite, may be from Teman, of which we read often in Scripture: Teman ſignifies the South; it was a Southern Countrey.

Further, Teman was a place, wherein it is obſerved, that the Schools of Learning were ſeated, Jer. 49. 7. Concerning Edom, thus ſaith the Lord, Is wiſdom no more in Teman? Two things may be gathered from that Text. Firſt, That Teman was in Edom, or Idumea. Secondly, That it was a place wherein there was much profeſſion of wiſdom and learning. So then, we may take the word Temanite, either as referring unto the Stock from which Eliphaz ſprung; or unto the place where Eliphaz lived. The Hebrews refer it unto his Stock or pedigree: And the Caldee Paraphraſe is for the place or Countrey.

Job's ſecond friend was Bildad the Shuhite. All that I find for his pedigree, is, that he came from one of the Sons of Abraham by his ſecond Wife Keturah; of whom it is ſaid, Gen. 25.1. That ſhe bare him Zimram, and Jockſham, with others, and Shuah: From which Shuah was the family of the Shuhites: And it is conceived, that Bildad was of that line, and therefore here called Bildad the Shuhite.

And for the laſt, Zophar the Naamathite, there is leſs certainty concerning him: Some will have him to be Zepho, mentioned Gen. 36. 11. who was Grand-child to Eſau by Eliphaz his Eldeſt Son. And for his additional name Naamathite, the beſt conjecture which I find, takes it from Naamah, the name of a City, ſpoken of Joſh. 15. 41. in the diviſion of the promiſed Land to the Children of Iſrael.

ועד
מועד
Tempus aut locus certus ac conſtitutus, conventus, indictus, tempus quod unus alteri conſtituit.

Now it is ſaid, that theſe three, upon the report of all the evil that was come upon Job, came to viſit him; For they had made an appointment together to come; or they all agreed together; they came not by accident, but by appointment. The word ſignifieth, to meet by ſolemn agreement. Hence the place where the children of Iſrael uſed to meet to ſolemnize the worſhip of God, before the building of the Temple, was called the Tabernacle of the Congregation; becauſe they were to congregate or meet there at ſet times to celebrate the Name of God, according to his own inſtitution. And in the thirtieth Chapter of this Book, the grave is called Beth-mogned (ver. 23.) the houſe of the gathering together of all men, according to that Statute of Heaven, It is appointed unto men once to dye, Heb. 9.27. It is the fancy of Origen upon this place, that theſe three friends came at adventure, that they came all of them ſeveral wayes, unknown to, or without the privity of one another, from their ſeveral Countreys, and met, as it were by miracle, at Job's houſe, the ſame day and hour. But the Text is clear, that there was a profeſt covenant and agreement made, by which they came together.

They came (ſaith the Text) to mourn with him, and to comfort him. In theſe words we have the end or intendment of their coming.

נוד

Firſt, [They came to mourn with him.] The word which we tranſlate, to mourn, ſignifieth to move the body, or to paſs from place to place. Cain (after that ſin of his in murthering his Brother, Gen. 4.) hath this judgment paſs'd by God upon him, That he ſhould be a fugitive and a vagabond; he ſhould be Nod, a mover from place to place: And afterwards it is ſaid, He dwelt in the Land of Nod; which ſome interpret for a ſpecial place, for a Country called Nod: but it is taken by others thus, He dwelt in the Land of Nod; that is, where ever he dwelt, he found the Land, as it were, moving; it was a moving, a ſhaking, a trembling Land to him, He dwelt in the Land of Nod: His conſcience quaking continually, by reaſon of the guilt that was upon him, for murdering his Brother; the earth alſo ſeemed to quake under him, whereſoever he went, or dwelt. That only by the way. The ſame word here uſed in the Text, by a Metaphor, ſignifies to mourn, or compaſſionate the afflictions and miſeries of another. So Nah. 3. 6. Nineveh is laid waſte, who will bemoan her? And Iſa. 51.19. Theſe two things are come unto thee, who ſhall be ſorry for thee? And the reaſon why this word, which ſignifieth properly to move, is tranſlated to ſignifie mourning in compaſſion with others, may be, either firſt this; becauſe ſuch perſons will run, go, or move from place to place, to give and adminiſter comfort to their friends, whoſe afflictions affect and grieve them, as we ſee here in theſe friends of Job; they took a long journey, they moved indeed when they came to mourn. Or rather ſecondly, (as I conceive) for this reaſon, becauſe ſuch compaſſionate ſorrows and mournings when our friends are under deep and ſore afflictions, are uſually expreſt by moving the body, or at leaſt moving ſome member of the body; as many times the hand is lifted up, and we ſtroke our breaſts, or we ſhake the head: It is ordinary in compaſſionate ſorrows, thus to move the hand or the head; and ſo the word is uſed to ſignifie mourning, from that act which accompanies or teſtifies mourning. And the ſame word is ſometimes uſed to ſignifie that trepidation, or trembling of the heart, thoſe convulſions of the ſpirit, upon the approaches of our own troubles. So Iſa. 7. 2. That fearful motion and diſquietneſs both of Prince and people, when they heard of the invaſion of their Countrey by Rezin King of Syria, &c. is thus expreſt, The heart of the King, and the heart of his people were moved, as the trees of the wood are moved with the wind.

Qui condolent aut compatiuntur, ſolent ſubinde movere caput ad teſtandū dolorem. Merc.

נחם

Secondly, It is ſaid they came to comfort him. The word which is there uſed to comfort, ſignifies likewiſe to mourn: and eſpecially the mournings of repentance, or to repent for ſin with ſorrow: The reaſon is given, becauſe true comfort doth ſpring from repentance: Joy often ariſeth out of ſorrow, and ſo the ſame word is applied to both. Worldly joy and ſorrow are contraries, but godly joy and ſorrow are con-cauſes, mutually effecting and helping one another.

We have here an excellent pattern held forth unto us of our duty, in reference unto diſtreſſed perſons or Nations.

> Firſt thus, It is both an act and an argument of true friendſhip, to mourn with and comfort thoſe that are in affliction.

A man doth then ſet his ſeal to it, that he is a friend, when he will partake and ſhare in his friends afflictions; when he will divide with him in all eſtates whatſoever it is; whether ſweet or ſowre, joy or ſorrow, he will have his part. Many friends will come and rejoyce with you, they will come to a feaſt with you, they will meet at a houſe of mirth with you; but they fall off and go back, when they muſt weep with you, when if they come, they muſt come to a houſe of mourning. Solomon (Prov. 17. 11.) gives us the true character of a friend; A friend loveth at all times, and a brother is born for adverſity. It is the note and tryal of our love to God, when we love him at all times, whatever he doth with us: And it is the argument of true love unto our brethren, when we love and own them at all times, whatſoever they endure from the hand of God, or man: This Chriſt approves and commends in his Diſciples, Luke 22. 28. Ye are they (ſaith he) who have continued with me in my temptation. It is an eaſie piece of friendſhip, or diſcipleſhip, to continue with Chriſt at a Feaſt, or at a full Table; but in a temptation to continue with him, ſpeaks a Diſciple indeed. Some friends are like the Swallow, they come in the Summer and ſing with you; but when it is Winter, cold and froſt, then farewell, they muſt ſeek a warmer Climate. Theſe are ſummer friends; while the ſummer of comfort, the ſummer of riches, the ſummer of outward contentment laſteth, you cannot be rid of them: but if the winter come, the winter of trouble, and ſorrow, and poverty, and ſickneſs, they are gone; they will not once look on you, they paſs on the other ſide of the way, as the Levite did, when he ſaw the man lye wounded and weltring in his blood, Luke 10. 32. Theſe are ſummer friends, not winter friends, not they.

Secondly, Obſerve this; As it is an act and argument of friendſhip to do thus, ſo it is likewiſe a duty to do thus:

> It is a duty to mourn with thoſe that mourn, and to viſit thoſe that are in affliction.

Many look upon it only as a complement, to viſit their ſad friends; we muſt look upon it as a duty. Chriſt puts it (Matth. 25. 36.) as one of thoſe viſible acts of duty, upon which he will pronounce the bleſſing of that day; Come ye bleſſed; why? I was ſick and ye viſited me. Chriſt is not ſick in his perſon; he is in Heaven, where is no ſin, and therefore no ſickneſs ſhall ever enter: and indeed he never was ſick in his perſon, when he was here upon the earth; Chriſt did not bear our perſonal infirmities, he bore only our natural infirmities: I know it is ſaid, He bore our ſickneſſes (by compaſſion and by compenſation) but he was not ſick: Whereas then Chriſt ſaith, I was ſick, he means, ſick in his members: And when he ſaith, Ye viſited me, he means, his ſick diſtreſſed ſervants: He takes it ſo kindly, when done to his, that he reckons it as done to himſelf: It is an act you ſee, and an office of love, upon which Chriſt hath a ſpecial eye. The Apoſtle James (Chap. 1. 27.) doth, as it were, put all Religion in this: It is ſuch a fruit of Religion as doth evidence the truth of Religion, and therefore hath obtained not only the name of Religion, but is made the definition of Religion. Pure Religion (ſaith he) and undefiled before God the Father, is this. What is it? To viſit the fatherleſs and the widow in their affliction. This is a definition from the effect: It is not put in general, that to viſit the fatherleſs and the widow; but to viſit them in their affliction, is pure Religion; that is, this is a fruit, that which groweth up from the root of pure Religion: if pure Religion live in the heart, this will be a fruit in the life. Wherefore look not upon the viſitation of a diſconſolate friend, as a matter of indifferency, but of duty; and do it not only for love, but for conſcience.

Thirdly, The Text ſaith, As ſoon as they heard, or when they heard of all the evil that was come upon Job, they came to mourn with him. Then obſerve,

> The very report of anothers ſuffering, ſhould move us to mourn and ſuffer with him.

Report ſhould bring us, when we do but hear of ſuch a thing: It is very unwarrantable to judge or cenſure a friend upon report and hear-ſay; but a report is warrant enough to pity and pray for him, to viſit and comfort him. Remember them that are in bonds (ſaith the Apoſtle) Heb. 13. 3. as bound with them: Remember them. Remembrance is of things and perſons which are abſent; remember them, though you ſee them not, though abſent from you, yet make their caſe as preſent; be as bound with them, be as afflicted with them, yea haſten into their preſence. Bear one anothers burthens, Gal. 6. 2. Rejoyce with them that rejoyce, and weep with them that weep, Rom. 12. 5. Be ye all of one mind, having compaſſion one of another, 1 Pet. 3. 8. are Apoſtolical rules for, and tryals of Goſpel-love. It was a ſad condition that David was in; and it was a very ſinful condition that others about him were in, when he ſaith, Pſal. 69. 20. I looked for ſome to take pity, but there was none; and for comforters, but I found none. But if it be ſinful not to eaſe (when it is in our power) the ſorrows of others, how ſinful is it to add to their ſorrow? Such David found (typing Chriſt in his ſufferings) Who gave him gall for meat, and in his thirſt they gave him vinegar to drink. Thus the Lord complains of thoſe Heathen by the Prophet Zachary (Zach. 1. 15.) I was but a little diſpleaſed with my people, and they helped forward the affliction.

Again, If it be a duty to mourn over the afflictions of others; how exceeding ſinful is it to rejoyce at the afflictions of others? This was Edom's wickedneſs, reproved by the Prophet Obadiah, ver. 12. Thou ſhouldeſt not have looked on the day of thy brother, in the day that he became a ſtranger: neither ſhouldeſt thou have rejoyced over the children of Judah, in the day of their affliction: neither ſhouldeſt thou have ſpoken proudly in the day of diſtreſs.

We may further preſs this point, in reference unto the preſent condition of our Brethren in many places of this Nation; in reference to the whole Nation of Ireland, yea of the whole Church of God: Are they not all mourners? And if we are to mourn with private friends, much more then with publick, with whole Kingdoms and Churches. We may beſpeak all paſſengers in the language of the Prophet Jeremy, lamenting over the deſolations of Jeruſalem, Is it nothing to you, all you that paſs by England, Ireland? Is it nothing to you that travel, (though but in meditation) into the Churches of Chriſt in Germany? &c. We read of Nehemiah, Chap. 1. 4. when he heard the report of Jeruſalems deſolation, though himſelf was far off at Babylon, though himſelf was rich and full, and preferr'd in the Court of that Perſian Monarch, yet he mourned many dayes. And Daniel, (Chap. 10. 2.) mourned three full weeks, that is, one and twenty dayes together, over the diſtreſſed eſtate and condition of his people; Jeremy wiſheth, Oh that my head were a fountain of tears, that I might weep night and day for the ſlain of the daughter of my people! Chap. 9. 1. We have had many ſlain, choice ones ſlain; this ſhould be matter of mourning to us. Take heed of ſuch a ſpirit, as is reproved in thoſe, Amos 6. Who ſate upon beds of Ivory, and ſtretched themſelves upon their couches, who eat the lambs out of the flock, and the calves out of the midſt of the ſtall: Who chaunted to the ſound of the viol, and invented to themſelves inſtruments of Muſick like David, who drank wine in bowls, and anointed themſelves with the chief ointments, but they were not grieved for the affliction of Joſeph. If ever that of Solomon were appliable, it is to ſuch a time as this, (Eccleſ. 2. 2.) I ſaid of laughter, thou art mad; of all worldly laughter and outward mirth, what do'ſt thou? if ever it were mad, now it is mad: Now ſorrow is ſobriety, and tears are in ſeaſon. No ſong ſo muſical as that which is ſet to the higheſt ſtrain of lamentation. I remember the Prophet Eliſha's paſſion, when he fore-ſaw evils that ſhould be acted; he looked upon Hazael, ſaith the Text, (2 Kings 8. 11.) and wept; and Hazael ſaid, Why weepeth my Lord? He replyed, Becauſe I know of all the evil that thou wilt do unto the Children of Iſrael: their ſtrong holds wilt thou ſet on fire, and their young men wilt thou ſlay with the ſword, and wilt daſh their children, and rip up their women with child. This made him weep; he wept, becauſe he ſaw blood and fire, murders and burnings in the face of Hazael; what would he have done then, if he had ſeen all fulfilled with his hand? Chriſt himſelf wept over Jeruſalem, when he propheſied how the enemy ſhould come, and caſt a trench about it, and compaſs the City round, and keep them in on every ſide, &c. Luke 19. 43. If Chriſt wept for the evils that were to come on others, how ſhould we for the evils that are already come upon us? Mine eye affecteth my heart, ſaith lamenting Jeremy (Lam. 3. 51.) An eye of propheſie hath affected ſome hearts, and ſhall not an eye of ſenſe affect ours? Our ears were ſmitten long ago, with ſad meſſages out of Germany, out of the Palatinate and Bohemia: We were ſmitten nearer home by the reports of thoſe inhumane butcheries, exerciſed upon our brethren in Ireland: We are now ſmitten at home, both ear and eye, the ſword hath paſs'd the Seas, and hath ſpilt Rivers, is like to ſpill a ſea of blood out of our own bowels; for our brethren that have been ſlain, for our brethren that are in captivity, for our brethren that have been ſpoiled, let us mourn and lament with a brotherly lamentation. It is true, they ought (as thoſe ancient Worthies) to ſuffer joyfully the ſpoiling of their goods, Heb. 10. 34. but we ought to grieve when they ſuffer the ſpoiling of their goods. It is an excellent ſpirit in them, to ſuffer it with joy; but it is a ſinful ſpirit in us, which rejoyceth, when they ſuffer. Some Trees keep their greenneſs and their leaves, Winter and Summer, let the time be what it will, hot or cold, they are alike freſh and green: Some ſpirits are like thoſe hard-grain trees: But the ſpirit of a Chriſtian ſhould be like ordinary trees, which when Winter cometh, caſt their leaves, put off their beauty and bravery. The ſtory ſaith of Nero, that when he had ſet the City of Rome on fire, he got him up to an high place, to behold the fire, and feed upon the flame, for there and then he ſung ſongs of the deſtruction of Troy: To ſing ſongs, to rejoyce in the midſt of Sions afflictions, argues not a Chriſtian, but a Neronian ſpirit. To ſhut up this point, let us prefer Jeruſalem above our chiefeſt worldly joy; let us even reſolve to enjoy nothing of the world, till we ſee Jeruſalem a quiet habitation, and the joy of the whole earth. The Wife of Phineas, 1 Sam. 4. would not enjoy her Son, (and that is the chiefeſt joy) becauſe the Ark of God was taken: She enquires, Where is the glory? As if ſhe had ſaid, you ſhew me a Son, but can you ſhew me the glory? No, The glory is departed from Iſrael, for the Ark of God is taken. There is nothing in the world to be rejoyced in, when God departs from us; and there is but little, if any thing, to be rejoyced in, when Ordinances (which are the ſigns of Gods preſence, and the means of communion with God) are taken or departing from us.

Thirdly, Theſe friends of Job came to mourn with him; they were not ſent for, they were not invited by letters or meſſengers, but they came of their own accord. Obſerve,

> It becomes us well for the comforting of our friends, to prevent the invitation of our friends.

Some out of a kind of modeſty (that is the beſt we can ſay of it) will not come to a troubled friend, unleſs they be ſent for. I do aſſure you this, It is good manners to be an unbidden gueſt at a houſe of mourning.

Another thing I would offer to you from hence, is this, It is ſaid, that before they came, They made an appointment to come, to mourn with him, and to comfort him; you ſee they agreed upon their end, before they ſet a foot in the way. Note this then,

It is an excellent point of holy prudence, to be ſetled about our tnd, before we undertake or enter upon any action.

Some go about buſineſs, and they know not why; they viſit their friends, and they know not for what. That was juſtly called a confuſed Aſſembly (Acts 19. 32.) when the moſt part knew not wherefore they were come together. Though no man can know the end of his action, reſpecting the event, yet every wiſe man doth and ought to know the end of all his actions, in reſpect of his own intendment: His end is firſt intended, though it be laſt, yea though it be not all attained. Obſerve further, Wiſdom doth not only propoſe an end, but a ſutable end.

Job's three friends propoſed two of the moſt ſutable ends that could be for ſuch a buſineſs, To mourn with him, and to comfort him. If a man were to viſit or converſe with a wicked man, it were good to ſay, I will go to counſel him, to convince him of his ſin, to convert him from his ſin. If I go to one who is full of doubts, it were beſt to ſay, I will go ſee, if I can ſettle and reſolve him: A ſutable end is the beauty and grace of all our undertakings.

Again, Conſider the order and method of theſe two ends, it is ſaid, They came to mourn with him, and to comfort him. Comfort is the higher and the nobler end, the laſt and ultimate end in regard of man; it is the end into which all actions are reſolved, and all ends emptied at the laſt; all the acts of holineſs have a tendency unto joy; all godly ſorrow leads unto comfort: Therefore the Apoſtle writes to his Corinthians, that he was not glad, becauſe he had made them ſorrowful by an Epiſtle, but that they ſorrowed ſo, as they might rejoyce. How was that? They ſorrowed to repentance; their ſorrow wrought repentance unto ſalvation, not to be repented of. But is there no more in true repentance, but only this, that it is not to be repented of? Surely yes. For if there be joy in Heaven (Luke 15.) over a repenting ſinner, then doubtleſs, there is abundant ground of joy on earth. If Angels rejoyce when a ſinner repents, much more may the repenting ſinner rejoyce. So then, repentance, not to be repented of, is repentance greatly to be rejoyced in. Repentance that brings not forth joy, is to be repented of: We muſt mourn for all ſorrows which end in ſorrow; for ſorrow is not good for its own ſake, but for comforts ſake: Job's friends came not to mourn with him, that he might mourn; but they came to mourn with him, that he might be comforted: To add ſorrow unto ſorrow, is to be ſwallowed up with ſorrow; he ſorrows rightly, that would be ſwallowed up with joy: You ſee the ends which theſe men propoſed in coming to Job, To mourn with him, and to comfort him. Excellent ends both, and without all queſtion, they did propoſe and purpoſe them ſincerely. They came to mourn with him, and they mourned; they came with hearts reſolved to comfort him, but they did not comfort him, they did not attain that end, they could not attain it. Then obſerve,

That as the way of a man is not in himſelf, ſo much leſs is the end of a man in himſelf.

The way of a man is not in himſelf, ſaith the Prophet Jeremy, Chap. 10. 23. that is, a mans actions are not in his own power, he is not maſter of his own will, or of his own way. If a mans way be not in himſelf, much leſs is his end in himſelf, that is, in his own power, to have what end he pleaſeth and propoſeth: Man propoſeth, but God diſpoſeth. Theſe friends came to comfort Job, but they did nothing leſs then comfort him: inſtead of comforting, they afflicted him; which forced him to complain, Miſerable comforters are ye all: And yet their errand was to comfort him.

Some indeed are of opinion, that they were falſe friends, that they came upon him with prejudic'd and imbitter'd ſpirits: but the preparatory circumſtances, and manner of their coming, clears the uprightneſs of their intentions, and confutes that ſlander. Doubtleſs they came really to comfort him, and eaſe his ſorrows; and yet behold they doubled his ſorrows, and proved a greater affliction to him then all the reſt. Job had nothing left him, but the integrity of his wayes, and the uprightneſs of his heart: His eſtate was gone, his children were gone, his health was gone, his body was broken, he was undone quite, yet he had a heart-full of integrity. And when Satan, the enemy, could not ſtrip him of this, he ſends his Wife: Firſt, to jeer him out of it; but he ſhakes her off quickly as a fooliſh Woman: Secondly, he ſends theſe friends, gravely and learnedly to diſpute and beat him out of it, by dint of argument. O how long did theſe hang upon him, with many ſerious and weighty, with many pious and divine (much miſapplied) diſcourſe: he could not get rid of theſe, whoſe words were as drawn ſwords, often making his wounded ſoul bleed and breath out ſad complaints; and yet they came to comfort him. A mans heart (ſaith Solomon, Prov. 16. 9.) deviſeth his way, but the Lord directeth his ſteps. Man deviſeth, but God directeth: He orders the actions, and over-rules the ends of every creature. We can neither cut out our way, nor make up our concluſions, by our own ſtrength or wiſdom. And ſo much for the tenth verſe, His friends viſit, They came unto him.

I told you before, that the two following verſes, do but ſet forth the particulars of the firſt end, their mourning. They came to mourn with him: Their mourning is expreſſed by many of thoſe particular circumſtances, obſerved in Job's ſorrow, chap. 1. v. 20. therefore I ſhall not inſiſt much upon them.

And when they lifted up their eyes afar off, they knew him not.

This is the preface to the ſeveral acts of their mourning.

And when they lifted up their eyes.] To lift up the eyes, is a frequent Scripture phraſe for ſeeing, Gen. 26. 63, 64. There is a reaſon in nature for it, man having a ſpecial nerve in the fabrick of the eye, by the motion of which the eye turns upward. I only offer that, becauſe the ſame word is uſed for lifting up the voice.

Afar off.] Some hence infer, that Job lay abroad; and they take this for a further argument, that he was put out of the City, or Houſe, where he dwelt, as a Leper. But this afar off, might be within the compaſs of his own houſe, or in his Chamber; as if it had been ſaid, as ſoon as they ſtept into the place where he lay, and eſpied him in ſuch a forlorn condition, they knew him not; though it be not improbable that he was ſometime abroad for the benefit of the air, by reaſon of the filthineſs of his diſeaſe; and ſo his friends might find him abroad. But that he was turned out of his houſe, is refuted, chap. 7. 13. where he ſpeaks of his bed, and of his couch. When I ſay my bed ſhall comfort me, my couch ſhall eaſe my complaint, &c. That is, when I thought to find eaſe by lying down upon my bed, or leaning on my couch. Therefore he had a houſe furniſhed with bed and couch.

When they lift up their eyes afar off, [they knew him not.] We need not take it abſolutely, as if his diſeaſe had ſo diſfigured him, that he could not be known to be the ſame man: For often in Scripture, that which is put as an abſolute negative, is intended for a weak affirmative. It is ſaid, (John 1. 11.) When Chriſt came, he came to his own, and his own received him not; there is an abſolute negation, (yet it followeth,) But to as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the ſons of God. His own received him not, yet ſome did receive him: Some of his own Kindred and Countrey did receive him: So that, His own received him not, is, as if it had been ſaid, few of his own received him, or he had but cold entertainment among his own. So Hoſ. 9. 6. Ephraim is ſmitten, their root is dried up, they ſhall bear no fruit. There is the ſound of an abſolute denial, yet the ſenſe will bear a weak affirmation; for it followeth, Yea though they bring forth, yet I will ſlay the beloved fruit of their womb. They may bring forth a few or ſome fruit perhaps, but I will deſtroy it. So here, They knew him not; that is, they could ſcarce diſcern him, or diſtinguiſh who he was, his diſeaſe and ſores had ſo diſcolour'd or blotted out the lines and feature of his face, that they could not ſuddenly aſſure themſelves, this was he. They ſtood as men amazed; What? Is this Job? What a ſpectacle is here? How ſtrangely is his viſage changed, and his whole body disfigured? Such kind of doubting language, doubtleſs paſt amongſt them. When they ſaw him afar off, they knew him not. The Prophet Jeremy obſerves the like, after the hard ſiege of Jeruſalem, which cauſed him thus to lament (chap. 4. 7, 8.) Her Nazarites were purer then ſnow, they were whiter then milk, they were more ruddy in body then Rubies, their poliſhing was of Saphire: But ſee the change; their viſage is blacker then a coal, they are not known in the ſtreets. Famine had eaten up, not only their fleſh, but their form; miſery had altered their very complexion and viſage; they who ſhined before like Rubies and Saphires, for colour and comlineſs, were now dark as a coal, or dusky like aſhes; they were not known to be the ſame men and women. It is ſaid of Chriſt in his affliction, Iſa. 52. 14. That his viſage was ſo marred more then any man, and his form more then the ſons of men. Great afflictions change the very form, and utterly blaſt the beauty of the body. Sin doth ſo change the ſoul, and disfigure the mind; it ſo deforms the ſpirit, and defaces the image at firſt ſtamp'd upon it, that God ſaith, I know you not, you are not like the men that I made. But this is the comfort of a Job, of a godly man, that when his face is moſt deformed, his ſoul is moſt beautified; and though a diſeaſe may disfigure him, ſo that his neareſt friends know him not, yet God knows him ſtill; No ſickneſs can wear out the markes by which Chriſt knows thee. When thy face is blacker then a coale, he ſees the face of thy ſoul, ſhining like the face of an Angel. A perſon or a people are then in a woful condition indeed, when God ſhall ſay to them, as he did to thoſe hypocritical profeſſors, Mat. 7. 23. Depart from me, I know ye not. We may be in ſuch a woful condition, that our friends and acquaintance coming to viſit us, cannot know us; yet for the main, well enough, bleſſed enough at that time, beautiful in the eye, welcome into the preſence of a glorious God.

They knew him not. What then? Then they lifted up their voyce, and wept.

This is the firſt act of their mourning. And we may obſerve five acts of mourning here ſpecified; whereof, one is a natural act, and the other four are ceremonial. The natural act was this of weeping: They lifted up their voice, and wept. The ceremonial acts were theſe; Firſt, They rent every one his mantle. Secondly. They ſprinkled duſt upon their heads towards heaven. Thirdly, They ſate down with him on the ground, ſeven dayes and ſeven nights. The fourth ceremonial act was, their ſilence; And none ſpake a word unto him, for they ſaw that his grief was great.

Firſt, They lifted up their voyce, and wept. The word is Baca, and from that, the place, Judges 2. 5. is called Bochin, where the people are ſaid to lift up their voice, and weep, when the Angel reproved them. In Pſal. 84. 6. we read of the valley of Baca, which ſome tranſlate, the valley of weeping, or the valley of tears. Others, from Baca, a Mulberry-tree, the valley of Mulberry-trees, which being a dry place, the travellers to Jeruſalem, at the ſolemn feaſts, did ſo dig for water, that they made all as one well.

Further, It is ſaid, they did not only weep, but they lifted up their voice, and wept. We may note two things in that phraſe. Firſt, The vehemency of their ſorrow; as when a man doth lift up his voice, and ſpeaks, he ſpeaks vehemently, Iſa. 58. 3. Lift up thy voyce like a Trumpet, that is, ſpeak with a loud and ſtrong voice; ſo here, They lifted up their voyce, and wept, that is, they wept vehemently, they wept exceedingly. Secondly, To lift up the voyce, and weep, notes the eaſing of the mind in ſorrow; for it is an eaſe to the mind burdened and oppreſſed with ſorrow, to lift up the voyce, and weep; to cry out in ſorrow, lets the ſtrength of the ſorrow out. We ſay, that ſorrow which is included, ſtrangles and ſtifles the ſpirit; ſorrow kept in, is like fire kept in, more augmented; as David ſpeaks, Pſal. 39. concerning himſelf. While I kept ſilence, even from good, my ſorrow was ſtirred; my heart was hot within me; while I was muſing, the fire burned. His ſorrow was encreaſed, when he had not vent for it; ſilent mournings are the soreſt mournings: lifting up the voyce, vents the ſorrow. The holy Ghoſt expreſſes great ſorrow, by that of a woman in travel, crying out. To cry out, notes (I grant) great pain; and yet crying out, is a leſſening or mitigation of pain. It is obſerved that the midwife, ſeeing a travailing woman hold in and conceal her pains, will bid her cry out. Some lift up their voyce, and weep, when they are not in pain, when they mourn not at all: there are Crocodiles tears, tears and voyces too of diſſimulation. Iſhmael had tears in his eyes, and revenge in his heart, Jer. 41. Others are in pain, and mourn, when they lift not up their voyce, nor weep; like one that hath a deadly wound, they bleed inwardly; but when there is the higheſt flood of ſorrow in the heart, weeping will make an ebb, and you may let much of thoſe waters (which are ready to drown the ſpirit) out at thoſe ſluces of the eyes. This is the firſt act, the natural act; They lifted up their eyes, and ſaw ſuch a ſpectacle, as made them lift up their voyce, and weep.

Strangulat inclusus dolor.

There are four ceremonial acts.

Firſt, They rent every man his mantle.] We have ſpoken of that, when we opened the twentieth verſe of the former Chapter, together with the grounds of rending cloaths, ſorrow, and indignation, &c. I ſhall refer you thither for further information in this point.

The ſecond ceremonial act of their ſorrow was, The ſprinkling duſt upon their heads toward heaven.] In ver. 20. of the former Chapter, Job ſhaved his head: Here is another ceremony, They ſprinkled duſt upon their heads; and which is yet more conſiderable, They ſprinkled duſt toward heaven. There were two wayes of ſprinkling duſt: there was firſt a taking the duſt, and ſprinkling it upon the head barely; and then there was another way of taking the duſt, and throwing it up in the air, and ſo letting it fall upon the head: this act was ſignificative, it typed, that all things were full of ſorrowful confuſion, the earth and the air were mingled, the heavens alſo were cloudy and darkned; therefore they caſt duſt toward heaven: For as by a ſtormy wind and tempeſt, the duſt is raiſed, which thickens the air, and obſcures the heavens; ſo by that act of caſting or ſprinkling duſt in the air, ſtormie, tempeſtuous and troubleſom times were ſignified. In Acts 22. 23. thoſe wretched Jews to whom Paul preached, being vexed and enraged, cried out, and caſting off their cloaths, threw duſt into the air: Their action had this voyce in it; this man hath, or will, if let alone, fill all the world with trouble, and diſturb the peace of Nations: This they expreſs (together with their own rage) by throwing duſt into the air. It was a judgment, which God threatned his people with, that he would make the rain of their Land duſt, Deut. 28. 24. And when men make it rain duſt, by ſprinkling it towards heaven, it ſheweth great trouble or judgment upon themſelves, or upon their Land. Further, the ſprinkling of duſt upon the head, was a memento of mortality; they put duſt to duſt, that man might remember himſelf to be but duſt.

And they ſate with him upon the ground ſeven dayes and ſeven nights.] Here is the third ceremonial act of their ſorrow. In verſe 20. of the former Chapter, it is ſaid, Job fell upon the ground, theſe ſate upon the ground; as falling, ſo ſitting upon the ground, is the poſture of a mourner, of a mourner greatly humbling himſelf under the hand of God, and the ſence of his own or others afflictions. When God layes us low, he can lay us lower; and therefore it is beſt for us, to lay our ſelves as low as we can: ſo doth he, who ſits upon the ground, if his heart ſit down with him too. It is poſſible for the body to lie groveling upon the earth, when the ſpirit is neſtling among the ſtars; not in faith, as the Saints do, but in pride, as Lucifer did, Iſa. 14. 13. However, he either is, or appears to be humbled to the loweſt, and emptied to the full of worldly comforts, who, with Job's friends, ſits down upon the ground; eſpecially, if he ſit long there, as Job's friends did, ſeven dayes and ſeven nights. The time ſeems almoſt incredible. How could they hold out to ſit ſo long? or how could Job, a ſick and diſeaſed man? For it is ſaid, They ſate down with him ſeven dayes, &c. I anſwer, We need not interpret it for ſeven continued dayes and nights, without any intermiſſion; it is frequent in Scripture, to put a part, eſpecially a greater part, for the whole; that which is often done, is ſaid to be alwayes done; as, Luke 24. 53. The Diſciples were continually in the Temple, praiſing and bleſſing God. And, Luke 2. 37. It is ſaid, That Anna the Propheteſs departed not from the Temple, but ſerved God night and day: Not that ſhe was there without any intermiſſion, but the greateſt part of night and day, or, at the uſual times both of night and day. Paul teſtifies before the Church of Epheſus, that by the ſpace of three years, he ceaſed not to warn every one night and day with his tears, Acts 2. 31. Did he therefore actually preach three years, night and day, without intermiſſion?

miſſion? That had been a long Sermon indeed. Then his meaning is but this, that in thoſe three years, he watched, and made uſe of all poſſible opportunities, both by night and by day, to preach the Goſpel: So we may underſtand it here, they ſate down, ſeven dayes and ſeven nights; that is, a great part of ſeven dayes and ſeven nights, or all the time of thoſe ſeven dayes and ſeven nights, which were fitting for ſuch a viſit.

Origen will have it, ſeven nights and ſeven dayes without intermiſſion; in maintenance of which aſſertion, he ſaith, they were preſerved by miracle, without ſleep, and without meat, all that time. But here is plain truth without a miracle.

Secondly, Whereas it is ſaid, ſeven dayes and ſeven nights; we may note further, that the number ſeven (as other numbers) may be underſtood indefinitely; a certain time being put for an uncertain: as, Jer. 15. 9. The Prophet ſaith, She that hath born ſeven (that is, many Children) languiſheth. And, Eccleſ. 2. 7. Give a portion to ſeven, that is, to many. Thus we may interpret it here, they ſate down ſeven dayes and ſeven nights, that is, many dayes and many nights; as it is expreſt of Nehemiah, c. 1. 4. that when he heard of the calamity of Jeruſalem, he mourned many dayes.

Thirdly, We may take it ſtrictly, for ſeven preciſe dayes and nights; and then it refers to the Ceremony of mourning for the dead: it was a cuſtom to mourn ſeven dayes for the dead; Job's friends looked upon him as a dead man, and ſo they mourned for him, according to the manner of mourning for the dead. Joſeph made a mourning for his Father Jacob, ſeven dayes, Gen. 50. 10. We have the like time of mourning mentioned, 1 Sam. 31. 13. The time of mourning varied both in times and places. The Egyptians mourned for Jacob threeſcore and ten dayes, Gen. 50. 3. The Iſraelites mourned for Moſes thirty dayes, Deut. 34. 8. Which cuſtom of mourning thirty dayes for the dead, continued long after among the Jews; for Joſephus reports, that when the Jews thought he had been killed, they mourned thirty dayes for him. So that we may take it here preciſely for ſeven dayes and ſeven nights, and refer it to the cuſtom of mourning for the dead, or in caſes of extream ſorrow among that people. It followeth, Joſephus, l. 1. de bello Jud. c. 3.

And none ſpake a word unto him.] This is the fourth Ceremony of their mourning, their ſilence. In great mournings, ſilence makes up their ſolemnity. So, Lam. 2. 10. Theſe are joyned together; The Elders of the daughters of Zion ſit upon the ground, there is the former ceremony; and kept ſilence. Now whereas it is ſaid, they kept ſilence, we need not underſtand it ſo ſtrictly, as if for ſeven dayes and ſeven nights they never ſpake a word. It is uſual likewiſe in all languages, and very frequent in Scripture, that what is but ſeldom done, or done but a little, is ſaid not to be done at all; as in Acts 27. 33. Paul ſaith of thoſe that were in the Ship, that for fourteen dayes they had faſted, having taken nothing; a thing beyond the ſtrength of man, take it ſtrictly, to faſt fourteen dayes, taking nothing. But it is uſual to ſay, that is not done at all, which is but a little done; They took nothing to eat, that is, they took very ſparingly: they did eat only ſo much as would, according to our language, keep life and ſoul together. In Iſa. 20. 3. it is ſaid, that Iſaiah walked naked and barefoot for three years: Now it cannot be conceived, that the Prophet walked, as we ſay, ſtark naked, for three years together; he is ſaid to walk naked, becauſe he had not ſuch or ſo much cloathing, as formerly and uſually he had worn. So here, they ſpake not a word to him; that is, they did not ſpeak much, they ſpake very little to him. Or ſecondly, thus; reſtrictively to the matter; they ſpake not a word, by way of diſpute or argument (which was the buſineſs they fell upon afterward) either to convince him or reprove him.

The reaſon of this fourth Ceremonial act of mourning, their ſilence, is added in the laſt words of the Chapter; for they ſaw that his grief was very great.

כאב

The word here uſed for grief, though it had been alone, without any epithete to heighten the ſence, notes a very intenſive, a deep and great ſorrow. And it is put ſometimes for grief and ſorrow ariſing from the pain of the body; and ſometimes, for grief and ſorrow of mind. Now here I conceive, it may carry both ſenſes; they ſaw that the grief and pain of his body was very great, his body was in a woful plight; and they ſaw that his ſpirit was much perplext too, his mind was troubled. But if this word alone ſignifies, as it were all degrees, and all kinds of ſorrow, then conſider both the variety of kind, and intention of degrees collected in Job's ſorrows, which a word ſo comprehenſive is not ſufficient to expreſs; the aid of two other words is called in to help out our conception of his ſorrows. They ſaw his grief; they ſaw his grief was great: yet you have not all; They ſaw his grief was very great, exceeding great; this aggravates his grief, and winds up his ſorrow to the higheſt; as if now the affliction were grown to a full ſtature. God threatens Babylon, Iſa. 47. 9. Theſe two things ſhall come upon thee, in a moment, in one day; the loſs of children, and widowhood; theſe things ſhall come upon thee in their perfection. Sometimes imperfect judgments are upon a people or a perſon; they are, as it were, infant-judgments, judgments beginning; anon they grow to a greater height, and anon they come to a perfect ſtature, to be mighty ones, giantly judgments: At that time God had even brought Job's affliction to its perfection, and his grief was proportionable, very great; for this reaſon his friends kept ſilence; this reaſon hath an influence on all the acts of their ſorrow, but eſpecially upon this, their keeping ſilence; for they ſaw his grief was very great.

גדל מאד

From theſe ceremonial acts of ſorrow, I have obſerved divers things heretofore. Now take one thing in general; That, great ſufferings call us to, and warrant us in ſolemn mournings. Job's friends do not only mourn, but they mourn, as it were, in ſtate; there is a kind of magnificence in mourning, a pomp in mourning; I approve not a proud pomp, but an humble pomp; they mourn, you ſee, with all the formalities of mourning: ſo it becometh us ſometimes. As great mercies call for great rejoycings, ſo great afflictions call for great lamentings. There is a decency in it, when our affections keep pace with the diſpenſations of God, whether they be mercies or judgments, comforts or afflictions.

Secondly, Foraſmuch as Job's friends ſeeing his ſorrow to be thus very great, kept ſilence; obſerve,

> That, In great, in overwhelming ſorrows, the mind is unfit to receive and take in comfort.

When grief is very great, words give little eaſe; precious words are waſted and thrown away, comfort it ſelf is a trouble, in the greatneſs and height of trouble. I am ſure, a mind full charged with ſorrow, hath no room for comfort, is not at leiſure for counſel. It is a profitable rule in viſiting friends that are ſick, or in diſtreſs, when you ſee them in extremity of pain of body, or in extremity of anguiſh and trouble of ſpirit, keep ſilence, wait a while: Let the waters aſſwage a little, and the winds fall before you meddle: Let them come to themſelves before you move them. As ſudden anger, ſo ſudden ſorrow is a kind of phrenſie: No wiſe Phyſitian will give a medicine in a fit; the body muſt ſettle before it is fit for phyſick; and ſo muſt the mind too: ſilence is as good as phyſick in ſome diſtempers both of mind and body. A talkative comforter is another diſeaſe to a ſick man; unſeaſonable counſel is a wound inſtead of a plaiſter, and inſtead of healing, tortures the patient. It is as high a point of prudence to know when, as to know what to adviſe a diſtreſſed friend. Solomon tells us in general, (Eccleſ. 3. 7.) There is a time to keep ſilence, and a time to ſpeak: Let me adviſe this for one particular time or ſeaſon, to keep ſilence; namely, the extremity and height of trouble. The Prophet Amos, chap. 5. 13. ſpeaks of a time, wherein the prudent ſhall be ſilent; and he ſhews us why: In that time the prudent ſhall keep ſilence, for it is an evil time. Some interpret this, as an addition to the common calamity of thoſe times; they ſhould be ſo evil, that wiſe men would hold their peace. The Apoſtle propheſies of ſuch times, wherein men will not endure ſound doctrine (2 Tim. 4. 3.) in Religion. And ſuch times may be, wherein men will not endure ſound doctrine, in policie. Then the prudent hold their peace, and none ſpeak but fools or flatterers; ſuch times make the quickeſt market for their ſophiſticated wares, no other will go off: ſuch are very evil times, and this is a ſore judgment upon thoſe times. There is hope of good when wiſe men ſpeak; a word from their mouths, may cure and deliver a Nation. Yet I conceive that this Text of Amos may be underſtood as a deſcription of a wiſe mans duty; at leaſt, of his property, in ſome high high and great diſtempers upon a people. He ſees them uncapable of counſel; to give them good advice, is (at preſent) but the caſting of pearls before ſwine; all is loſt and undervalued, if not trampled on: yea, he ſees, that the more he labours to reform, the more he enrages them; therefore till this fit be over, prudence teacheth him to keep ſilence.

Etiam taciturnitas ipſa medicina eſt. Ambr. in Pſal. 37. Conſolator loquax novus morbus ægroto eſt. Velox in ſermonibus magis vulnerat.

Thus alſo it is with private perſons in regard of the evils they endure; they cannot endure faithful counſel in ſuch an evil day, upon any private perſon; let the prudent keep ſilence, and wait for an opportunity, which may open a paſſage to let in their reproofs, or directions, or conſolations, with a taking advantage into the hearts of their afflicted friends and brethren. The Prophet Iſaiah ſeeing the troubles approaching Jeruſalem, reſolves to take his fill of mourning; Therefore, ſaid I, look away from me, I will weep bitterly; labour not to comfort me, chap. 22. 4. He either thought that the beholders would faint to ſee him, and therefore ſaith, look away from me; or, that ſeeing him, they would ſay, he fainted, and ſo would be giving him comfort; that therefore his ſorrow might have full ſcope, he ſaith, Look away from me, I will weep bitterly, labour not to comfort me. When a man is reſolved to mourn, let him mourn; your advice may anger him, but it will not help him: Let ſorrow have its way a while, and that will make way for comfort.

We have thus far carried on the ſad ſtory of Job's viſitation; his grief is now come to the height, It is very great. We have have alſo ſeen his friends viſit, with a double intendment, both to mourn with him, and to comfort him. We have ſeen them mourning, they fully reacht that end. We leave them now ſilent, waiting for a time to attempt and accompliſh the other end; they miſerably failed in that; it was to comfort him; but they proved miſerable comforters: which in the progreſs and proceſs of this Book, will receive a large and full diſcovery.

CHAP. III. Verſ. 1, 2, 3.

After this, Job opened his mouth, and curſed his day.

And Job ſpake, and ſaid,

Let the day periſh wherein I was born; and the night, wherein it was ſaid, There is a man-child conceived.

The former Chapter concluded with the aſtoniſhment and ſilence of Job's three friends: This Chapter begins with an aſtoniſhing ſpeech of Job. We may be as much amazed at what Job ſpake, as we were at their ſilence; and there appears the ſame reaſon of both, viz. the greatneſs of his grief. They ſaw his grief ſo great, that they forbare to ſpeak; Job feeleth his grief ſo great, that he cannot longer forbear to ſpeak; it muſt have a vent. After this, (ſaith the Text) Job opened his mouth. Why, Job had opened his mouth before, he had ſpoken twice ſince he was encompaſſed with thoſe ſorrows. True; but Job never opened his mouth as now; he opened his mouth before, to juſtifie and to bleſs his God; now he openeth his mouth, to accuſe and curſe his day; and therefore the Chapter may well begin with, After this, Job opened his mouth; he never ſpake in this manner before: for he no ſooner opened his mouth, but he curſed his day.

The Argument and ſubject of the whole Chapter is contained in this firſt verſe, the curſing of his day; and concerning this, the Chapter holdeth forth three things moſt conſiderable. There are three particulars belonging unto this Chapter.

Firſt, The matter and the manner of this curſe; what it is, and how expreſt: Job pronounceth a curſe upon his day, and unfolds the curſe; he unfolds it with much Rhetorick, and ſtrains of eloquence: Troubles will make a man Rhetorical. Job (as it were) calls up all his ſpirits, whets his wit, and heightens his invention, to prepare a proper curſe for his day. This he doth from this firſt verſe, to the end of the nineteenth.

Secondly, In this Chapter Job holds forth to us, the ground or reaſon of his curſe; he is full of paſſion, but his paſſion is rational; he curſeth, but he ſhews you why. The reaſon (with ſome occaſional intermixtures) is demonſtrated from the ninth, to the end of the nineteenth verſe. If I am asked a reaſon of my anger, why I am ſo bitter againſt my day, this is the account I give; Becauſe it ſhut not up my mothers womb, &c.

Thirdly, We have an enforcement of this curſe upon his day, by a vehement expoſtulation, againſt the lengthning and continuance of his dayes. He complained in the beginning of the Chapter, that ever he had a day; and now he complains as much, that he hath any more dayes. He wonders why his life began, and he is troubled becauſe it doth not end. Wherefore is light given unto him that is in miſery? &c. This expoſtulation concludes the Chapter.

The nine former verſes contain the firſt diviſion of the Chapter, Job's curſe upon his day; both the matter and the manner of the curſe.

We have this curſe, firſt pronounced upon his day in general: Then Job opened his mouth, and curſed his day.

Secondly, He fixes a curſe upon his day, in the ſeveral parts of it. Take a natural day, for the ſpace of four and twenty hours, and then it conſiſteth of two parts, of day and night, light and darkneſs. According to which diviſion, the curſe runs, v. 3. Let the day periſh wherein I was born, and the night wherein it was ſaid, a man-child is conceived.

Thirdly, He pronounceth a ſpecial proper curſe upon each part of his day. Take the day for the light, for that ſpace between Sun-riſing and Sun-ſet; he curſes that, verſ. 4, & 5. Let that day be darkneſs, let not God regard it from above, neither let the light ſhine upon it, &c.

Then follows a curſe upon the night, in verſ. 6, 7, 8. As for that night, let darkneſs ſeize upon it, let it not be joyned unto the dayes of the year, &c.

So then, Job pronounceth this curſe, firſt, in general, againſt his day.

Secondly, He divides the curſe upon the ſeveral parts of the day.

Thirdly, He faſtens a ſpecial curſe upon each part.

You ſee how accurate, how exact Job's ſorrows have made him.

We will begin with that which is firſt here; the curſing of his day in general, contained in the firſt verſe.

Then Job opened his mouth; or, after this, Job opened his mouth, and curſed his day.

Then, or, After this, hath a double reference.

Firſt, After the ſeven dayes ſilence, after his friends had ſate by him ſo long upon the ground, neither moving queſtion, nor adminiſtring a word of conſolation; then Job opened his mouth. Or, ſecondly,

After this; that is, After his ſorrows were (as it were) boyled up to the height, and began a little to remit, ſo as he could breath, recollect himſelf and conſider, in what condition he was.

After this; After there was ſome allay, ſome ebb and fall of his overflowing ſorrows, then he breaks forth in theſe words. Sorrow doth ſometimes not only oppreſs the ſpirit, but ſtop the mouth; I am ſo troubled, that I cannot ſpeak, ſaith David, Pſal. 77. 4. That he could not ſpeak for trouble, ſpeaks the greatneſs of his trouble. Plenty of ſorrow, makes a ſcarcity of words: Hence ſometimes the Curæ leves loquuntur, ingentes ſtupent. Vehementiam doloris exprimit, quod dicit ſe non eſſe locutum. Muſc. in Pſal. 74. 4.

Saints in great afflictions and grief of mind, pray and cry much to God, when they ſpeak little. Hanna continued praying before the Lord, (2 Sam. 1. 12.) Eli the High-Prieſt marked her mouth (ſaith the Text.) Now Hanna, ſhe ſpake in her heart; only her lips moved, but her voice was not heard. Would you know why, in ſo much praying, there was no ſpeaking; why her heart ſpake, and not her tongue. Her ſelf gives the reaſon at verſe 15. I am a woman of a ſorrowful ſpirit. And verſe 16. Out of the abundance of my complaint and grief, have I ſpoken hitherto, ſc. not with my lips, but with my heart. All which is given us at verſe 10. She was in bitterneſs of ſoul, and prayed unto the Lord, and wept ſore. Thus it was with Job, ſorrow ſilenced him, ſorrow in the height cauſed that high ſilence, but as ſoon as that aſſwaged, Then he opened his mouth and ſpake.

Altum ſilentium.

A man cannot ſpeak till he open his mouth; yet to open the mouth and ſpeak, is more then to ſpeak.

Firſt, To open the mouth and ſpeak, is to ſpeak with a loud or clear voice; as he that ſpeaks ſoftly, is ſaid to ſpeak in his throat. Or as they who have familiar ſpirits, or Wizards, are ſaid to peep, and to mutter, Iſa. 8. 9. A Witch, or Wizard, is called there, and in other places of Scripture, (Levit. 20. 27. Deut. 18. 11.) Ob, which ſignifieth a bottle, or bladder, becauſe ſuch being poſſeſs'd or acted by an evil ſpirit, ſpake with a hollow voice, as out of a bottle, and (as ſome affirm) with ſwollen bellies: From which manner of utterance, the Greeks call them Belly-ſpeakers. And Junius, upon that of Iſa. 8. 19. apprehends this as a deſcription of thoſe Hell-prophets, in oppoſition to the true Prophets, who uſed to ſpeak with a clear, loud, diſtinct voice: Or as Job here, to open their mouths and ſpeak.

ἐγγαστριμύθοι.

Secondly, To open the mouth and ſpeak, is as much as to ſay, he ſpake with his mouth: And there is an elegancy in that; as in thoſe like expreſſions, I heard it with mine ears; that is, I did certainly hear it, or I did fully hear it. I ſaw it with mine eyes; that is, I am ſure I ſaw it. So the Scripture ſaith, We are bought with a price, 1 Cor. 6. 20. A thing cannot be bought, but with a price; there muſt be ſome price or other, either money, or money-worth, ſomewhat anſwering the intrinſick value of every thing that is bought; but to ſhew that we are bought with a full price, that Chriſt did not compound our debt with his Father, but paid the uttermoſt farthing, it is ſaid, We are bought with a price. So the Prophet Malachy tells the ſacrilegious Jews, Ye are curſed with a curſe, chap. 3. 9. A man cannot be curſed but with a curſe; but to ſhew the greatneſs of the curſe, he ſaith, Ye are curſed with a curſe. So here, Job opened his mouth and ſpake, or opened his mouth and curſed; that is, he curſed his day greatly, even with a bitter and grievous curſe. He curſed it (as he ſaid) to purpoſe. Thus to ſhew the excellency of Chriſt's Doctrine, that his was A Sermon of Sermons, and he the Meſſenger, the Interpreter, the One of a thouſand, yea, the One of All the Thouſands that ever ſhewed to man his uprightneſs: The Goſpel ſaith, Matth. 5. 1. When he ſaw a great multitude, he opened his mouth and ſpake. Hence,

Cum enim aliquis loquitur ex impetu paſſionis, non ipſe aperuit os ſuum, ſed paſſione agitur ad loquendũ, non enim per paſſionem noſtri actus domini ſumus, ſed per ſolam rationem; conſuetum enim eſt apud ſapientes ut ex ratione loquantur paſſionum motus, quos ſentiunt. Aquin. in loc.

In the third place, To open the mouth and ſpeak, is to ſpeak upon mature deliberation, to ſpeak conſiderately, prudently, punctually, to ſpeak elegantly, to ſpeak orderly, to ſpeak the words of truth and ſoberneſs. A fool is ſaid to ſpeak with an open mouth; but a wiſe man openeth his mouth and ſpeaks. A wiſe godly man hath his tongue at his command; but a fools tongue commands him: His tongue runs faſter then his wit, as we ſay. A fools mouth (as Solomon tells us, Prov. 15. 2.) poureth out fooliſhneſs: Their mouths are alwayes open; and therefore they cannot be ſaid to open their mouths: A fool hath not a door to his mouth (therefore alſo he cannot be ſaid to open his mouth) much leſs hath he a lock and a key, a bolt or a bar to his mouth: but a wiſe man hath a door to his mouth; yea his mouth is lockt with Wiſdoms key, and that unlocks it. I will open my mouth (ſaith the Pſalmiſt. Pſal. 78. 2.) in a Parable. Parables are the ſpeeches of wiſe men; yea, they are the extracts and ſpirits of Wiſdom. The Hebrew word ſignifies, to rule, or have authority: becauſe ſuch ſpeeches come upon us with authority, and ſubdue our reaſon by the weight of theirs. Now when he is about to ſpeak Parables, he ſaith, I will open my mouth. When Wiſdom calls for audience and obedience, Prov. 8. 6. ſhe ſaith, Hear, for I will ſpeak of excellent things, and the opening of my lips ſhall be right things. David invokes God to open his mouth, when he would ſhew forth that excellent thing, the praiſe of God, Pſal. 51. 15. God opens not the mouth of a fool, neither doth a fool open his mouth and ſpeak, but his ſpeech opens his mouth.

Figuratè enim & ſcite dicta Parabolæ vocantur, quia authoritatem habent & in ſermone dominantur.

But did Job open his mouth in this ſence wiſely and diſcreetly? did he well to be ſo angry with his day? ſpake he wiſely in curſing his day? I anſwer, Though there was much paſſion in this ſpeech, yet Job ſpake out of much deliberation; he conſidered what to ſpeak before he ſpake. A man may ſpeak with much paſſion, and yet ſpeak out of much deliberation; and ſo did Job here; in that long ſilence he was learning what to ſpeak. And as there was much heat of paſſion, ſo there was much light of wiſdom in what he ſpake.

Fourthly, To open the mouth and ſpeak, is to ſpeak boldly and confidently, to ſpeak with freedom and liberty of ſpeech; (as the Greek word ſignifies) to ſpeak all a mans mind, without fear or favour of any man, Prov. 31. 8, 9. Open thy mouth for the dumb; open thy mouth, judge righteouſly, &c. that is, be bold for thoſe that are poor, and dare not appear themſelves; ſpeak thou aloud for the dumb, and freely for thoſe that cannot plead their own cauſe, or make out their own innocence. The Apoſtle begs of the Epheſians, Chap. 6. 19. that they would pray, that utterance might be given him, that he might open his mouth boldly, to make known the myſtery of the Goſpel: and neither fear the faces of men, nor conceal the truth of God.

παῤῥησίᾳ λαλεῖν. Job 7. 26. ἐκ πᾶν omne & ῥῆσις dictio, quum quis omne id dicit quod ad rem pertinet, nihil veritus offenſionem eorum quibuſcum loquitur.

You ſee then by the opening of this expreſſion, there was more then bare ſpeaking meant, when Job opened his mouth and ſpake: When a wiſe and a holy man opens his mouth, you may look for more then words, even the treaſures of wiſdom and knowledge.

Let us now examine what treaſure we can make of thoſe words which Job ſpake, when he opened his mouth.

He opened his mouth, and curſed his day.

But is there any treaſure in a curſe? except that which the Apoſtle ſpeaks of, as the fruit of Gods abuſed patience, Rom. 2. 5. A treaſure of wrath. Or did Job deliberate for a curſe? was he moulding and faſhioning ſo deform'd an iſſue as this in his thoughts ſo long? Yes, ſaith the Text, He opened his mouth, and curſed his day.

The word here uſed, to Curſe, is not the word which we have met with ſo often in the two former Chapters; where Satan undertook that Job would curſe his God. That word, in its native ſence, ſignifies to bleſs. But here, when Job curſeth his day, a word is uſed, which hath neither name nor ſhadow of a bleſſing: And it is derived from a root, which ſignifieth a thing that is light, moveable, or unſetled. And ſo by a Metaphor, it ſignifies any thing, or perſon, which we deſpiſe, contemn and ſlight, or the act of deſpiſing and curſing; and the reaſon of it is, becauſe thoſe things which we deſpiſe, contemn, or curſe, we look upon as light things, trivial, or vain, or hurtful: On the contrary, the word in the Hebrew for honour and glory, comes from a root which ſignifieth heavy, or ponderous, becauſe that which we honour and reſpect, we look upon it as a thing that hath weight and ſubſtance in it: And the Apoſtle calls that moſt glorious eſtate of the Saints in Heaven, A weight of glory, 2 Cor. 4. 17. The oppoſite word which we have in the Text, is frequently tranſlated, to deſpiſe, or contemn, and likewiſe to curſe and blaſpheme; and doth properly ſignifie ſuch a curſing, as ariſes from the contempt, or light eſteem, which we have of a thing, or perſon. So we have the word clearly uſed, Levit. 20. 9. Every one that curſeth his father, or his mother: Now obſerve, curſing of the father, or mother, it is directly oppoſed to the fifth Commandment, which ſaith, Thou ſhalt honour thy father and thy mother; thou ſhalt look upon thy father and thy mother as upon perſons of weight and honour, whom thou art bound to reverence and eſteem; ſo that to curſe the father, or mother, is to account them vile and contemptible. The ſame word expreſſes, that villanous act of Shimei, 2 Sam. 16. 15. who came forth, and curſed David ſtill as he came. That act was alike oppoſite both to the rule and word of the fifth Commandment, which ſaith, Honour thy father, &c. taking in the civil father as well as the natural: Shimei's curſing David, lightly eſteemed David; he did not look upon him, in or according to the weightineſs and honour of his Kingly Perſon, or of his Kingly Office; A King is a weighty perſon, a Crown is a weighty thing; Shimei deſpiſed and ſo curſed both. Sometimes the word is tranſlated directly to deſpiſe: I will give you two Texts for that. Gen. 16. 4. When Hagar ſaw ſhe had conceived, her Miſtreſs was deſpiſed in her eyes; (it is the ſame word with that uſed here for curſing,) the meaning is, ſhe did lightly eſteem her Miſtreſs: Thus ſhe thought: now ſhall I have the honour of raiſing Abraham's family; now I am at leaſt as good a woman as my Miſtreſs; thus ſhe deſpiſed Sarah. Again, 1 Sam. 2. 30. where the Lord ſaith concerning Ely's ſons, Them that honour me, I will honour; and they that deſpiſe me, ſhall be lightly eſteemed. I will make little account of them that make little account of me, and woe be to thoſe (though all the world honour them) whom God deſpiſeth: That man looſes more then honour, whom God doth not honour: And they who deny God his honour, deny him all good, and offer him all evil; ſuch a deſpiſing of God, is a curſing of God.

קלל Levis aut nullius ponderis fuit; per metaphoram; levis, vilis, contemptus fuit in Piel.

קלל male dixit; blaſphemavit.

כבר In Kal ſignificat grave eſſe ſive ingraveſcere; & in Piel honorare, quia quos honoramus non habemus leves aut viles, ſed eorum authoritatis pondus ſuſcipimus. Rivetus.

Further, to curſe (if we conſider it in the nature of the thing, and not ſtrictly in the literal ſence of the word) is to wiſh evil to a thing, or perſon: This alſo is the meaning of the curſe in this place; for when Job explains this curſe in the parts of it, he doth (as it were) with wonderful art and skill, gather together whatſoever may be thought the evil of a day, or the evil of a night, and calls it up, to ſeize upon them. A curſe, or to curſe, vertually contains in it all evil: As a bleſſing, or to bleſs, contains in it vertually all good. Every mercy we enjoy, is a bleſſing ſpecificated: And ſo any evil that falls upon man, (as Sword, Famine, Peſtilence, &c.) is a curſe ſpecificated; howſoever poſſibly thoſe things which are in their nature evil, and in their matter a curſe, may be qualified (in reference unto ſome perſon) into a bleſſing. But take a curſe properly, and it containeth all evil, and only evil in it. Therefore as when God had given the Word an eſſe, a being, that he might give it, a bene eſſe, a well-being, he adds to the work of Creation, the word of benediction, And God bleſſed them, and ſaid unto them, be fruitful, &c. Gen. 1. 22, 28. So afterward, when man had ſinned, and the Lord intended to leave the world groaning under part of thoſe evils which ſin had brought upon it, he wrapt up all in the word of a curſe, Curſed be the ground for thy ſake, &c. Gen. 3. 17. So then when Job curſeth his day, he wiſheth all the evil to it, that a day is capable of. And Job opened his mouth, and curſed his day.

But, what was this day that Job was ſo angry with it? and that his paſſion doth ſo burn againſt it?

The Text ſpeaks indefinitely, Job curſed his day.

Some underſtand it of the day of his preſent ſuffering, he curſed the day on which ſuch troubles befel him: And we find ſometimes in Scripture, that a day put thus alone, is an evil or a troubleſome day: As in the twelfth verſe of the Propheſie of Obadiah the Lord rebukes the children of Edom thus, Thou ſhouldſt not have looked on the day of thy brother; that is, the day of thy brother Jacob's ſufferings, the day wherein I had him under my rod, and afflicted him. So the day of the Lord, is the day of the Lords anger, when he pours wrath and trouble upon the earth; Iſa. 2. 12. The day of the Lord of hoſts ſhall be upon every one that is proud and lofty, and upon every one that is lifted up, and he ſhall be brought low. The day of the Lord, or the day of a man undetermin'd, often ſignifies an evil day.

But here we may rather underſtand it for that day which was as the occaſion, or for the occaſional day of all Job's troubles, and that was his birth-day: If his birth-day had been prevented, all his troubleſome dayes had been prevented; therefore he falls out with that, as himſelf explains it, ver. 3. Let the day periſh (ſaith he here) wherein I was born, and the night in which it was ſaid, there is a man-child conceived. It is uſual to call a mans birth-day his day, ſo the Scripture is conceiv'd to ſpeak, Hoſ. 7. 5. In the day of our King, the Princes have made him ſick with bottels of wine: That is, on his birth-day, which among Princes is commonly ſolemniz'd with feaſting: As we read of Pharaoh, and of Herod. So then, the day is his birth-day, the day of his nativity: which ſome take preciſely, for the day upon which he was born; and others more largely, for the annual return of that day; as if he had laid in a curſe for a day, whenſoever or how often ſoever it ſhould return in the years of his life.

A little further to clear the ſence of this curſe, let us conſider the whole matter, as we have conſidered the words. There are two or three Queſtions, which being debated and reſolved, will give light to this context.

Job, you ſee, takes upon him to curſe: Firſt, it may be queſtioned, whether a curſe be in the power of man, or no? Can a man curſe perſons, or things?

Surely bleſſings and curſings are both in the hand of God; whether we reſpect perſons, or things. There is a miniſterial curſe, and a miniſterial bleſſing in the power of man: but it is not in the power of any man, magiſterially to make any thing, or perſon, bleſſed, or to make any thing, or perſon, accurſed. It was a great brag which Balack made of Balaam, (Numb. 22. 6.) I wot (ſaith he) that he whom thou bleſſeſt is bleſſed, and he whom thou curſeſt is curſed. He thought he had the curſe in his command, he could curſe whom he pleaſed, and what he pleaſed, and when he pleaſed; but he was deceived; he reckon'd beyond his ſtrength, and beyond the ſtrength of a creature. What the Apoſtle ſpeaks in another caſe concerning the miniſtery of the Word, Paul may plant, and Apollos may water, but it is God that giveth the increaſe, is as true in this; one man may plant a curſe, and another man may water it with a hearty wiſh that it may grow, but it is God only that giveth the increaſe of evil, and the decreaſe of good. Curſes are not in the power of any creature; if they were, we ſhould have a miſerable world quickly. How many ſhould we ſee daily blaſted with the breath of malicious execrations? Some mens mouths are full of curſing, Pſal. 10. 7. They love curſing, they cloath themſelves with curſing as with a garment, Pſal. 109. 17, 18. Curſing (as one of the Ancients complained in his time) is now made the common weapon of anger; and wrath wiſhes that evil, which (becauſe of weakneſs) it cannot work. If curſing could have done it, we had not been a people at this day. How often hath Balack (out of fear, or envy at our proſperity) ſent to Balaam (I mean the falſe Prophet that dwells on the ſeven hills) come curſe Iſrael, come defie England? how often hath that Balaam curs'd our Iſrael? We have heard of his Anniverſary Anathemaes, wherein this Church and State have been ſtruck with the thunder and lightning of his Papal curſe. But the curſe cauſeleſs (ſaith Solomon) ſhall not come. And we may ſay to England, as Moſes did to Iſrael, concerning Balaam's curſe, Deut. 23. 5. Neverthleſs the Lord thy God would not hearken unto Balaam: But the Lord thy God turned the curſe into a bleſſing unto thee, becauſe the Lord thy God loved thee. And what David pray'd about Shimei's curſe, we have ſeen come to paſs: The Lord hath requited us good for his curſing, 2 Sam. 16. 12. We have far greater cauſe to fear the bleſſing of Rome, then the curſe of Rome. But to return. The reſult of all is this; When God pronounceth a curſe, he makes it to be a curſe; man at the worſt, can but wiſh a curſe and pronounce it. Man is but the Miniſter, God is the Maſter of the curſe; God can inflict it, man can but think or wiſh it.

Prima ſemper irarum tela ſunt maledicta, & quæ non poſſumus imbecilles, optamus irati. Votis malis pro armis utimur. Salvian l. 3. de gubern.

Another thing here queſtionable is, Whether it be lawful to curſe the creature? Job curſeth his day: The rule of the Apoſtle is, Rom. 12. 4. Bleſs, and curſe not.

In ſome caſes, to curſe is Gods Command and our duty, and then we are Gods Miniſters for wrath againſt the wicked. Many times man (though forbidden) curſes, then it is his ſin, and he is Satans miniſter for evil againſt his brother.

There are ſome caſes wherein we may curſe. When the the Patriarch Jacob was upon his death-bed, and bed of bleſſing, yet he pronounced a curſe upon the rage and anger of his two ſons, Simeon and Levi, Gen. 49. 7. Curſed be their anger, for it was fierce, and their wrath, for it was cruel: I will divide them in Jacob, and ſcatter them in Iſrael. We may curſe the plots and counſels of wicked men, enemies of Chriſt and of his people: we may curſe the perſons of wicked men, as inplacable enemies of Chriſt, and of his people: So David more then once in the Book of Pſalms; yet it is to be conſidered, that ſome of thoſe Pſalms are Propheſies of a curſe, not pronunciations of a curſe. And in in all lawful curſings we muſt obſerve theſe two rules. Firſt, To aim the curſe at the deſtruction of the ſin, not of the ſinner. Secondly, Where the ſinner appears incorrigible, ble, yet to deſire the clearing up of Gods Juſtice in puniſhing, not the puniſhment it ſelf. To curſe any thing, or perſon, paſſionately, is infirmity: To curſe any thing, or perſon, maliciouſly, is groſs impiety.

There is a third doubt, the reſolving of which will further clear the Scripture to us; that is, Whether a day, be an object capable of a curſe, or no? It is a Queſtion moved by the School-men, Whether a bleſſing and a curſe do belong to any but a reaſonable creature? or whether any thing elſe be a ſubject capable of a bleſſing or a curſe? And they reſolve it, That nothing is properly the ſubject of bleſſing and curſing, but a reaſonable creature. Therefore a day which is a part of time, is in it ſelf uncapable of a curſe: Thoſe things only are capable of penal evils which are capable of moral evils: A day is not, cannot be morally evil, though there be many moral evils acted in the day. The Apoſtle adviſeth us, To redeem the time, becauſe the dayes are evil, Epheſ. 5. 15. Times are called evil, in regard both of troubleſome evils and ſinful evils: From evil men, and evil manners, dayes are denominated evil; yet dayes in themſelves are not evil morally, and ſo not lyable to a curſe, which is a penal evil.

Aquin. 2a. 2æ. 76. Art. 2. q. Benedictio vel maledictio propriè ad illam rem pertinet, cui poteſt aliquis benè vel malè contingere, ſc. rationali creaturæ. Creaturis autem irrationalibus, bonum vel malum dicitur contingere, in ordine ad creaturam rationalem, propter quā ſunt. Aquinas ubi ſupra.

Further, Thoſe creatures which have life in them, and have no reaſon in them, are on the ſame ground incapable of a curſe. Whereas it is ſaid, that God curſed the ground, and curſed the Serpent, Gen. 3. 14, 17. neither the ground nor the Serpent were curſed in themſelves, or for their own ſakes. The Serpent, an unreaſonable creature, had not the knowledge of God; and the earth, a ſenſleſs creature, could not feel the power of God; therefore the curſe upon thoſe creatures, was only in order to, and as a puniſhment of the ſin of man. The Text is expreſs, Gen. 3. 17. Curſed be the earth for thy ſake: The earth there comprehends all the creatures living on the face of the earth, beſides man: Theſe are curſed for mans ſake. As thoſe creatures at the firſt received not a being, or a bleſſing, for themſelves, but for mans good, ſo they receive not any evil or curſe, but for mans puniſhment: So we are to underſtand thoſe places in Deut. 28. Curſed be thy basket and thy ſtore, &c. God threatens a curſe on theſe creatures, the fruits of the earth, &c. in order to mans diſobedience: But it ſhall come to paſs, if thou wilt not hearken to the voice of the Lord thy God, to obſerve to do all his Commandments, &c. that all theſe curſes ſhall come upon thee, and overtake thee, ver. 15. Obſerve, That the curſe is threatned to come on them, to overtake them: When the basket was curs'd, when the increaſe of the kine and the flocks of the ſheep were curſed, man was curſed: For we may ſay in the letter, as David did in a figure, when the Angel of the Lord ſmote his people with the Peſtilence, (2 Sam. 24.) Alas, what have theſe ſheep done? that they ſhould be ſmitten with a curſe. As in pulling down the houſe of a Traitor, the revenge is not taken againſt the materials of the houſe, but againſt the Maſter of the houſe. So then, for the reſolution of this point, take it thus, No creature below man, is, or can be, accurſed by God, or man, properly, terminately, or ultimately: That is, in it ſelf, for it ſelf, or from it ſelf, but only improperly and relatively, namely, with reſpect to what man ſhould do, hath done, or ſuffered. Firſt, in reference to what man ſhould do; ſo Chriſt curſed the Fig-tree, to teach man either the duty of fruitfulneſs to the glory of God, or of faith in the power of God. Secondly, in reference to what man hath done, the ſin of man, thus God curſed the Serpent and the ground: The Serpent was curſed, both for admonition to man, and for a puniſhment on man: God to admoniſh man, how much he hated ſin, puniſhes an irrational inſtrument of ſin, and by that enmity planted in the Serpent as a curſe, puniſhes mans too much familiarity with the Serpent. And as the enmity of the Serpent was mans ſcourge, ſo alſo was the barrenneſs of the earth: That barrenneſs in bringing forth good fruit, that fertility in bringing forth bryars and thorns, were both as rods for the back of man. Thirdly, the irrational or ſenſleſs creatures are curſed in reference to that which man ſuffers. Thus David curſed the Mountains of Gilboa, 2 Sam. 1. 21. becauſe there Saul and his beloved Jonathan were ſlain by the ſword of the Philiſtines, Becauſe there the ſhield of the mighty was vilely caſt away, the ſword of Saul, as if he had not been anointed with oyl. In this ſence, (as David curſed a place) ſo Job curſes a time, his day; the day which either gave occaſion to his ſufferings, or the day in which he actually ſuffered ſuch a world of evils. Thus alſo Jeremy curſes his day with a vehement curſe, Jer. 20. 14. Curſed be the day wherein I was born; let not the day wherein my mother bare me be bleſſed: And not only ſo, but he curſes the man who firſt reported his birth, ver. 15, 16. Curſed be the man who brought tidings to my father, ſaying, a man-child is born unto thee, making him very glad. And let that man be as the Cities which the Lord overthrew and repented not: and let him hear the cry in the morning, and the ſhooting at noon-tide, &c. And why ſo bitter a curſe? was it againſt the day for it ſelf, or againſt the man himſelf? Jeremy ſhews it was not, ver. 18. Wherefore came I out of the womb to ſee labour and ſorrow, that my dayes ſhould be conſumed with ſhame? To curſe any thing under the notion of a creature, or as it is the work of God, is to blaſpheme God; to curſe any unreaſonable or inſenſible creature in themſelves, or to take revenge on them, is to be, if not ſenſleſs, yet (I am ſure in that act) unreaſonable. So far of this curſing his day in general. It follows, Maledicere rebus irrationalibus in quantum ſunt creaturæ, eſt peccatum blaſphemiæ, maledicere eis in ſe conſideratis eſt otioſum & vanum. Aquinas ubi ſupra.

Verſe 2. And Job ſpake and ſaid.

This verſe is only a tranſition into the matter of the next, it is as if the holy Ghoſt had ſaid, Job curſed his day: and would you know how he curſed it? He did it after this manner, or in this form of words, Job ſpake and ſaid, thus, &c. Only note, that the word which we tranſlate ſpeak, is in the Original anſwered; and ſo often in Scripture, he is ſaid to anſwer who begins to ſpeak; Job anſwered and ſaid.

Reſpondere ſæpe dicitur qui orditur ſermonem, etiamſi nulla interrogatio præceſſerit. Druſ.

We ſhewed you before, that this day in general was the object of this curſe; now he curſes it in the parts of it, the day and the night. Let the day periſh, &c. At which words the ſtile alters; that which you read forward to the ſixth verſe of the forty-ſecond Chapter, is ſacred Poetry; Job breaths out his paſſion in verſe, and in verſe receives his anſwer. It is queſtioned, whether Job at that time opened his mouth, and vented his ſorrows in verſe? or whether it were after contrived ſo by the Penman of this Book. As I ſee no profit in moving this queſtion, ſo I think there is no poſſibility of reſolving it: And therefore I leave it as I found it, a quere ſtill. Only ~~this is~~ obſervable; that writing in verſe is moſt ſutable, where the matter written is deeply ſteep't in, and chiefly wrought out of our affections. Hence we find, That thoſe parts of Scripture, which ſet forth ſtrongeſt affections, are compoſed in verſe: As thoſe holy flames of ſpiritual love between Chriſt and his Spouſe in the Canticles of Solomon: The triumphant joy of Deborah, after deliverance from Siſera's Army: Of Moſes and Miriam, after the deſtruction of Pharaoh: The afflicting ſorrows of Hezekiah in his ſickneſs: And the Lamentations of Jeremy, for the captivity of the Jews: The Book of Pſalms, is, as it were, a throng of all affections, Love, joy, ſorrow, fear, hope, anger, zeal, every paſſion acting a part, and wound up in higheſt ſtrains by the Spirit of God, breathing Poetical eloquence into that heavenly Prophet. So this book of Job, whoſe ſubject is ſorrow, hath a compoſure anſwerable to the matter. Paſſion hath moſt ſcope in verſe, and is freeſt when tyed up in numbers. The words follow;

Let the day periſh.

What this day was, we ſhewed you before: It was the day of his nativity; The day (ſaith he) wherein I was born. How ſhould this day periſh?

To periſh, ſignifies firſt, not to be. A thing is ſaid to periſh, when it is annihilated, when it returns to nothing: As the Pſalmiſt ſpeaks, Man being in honour and underſtandeth not, is compared to the beaſts that periſh. The periſhing of a beaſt, is the non-entity of a beaſt; when a beaſt dieth, it periſheth, it is not: A beaſt is no more, but vaniſheth quite, and is gone for ever. Then, ſuch mens likeneſs to a beaſt, is not in periſhing, but in the want of true underſtanding: He doth not ſay, man periſheth like a beaſt, but he is like a beaſt that periſheth. A wicked man, how honourable ſoever, is a brutiſh man, ver. 10. For he knows nothing ſpiritually; and what he knows naturally, in that, like a brute beaſt, he corrupts himſelf, as the Apoſtle Jude ſpeaks, ver. 10. of his Epiſtle. But between the periſhing of a fooliſh man and a beaſt, there is a vaſt difference: A beaſts periſhing is a not-being; a fooliſh mans periſhing is a miſerable being.

For ſecondly, To periſh, ſignifies often a miſerable being, as in John 3. 16. God ſo loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whoſoever believeth, ſhould not periſh, &c. Not periſh; the meaning of it is, not that all unbelievers ſhall looſe their very beings, become a nothing, and with their exiſtence part from their eſſence. Some wicked beaſtly men would be glad of this, that they might live here wickedly, and afterward die like beaſts, in that ſence, eternally: If this were the periſhing, that is threatned unbelivers, many of them would be ready to ſay out of love and liking to their luſts, as Eſther did out of love and zeal to the Cauſe of God, If we periſh, we periſh: If this be to periſh, let us periſh. But that periſhing is of another nature; They that believe not ſhall periſh; that is, they ſhall live and periſh; they ſhall be, and be miſerable for ever; the wrath of a diſpleaſed God, and the ſting of a polluted conſcience, ſhall torment them to all eternity.

Thirdly, To periſh, is to be impaired, or looſe former dignity and reſpect. So let the day periſh, may be taken in this ſence, let not that day be ſolemnized, let it not be remembred with wonted joy and gladneſs. A day which hath uſually been ſolemnized, may be ſaid to periſh, when that ſolemnity is laid down, and utterly diſus'd. In ancient times (and the cuſtom in ſome places remains to this day) Great men and Princes kept the memory of their birth-dayes with feaſting and triumph. Thus we read, Gen. 40.20. And it came to paſs the third day, which was Pharaoh's birth-day, that he made a feaſt unto all his ſervants. And Matth. 14. 6. we read, That when Herod's birth-day was kept, the daughter of Herodias danced before them. It is generally conceived, that Job did ſolemnize his birth-day; and ſo many Interpreters take thoſe feaſts, ſpoken of in the firſt Chapter, to have been, the birth-day feaſts of Job's Children. Origen in his fragments upon Matthew, affirms, that the Scripture gives no teſtimony of any one good man celebrating his birth-day: The truth is, while we reflect upon our birth-ſin, we have little cauſe to rejoyce in our birth-day: The new-born Infant ſeems to forbid this ſolemnity, and by his tears weeps and ſpeaks down this joy. The birth-day of nature ſhould be mourned over every day, much more upon the day of our birth. The birth-day of Grace is our joy and our glory, and is worthy to be rejoyced in, not only in this day of Grace, but in that of glory, and ſo it ſhall. Eternity, which is the day of glory, is one continued triumph for our birth-day in grace. Notwithſtanding this, I ſee no cogent reaſon, why a godly man may not celebrate and rejoyce in his naturall birth-day; ſo he rejoyce in God, who took him out of his mothers womb, and hath preſerved him ever ſince he was born. So then, we taking Job's day for his birth-day, he ſaying, Let that day periſh, means, let it be no more ſolemnized, let there be no more joy, no feaſts upon that day.

Or fourthly, Let that day periſh, may be thus underſtood, let not that be reckoned upon, let it be loſt, let it not be counted in the Calender of the year. A day whereof no uſe is made, is called in Scripture, a loſt day, a fallen or periſhed day. In the ſixt of Numbers, the number of dayes is preſcribed for the ſeparation of the Nazarites, thus and thus it ſhall be, and ſo many dayes: Now, if the Nazarite had continued many dayes, according to the Law of his ſeparation; yet if he were polluted with a dead body before the full number was accompliſht, then he muſt begin again, for (ſaith Moſes) The dayes that were before ſhall be loſt, becauſe his ſeparation was defiled, ver. 12. In the Hebrew it is, All the other dayes ſhall fall; he muſt not reckon upon thoſe: So here Job ſaith, Let the day periſh; that is, let it not be numbred or reckon'd, let it be as a day loſt or fallen. So then the ſum of all is this; let the joy and ſolemnity of my birth-day be laid aſide, let it never be celebrated more in the return of the year. I could wiſh that day had never been, but ſeeing that is impoſſible, it having been already, yet let it be as if it had never been, let it be put out of all accounts, let it be taken off from all records; and not only not remembred with mirth and feaſting, but not be remembred at all.

And the night wherein it was ſaid, a man-child is conceived.

So we tranſlate: The elegancy of the Hebrew ſpeaks thus, The night which ſaid, a man-child is conceived; as if the night had been the meſſenger, and had brought word of his conception. Some render the Hebrew word [Hara,] (which we tranſlate conceived) Born, applying both parts of the verſe to his birth, Let the day periſh wherein I was born, and the night in which it was ſaid a man-child is brought forth: And the Original word will bear it, being uſed (as learned Mercer obſerves) for production as well as conception. So 1 Chron. 4. 17. And ſhe bare Miriam and Shammai, &c. She bare, is the word in this Text of Job: We may take it either way; the ſence is clear according to our tranſlation, that Job ſends this curſe beyond his birth-day, even to the night wherein he was conceived. Or if we refer it no further back then to his birth: It is as if he had ſaid, whether I were born by night or by day, let the time of my birth be accurſed; if it were upon the day time, Let that day periſh wherein I was born: Was I born in the night? Let that night periſh wherein it was ſaid a man-child is brought forth: This diſtribution notes a reſolvedneſs to curſe it; and leaſt he ſhould miſs the time of the day, he curſes both the diviſions of time, in every day. As Benhadad in his charge for the taking of thoſe young-men, that came out of Samaria, to ſhew how fully he was reſolved to have them taken, ſaith, Whether they be come out for peace, take them alive; or whether they be come out for war, take them alive, 1 Kings 20. 18. as if he had ſaid, I'le have them taken whatſoever comes on't, or for whatſoever they come, they ſhall not eſcape. Or as Herod, who, that he might be ſure to ſlay Chriſt in his infancy, commands all Infants to be ſlain: So Job, that the curſe might not miſs the time of his birth-day, curſes all the time of that day, the day, and the night. For though a man be born in the night, yet that is not called his birth-night, but his birth-day: And to be born, is to come into the light, though the birth-time be the darkeſt of the night. Hence the Heathen called their Juno, whoſe help they invoked in time of womens travail (Deam lucinam) the Goddeſs bringing into light.

הרה

So much for the opening of this curſe, both in the general and in the parts of it, reſpecting the object day and night. In the next words he cuts out, or proportions a ſpecial curſe, as the portion of each part: The day hath a ſhare, and the night hath a ſhare; each by it ſelf. Before I open this box of curſes any further, I ſhall obſerve ſomewhat from the diſcovery thus far made.

And firſt I muſt anſwer a doubt ariſing upon the whole matter; for it may be queſtioned upon this you have already heard, though we carry on his complaint no further, How Job can be ſet up with ſo much admiration for a mirror of patience, who makes ſuch bitter complainings, and breaks out into ſuch diſtemper'd paſſion, curſing his day? May he not rather be an example of impatience? an unimitable pattern of an unquiet and uncompoſed ſpirit? Are theſe the words of patience and ſobriety? Is this the language of ſubmiſſion and humility, Curſed be my day? He ſeemeth to be ſo far from patience, that he wants prudence; ſo far from grace, that he wants reaſon it ſelf and good nature; his ſpeeches report him mad or diſtracted, breaking the bounds of modeſty and moderation, ſtriking that which had not hurt him, and ſtriking that which he could not hurt, his birth-day. In this Job appears much like that proud Emperor Zerxes, of whom the Hiſtorian reports, that when the raging Helleſpont broke down the bridge that he had made over it, he in a rage cauſed ſome hundreds of ſtripes to be inflicted as a puniſhment on thoſe waters, and cauſed a pair of ſhackles to be caſt upon thoſe waves, to teach them ſubjection: was not this madneſs? what cared the waters for ſtripes? or why ſhould Zerxes take revenge upon the waters? And was not Job as mad? what cared his day for the curſe? or why ſhould Job take revenge upon his day? But as the Prophet ſaith, Hab. 3. 8. Was the Lord diſpleaſed againſt the rivers? was his wrath againſt the ſea? Should the Lord ſet his anger againſt irrational creatures? Doubtleſs he doth not. Therefore enquire further into the matter: So did Job fall out with his day? was he angry with his day? This is yet further to be enquired into and anſwered.

Herodotus.

There are ſome who on the one hand proſecute the impatience of Job with much impatience, and are over-paſſionate againſt Job's paſſion. Moſt of the Jewiſh Writers tax him at the leaſt as bordering upon blaſphemy, if not blaſpheming. Nay, they cenſure him as one taking heed to, and much depending upon Aſtrological obſervations, as if mens fate or fortune were guided by the conſtellations of heaven, by the ſight and aſpect of the Planets in the day of his Nativity; as if Job had obſerved ſome malignant conjunction of the Stars upon that day: As if like the ſuperſtitious Heathen, he divided dayes into lucky and unlucky, good and bad dayes; as if he had denied the providence of God, at leaſt the particular providence of God, in guiding individual perſons or paſſages of our lives here below.

UMI

There are others, who carry the matter as far on the other hand, altogether excuſing, and which is more, commending, yea, applauding Job, in this act of curſing his day: they make this curſe an argument of his holineſs, and theſe expoſtulations as a part of his patience; contending firſt, that they did only expreſs (which he ought) the ſuffering of his ſenſitive part, as a man; and ſo were oppoſite to Stoical Apathy, not to Chriſtian patience; to a ſtone, not to a man.

Secondly, That he ſpake all this, not only according to the law of ſenſe; but with exact judgment, and according to the law of ſoundeſt reaſon: And which is far more, that he ſpake all this, not out of impotent anger againſt his day, but out of perfect love unto his God; that he ſpake this curſe, not in his own, but in the behalf of God; pleading for the providence of God, againſt the ſurmiſes of men; for (ſay ſome) he feared leſt his friends, ſeeing him (whom they ever took for a godly man) thus afflicted, ſhould accuſe the providence of God. As if he had ſaid, I would I had never been born, or it had been better for me not to have been born, rather then I ſhould be an occaſion for any to take up hard thoughts againſt God, or that his name, through my ſufferings, ſhould ſuffer. So that the love of God, not wearineſs under, or unwillingneſs to be under the croſs, conſtrained him thus to ſpeak: And if he was beſides himſelf (as the Apoſtles word is) it was to God, 2 Cor. 5. 13.

I do not ſay, but that Job loved God, and loved him exceedingly all this while; but whether we ſhould ſo far acquit Job, I much doubt; eſpecially ſeeing Job himſelf ſaith, chap. 42. I have ſpoken, I will ſpeak no more: If Job had ſpoken ſo much, from the love of God, and to the honour of God in this curſe, having ſpoken once, he ought to have ſpoken again and again: And had it been ſo, ſurely Job might have ſpared his repentance, as to this point, and needed not have ſaid, Now I abhor my ſelf, and repent in duſt and aſhes: If Job had ſpoken all this according to exact reaſon, and the exactneſs of holineſs, he had no reaſon to repent; eſpecially to repent in duſt and aſhes, for what he had thus ſpoken: No man needs abhor himſelf for that, wherein he both intentionally and actually honours God.

We muſt therefore ſtate it in the middle way; that Job is neither rigidly to be taxed of blaſphemy or prophaneneſs, nor totally to be excuſed; eſpecially not flatteringly commended for this high complaint. I conceive, it muſt be granted, that Job diſcovered much frailty and infirmity, ſome paſſion and diſtemper in this complaint and curſe; yet notwithſtanding we muſt aſſert him for a patient man, yea, for a mirrour of patience; and there are five things conſiderable for the clearing and proof of this aſſertion.

As firſt, Conſider the greatneſs of his ſuffering, his wound was very deep and deadly, his burden was very heavy, only not intollerable. The ſufferings of Chriſt, being exceeding great, cauſed him to complain, that his ſoul was exceeding ſorrowful, even unto death, Mat. 27. 38. yet in this complaint, there was not the leaſt imaginable touch of impatience. When he hung upon the Croſs, he cried out, My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me? verſ. 46. yet in this cry, no impatience. To cry out for every light touch, argues indeed a vain and an impatient ſpirit; but he that ſometimes fetches a groan under a weight of ſorrow, is yet untoucht in his wiſdom, or in his patience. In ſuch a caſe, to cry out, is a diſcovery of humane frailty, but not of ſinful frailty; Grace doth not take away ſenſe; it heightens nature, but it doth not aboliſh it. Conſider how much Job endured, and then you will find little impatience, though he complained much.

Secondly, Conſider the multiplicity of his troubles; they were great and many: many little afflictions meeting together, make a great one; how great then is that which is compoſed of many great ones? Many pebble ſtones will make a heavy burden; how then is he burdened, who hath (if ſuch a thing may be ſuppoſed) many mill-ſtones upon his back? Job's afflictions came upon him as an Army, and encompaſt him round about. He had many particular afflictions, any one of which might make a very patient man complain; then Job who bare them all, was not impatient though he complained.

Thirdly, Conſider the long continuance of theſe great and many troubles; they continued long upon him, ſome ſay they continued divers years upon him. We uſe to ſay, a light burden is heavy, if the journey be long; a man may bear any thing for a brunt, or for a ſpurt; but to have a ſad load continued upon the ſhoulders all the day, pinches ſore. Job's load lay upon him day and night, day after day; yea, moneth after moneth, chap. 7. 3. I am made (ſaith he) to poſſeſs moneths of vanity: yea, as ſome have calculated them, his troubles continued year after year, for ſeven years. Though a man make ſome, yea, great complainings, under many, great, long laſting afflictions, an eaſie Apologie may acquit him of impatience.

Fourthly, Conſider this, that his complainings and acts of impatience were but a few; but his ſubmiſſions and acts of meekneſs under the hand of God, were very many. Now we know, that one, or a few acts, though evil, do not denominate a perſon, eſpecially when they are ballanced by many acts of good in the ſame perſon, and about the ſame thing. How often doth Job, in this Book, breath forth patience, humility, faith, love, and ſtedfaſt truſt in God, whatſoever he ſhould do with him; theſe ballance his complainings, yea indeed, they over-ballance them ſo much, for the ſetling of our judgments, about Job's patience, that they leave not ſo much as an opinion of the contrary.

Fifthly, Take this into conſideration, that though he did complain, and complain bitterly, yet he recovered out of theſe complainings; he was not overcome by impatience, though ſome impatient ſpeeches came from him; he recalls what he had ſpoken, and repents for what he had done. See how he ſubmitteth himſelf (chap. 42.) how low he lies before God, even in the duſt; and ſaith, I will ſpeak no more. If I have been impatient, I will uſe no more impatient ſpeeches; if I have been impatient, I repent of it; I repent of it in duſt and aſhes: To repent of impatience, takes away the imputation of impatience; and to ſay, I will do evil no more, gains (through the mercy of God in Chriſt) an acceptance of us, as if we had done no evil: A man is a conqueror, though in the battel he ſuffers many foils, and receiveth many wounds, and loſeth much blood; though for a great while in the day a man be worſted,; yea, though a whole Army be worſted; yet if in the evening, in the cloſe of the day, he and they keep the field, and foil the enemy, the day is won, and victory goes on this ſide. Job was in a great battel, in a ſore fight of afflictions; though it be granted, that he received ſome wounds, and had ſome foils, and ſometimes looks as if he had been beaten, and ſpeaks as if he had been overcome; yet in the cloſe, in the evening, in the making up of all, he went away a conqueror; the concluſion was victory and glory; Job had the victory, and God the glory: Therefore, as the Apoſtle James, chap. 5. 11. when he ſpeaks of enduring with joy, refers us to the end of Job's day of trouble, to the end which the Lord made; ye have heard (ſaith he) of the patience of Job, and have ſeen the end of the Lord. So look to the end of Job, to the end which (through the ſtrength of the Lord) Job made, and there you ſhall ſee patience having a perfect work; or, the perfect work of patience. Look not alone upon all the actings of Job, when he was in the height and heat of the battel; look to the on-ſet, he was ſo very patient in the beginning, though vehemently ſtirred, that Satan had not a word to ſay; look to the end, and you cannot ſay, but Job was a patient man, full of patience, a mirror of patience, if not a miracle of patience; a man whoſe face ſhined with the glory of that grace, above all the children of men.

So much for that queſtion; I ſhall now add two or three points of obſervation.

The firſt thing then that we may obſerve from hence, is this; If we compare Job in the two former Chapters, with Job in the third, we ſhall find that the caſe is altered with him; he ſcarce ſpeaks like the ſame man. Hence obſerve in the general,

That, The holieſt perſon in this life, doth not alwayes keep in the ſame frame of holineſs.

There is a great deal of difference between what he ſpake in the former Chapters, when he heard of, and felt theſe things firſt; and what he ſpeaks now. The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; bleſſed be the name of the Lord. Shall we receive good at the hand of God, and ſhall we not receive evil? This was the language we lately heard; but now curſing: certainly his ſpirit had been in a more holy frame, more ſedate and quiet, then now it was. At the beſt, in this life, we are but imperfect; yet at ſome time we are more imperfect then we are at another: Faith is never very ſtrong; yet at ſome time Faith is weaker then at another: Our love to Chriſt is never very hot; but yet at ſome time it is colder then at another; we cannot keep it in the ſame degrees of heat. A man at one time can both do and ſuffer, and a while after, he can neither do nor ſuffer as he could at that time; he is out of frame, and bungles in both. Take the life of a Chriſtian all together, it is a progreſs, it is a continual growing; yet take his life apart, conſider him in every circumſtance and ſtage of his life, then there are many ſtops and ſtands in his life, yea, many declinings: As it is with a Child; take a child, and his life, from his birth to his full age, is in a growing condition; yet conſider him at ſome particular time, and the child may abate; the child may not only be ſtronger, but much weaker then he was a year or a moneth before: So it is with us from the firſt hour of our ſpiritual life, till we attain full ſtature of it in Chriſt; only this is our comfort, that in heaven our ſouls ſhall be ſet up in ſuch a frame of holineſs, as ſhall never be moved nor abated in the leaſt degree: look in what frame the hand of God ſets us up in that day, we ſhall continue ſo to all eternity; and that will be the higheſt and moſt exquiſite frame both of holineſs and of delight. But now we are up and down, one day patient, and another day impatient; now believing, and another day diſtruſting; now the heart melts and is very tender, anon it is very hard and relentleſs. How meek a man was Moſes, not ſuch a man for meekneſs upon the face of the whole earth; and yet at one time paſſionate, and at another ſo angry, that he ſpake unadviſedly with his lips. How full of faith was Peter at one time, how reſolved to ſtick cloſe to Chriſt; yet ſhortly after, how full of fear, and for fear, denying Chriſt. We who receive good gifts and perfect gifts, are ſubject to turns and variations; only he from whom every good and perfect gift comes, is without variableneſs or ſhadow of turning.

Secondly, Obſerve, That, Great ſufferings may fill the mouths of holieſt perſons with great complainings.

Job was not only afflicted, but afflicted greatly: Job did not only complain, but he complained greatly: You ſee what complainings David made in his great troubles, Pſal. 77. 2. In the day of my trouble I ſought the Lord, my ſore ran in the night and ceaſed not, my ſoul refuſed to be comforted. So Heman, Pſal. 88. 3. My ſoul is full of troubles, and my life draweth nigh unto the grave: And, ver. 15. I am afflicted and ready to die from my youth up: while I ſuffer thy terrors, I am diſtracted. Hezekiah, under the greatneſs of his affliction (Iſa. 38. 14.) ſaith, Like a Crane or Swallow, ſo did I chatter; I did mourn as a Dove, &c. Jeremy, a holy Prophet, ſpeaks, if not out-ſpeaks Job in his complaint, chap. 20. 14. Curſed be the day wherein I was born; let not the day wherein my mother bare me be bleſſed: Curſed be the man who brought tidings to my father, ſaying, a man-child is born unto thee. He doth not only curſe his birth-day, but the meſſenger of his birth; and he curſes both with a word of deeper deteſtation then Job employed to eaſe or empty his troubled ſpirit by. Job's word ſignified but his diſeſteem, and himſelf regardleſs of his day; but Jeremy employes that very word, through which God poured out his wrath and everlaſting diſpleaſure upon the Serpent and the Devil, Gen. 3. 14. in each of theſe Jeremy went a ſtrain of impatience beyond Job, and yet holy Jeremy ſtill. The Lord (ſaith the ſame Prophet, chap. 8. 14.) hath put us to ſilence, and given us waters of Gall to drink, becauſe we have ſinned againſt the Lord. When we remember our own ſins, we have reaſon to be ſilent, though the Lord feed us with waters of Gall, bitter waters. And if we be ſilent, and open not our mouths, becauſe we have ſinned; he bears with our cry, as we are pained: he knows whereof we are made, and remembers that we are but duſt. A little thing troubles our fleſh, therefore it is no wonder, if fleſh and blood cry out in great troubles, though they be ſubdued by grace unto the Spirit. And if God (in this caſe) bears with us, we ought alſo to bear with one another, and not to be ſcandalized or take offence, when we ſee good men mourning and lamenting under the evils which they endure. He that underſtands man, will compaſſionate the ſorrows, not queſtion the ſincerity of a complaining, groaning brother.

ארר

Thirdly, Job complaineth bitterly, and he curſeth; but what doth he curſe? He curſeth his day. From hence obſerve,

That, Satan with his utmoſt power and policy, with his ſtrongeſt temptations and aſſaults, can never fully attain his ends upon the children of God.

What was it that the Devil undertook for? was it not to make Job curſe his God? and yet when he had done his worſt, and ſpent his malice upon him, he could but make Job curſe his day; this was far ſhort of what Satan hoped. Doubtleſs, when the Devil heard the word curſed come out of Job's mouth, he then began to prick up his ears, and triumph; ſurely now the day is mine, now he will curſe his God; but at the fall of that word, curſed be the day, Satans hope falls, and down goes he. That word, day, was darkneſs to the Devil, and as the ſhadow of death; he fails of his end, and is confounded, he goes away aſhamed, and hath not a word more to ſay; but leaves his friends to ſay the reſt. The gates of hell ſhall never prevail againſt thoſe who are founded on free grace, and the Rock Jeſus Chriſt.

Fourthly, Obſerve, That, God doth graciouſly forget and paſs by the diſtempered ſpeeches and bitter complainings of his ſervants, under great afflictions.

Job ſpake this curſe; but when God comes to queſtion with Job, we do not hear a word or tittle of this curſe charged upon him: God takes notice that he had ſpoken of him the thing that is right, chap. 42. 7. God commends him for what he had ſpoken well; but Job doth not hear a word of what he had ſpoken ill: When the iniquity of his ſpeeches was ſought for, there was none; and his failings, they could not be found; for God had pardoned them; as the Prophet ſpeaks of Iſrael and Judah, chap. 42. 20. Our Lord Chriſt ſaith, that of every idle word you ſhall give an account at the day of judgment; and by your words you ſhall be juſtified, and by your words you ſhall be condemned, Mat. 12. 36, 37. We had need look to our words: God writeth what we ſpeak, and keepeth a book of all we ſay. You will ſay, how then were *Job*s diſtempered complainings forgotten, and all taken for well ſpoken, that he had ſpoken? I anſwer, Firſt, None of Job's were idle words, though there was an error in his words. Secondly, His right words were more then his erring words. Thirdly, His heart was upright when his tongue ſlipt. Fourthly, He repented of thoſe ſlips and errors. And laſtly, God forgiving, blotted them out of his book for ever. Further (in a ſence) we may ſay, that God makes allowance to his people for ſuch failings; not allowance of connivance and diſpenſation; God doth not diſpenſe with any to do the leaſt evil, or expreſs the leaſt impatience in their ſpeeches; but he makes an allowance of favour and compaſſion, conſidering their weakneſs and the ſtrength of temptation, he abates proportionably, when in ſuch a condition they ſpeak impatiently; though their actions and ſpeeches want ſome grains of that weight which they ought to have, yet weighing them in the ſcale of favour, with his gracious allowance, they go for currant, and paſs in account with God, as good and full pay of that duty he expects from us, and we owe unto his Majeſty.

VERS. 4, 5, 6, 7,

Let that day be darkneſs, let not God regard it from above; neither let the light ſhine upon it.

Let darkneſs and the ſhadow of death ſtain it, let a cloud dwell upon it, let the blackneſs of the day terrifie it.

As for that night, let darkneſs ſeize upon it, let it not be joyned unto the dayes of the year, let it not come into the number of the moneths.

Lo, let that night be ſolitary, let no joyful voice come therein.

WE have already given the Analyſis and parts of this Chapter: The ſubject of it is Jobs curſe upon his day. The firſt ſection of it in the nine firſt verſes, contains the matter and the method of that curſe.

And he curſeth his day, Firſt, In general (verſ. 1.) After this, Job opened his mouth, and curſed his day. Secondly, He curſeth it in both the parts of it, (verſ. 3.) Let the day periſh in which I was born, and the night in which it was ſaid, there is a man child conceived.

In theſe ſix verſes which remain, appertaining to the firſt Section, he affixes a particular curſe to each part of his day; taking a day, for a natural day, and then dividing it into day and night, he gives a ſpecial curſe to each of theſe parts; A curſe upon the day, and a curſe upon the night.

The curſe powred out upon the day, lies in the fourth and fifth verſes of this Chapter, Let that day be darkneſs, let not God regard it from above, neither let the light ſhine upon it; let darkneſs and the ſhadow of death ſtain it, let a cloud dwell upon it, let the blackneſs of the day terrifie it.

Here are ſix diſtinct branches of this curſe.

Firſt, Let the day be darkneſs.

Let the day.] Here we are to take day, not for a natural day, but for the day as it is the continent of light, the whole ſpace of time from the riſing to the ſetting of the Sun. Now ſaith he, Let the day be darkneſs.

Be darkneſs.] There is a great aggravation of miſery in that, as Chriſt ſpeaks, Mat. 6. 23. If the light that is in thee be darkneſs, how great is that darkneſs? While Job wiſheth that his very day, which is light, ſhould be darkneſs, how great a darkneſs doth he wiſh unto it; And if the day be darkneſs, how dark muſt the night of that day be?

Then again, Let the day be darkneſs, he doth not ſay, let the day be miſty, or cloudy, or duſky, or dark, he doth not wiſh it like that day deſcribed, Zech. 14. 6. It ſhall come to paſs in that day, that the light ſhall not be clear nor dark; but he ſaith, Let it be darkneſs. Both in Scripture and common language, Abſtracts are emphatically ſignificant, and carry more then an ordinary ſenſe in them. When David ſaith, Pſal. 27. 1. The Lord is my light, there is more in it then if he had only ſaid, the Lord doth enlighten me: So to ſet forth the woful condition of thoſe who are unregenerate or in the ſtate of nature, the Apoſtle tells them, Epheſ. 5. 8. Ye were ſometimes darkneſs; not only in the dark, but darkneſs: So here, to expreſs how great a curſe he wiſhes upon his day, Job ſaith, Let the day be darkneſs it ſelf.

Now darkneſs may be taken two wayes: Either Properly, or Improperly.

Proper darkneſs is nothing elſe but a privation of light, it is no poſitive creature, it hath no cauſe in nature, but is the conſequent of the Suns abſence. When Job wiſhes, let that day be darkneſs, we may underſtand it of this darkneſs: as if he had ſaid, whenſoever that day cometh about, in the recourſe and revolution of the year, let it be darkneſs, or a very dark and gloomy day. This had been a great evil upon his day. This kind of darkneſs was one of the ten plagues with which God ſmote Egypt. And yet there is darkneſs, which is a greater evil then this, I mean darkneſs improperly taken: and ſo frequently in Scripture any ſorrowful, troubleſome, ſad condition, is expreſs'd by darkneſs. A condition of darkneſs is a ſad condition, a dark day is as much, as a ſad day; So then, Let that day be darkneſs, that is, let it for ever be accounted a ſad and ſorrowful day. Thus the Prophet Joel, Chap. 2. 2. calls a day of great trouble, a day of darkneſs and gloomineſs, a day of clouds and of thick darkneſs. When Solomon, Eccleſ. 12. 2. would ſhew by way of Antitheſis, the ſad and evil condition of old age comparatively to youth, he unfolds it by darkneſs; remember now thy Creatour in the dayes of thy youth, make haſte, ſerve God betime; But what needs ſuch haſt? I tell thee why, as times change, ſo thy eſtate will change: Evil dayes will come, I therefore counſel thee to do it, while the evil dayes come not, nor the years draw nigh, when thou ſhalt ſay, I have no pleaſure in them: while the Sun, or the light, or the Moon, or the Stars be not darkened. A day without pleaſure, is a day without the Sun: take away the joy of a day, and you take away the light of a day. Youngmen have the Sun, and the Moon, and the Stars, all kind of light and comfortable influences upon them; but theſe will be darkened and eclipſed when old-age cometh, that will put out or at leaſt obſcure your light, your day will be gone, and your night will have neither Moon nor Star in it; therefore work while you have light, that is, while you have health and ſtrength of body, while you have freedom and activity of ſpirits, fit for that great ſervice, remember, that is, know and ſerve your Creatour.

So in the Text, we may take darkneſs improperly, as darkneſs notes an uncomfortable eſtate, and it is uſed in Scripture to note a two-fold uncomfortable eſtate. Firſt, An eſtate of ſin; Secondly, An eſtate of miſery. This latter darkneſs is the daughter of the former. The Prophet Iſaiah, Chap. 9. 2. ſpeaks of the people that ſate in darkneſs: which is repeated, Mat. 4. 16. that is, in the darkneſs of ignorance, of ſin and guilt. They had natural light enough, and they had civil light enough, abundance of outward comforts: they had health, and ſtrength, and riches, and peace, and plenty, but they had not a Chriſt to take away their ſins, and cleanſe their conſciences, and therefore they were a people that ſate in darkneſs. Jobs curſe intends not this darkneſs of ſin, but that other improper darkneſs, the darkneſs of ſorrow, the darkneſs of penal evil; As if he had ſaid, let ſorrow and ſadneſs over-ſhadow, let mourning and tears overwhelm, let calamity and trouble for ever poſſeſs the day upon which I was born.

Let not God regard it from above.] Here is a ſecond part of the curſe, and a more grievous curſe then the former.

Let not God.] We may obſerve here the Name whereby God is expreſſed, it is Eloah.

The learned Hebricians obſerve ten ſeveral Names of God in Scripture, three of which note his Being: Jehovah, Jah, Ehejeh. Three his Power: El, Eloah, Elohim. Three his Government: Adonai, Shaddai, Jehovah Tſebaoth. One his Excellency, or Super-excellency: Gnelion. The Name Eloah here uſed, is derived from El, which ſignifieth Mighty, and ſo by that addition to the word, there is an addition made to the ſenſe, Eloah is Moſt Mighty, or Almighty. This word in the ſingular number is very rare; the Name Elohim, which is the plural, is very frequent in holy Scripture: Chriſt upon the croſs cryes out to God by his Name in the ſingular number, Eloi, Eloi, my God, my God, as calling for the Almighty power of God, to ſupport and carry him through his ſufferings. David uſeth it in the eighteenth Pſalm, verſ. 31. Who is God ſave the Lord? Who is Eloah ſave Jehovah? that is, who is a mighty ſtrong God, ſave the Lord Jehovah, ſo the next words explain it, Who is a rock ſave our God? So Job being about to implead and accuſe his day, calls to the mighty God (as it were) to judge this day to his everlaſting neglect, Let not God regard it from above.

Regard it from above.] The word ſignifies ſometimes to inquire and ſearch after, or to take an account of a thing exactly and judiciouſly; as they that are called to reckoning or to judgement, are enquired after: and ſo it hath relation to that Name of God, Eloah, a powerful or mighty Judge. Let not God regard it, let not God take any account of it, or enquire after it, let it paſs as not worth the looking after.

ידרש Summo judicio inquirere.

Secondly, The word ſignifies to have a care of a thing, to have a thing or perſon in account, as well as to call unto account: to take care and be watchful over another for good, is our regarding of it. In this ſenſe the word is uſed, Deut. 11. 12. where Moſes ſpeaking concerning the Land of Canaan, ſaith, It is a Land which the Lord thy God careth for. [Careth for] is the ſame word with this; and this Text may well be expounded by that which follows as the meaning of it, The eyes of the Lord thy God are always upon it, from the beginning of the year, even unto the end of the year. So that to have regard to a thing, to a day, or to a perſon, is to make account of theſe, to take care for theſe for their good, as a part of ones charge or duty, or as an act of grace and bounty. When Job ſaith, Let not God regard it, this may be the ſenſe, let not God take any care for it, or make any account of it; let not his eyes be upon it to do it any good, or to do any extraordinary good upon it: let it not be honoured by God with any ſpecial work of providence, which might make it recorded and remembred with honour among men.

φρονεῖν ἡμέραν.

The Apoſtle, Rom. 14. 6. ſpeaks of mans regarding of a day, He that regardeth a day, regardeth it unto the Lord. The Apoſtle treats in that Chapter about the obſervation of dayes: finding that many believers could not be taken off from ſolemnizing thoſe feaſts, which were of Gods own founding and inſtituting among the Jewes, he adviſes that they ſhould not be judged or hardly cenſured, for going according to their conſcience; for he that out of conſcience and according to his light regards, that is, doth ſolemnize or obſerve a day, he regards it to the Lord, that is, to the honour of God, and with a ſincere deſire to pleaſe him. But the thing I aim at in alledging this Text, is to give light to the point in hand, what it is to regard a day. The Apoſtle is plain, that Mans regarding of a day, is to have a day in ſpecial account, as thoſe dayes were, which God inſtituted among the Jewes for ſpecial ends, commanding them to obſerve them, and promiſing a bleſſing in their obſervation. Proportionably Gods regarding of a day, is the ſpecial eſteem he hath, or care he takes of it, & the eſpecial bleſſing he poureth down upon it. Some practical truths are hence obſervable.

Firſt, Conſider theſe two parts of the curſe, as they are placed in ſucceſſion one after another, or in conjunction one with another, Let the day be darkneſs, and let not God regard it from above. This may teach us, That there is no day ſo dark, or condition ſo troubleſom, but if God regard and take notice of it, man may take comfort and rejoyce in it. Though the day be darkneſs, Gods eye will make it light; his regarding is a bleſſing: we never looſe all, till God leaves us. If in the hour and power of darkneſs, (as Chriſt calls the time of his paſſion) God do but lift up the light of his countenance upon us, we ſhall be ſaved. Jobs wiſh of darkneſs, had done his day no great hurt, unleſs he had taken the eye of God off from it alſo. All the light that is in the world, the light of Sun, Moon and Stars, is but darkneſs to us, if God hide his face; but let Sun, Moon and Stars hide their faces, let all creatures withdraw their comfort, if God regard us we are well: Therefore Job puts the ſting of the curſe in Gods not regarding and withdrawing from his day.

Secondly, When he wiſhes that God would not regard his day, he deſires God to lay aſide or ſuſpend his continual work.

Obſerve then, That God doth obſerve and take particular notice of every day. As all perſons ſhall be accountable to him for their actions, ſo alſo for their time: God will inquire after every inch of time, after every moment of our lives. Many men regard not a day, they value not their precious time, they know not how to ſpend or be rid of it, how to wear it out and paſs it away: But God obſerves and regards every moment. The Apoſtle calls to redeeming of time, Epheſ. 5. 16. And he ſubjoyns a motive, Becauſe the dayes are evil. We may give in this of Job for a motive: God regards time, therefore let us redeem time. If a day be within Gods regarding, ſurely it may command ours.

Thirdly, Let not God regard it. We may obſerve,

That the bleſſing and comfort of every day, depends upon the care and reſpect of God to it. The eyes of all things look up unto God. Why do all things look up to God? It is that God may look down upon them: If God look down upon the creature, then the creature revives and is refreſhed; there are influences from the eye and ſight of God, which are able to quicken the deadeſt times, and make glad the ſaddeſt hearts. As we pray for and humbly expect every day our daily bread from God, ſo every day doth (as it were) expect a daily bleſſing from God, which is his regarding of our dayes.

It is the greateſt evil that can befal the creature, when God regards it not; all the bleſſings of the creature are bound up (like Jacobs life in the life of Benjamin) in that reſpect which God beareth to them, and in the care which he hath of them. The Apoſtle Paul, diſputing with the Philoſophers of Athens, ſhewes the ſtate of that time, which they accounted ſuch a golden-age, (Acts 17.30.) The time of that ignorance God winked at, ſo we tranſlate it; the word properly ſignifieth, God did over-look that time: And there are ſome tranſlations which expreſs it in the very term of the Text, The time of that ignorance God regarded not. For we are not to think, there ever were any times, which God winked at in the matter of his Juſtice, ſo as not to call them to an account: I grant that times of ignorance are comparatively winked at in reſpect of Juſtice, God will not proceed ſo ſeverely with them as with knowing times: but God never winketh at any perſon, or at any times, how ignorant ſoever, ſo as to let them go unpuniſhed, and never call them to an account. Such connivence God hates, as being inconſiſtent both with his providence and his Juſtice. The Apoſtle is direct: They who ſin without law (that is, without the knowledge of the law written) ſhall periſh without law, namely, the written law, onely according to the ſentence of that law, which the finger of nature hath written in their hearts, Rom. 2. 12. Ignorance ſhall not be ſo winked at, as to be altogether excuſed. How then did God wink? There is a two-fold winking. Firſt, Of diſreſpect. Secondly, Of diſpenſation. Gods winking is his diſreſpecting. He winked at thoſe times, that is, he lightly paſſed them by, his eye was not upon them for good, he regarded them not in ſuch a manner as to provide for them and ſend amongſt them that great bleſſing, which now (ſaith Paul) he ſends you by my hands, the knowledge of Jeſus Chriſt.

ὑπεριδὼν θεός.

When the bleſſed Virgin heard by that meſſage of the Angel, that ſhe ſhould be mother to the Saviour of the world, ſhe bleſſeth God in this phraſe, Thou haſt regarded the low eſtate of thine handmaid. When God in a way of favour doth but look towards us, our loweſt eſtate is raiſed up, Thou haſt regarded the low eſtate of thine handmaid. It is but a look of gracious regard from God, and all is well with man. On the other ſide, if God take off his eye, wink and diſregard, all is blaſted, yea accurſed, our high eſtate falls, our comforts are ſowred and turned into a lump of ſorrow. We may ſay of all outward excellencies as Haman did, Eſther 5. 13. of all his honour, and greatneſs and favour at Court, All this I have, but all this availeth me nothing, ſo long as I ſee Mordecai the Jew ſitting at the Kings gate. All his comforts were clouded, all the light of his high eſtate was eclipſed, becauſe there was a new Star, Mordecai, ſhining ſtill at the Kings gate. Much more may we ſit down, and caſting up all that we have and are, make the foot of our account nothing, without the favour of God; what do riches, what doth credit, what doth beauty or parts avail us, if God regard not? all is nothing at all without God. What are times, what are dayes, what is your condition if God withdraw himſelf? this aggravates the curſe, this is mournful, when God regardeth not. Job goes on to a third branch of the curſe. Let not God regard it,

Neither let the light ſhine upon it.

That which before he ſpake againſt his day, by wiſhing it darkneſs, he ſpeaks over again and more in other words, by wiſhing light might be denied and with-held from it. To have no light, is not a bare repetition or an explication of what it is to be in darkneſs, but it is an addition to, or an aggravation of it: So the Prophet, Iſa. 50. 10. by him that walks in darkneſs, and hath no light, ſets out the ſaddeſt condition of an afflicted ſoul. No light, is not only darkneſs, but pure darkneſs; as when the Apoſtle John would advance the glory of God, he ſaith, God is light, and in him there is no darkneſs at all, (1 Ep. c. 1.) God is pure light; ſo darkneſs without light, is pure darkneſs.

Let not the light.] As darkneſs, ſo light may be taken either properly for natural light, that which God firſt created; light was the firſt perfect viſible creature, light was the firſt dayes work, and by the work of the fourth was gathered into thoſe heavenly veſſels, the Sun, Moon, and Stars, and there put, that it might be diſpenſed and carried about the world, eſpecially by that Chariot of the Sun. Let this light, this natural light be with-held, let it not ſhine (ſaith Job) upon that day. The withdrawing of natural light is a great affliction to the world: Light is the moſt incorporeal of all corporal things; the ſpiritualneſs of it, ſhews the goodneſs of it: light is the beauty, and diſcovers all the beauty of the world. As a goodly adorn'd furniſh't room without a window, or a candle, ſuch is the world without light. Light is not onely the light, but the life of the world, it quickens and comforts the motions of nature; it is the inſtrument by which all the influences of Heaven are communicated to the Earth, which being ſtopt, the courſe of nature ſtops: this cauſed a great Philoſopher to cry out (when at the paſſion of Chriſt the light of the Sun was totally eclipſed) Either the God of nature ſuffers, or the whole frame of nature diſſolves. Was it not then a dreadful curſe, when Job wiſhes the light (taking it for natural light) might not ſhine upon his day?

But further, take it improperly, then, let not the light ſhine upon it, hath this voice in it, Let there be no comfort, no joy, no good thing in the compaſs of that day. Light in Scripture expreſſes all good; as darkneſs all evil. That great bleſſing which was promiſed unto the Church in the great reſtauration of it, is ſhadowed by light, and by an increaſing light, in Iſa. 30. 26. Moreover, the light of the Moon ſhall be as the light of the Sun, and the light of the Sun ſhall be ſevenfold, as the light of ſeven dayes, in the day that the Lord bindeth up the breach of his people, and healeth the ſtroke of their wound. We are not to conceive, that there ſhall be ſuch an increaſe of the natural light of the Moon or of the Sun, but there ſhall be an increaſe of the comfort of the people of God, which ſhall be as if the Moon and the Sun had in one day the light of ſeven dayes, as if the Moon had got the light of the Sun, and the Sun had got a ſevenfold light more then it had before. And he who is the chief, the choiceſt and moſt tranſcendent bleſſing of all, the joy of all our hearts, Jeſus Chriſt, is called light, he came as light into the world, he is the light of the world, the Sun of righteouſneſs. The creator of all good things, found nothing ſo good to ſhew his own goodneſs by, as light. Chriſt is light, God is light, and in him there is no darkneſs at all. If then we take Jobs ſpeech metaphorically or improperly, Let not the light ſhine upon that day, it amounts to a higher loſs then the former, Truly (ſaith Solomon) light is ſweet, and it is a pleaſant thing to behold the Sun; and we may ſay truly, all ſweetneſs is light, and every pleaſant thing is as the Sun: Though the Sun ſhine upon us, yet if comfort be removed from us, we are in darkneſs. Such a condition the Prophet ſpeaks of, (Iſa. 50. 10.) Who is among you that feareth the Lord, and obeyeth the voice of his ſervant, that walketh in darkneſs, and hath no light. No light, is no comfort, none for the outward man, none for the inner man, both being benighted, both deſerted. Hence obſerve,

That it is a greater judgement to have good things removed from us, then to have evil inflicted on us. He ſpeaks more againſt the day, when he ſaith, Let not the light ſhine upon it, then when he ſaith, Let it be darkneſs. The puniſhment of loſs is greater then the puniſhment of ſenſe. He that is deprived of all good, is by that act inveſted with all evils. The moſt woful condition of ungodly men in this life, is expreſt by the puniſhment of loſs, There is no peace, ſaith my God, to the wicked, Iſa. 57. 21. That they have trouble is not ſo bad, as that they have no peace. And the worſt part of that everlaſting wo which ungodly men ſhall ſuffer, is a puniſhment of loſs: The heat of the fire ſhall not trouble them ſo much, as the want of light: God hath fully reſolv'd that their day ſhall be darkneſs, that himſelf will never regard it from above, nor let the leaſt beam of the light of his countenance ſhine upon it. Hence the condition of the damned is called outer darkneſs, (Mat. 22. 13.) By outer darkneſs, Chriſt means darkneſs without any ray of light: Outer darkneſs is their portion who are without, Rev. 22. 15. As the greateſt bleſſing we receive by Chriſt is poſitive, Joh. 3. 16. God ſo loved the world, that he gave his onely begotten Son, that whoſoever believeth on him, ſhould not periſh, (here is the removing of evil) but have everlaſting life, here is the bringing in of good: And this is the better part of the bleſſing. So on the other ſide, to have all good, light and life removed, is the moſt bitter part of the curſe.

Let darkneſs and the ſhadow of death ſtain it.

Darkneſs and the ſhadow of death.] Theſe words are the fourth branch of the curſe upon his day; he repeats the former curſe, but with new additions; He had ſaid before, Let this day be darkneſs, now he ſaith, Let darkneſs and the ſhadow of death ſtain it.

צלמות

The ſhadow of death.] The word conſidered in the compoſition of it, may be tranſlated image of death. And becauſe the ſhadow of a body gives us the image of a body, (as in the ſhadow of a man, you have the image and proportion of a man; in the ſhadow of a Tree, you have the image and repreſentation of a Tree) becauſe (I ſay) the ſhadow gives the image of a body, therefore the Hebrewes by a Metonymie, call an image a ſhadow: So that the ſhadow of death, is ſuch darkneſs as is like death, the very image of death: He was not contented in general to ſay, Let darkneſs ſtain it, but if any would know what kind or degree of darkneſs he intends, theſe words expound his meaning to be, the worſt darkneſs that can be: Any darkneſs is evil, but darkneſs and the ſhadow of death is the utmoſt of evils. David put the worſt of his caſe, and the beſt of his faith, when he ſaid, Pſal. 23. 4. Though I walk in the valley of the ſhadow of death, I will fear no evil; that is, in the greateſt evil, I will fear no evil. The eſtate of thoſe men who lived beyond the line of the Goſpel, (and that is a very doleful place to live in, though a paradiſe for outward pleaſure) is thus deſcribed by the Prophet, Iſa. 9. 2. The people that walked in darkneſs have ſeen a great light, (Jeſus Chriſt,) they that dwell in the land of the ſhadow of death, upon them hath the light ſhined. Again, The ſhadow of a thing in Scripture, notes the power of a thing; and to be under the ſhadow of a thing, is to be under the power of a thing. The bramble (Judg. 9. 15.) ſaid unto the trees, if in truth ye annoint me King over you, then come and put your truſt in my ſhadow: that is, truſt to that help which I am able to afford you. So likewiſe, to be under the ſhadow of the Almighty, under the ſhadow of his wings, is, to be under the power of the Almighty, for ſafety and protection: Thus we may conceive it here, to be under the ſhadow of death, is to be ſo under the power or reach of death, that death may take a man and ſeize upon him when it pleaſeth. Though I walk in the valley of the ſhadow of death, that is, though I be ſo near death, that it ſeemes to others death may catch me every moment; though I be under ſo many appearances and probabilities of extream danger, that there appears an impoſſibility (in ſenſe) to eſcape death, yet I will not fear.

Thirdly, To be under the ſhadow of death, is to be under the influences of death; the influences of death are thoſe fears and doubtings, diviſions and vexations of ſpirit, thoſe diſtractions and diſtempers of mind which fall upon man, in times of imminent and unavoydable danger. Let the ſhadow of death ſtain it, that is, let it be filled with thoſe fears, and cries, and confuſions, which uſually accompany or prepare the way for death.

Fourthly, Let darkneſs and the ſhadow of death ſtain it, that is, ſuch darkneſs as dwells with death, ſuch darkneſs as fills the houſe of death, the grave: The grave is a dark houſe. We uſe to ſay of that which we would have forgotten, let it be buried in darkneſs. There is no work in the grave, and therefore there needs no light in the grave, neither indeed can there be.

Laſtly, thus; Darkneſs and the ſhadow of death, that is, deadly darkneſs, thick ſtifling darkneſs, ſuch as is in deep pits and mines under the earth, where vapours and noiſome damps do many times ſtrike men with death. We may here take notice, how Job heaps up words, words very like in ſound, and all alike in ſenſe, or concurring to make up one ſenſe: Such amplifications in Scripture, are vehement aſſeverations: As John 1. 20. It is ſaid of the Baptiſt, He confeſſed and denied not, but confeſſed, I am not the Chriſt: And thoſe phraſes, Thou ſhalt die, and not live: I ſhall not die, but live; Thou ſhalt be low, and not above. So Job of his day, Let it be darkneſs, let not the light ſhine upon it, let darkneſs and the ſhadow of death ſtain it.

גאל

The word which we render (ſtain,) ſignifies properly to redeem a thing, either by price or by power, to redeem a thing by paying for it, or to redeem a thing by reſcuing of it. Hence among the Jews, he that was to redeem his deceaſed brothers land, and marry the widow, was called Goel, from this word, as we may read in the fourth of Ruth. So the avenger of bloud was called Goel, Numb. 35. 12. becauſe he likewiſe did redeem the bloud of his brother, fetch it back again as it were by a price in the execution of juſtice. The learned Junius, with ſome others, tranſlates according to that ſenſe of the Original word, O that dark- neſs and the ſhadow of death had redeemed that day, or fetched back that day; (he refers it to the day paſt upon which he was born) and ſo takes it for an alluſion to the firſt ſtate of things. We know at the firſt, darkneſs had dominion over all, over all that Chaos or rude matter which God made at firſt; Darkneſs (ſaith Moſes) was upon the face of the deep, Gen. 1. 2. Then God gave a command to light, ſaying, Let there be light, ver. 3. preſently light went forth and reſcued the creature from under the power of darkneſs. Now, ſaith Job here, O that darkneſs and the ſhadow of death had redeemed that day, or fetched again that day out of the hands of light! Oh that darkneſs had recovered that which in the beginning was under its power! that ſo my day being wrapt up in darkneſs, might be without form and void.

But the word is frequently tranſlated, (and well here,) to pollute or to ſtain a thing; as Mal. 1. 7. Ye offer polluted bread upon mine Altar, and ye ſay, wherein have we polluted thee? And that of lamenting Jeremy, They have polluted themſelves with blood, ſo that men could not touch their garments, Lam. 4. 14. So darkneſs is ſaid to ſtain or pollute the day, as filthineſs or blood ſtains and pollutes, diſcolours and defiles the beauty of a garment: Darkneſs obſcures and blinds the beauty of the moſt glorious creatures, natural darkneſs doth it. Suppoſe you ſhould come into a room furniſhed with the moſt exquiſite and coſtly ornaments, hung with the moſt curious and lively pictures, if there be no light there, the beauty of all is loſt to us, darkneſs ſtains it; you may have as good a ſight in a dungeon as there. Again, take it for Metaphorical, or improper darkneſs, that alſo ſtains the beauty of the creature; if you have never ſo great a ſtock and eſtate of riches, or honour, &c. let but ſorrow and trouble, war and diviſions ariſe, the beauty of all is ſtained. What is honour then, but higher unhappineſs? And what are riches then, but golden thorns? What is liberty then, but freer miſery? And what is ſtrength then, but ſtronger pain, and an ability to bear a heavier burden of affliction? The glory and beauty of the creature is gone in dark times; when ſuch a day comes as Joel ſpeaks of, A day of blackneſs and gloomineſs, where's your bravery? what becomes of your fineneſs? But that which ſtains the creature moſt, is myſtical darkneſs, the darkneſs, of ignorance, and of ſin; the darkneſs of guilt, and of Gods diſpleaſure: O how is the beauty of the ſoul (which is far more glorious then all viſible creatures) how is the beauty of that ſtained, when it lyes under any of theſe darkneſſes! Hence therefore, we ſee what a bleſſing light is, and how we are bound to bleſs God for light, for natural light, for the outward light of a comfortable condition, but eſpecially for the light of his countenance, which is better then life; for the light of knowledge, for the light of grace, how ſhould we for ever bleſs the Father of lights?

In nocte funeſtatur mūdi honor; omnis ſubſtantia denigratur, ſordent, ſilent, ſtupent cuncta. Tertul. de reſurrect. carnis.

Let a cloud dwell upon it.] This is the fifth branch of the curſe. A cloud (as Naturaliſts teach) is a thick vapour raiſed up by the heat of the Sun to the middle region of the Air, and there by the cold condenſed becomes ſo thick, that it ſtops and intercepteth the light: Clouds and darkneſs go together, as in Pſalm 97. verſ. 2. If there be Clouds, there is darkneſs; Clouds and darkneſs are round about him. So that to ſay, Let a cloud dwell upon it, is but a further emplifying of the ſame thing; before it was, Let darkneſs be upon it; now, Let a cloud dwell upon it.

Dwelling, notes the continuance and conſiſtency of darkneſs; he doth not ſay, let a Cloud paſs over it (for Clouds properly are unfixed, Clouds move continually, and are carried on the wings of the wind;) But Job would have his cloud a fixed cloud, a cloud ſo black and ſo ſtrong, as might not be diſſolved, but cauſe a continual eclipſe upon the day.

A Cloud, and the dwelling of a Cloud, imports ſometime the care and protection of God over his people, Exod. 40. 38. We read of a Cloud that was continually over the Tabernacle, A cloud was over it by day, and a pillar of fire by night. In the fire there was direction, in the Cloud protection, and mercy in both. So Iſa. 4. 5. God promiſeth to create upon every dwelling place of Mount Zion, and upon her aſſemblies, a cloud. Which is expounded in the cloſe of the verſe: For upon all his glory (his Church and Saints) there ſhall be a defence. But here the Cloud, and the dwelling of it, notes continued darkneſs: As if Job ſhould have ſaid, If the light do ſhine upon that day, I wiſh that a curtain might be drawn perpetually between the World and the Sun, let a Cloud dwell before the face of the Sun, which may muffle it, and intercept thoſe beams which would enlighten and refreſh the earth.

Clouds are refreſhings; yet Clouds you ſee may prove afflictions: As a Cloud is a protection at one time, ſo it may be an affliction at another: As a Cloud ſhadows us from the heat, it is a bleſſing; but as a Cloud eclipſes the light, ſo it is a curſe: The ſame creature may be employed both for a curſe, and for a bleſſing. Yet further, Job would not only have it a dwelling Cloud, but a condenſed Cloud. Some Clouds are ſo thin, that the Sun appears, and light ſhines through them: Job deſires this may be thick enough, not only to cauſe darkneſs, but to cauſe blackneſs: Which is the laſt branch of his curſe upon his day.

Let the blackneſs of the day terrifie it.

Job's heart was ſo full of paſſion, that his ſorrows could not come out at once, he takes time and breath. Now ſaith he, Let the blackneſs of the day terrifie it.

Blackneſs is more then darkneſs; therefore we find blackneſs an addition to darkneſs, in the Epiſtle of Jude, ver. 13. where giving divers elegant characters of wicked men, whom he calls ſpots in their feaſts of charity, clouds without water, trees without fruit, raging waves of the ſea, foaming out their own ſhame, wandring ſtars: And what is the portion of men thus qualified, but hell, wrath, and vengeance? So he tells us in the next words, To whom is reſerved the blackneſs of darkneſs for ever. Darkneſs, and the blackneſs of darkneſs, is the portion of thoſe that ſhall for ever lye under the wrath of God; blackneſs of darkneſs is the beauty of Hell; that fire will beſoot the damned to all eternity: Then the blackneſs of darkneſs, is the darkeſt darkneſs that can be imagined. Blackneſs of darkneſs was Egypts plague; that was darkneſs, and thick darkneſs, darkneſs to be felt, Exod. 10. 21. ſo dark, that no man could ſee another, neither aroſe any from his place for three dayes, ver. 23. this was blackneſs of darkneſs; the picture of Hell, that chamber of darkneſs. The word in the Hebrew, ſignifieth heat and blackneſs: The reaſon is given, becauſe heat makes things black and ſwarthy; from the ſame word thoſe Idolatrous Prieſts ſpoken of, 2 Kings 23. 5. were called Chemarims, or the black Prieſts; and they were called ſo, either from the black veſts or garments which they commonly wore; or from the heat and fire of their furious zeal, either in the defence, or exerciſe, of their ſuperſtitious worſhip; or from the ſmoaky Incenſe which they offered, fit enough to black themſelves, but no way pleaſing unto God.

במר בכדירי Geminata poſtrema calores intenſiores & vehementiores quales eſſe ſolent in diebus canicularibus ſignificat. Druſ.

Let the blackneſs of the day terrifie it.] Terrifie what? Terrifie the day. The day is not capable of fears, or of affrightments; but the meaning is this, let the blackneſs of the day make it a terrible day; or let it be a terrible day, by reaſon of the blackneſs of it: As we uſe to ſay, ſuch a day was a terrible day, it was a black day.

Changes in the courſe of nature are full of terror. That which is proper and natural to the day is light; therefore to ſee the day covered with blackneſs, muſt needs affright us: when we look for light, as they in the Prophet, and behold darkneſs, that troubles; but when we look for light, and behold blackneſs, that terrifies. The vulgar Latine tranſlation reads it thus; Let (as it were) the bitterneſs of the day terrifie it: The bitterneſs of the day, are thoſe ſad accidents and troubles which fall out upon that day. To which ſence the Chaldee Paraphraſe thus expounds it; let ſuch bitterneſſes of the day afflict it, as the Prophet Jeremy was afflicted with, for the deſtruction of the Temple; or as Jonas when he was caſt into the Sea. Hard bondage made the lives of the Iſraelites bitter, Exod. 1. 14. And when the Lord threatens to turn their feaſts into mourning, and their ſongs into lamentation, he concludes thus, And I will make it as the mourning of an only ſon, and the end thereof as a bitter day, Amos 8. 10. Hence afflictions are called, gall and wormwood, bitter things. And the Chaldeans, whom God made ſo great a ſcourge to his own people, are called a bitter Nation, Hab. 1. 6.

Vox compoſita à מדרים Amaritudines & particula בדי ſic, ſicut.

We have opened theſe words, which concern the curſe upon Job's day. Now follows his curſe upon the night.

Verſe 6. As for the night, let darkneſs ſeize upon it, let it not be joyned to the dayes of the year, let it not come into the number of the months.

Verſe 7. Lo, let that night be ſolitary, let no joyful voice come therein.

He goeth on in his former paſſionate Rhetorick, to load the night with as many evils (if not more) as he had done the day; As for that night, let darkneſs ſeize upon it.

We have heard of darkneſs before, darkneſs upon the day. What doth Job mean here to call for darkneſs upon the night? The night is it ſelf full of darkneſs; yea darkneſs is proper to the night. Is it any curſe to ſay, let Wormwood be bitter, or to ſay, let Lead be heavy? the natural property of a thing cannot be the puniſhment of a thing. How is it then that Job ſaith, Let that night be darkneſs; or, Let darkneſs ſeize upon it.

Though it be true, that darkneſs is proper to the night; yet there are degrees of darkneſs, and every darkneſs is not proper to the night. The word here uſed for darkneſs, is obſerved by Grammarians, to ſignifie an extraordinary thick darkneſs, yea darkneſs joyned with tempeſt: Let thick tempeſtuous darkneſs ſeize upon, or take hold of that night; for the word ſignifies, to graſp or take a thing in ones hand, let darkneſs graſp it. Though the night be dark, yet it may be darker; we call ſome nights light nights, in compariſon of others.

אפל
Tenebroſius turbo. Vulg.

Note, That there is no eſtate ſo ill, but it is poſſible it may be worſe.

The night is dark, yet you may ſuper-add darkneſs to it: and though the condition of any perſon, or people, be as the night, dark, yet the darkneſs may increaſe more and more to a perfect night. You know what God ſaith concerning the people of the Jews, when he threatned them with troubles, I will puniſh you yet ſeven times more for your ſins. God can make ſuch a night, as that the former night ſhall ſeem a day to it: God can add darkneſs to the darkneſs of the night: God can add bitterneſs to the bitterneſs of Wormwood, and make Lead more heavy then Lead: There is no man on earth in ſo ſad a condition, but he may be in a worſe. Art thou poor? God can ſend thee ſuch poverty, as that thy former poverty was riches compared with this. Art thou weak and ſick? God can add more ſickneſs, and make thee ſo weak, that thy former ſickneſs may be accounted health, and thy weakneſs ſtrength, compared with this. In this ſence darkneſs ſeizeth upon the night. He wiſhes a ſecond evil upon that night.

Let it not be joyned with the dayes of the year.

Hieron.
Septuag.

Some read it thus, Let it not be computed in the dayes of the year. Others, Let it not be in the dayes of the year. This is another evil he calls down upon the night. The glory of the night conſiſteth in its conjunction to the day; hence light and darkneſs put together, come both under the denomination and notion of day. Night is called day, as being a part of the natural day: Now that which is the chief priviledge of the night, this curſe ſtrikes at: Job would have it rent and diſ-joynted from the day. Let it not be joyned to the dayes of the year.

Diſunion and diviſion is a great curſe, when the night is not joyned to the day, it is the curſe of the night. The Rabbins have a conceit, why after the work of the ſecond day was finiſhed, God (beholding what he had done) did not add any approbation to it: when he made the light, which was the firſt dayes work, he approves it, God ſaw the light, and ſaid it was good; but to the work of the ſecond day, God ſubjoyned no approbation, by ſaying it was good; The reaſon (I ſay) which many of the Rabbins give of it, was this, becauſe then was the firſt diſunion, that made the firſt ſecond, that ever was, All before was one, (ſub uniſſimo Deo) under the one-moſt God; I ſhall leave this fancy to the Rabbins. But there is ſomewhat in the notion it ſelf, namely, that diviſion and diſunion are the evils of the creature. The night hath glory by union with the day; the weakeſt things, and the obſcureſt things, have an honour by being joyned with the ſtronger and more excellent.

And as theſe natural diſunions are the affliction of natural things; ſo civil diſunions, and civil diviſions, are much more the affliction of People and Nations. Chriſt aſſures us, That the ſtrongeſt Kingdoms divided cannot ſtand, Mark 3. 24. Weak things are ſtrong by union; and that not only by union with the ſtrong, but by union among themſelves. Weak things united are ſtrengthened; joyn weak with weak, and they are ſtrong. And things obſcure, united, are honourable, eſpecially if united with that which is honourable: The glory of the Wife is in the band of union with her Husband; She ſhines with the rayes of her Husbands honour: Whatſoever natural, or civil excellency is in him, reflects upon her: The woman is the glory of the man, (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, 1 Cor. 11. 7.) in regard of ſubjection: It is mans glory, that God hath given him ſuperiority over ſo excellent a creature. But in another ſence, the man is the glory of the woman; ſhe communicates with him in all his dignity, how great ſoever. Thus alſo the day is the glory of the night: The night ſhines by her marriage with the day. Job ſues out a divorce between them, Let it not be joyned to the dayes of the year.

And let it not come into the number of the months.

The Original may be tranſlated, In the number of the Moons: The ſame word, among the Hebrews, ſignifieth the Moon, and a Month: as likewiſe among the Grecians: and the reaſon is, becauſe their Months were counted by their Moons; and the Moon is renewed every Month. Every Lunation made a Month; and thirteen Lunations made a year; their Month conſiſting of twenty eight dayes, which is a Lunary Month: So that when Job ſaith, Let it not come into the number of the Months, he would take away one ſpecial benefit of the night: And it is as if he had ſaid let that night be uſeleſs, and ſtand for nothing in the Calender of the year. To every thing there is a ſeaſon, and a time to every purpoſe under the Heaven, ſaith the Preacher, (Eccleſ. 3. 1.) So every ſeaſon hath ſomething to do, and there is a purpoſe for every time under Heaven. A purpoſe for Summer, and a purpoſe for the Winter; a purpoſe for the day, and a purpoſe for the night. And for any of theſe to be diſappointed of their purpoſe, is (ſo far as they are capable of affliction) their affliction. We may obſerve hence;

ירח
Antiquiſſima fuit in menſibus Lunarius noctiũ & Lunationũ obſervatio, quod & ipſum menſis nomẽ teſtatur, quod apud Græcos à Luna dicitur, nam (μὴν) mẽſis eſt, & vero (μήνη) Luna, Pined. in loc.
Summa hæc vult, deleatur è Calendario. Druſ.

That it is a great curſe upon any creature, to be made an uſeleſs creature, to ſtand for nothing.

This is to looſe the end of its being; and therefore it muſt needs looſe the happineſs of its being. Every thing was (by the Law of its creation) ordained for ſome uſe, and therefore cannot but be unhappy when it is made uſeleſs. And if it be the glory of inanimate creatures when God will uſe them, or when men make uſe of them for God; how unglorious then is the condition of thoſe men, who are, as (God ſpeaks of that King, Jer. 22. 28.) Like a deſpiſed broken Idol, which hath no honour, and is of no uſe; Who are as veſſels wherein there is no pleaſure, veſſels laid by the walls, (as we ſpeak) laid aſide, as unfit or unworthy to be lookt after, and employed in any publick ſervice.

Lo, let that night be ſolitary, let no joyful ſound come therein.

This ſolitarineſs of the night may have reſpect to the former words: He would not have it joyned to the dayes of the year; he would not have it come in the number of Months. What then? Then it muſt needs be like a ſolitary widow, all alone; Let that night be ſolitary. Or ſecondly, his meaning may be this, Let there be no meetings that night. The night is not ſolitary in it ſelf, but then the night is called ſolitary, when the ſociety of friends is ſtopt and interrupted. It was the cuſtom of thoſe times, and it is a cuſtom continued in many places to theſe times, for friends to meet in the night: and ſuch meetings make night as day; good ſociety is comfortable: A ſolitary condition is a ſorrowful condition. So then, Job compleats his curſe in this verſe, and makes up a full ſum of miſery upon his night. What can be ſaid more againſt it, then now he ſaith. He had before wiſht it dark in it ſelf, divided from the day, of no number in the months: And now he would not have friends meet to refreſh themſelves by mutual communion and loving converſe that night. Much of the comfort of our lives is brought in by the ſociety of friends. Man is defined a ſociable creature, as well as a reaſonable creature; ſolitarineſs is oppoſite both to the nature and happineſs of man. Wo be to him that is alone (ſaith Solomon) two are better then one, and eſpecially in times of trouble. As our comforts are multiplied upon them that are near us, ſo our ſorrows are allayed and eaſed by them. There is a ſolitarineſs which is the ſweeteſt part of our lives, when we retire a while from the world, from the throng of men and buſineſs, that we may be more intimate with Chriſt, and take our fill in communion with him. To go alone, that we may meet with God, is Heaven upon earth; but to be ſo left alone and ſcattered, that we cannot meet with men, is (if not a hell, yet) one of the greateſt afflictions upon the earth. Such ſolitary times are ſad times.

Egyptii feſtum celiberrimũ habuerunt nocturnũ, tum etiam noctu celebrebantur nuptiæ. Herod. l. 2.

Let no joyful voice come therein.] As if he ſhould ſay, If men will meet that night, and converſe together, let them meet only to mourn together, and let their converſation be made up with mutual ſorrows; let them only tell each other the ſad ſtories of their afflictions. Thus let them meet to lament together; but let none meet to rejoyce together; let there be no meeting with any joyful voice that night. He alludes again to the cuſtom of thoſe times, which were wont to have, as meetings in the night, ſo to rejoyce in thoſe meetings: They feaſted with ſongs and muſick, a joyful voice was in their meetings. Muſick is ſweeteſt in the night: The ſtilneſs of the night gives advantage to the voice. The Roman Hiſtory tells us, that their greateſt feaſts, their moſt luxurious banquetings, and curious muſick, was in the night. The Apoſtle alludes to that cuſtom when he ſaith, They that are drunken, are drunken in the night, (1 Theſ. 5. 6.) Works of darkneſs ſeek times of darkneſs. He that doth evil hateth the light, John 3. 21. principally the light of knowledge, and withall the light of ſenſe. There are two Opinions about this joyful voice, which I ſhall but name, and paſs on. Firſt, The Chaldee Paraphraſt will have this joyful voice to be the voice of the Cock, Let not the Cock crow that night; the crowing of the Cock is a comfortable voice in the night: The Cock is a natural Cock, and by his crowing tells us the hours of the night: As if Job had ſaid, inſtead of the chearful voice of the Cock, let that night be filled with the doleful voice of the Owl, or of the Skreech-owl. A ſecond Opinion ſaith, this joyful voice which Job puts from, and denyes his day, was the voice of the Stars, ſpoken of, as they would have us to conceive, Chap. 38. 7. When the morning Stars ſang together, and all the Sons of God ſhouted for joy. But to leave theſe as fancies, rather then expoſitions: The interpretation given is clear and ſutable to the method of the curſe: Job would have no meeting on that night; or if any were, he forbids their joy, Let no joyful voice be heard therein.

Monſtra volant, diræ ſtrident in nocte volucres, Nocturneq; gemunt ſtriges, & ſeriala bubo Damna canens. Statius, l. 3.

It is a great evil upon any time, when the voice of joy is taken away from it: It is a great evil upon times, when joyful meetings can no more be obſerved; when if any do meet, they meet and ſigh together; they meet and lament together; they meet and bemoan each others loſſes and calamities. The Prophet Amos ſpeaks of a time, when the ſongs of the Temple ſhall be howlings, (Chap. 8. ver. 3.) And ver. 10. I will turn your feaſts into mourning, and your ſongs into lamentation. It is very ſad, when the ſongs of our private houſes are changed into howlings: but much more when the ſongs of the Temple. Both theſe are pronounced againſt Babylon, as a part of that dreadful curſe which God will pour out upon it, when his wrath comes to the utmoſt, Rev. 18. 22. The voice of harpers and muſitians, and of pipers and trumpeters, ſhall be heard no more at all in thee; and the ſound of the mill-ſtone ſhall be heard no more at all in thee; and the voice of the bridegroom and of the bride ſhall be heard no more at all in thee: That is, O Babylon, there ſhall be no joyful voice any more at all in thee: Not the voice of muſick; no, not the voice of a mill-ſtone. We have great cauſe to fear, that the joyful voice may ſuddenly be taken away, not only from our nights, but alſo from our dayes; not only from our houſes, but alſo from our Temples: For the voice of ſin hath been heard from both. Darkneſs hath begun to ſeize upon our light; the ſeed of diviſion is not only ſown, but ſprung up among us; our troubles increaſe; yea, our joyful voice is already changed into the ſound of the Trumpet, and the Alarm of War, into the neighings of Horſes, and the confuſed noiſe of bloody Battels, Iſa. 9. 5. And which may afflict our hearts more, we hear the mournful voice of the Widow crying out, My Husband, my Husband. We hear the mournful voice of the Orphan crying out, My Father, my Father. It is time for us to ſit ſolitary and alone; to mourn every family apart, and our wives apart, (Zach. 12. 12.) to lift up our voice in prayer night and day, leaſt the joyful voice be utterly taken away, and for ever ſilenced amongſt us: Leſt it be ſaid of us as of Jeruſalem, (Lam. 1. 1.) How doth the City ſit ſolitary, that was full of people? How is ſhe become as a widow? She that was great among the Nations, and Princes, among the Provinces, how is ſhe become tributary? As that Heathen ſaid of the time paſt, I had periſhed, if I had not periſhed: So we may ſay of the time to come; We ſhall mourn, if we do not mourn; we ſhall be ſolitary, if we ſit not alone. Our nights of ſinful joy in chambering and wantonneſs, have bereft us, and will bereave us more of refreſhing joyes. And inſtead of the voice of friend and brother, you may hear only the voice of the enemy, and avenger: and that is no joyful voice. When Jacob was informed of the approach of Eſau his bloody brother, he puts all things in order, and preſently the Text ſaith, Jacob was left alone, Gen. 32. 24. What, deſerted? did his company run from him? No, it was an elected ſolitarineſs, not a neceſſitated ſolitarineſs, he deſired to be alone; and he ſtaid alone, that he might not be alone: He ſtaid alone, that he might get God nearer in communion with him and his; that his family might not be ſcattered from him, and his houſe left deſolate. So, if we would be voluntarily alone, from the world, to be with God, wraſtling out nights in prayer as Jacob did, we might (as he did) prevent ſolitary nights, and prevail with God by the voice of prayer, in the mediation of Jeſus Chriſt, and the powerful cry of his blood, to continue unto us the voice of joy.

VERS. 8, 9.

Let them curſe it that curſe the day, who are ready to raiſe up their mourning.

Let the Stars of the twilight thereof be dark, let it look for light, but have none; neither let it ſee the dawning of the day.

In the former verſes, Job himſelf curſeth the night; in this he inviteth others, to curſe it; that his ſorrow might appear not only ſerious, but ſolemn, he calleth for thoſe who made mourning their profeſſion, and to weep for and with others, their trade: ſuch as uſed to riſe early, and awaken their companions to come away, and joyn in prepared and ſtudied lamentation. This I take to be the ſum and ſence of theſe words, which yet in the letter are very full of difficulty, and have divided Interpreters exceedingly. I ſhall briefly touch the moſt of thoſe ſences given, and then more fully preſent you with what I apprehend as ſutable to this Text, and conſonant unto Truth.

Firſt, Take a brief of the divers readings of this verſe, Let them curſe it that curſe the day, who are ready to raiſe up their mourning: So we in our Bibles.

The vulgar and the Septuagint read it thus: Let them curſe it that curſe the day, who are ready to raiſe up Leviathan.

Another renders the latter clauſe, Who are ready to raiſe up the Dragon. Theodot.

Mr. Broughton's tranſlation runs thus; May they curſe it who do curſe the day, who will hunt Leviathan.

Junius and Tremelius, have a tranſlation different from all theſe, I would they had curſed thee that inlighten the day, who are ready to ſtir up Leviathan, or the Whale. That which all other Interpreters I have met with, call curſing of the day, they call inlightning the day.

You ſee there is much variety about the rendring of theſe words out of the Hebrew. And there is as much diverſity of opinion grounded thereupon.

Firſt, Some apprehend, that Job in this verſe alludes to the cuſtom of a certain people in Ethiopia, called the Atlantes lantes, frequently mentioned in divers Hiſtories, who living under the torrid Zone, in an extream hot Climate, uſed to curſe the Sun when it aroſe, becauſe it ſcorched them with vehement heat: This made them in love with the night, and hate the day. And ſo the ſence is made out thus, Let them curſe this night, who uſe to curſe the Sun-riſing every day, whoſe pain heightning and imbittering their ſpirits, cauſed them to pour out the moſt bitter and revengeful execrations.

Hi ſolem tranſcendentem execrantur, eique præteria omnia convitia ingerunt quod torridus ipſos & regionem perdat, Herod l. 4. ad finem. Atlantes diris ſolis ortum excipiunt, Solin. c. 4. Polyhiſt. Atlantes & ſolem Orientem & Occidentem dira imprecatione contuentur, Plin. l. 5. c. 8. Pined in loc.

But I will lay this by, though ſome ſet much ſtore by it, as a ſpecial treaſure of invention: For I much queſtion, not only whether this cuſtom of curſing the day amongſt that people, was known unto Job, but whether he ever heard of ſuch a people, being ſo remote and diſtant from him.

Secondly, I ſhall a little open the meaning of that Tranſlation given by Junius, Let them curſe it who inlighten the day; who are ready to raiſe up Leviathan, or the Whale.

By thoſe who inlighten the day, he ſaith, the Stars are underſtood; Let thoſe curſe thee who inlighten the day; that is, let the Stars curſe thee: And who are ready to raiſe the Leviathan; that is, let the Winds be againſt thee; let the Winds curſe thee, or be a curſe unto thee. The reaſon he gives, is, becauſe Stars are (Illuſtratores Diei) the inlighteners of the day: And to ſalve it, we muſt not (ſaith he) take the day ſtrictly for a day artificial, for then the Stars are of no uſe; but for that part of the day natural which is dark, namely, the night; the Stars are inlighteners of the day, namely, of the dark part of the day, the night: And ſo Job calls here to the very Stars, that they ſhould oppoſe and trouble that night.

We read in that notable Hiſtory, Judg. 5. 20. That the Stars in their courſes fought againſt Siſera; ſuch expreſſions there are, making, as it were, the Heavens angry, the Stars to oppoſe the deſigns of men. The Hoſt of Heaven is under the command of the Lord of Hoſts, when he calls them forth to the help of his people. Thus he conceives Job inviting the Stars to take part with him in this quarrel againſt his night: Let the Stars curſe the day, thoſe inlighteners of the day.

Then he underſtands by them that ſtir up Leviathan, the Winds; thoſe words (Who ſtir up Leviathan) are (ſaith he) a Periphraſis, or deſcription of the winds. The reaſon which he gives is, becauſe when great Winds ariſe, and blow ſtrongly, that mighty Fiſh, the Whale, or Leviathan, lying at the bottom of the Sea, by the motion of the waters is rouſed and ſtirred up, and ſo mounts to the ſuperficies or top of the water, or appears above it. Thus the Winds raiſe up Leviathan. His ſence from both is, that Job ſets the Stars and the Winds againſt this night, and bids them combine to make it troubleſome and tempeſtuous. This Opinion, for the reverence of the Authors name, deſerveth to be looked upon with reſpect; but I ſhould not (neither do I) apprehend that to be the meaning of Job in this place.

Thirdly, The difficulty is reſolved by making theſe words an alluſion to Fiſher-men, as if Job here did but deſcribe the condition of thoſe, or ſhew what by accident doth befall thoſe, whoſe trade and art is to catch Leviathan, or the Whale. Theſe take the word Leviathan in the proper ſence, for that mighty Fiſh deſcribed in the 41. of this Book of Job, Canſt thou draw out Leviathan with an hook? or his tongue with a cord which thou letteſt down? &c.

Leviathan is derived from Lavah, which ſignifieth joyned or coupled together; whence (to note it by the way) the word Levi, or the name of the third Son which Jacob had by Leah. She called his name Levi, For now, ſaith ſhe, will my Husband be joyned unto me, becauſe I have born him three ſons, Gen. 29. 34. The ſame reaſon is given, why that dreadful Fiſh is called Leviathan. His deſcription clears this, Job 41. 15. His ſcales are his pride, ſhut up together as with a cloſe ſeal; one is ſo near to another, that no air can come between them, they are joyned one to another, they ſtick together that they cannot be ſundered. He hath his name Leviathan, from the cloſe-joyning or compactedneſs of the ſcales, that cover or harneſs him like an impenitrable armour of proof. Now taking the word thus properly for the Fiſh Leviathan, Job is conceived to allude to the cuſtom of thoſe who hunt for the Whale: who obſerving the night to be moſt advantagious for that work, are troubled at the approach of light; and therefore the Fiſhermen, as ſoon as ever they ſaw day begin to break, curſed the day, as an enemy to their ſucceſs in purſuing and killing the Whale. That fiſhing is a buſineſs of the night, is evident from the ſpeech of Peter to our Saviour Chriſt, (Luke 5. 5.) Maſter we have fiſhed all night, and have taken nothing. According to which alluſion, the meaning of Job muſt be; As if he had ſaid, I will not ſtrive any longer for words to expreſs my paſſion againſt this night; let it be blaſted with the curſe of thoſe who are moſt ſkilful in the dialect or language of execrations; even with ſuch a curſe as thoſe ſea-hunters, the fiſhermen, uſe to pour forth upon the day, when it breaks too ſoon for their profit, ſo that they are hindred in catching of Leviathan, or the Whale.

לוה Adjunctus, ſociatus unde Leviathā triſſyllabum cum affixo. Qui hujuſmodi magnos piſces piſcantur, de nocte eos invadunt in tenebris, & ideo quando dies incipit apparere maledicunt diei, quia per hoc eorū opus & intentio impeditur. Aquinas in loc.

There is a Proverb amongſt us, If you ſwear, or curſe, you will catch no fiſh: And it ſeems theſe were wont to ſwear and curſe when they could not catch. And hence it was a Proverb in other Countries, when they would ſet out an enormious ſwearer, or one given to prophane curſing, they ſaid, He ſweareth, or he curſeth like a fiſher-man: A generation of men whom that age had branded on the tongue, whoſe mouths were full of curſings, and their ordinary diſcourſe, as much oaths as words.

Piſcatore aut nauta maledicentior.

But againſt this expoſition experience is objected; that the uſual time of fiſhing for the Whale, is in the day, not in the night. If it be ſo, then the ground of this opinion is quite overthrown. That ſome kind of fiſhing is a night work, the words and practice of Peter before mentioned, are proof enough: Whether Whale-fiſhing were exerciſed in the night, I ſhall not much contend to prove, ſeeing I approve but little of that interpretation which is bottomed and built upon it.

Beſides, I find others, who ſticking to this tranſlation, (the ſtirring of Leviathan) do yet wave and paſs by this conceit of night-fiſhing: And they ſay that the curſe here, is not to be referred to their rage againſt the light, becauſe it brings the day; but to the day, becauſe it brought them no ſucceſs. So that, day is not oppoſed to night; but a good or ſucceſsful day, to a bad or ſucceſleſs day of fiſhing. And then the ſence is to this effect, that Job calls for ſuch a curſe upon this day, as prophane fiſher-men, who attempt to catch the Whale, uſually ſpend upon that unhappy day wherein they looſe their labour, and after all their hazard and coſt come home empty.

Piſcatores diei maledicunt in quo iis non accidit bonus piſcatus

And when it is objected againſt this Opinion; Why doth Job mention Leviathan, or the Whale, if that be his meaning, to allude unto the ſinful paſſion of diſappointed fiſher-men; for vain men, in that employment, are as apt to curſe and be paſſionate, when they miſs of their intendments in labouring to catch any kind of fiſh?

To this anſwer may be given in two things. Firſt, this buſineſs of fiſhing for the Whale, is a buſineſs of great charge, and greater danger: and becauſe greateſt loſſes raiſe greateſt paſſions, and the higher our diſappointments are, the higher is our language; therefore Job, who intended here the higheſt and greateſt curſe, wiſhes it parallel with that, which the greateſt curſers belch forth, when (as they pretend) they have greateſt occaſions, yea (as they call reaſon) reaſon to curſe: And who ſhould theſe be but ignorant, or idolatrous fiſher-men, and they at ſuch a pinch, when they have loſt the hope of their greateſt gain. As if Job had ſaid, let as big a curſe fall upon that night, as ever fell from the mouths of thoſe prophane fiſhers, not only when they have been ſucceſleſs in fiſhing for a Herring, or a Sprat, but when, after all their pains and coſt, they cannot take Leviathan. Micah's Mother curſed, when the eleven hundred ſhekels of ſilver were ſtollen from her, Judg. 17. 1, 2. To looſe what we hope for, vexes corrupt nature as much as the loſs of what we have. They who have no treaſure in Heaven, and to whom godlineſs is not more then earthly gain, cannot but be enraged, when the hope of their gain is gone upon the earth.

Secondly, We may ſay, he nameth the Leviathan by a Synechdoche, one principal for all, or for any: The chiefeſt of a kind is put for all the kind: And then it is appliable to thoſe ſea-hunters, whatſoever game they purſue. I ſhall touch one way more of illuſtrating the Opinion of thoſe, who take Leviathan in this Text for the Whale. We may conceive it thus, that Job doth not here allude to fiſhing for the Whale, and ſo to that ſucceſleſs fiſhing which provokes to curſing. But take it in the general: The Whale (we know) is a very formidable monſter to Sea-men, and Marriners, the whole ſhip with the lading of it, and all their lives being endangered if a Whale ſtrike it. So we may underſtand that of Job, ſpeaking of Leviathan, Chap. 41.25. When he raiſeth up himſelf, the mighty are affraid. Now the Whale being ſo formidable and dangerous to Seamen; they perceiving the Whale near them, or themſelves at unawares ready to ſtir up or raiſe the Whale, are exceedingly afraid; And as great fear in ſome ſets them a praying, and cauſeth ſtrong prayers, ſo fear in others ſets them a curſing, and cauſeth ſtrong curſes. Prophane marriners, ſeeing themſelves in ſuch imminent danger by the approach of the Whale, preſently curſe the day that ever they looſed anchor or ſet ſail from the Harbour; the day that ever they fell within the reach of this ſea-monſter, now ready to ſink their veſſel, and overwhelm them all. Such a curſe Job wiſhes upon that night, the night of his conception, as men of this rank conceive and bring forth in the day of their moſt preſſing fears, when anguiſh and ſorrow take hold of them, as travail upon a woman with child, and they cannot eſcape.

Thus I have given you the ſum of thoſe apprehenſions which are offered for the making up of this Expoſition; namely, That the word is here to be taken for that mighty fiſh Leviathan; And that either in reſpect of thoſe who make it their buſineſs and go out purpoſely to catch Leviathan, or of thoſe who unawares are ready to be catcht by Leviathan: The former diſappointed of their hopes, and the latter ſurprized with fears, making a curſe their refuge, and eaſing themſelves by execrations.

There is a fourth opinion which giveth the ſenſe of theſe words quite another way, though it retains the ſame tranſlation. For paſſing by the alluſion to fiſhing or cuſtomes of fiſhermen, they make theſe words as a character or deſcription of the extreameſt and vileſt of wicked men; as if Job ſaying, Let them curſe thee that curſe the day, who are ready to ſtir up Leviathan, had ſaid, let the worſt or moſt wicked among the children of men curſe this night; And we know, that the worſt of men are moſt for curſing, they curſe deepeſt; as the beſt of men are moſt for prayer, and they pray higheſt and holieſt. So then, Jobs mind being to lay the foreſt curſe upon this night, thinks or finds his own ſpirit too ſtraight, his own heart not large enough to do it; therefore he doth (as it were) call in aid from thoſe Maſters of curſing, Let the moſt expert, the moſt skill'd in curſing, ſuch as are verſt in oathes and blaſphemies, the very dregs and ſcum of men, let them poure out the dregs, the worſt, the bittereſt of their curſes upon that night.

But how ſhall we make out this notion, that the vileſt of men are here deſcribed? That we muſt conſider and open further, to ſhew the ſubſtance and dependance of this opinion.

The worſt and wickedeſt of men are conceived to be here meant in two expreſſions.

Firſt, by them who are ſaid to curſe the day, Let them curſe it who curſe the day.

Secondly, in theſe words, Who are ready to raiſe up Leviathan. Both theſe are ſuppoſed as deſcriptive circumlocutions of the moſt wicked and vileſt men.

How ſo?

Firſt, They that curſe the day. That which a man hates, he is forward enough to curſe: Wicked men love darkneſs, and they hate the light, therefore they curſe the light. Light is of two ſorts, either natural, that of the Sun; or metaphorical, that of knowledge. Take light either way; take light properly, for the natural light: or take light improperly, for the light or the day of knowledge, wicked men, and eſpecially the worſt of wicked men, will be found curſers of the day. Firſt, They are ſo expreſt in this book of Job, reſpecting the natural day, chap. 24. where having deſcribed many acts of violence committed by cruel oppreſſors, who know not God, verſ. 1. he concludes, verſ. 13. They are of thoſe that rebel againſt the light, they know not the wayes thereof, nor abide in the pathes thereof. And verſ. 16. In the dark they dig through houſes which they had marked out for themſelves in the day time, they know not the light, for the morning is to them even as the ſhadow of death: If one know them, they are in the terrours of the ſhadow of death. Men, to whom the morning is a terrour, and light as the ſhadow of death, cannot but curſe the day, whoſe approach hinders them in their night-works, in their black deſigns and purpoſes. Secondly, Other Scriptures diſcover more deadly hatred in wicked men againſt the light of knowledge; they rebel more againſt the day of grace then againſt the day of nature, or the natural day: The former hinders only the outward practiſe of ſin, but this oppoſes the inward principles of ſin. We ſee what cold entertainment, yea what war this light found in the world, and why, (John 3.19, 20.) Light is come into the world, (that is, Chriſt and the knowledge of his wayes) and men (not men in general, but ungodly men) loved darkneſs rather then light; Why? Becauſe their deeds were evil, (evil deeds, and evil doers ſeek covert in this darkneſs) for every one that doth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, leaſt his deeds ſhould be reproved. They are ignorant willingly, that they may ſin more freely: For though they are reſolved to ſin in and againſt the light of knowledge, yet they had rather ſin in, and with the darkneſs of ignorance; no man can ſin with ſo much eaſe and delight in this light, as he can in darkneſs. A man that hath light in his underſtanding, can hardly ſin without ſmart upon his conſcience: Hence they who love ſin hate knowledge. On this ground it is as clear as the day, that wicked men are (Lucifugæ) ſuch as avoid, ſhun and hate the day, no marvel then if they curſe the day; And to be angry with, or curſe, the day, is an evidence (as clear as the day) of a wicked man. He that deſires not to know the truth, hath no deſire to practiſe it; and he who hates the knowledge of the truth, hates the practiſe of it; yea he therefore hates knowledge, becauſe he hates practice: The is wickedneſs at the height. To commit a ſin againſt light, is not ſo great an argument of an evil heart, as to be troubled at the light which rebukes or would prevent the committing of that ſin. Thus we ſee in what ſenſe, by thoſe who curſe the day, we may underſtand the worſt of wicked men.

But for the ſecond part, [Who are ready to raiſe up Leviathan.] How is this a deſcription of wicked men?

To make out this, we muſt expound Leviathan, not properly for the Whale, but improperly and myſtically for the Devil, that great Leviathan: Under which name, he with all ſpiritual wickedneſſes, the oppoſers of Chriſt and of his Church are comprehended by the Prophet (Iſa. 27.1.) In that day the Lord with his ſore great and ſtrong ſword ſhall puniſh Leviathan, the piercing ſerpent, even Leviathan the crooked ſerpent, and he ſhall ſlay the Dragon in the ſea. Now they that raiſe up this myſtical Leviathan the Devil, are ſurely the vileſt men.

But who do thus? or how can this be done?

They are ſaid to raiſe up Leviathan, who ſeek occaſions of ſinning, ſuch as do not ſtay till Satan tempts them, but they (as it were) tempt Satan. They are ſo haſty, ſo forward to do evil, that they think the Devil comes not faſt enough, and therefore they do even go out to meet, provoke and raiſe up the Devil, they invite temptation: There is a truth in this, All ſins are not from the temptations of Satan; our own hearts are not only the ſoil, and have in them the ſeed of all ſin; but they are ſun and rain, to warm and water thoſe ſeeds that they may grow. And as a godly man (from the new principle at firſt planted in him by the holy Ghoſt) doth often ſtir up the holy Ghoſt to come and help him, he doth not alwayes ſtay till the holy Ghoſt ſenſibly comes, but finding his own weakneſs and wants, and deadneſs to and in duty, he goeth and ſtirreth up the ſpirit of God, and prayeth that the holy Ghoſt would breath upon him, quicken and enliven him in prayer and other holy duties. So many ungodly wretches do not ſtay for Satan, or wait till he comes to tempt them, but they (ſuch is their deſperate wickedneſs and delight in ſin) wiſh that he would tempt them oftner. They do not only keep open houſe, and open heart for him, ready to entertain and welcome him when he comes, but they go forth to ſolicit his company and his coming. This is to ſtir up Leviathan.

Illi parati ſunt ſuſcitare Leviathan, qui ſtudent ad ſuggeſtiones diaboli implendas, Aquin. in loc. Qui ſibi ipſis occaſiones quærunt peccandi elegantèr dicuntur ſuſcitare diabolum.

So that the whole ſenſe according to this expoſition may be given to you thus, as if Job had ſaid, Let this night be curſed with a grievous curſe, even with as black and foul a curſe as can be moulded and faſhioned in the heart, or ſpit out of the mouthes of the vileſt miſcreants, even of ſuch as are ſo ſet upon ſin, that they hate the light and curſe the day which either the Sun makes in the air, or which knowledge makes in their hearts, leſt that ſhould ſtop and hinder them in the acting of ſin; yea let ſuch a curſe be upon it, as they uſe to vomit out, who are ſo ſet upon miſchief, and engaged to their luſts, that they pray in aid from the Devil, to aſſiſt and quicken them in their wickedneſs; that ſo their natural corruptions being oyled and ſmoothed with his temptations, their motions to ſin (and indeed to Hell) may be ſwifter and more violent. Theſe are they that give diligence to make their damnation ſure: Theſe are they from whom the kingdom of Hell ſuffers violence, and theſe violent ones (rather then not have it) will take it by force. Surely their damnation ſleeps not, who (leaſt they ſhould not ſin enough) awaken the Devil to ſhew them ſinning opportunities. To ſuch as theſe (according to the interpretation now ſuggeſted) Job commits his night to curſing, Let them curſe it who curſe the day, &c.

Now though there be a truth in the things which are aſſerted in this opinion, taken abſtractedly; though it be a truth that wicked men are ſuch as curſe the day of air-light, and the day of knowledge-light; though they are often ſo mad to be ſinning, that they provoke and tempt the Devil, yet I will not give this for the ſenſe and meaning of the words: rather you may take it and make uſe of it as an Allegory upon, then an Expoſition of, the Text.

The laſt opinion, with which I ſhall conclude the opening of the words, is this: That Job in this verſe, doth allude to the cuſtom of his own countrey, and of other Eaſtern Countries, who had certain perſons amongſt them, both men and women, whom, upon ſolemn occaſions either of joy or ſorrow, they were wont to hire or call in for reward, to come and help them out either in rejoycing or in mourning. We find mention of ſuch in Scripture divers times, who were thus called and invited or hired to mourn and lament, in times of ſad and ſorrowful accidents, whether perſonal or publick. Theſe had (Lacrimas venales) tears to ſell, or ſale-tears, making both a profeſſion and a profit of mourning. Such the Prophet ſpeaks of, Jer. 9. 17, 18. Thus ſaith the Lord, Conſider ye, and call for the mourning women, (he ſpeaks of them as of a ſociety or ſiſter-hood well known, and as well cuſtom'd) and cunning women, that they may come, (that is, women cunning in mourning.) And let them make haſte, and take up a wailing for us, that our eyes may run down with tears, and our eye-lids guſh forth with waters: for a voyce of wailing is heard out of Zion, How are we ſpoiled? And verſ. 20. Teach your daughters wailing, and every one her neighbour Lamentation; (you ſee it was an art taught amongſt them,) for death is come up into our windows, &c. In 2 Chron. 35. 25. We have a record to the ſame effect, concerning the lamentation for Joſiah. And Jeremiah lamented for Joſiah, and all the ſinging-men and ſinging-women ſpake of Joſiah in their lamentations to this day. So that there were both men and women prepared and uſually called forth to lament ſuch occaſions of ſorrow. Again, Amos 5. 16. Therefore the Lord, the God of Hoſts, the Lord ſaith thus, wailing ſhall be in all ſtreets, and they ſhall ſay in all the high-ways, Alas, Alas! And they ſhall call the husbandman to mourning, and ſuch as are skilful of lamentation to wailing. Obſerve here different mourners, they ſhall call the husbandman to mourning, and ſuch as are skilful of lamentation to wailing. You ſee he ſpeaks of two ſorts of perſons, they ſhall call the husbandman to mourning; Husbandmen are ſuch as mourn when they mourn, when they mourn, they mourn indeed, they mourn down-right; but beſides theſe who mourned (Ex animo) really, there was another ſort who did but perſonate ſorrow, and act a part in grief; ſo ſaith the Prophet, Call in ſome who are skilful of lamentation, men or women who have ſtudied the point, and know how to move a paſſion, and to heighten an affection beyond that which the plain husbandman can do; Let the husbandman mourn, but beſides that, let there be art and ſolemnity in the mourning, call in thoſe that are skilful of Lamentation. There was a kind of profeſſion, trade or art of mourning; which is further evidenced, (2 Sam. 14. 2.) Joab ſent to Tekoah to fetch thence a wiſe woman, (which is interpreted in the words following, to be a woman skilful in lamentation,) and ſaid unto her, I pray thee fain thy ſelf to be a mourner: Thou art a cunning woman, thou knoweſt how to act the part and poſtures of a mourner to the life, Go to David, and fain thy ſelf to be a mourner, and as a woman that had a long time mourned for the dead. And it is obſerved to this day in many places, (and as I have been informed frequently in Ireland) that not only friends and neighbours are called to lament at the funeral of their friends and neighbours, but many others no way related, ſcarce ever known to the perſon deceaſed, who come profeſſedly to ſtrain for tears, and make lamentable out-cryes over the dead. To ſuch a cuſtome or profeſſion Job here alluding, ſaith, Let them curſe it who curſe the day.

• Solent in luctu voce flebili, & lacertis manibus verberantis ad lachrymas populū provocare. Hic enim mos permanet in Judea, ut mulieres ſparſis crinibus nudatiſq; pectoribus voce modulata omnes ad fletum concitent. Hieron. in c. 9. Jerem.

If it be objected, that this Text ſpeaks of ſuch as curſe the day, and not of ſuch as mourn upon or bemoan the day. That is eaſily removed, becauſe upon thoſe days of mourning, they were wont to mix execrations with their lamentations, and curſes with their tears: crying out, oh the day! alas for the day! oh that ever ſuch a day came! In the thirtieth of Ezekiel, verſ. 2. The Lord ſaith, Son of man, propheſie and ſay, thus ſaith the Lord God, howl ye, wo worth the day. Theſe did curſe the day: and ſuch were hired in that ſenſe to curſe the day. As Balaam (who loved the wages of unrighteouſneſs) was hired to curſe the people of God, Numb. 22. So then the curſing here meant, was a doleful wiſh, that the day had not been, or that ſuch things had not happened upon that day: And ſo theſe words, Let them curſe it who curſe the day, who are ready to raiſe up their mourning, are only a circumlocution, deſcribing thoſe mercenary curſers or mourners: As if Job had in more words ſaid thus, Let this night be curſed in as high a ſtrain, and mourned over with as enlarged ſorrows, as the art and invention of thoſe, whoſe trade is curſing, and who have tears at command, ever did or can put forth, when hired on purpoſe to mourn over the ſaddeſt ſpectacles and moſt calamitous events.

Now this being taken for a ground-work, that in thoſe times and Countries, men and women were hired to mourn, and that an art of mourning was then profeſt; the difficulties that are in the Text oppoſing this, are further to be examined: For here ſtill it ſeemeth doubtful, how this word Leviathan can fall in with ſuch an interpretation, or be applied to thoſe hired and profeſſed mourners. Towards the clearing of which, I ſhall a little open three words.

The firſt is (Gnatidim) who are ready: which ſignifies a prepared and meditated active readineſs; as we find in two Texts of the Book of Heſter, The copie of the writing for a commandment to be given in every Province, was publiſhed unto all people, that they ſhould be ready againſt that day, chap. 3. 14. and again, chap. 8. 13. So that in Job, to be ready to raiſe up their mourning, notes more then an immediate going about a thing; As we ſay, I am ready to do a thing, that is, I will or muſt do it preſently: For it notes alſo a ſtudied readineſs or preparedneſs to do a thing.

The ſecond word is (Gnour) to raiſe up, which is properly to raiſe from ſleep, as in that place, Pſal. 44. 23. Awake, why ſleepeſt thou, O Lord? Ariſe, caſt us not off for ever.

The third word is (Leviathan) which hath two other ſignifications, both appliable to this interpretation.

First, Divers of the Rabbins tranſlate it by the Hebrew word (Ebel,) which ſignifies mourning or ſorrow; and with the pronoun affixed, their ſorrow or their mourning. And this is aſſerted by the learned Mercer, for the plaineſt meaning of the word, and ſo found in the writings of the Hebrew Doctors, which alſo directly anſwers our tranſlation, who are ready to raiſe up their mourning.

Secondly, The word (Leviathan) is derived (according to the opinion of others) from Lavah, i. e. joyned or aſſociated. Hence Leviath, i. e. ſociety or fellowſhip: to which the ſame pronoune being affixed, the word Leviathan is made up, and according to that extraction and compoſition, is rendred (ſocietatem ſuam) their ſociety or their company. And the word in this derivation and conſtruction of it, falls in with the ſenſe of the former interpretation, who are ready to raiſe and ſtir up their company, namely to go forth and mourn, or their company of mourners. And the reaſon is two-fold, why they are, or may be, ſaid to raiſe up their company of mourners.

עֹרֵר: Expoſui cū Hebrais Leviathan ſimpliciter, pro אבלם luctum ſuū, ut ſit Nun pro Mem, ſicut alias hæc confundi videas. Quo ſignificatu in ſcriptis doctorum Hebræorum occurrit, & ex lingua Syriaca Sumptū eſt vicinum nomini, אליא ſic & Chaldæus vertit. Simpliciſſimum eſt Leviathan pro luctu exponere cum Hebrais, Merc.

Firſt, Becauſe thoſe ſolemn mourners were uſually a great many, they were a company, a Chorus or a Quire, making a doleful lamentation; and ſo when they were to mourn, they called together, or raiſed up their company of mourners. And the word [raiſed] is proper for a ſecond reaſon; becauſe in ſuch mournings, it was accuſtomed to riſe up very early, or early to raiſe up one another. As David, ſpeaking of muſical rejoycing, Pſal. 108. 2. ſaith, Awake pſaltery, and harp, I my ſelf will awake early; the Hebrew is very emphatical in that place, word for word thus, I my ſelf will awaken the morning; as if he ſhould ſay, the morning ſhall not awaken me, but I will awaken the morning; the morning ſhall not find me ſleeping, but I will be up firſt, and call up the morning. So thoſe mourners uſed to awake early in the morning, or rather to awaken the morning; and they had one woman, whom they called (Præfica) the leader, the firſt or the chief of the quire and company of mourners (plangendi Magiſtra) whoſe office it was to call up and bring on the reſt. It appears in the Goſpel of Matthew, that the Jews (in thoſe times) uſed to call in muſick to their mournings; for when Chriſt came to the Rulers houſe, whoſe daughter was dead, the Text ſaith, He ſaw the minſtrels and the people making a noiſe (Mat. 9. 23.) And Joſephus relating the ſtory of his own ſuppoſed death, ſhews how all the City of Jeruſalem continued a mourning for him thirty dayes. And he adds, directly to this point, that many Muſitians were hired, for reward, to lead thoſe ſongs, to direct the ſolemnity of thoſe lamentations.

עִיר

Præficæ dicebantur apud veteres, quæ adhiberi ſolerunt funeri, mercede conductæ, ut & flerent, & fortia facta laudarent. Non. Marcel. Quæ præficeretur ancillis quemadmodum lamentarentur præfica eſt dicta. Varro. l. 6. Πλείϛȣς ᵹ μιϑῶσαι, τȣ̀ς αὐλητὰς οἱ ϑρήνων ἐξῆρχον αὐτοῖς. Joſeph. l. 3. de Pol. Jud. c. 15.

This expoſition (upon the ſuppoſition of alluding to that cuſtom in mourning, and the allowance of thoſe ſignifications of the word Leviathan) hath a clear and a fair ſence, reſpecting the ſeries of the Text: Job having ſo far poured out a curſe upon, and lamented his night, he (as it were) calls for thoſe to finiſh and conclude it, who traded in ſuch kind of curſes, and who were skilled in lamentations.

There is an objection againſt this, taken from the grammatical regimen or conſtruction of the Original. The Hebrew word [who are ready] is of the Maſculine gender, and the Pronoun relating to it (Leviathan) their mourning, is of the Feminine gender; ſo that here ſeems to be a fault in Grammar, if we expound it thus, their mourning, or, their company of mourners.

הָעֲתִידִים

Mos eſt ſcripturæ ut ſæpe cum agitur de actionibus cantandi, lugendi, & etiam ardenter amandi rem aliquam nominibus maſculis verba fœminini generis jungantur, vel affixis fœmineis maſculina nomina afficiantur, ut excellentia illius actionis indicetur, quia mulieres in hujuſmodi actionibus excellunt. Bolduc. in loc.

To this we may give a double anſwer.

Firſt, That ſuch changes of one Gender for another, are frequently obſerved in Scripture, by the learned in the Originals.

Secondly, The relative word is conjectured to be put in the Feminine gender, becauſe women were moſt uſually called forth to that work of mourning. And it is further obſervable, that where the Scripture ſpeaks of thoſe actions of mourning, or rejoycing, or loving, which are works of affection, it uſeth to aſcribe them to women rather then to men, becauſe they are quicker in affection, and fuller of affection then men, and ſo more ready to act or expreſs ſuch joys or ſorrows, then men are.

For the cloſe of this point, I ſhall add the apprehenſion of a learned Expoſitor; who taking the words in this laſt ſence, as referring to thoſe ſolemn mournings, yet conceives that the word Leviathan muſt ſtand here in the letter; not as if Job had any intendment here to ſpeak of the fiſh Leviathan, or to allude to fiſhing for Leviathan; but either becauſe Heathens in thoſe execrations, did invoke or provoke Leviathan, that is the Devil; or becauſe in thoſe ſolemn ſongs of lamentation, Leviathan was a word much uſed, or Leviathan was the firſt word of ſome of thoſe lamenting ſongs; for in execrations, ſtrange, uncouth, dreadful words were purpoſely uſed, the more to affect and aſtoniſh the hearers: Now there is no word more dreadful then Leviathan; whether we take it for that ſea-monſter the Whale, or for that Hell-monſter the Devil. And ſo the meaning is this; Let them curſe it, who curſe the day, who are ready to raiſe up Leviathan; that is, Let thoſe mourners, who ſing that moſt paſſionate ſong of mourning, which begins with, or is entituled Leviathan. It is ordinary among us, to call for a ſong, or to call a ſong by the general ſubject-matter of it, or by the firſt word of it. And ſo, many books of Scripture have their names in the Hebrew from the firſt word; as the book of Geneſis is called Bereſith, or, In the beginning; and Exodus, Veele ſemoth (that is) And theſe are the names: becauſe both begin with thoſe words in the Hebrew. So the ſong which was the form of thoſe Lamentations, might be called Leviathan; becauſe (ſaith this Author) it began with that word; and he alledgeth a proverbial tradition for it out of Mariana, which he had received from a Jew, that it was forbidden upon the feaſt-day to raiſe up Leviathan; that is, they might not take up that execratory ſong which beginneth with Leviathan. I only preſent this opinion, becauſe it ſuits with, and illuſtrates the former notion of ſolemn mourning.

In execrationibus illa communiter adhibentur, quæ horribilia ſunt, quæq; hominibus metum ac terrorem incutiunt: In aquatilibus nihil audimus horribilius Leviathan. Sanct. in loc. Carmen illud dicebatur Leviathan, quemadmodum multa carmina ab iis ſumpſerunt nomen de quibus inſtituta ſunt. Idem.

Thus I have with as much ſpeed and clearneſs as I could, given you the meaning of theſe words. That which favours their ſence moſt, who keep to the word Leviathan, is, that this Book ſpeaks afterward of Leviathan, to ſhew the power of the Creator, and that powerful creature. And I find the very ſame phraſe of raiſing or ſtirring up Leviathan, uſed in that place, chap. 41. ver. 10. None is ſo fierce that dare ſtir (or raiſe) him up. The Hebrew word which there we tranſlate, ſtir, in this third chapter is tranſlated raiſe Leviathan. Yet I rather incline to the lattet expoſition, reſpecting mourning; both becauſe it hath the authority of our Engliſh Bible to countenance it, our Tranſlators putting mourning in the Text, and Leviathan in the margin; as alſo, becauſe it carries a clearer correſpondence and agreement, both with antecedents and conſequents, both with the matter and with the frame of Job's complaint and curſe in this Chapter.

Taking the words in this ſence, that Job calls to have his night curſed in ſuch a ſolemn manner, as thoſe hired mourners uſed to lament and bewail the dayes of humane calamities, we may obſerve,

First, That, hope of profit will turn ſome ſpirits into any poſture.

Lamenting and mourning is an unpleaſant work, but profit and reward ſweetens and makes it pleaſant. Some men will be in any action, ſo they may get by it; they will mourn for hire, and curſe for hire; ſo did Balaam. Balaam was ſent for to curſe the people of God, Numb. 22. He made many delayes, and ſeemingly conſcientious ſcruples; yet at laſt he goes about the work, as black and bad as it was. But what overcame him, and anſwered all his doubts about the undertaking of ſuch a work? The Text in Peter reſolves us, he loved the wages of unrighteouſneſs. He that loves wages, will quickly love any work which brings in wages. Upon the ſtage you might have any paſſion for your money; joy and ſorrow, love and hatred, all acted and perſonated (beyond the perſonal temper or occaſions of the men) meerly for reward. And (which is the higheſt argument of a mercenary ſpirit) ſome act holineſs for hire, and are godly for outward gain.

Secondly, In that Job calls others to mourn over and condole that night; obſerve,

That, Some troubles exceed our own ſorrows; and we may want the eyes and tongues of others to expreſs them by.

My heart (ſaith Job) is not large enough, and I have not art enough to act, much leſs to aggravate my own afflictions; let them do it whoſe profeſſion and practice it is, to curſe the day. Sometimes the mercies which we receive, and the joy that the ſoul conceives, is more then we can expreſs or be thankful enough for; and then we ſend to others, both private Chriſtians and whole Congregations, deſiring them to help us, to lend us their hearts and their tongues, their affections, and their voyces, in that Angelical work, the praiſes of our God; Let them bleſs God who bleſs the day (who are vers'd in dayes and duties of thankſgiving) who are ready to raiſe up their rejoycings. David ſaith, Come and hear, all ye that fear God, and I will declare what he hath done for my ſoul, Pſal.66.16. He had not told them what God had done for his ſoul, but to gain the help of their ſouls in praiſing God, for what he had done.

Sometime alſo a Chriſtian is ſo engaged in prayer for the obtaining of a mercy, and finds his heart ſo much below his ſuit, that he calls out to all thoſe, who have any holy ſkill in praying, pray for me, pray with me, the buſineſs is too big for me alone. How earneſtly doth Paul beg prayers? Now I beſeech you brethren, for the Lord Jeſus Chriſts ſake, and for the love of the ſpirit, that ye ſtrive together with me, in prayers to God for me; that I may be delivered, &c. Rom. 15. 30.

As it is thus in praying and rejoycing, ſo it may be in mourning and in ſorrowing; and troubles are very deep, when they exceed our own ſorrows, as mercies are very great, when they are beyond our own praiſes. We in this Nation, have cauſe to fear ſuch troubles, even ſuch, as may cauſe us to invite the hearts and ſpirits, the bowels and compaſſions of all the Chriſtians in the world to come and and lament over us; we may be forced to ſend not only for the Husbandman, thoſe plain-hearted mourners; but for thoſe alſo, who are ſkilful in Lamentations; ſuch as Jeremy, to ſet a ſong in the higheſt ſtrains of lamentation, for the bewailing of our troubles; and ſay, let ſuch lament our day, as lamented Jeruſalem; let ſuch lament it, as have lately lamented Germany; ſuch as now lament the ruines and deſolations of Ireland.

Verſe 9. Let the ſtars of the twilight thereof be dark, let it look for light, but have none, neither let it ſee the dawning of the day.

This is the laſt part of the curſe which Job paſſeth upon his night; Let the ſtars of the twilight thereof be dark. Some comforts of the night are natural, others are accidental. Job, in the former verſes, wiſhes away the accidental comforts; the meeting of friends, and the voice of muſick: In this verſe, he removes the natural comforts of the night; which are two. Firſt, The preſent light of the ſtars. Secondly, The expected light of the ſun.

The firſt comfort of the night is, that though it be dark, by the abſence of the Sun, yet there is ſome light, by the preſence and ſhining of the ſtars; and it is a greater comfort in the night, to remember, that though now I have no light, but from a glimmering ſtar, yet ſhortly the light of the glorious Sun will ſhine upon me. But in how dark a condition is the night, when the Sun is gone, and the ſtars too? when the Stars are clouded from ſhining, and the Sun ſtaid from riſing? This Job wiſhes as the ſtate of that night; let the Stars thereof be dark; yea, let it have no hope to ſee the Sun, that is, let it be an everlaſting night.

נשף Crepuſculū eſt tam veſpertinum quam matutinum.

Let the ſtars of the twilight thereof be dark.] By twilight, we are to underſtand the beginning of the night, or the evening, when the Stars firſt appear; the word ſignifies both twilights, the twilight of the evening, and the twilight of the morning. The ſtars of the twilight, are thoſe reſplendent ſtars (ſo much obſerved by Aſtronomers, and obſervable by the vulgar) which ſhine in the evening and the morning.

When Job would have theſe Stars of the twilight to be dark, he at once takes away a threefold benefit from the night. Firſt, Theſe Stars are a great ornament to the night: What a glorious ſpectacle is it, to ſee the canopie of heaven beſpangled with the Stars, as a garment ſet with ſtuds or O's of go'd? Secondly, The Stars are a great delight and comfort in the night. Thirdly, The Stars are for direction, and as guides in the night: Hence ſea-men and travellers mourn when they cannot ſee the Stars. The ſtars are the Mariners guide in the night; while his hand is upon the helm, his eye is toward heaven; and in the heavens his eye is upon the light and motion of the ſtars. The woful condition of thoſe ſea-men in the ſtorm, is thus expreſt, Acts 27. 20. Now when for many dayes neither Sun nor Star had appeared. When Sea-men feel a ſtorm in the night, and cannot ſee a Star in the night, their caſe is almoſt deſperate: Though the light of a Star be little, yet the benefit is very great.

Let it look for light, but have none.] The Hebrew is, Let it look for light, and none; which is an uſual Illeipſis: we ſupply the word (have) Let it look for light, and have none.

Let it look for light.] He putteth that in to aggravate the ſorrow of that night. I would have this night expect the light, let it wait, and look for it earneſtly; but let it have none: let it be full of hopes, but empty of enjoyments. Let that night know no ſucceſſion of a day: whereas uſually the Sun goes and returns, it ſets and riſes; now let it go, and not return; let it ſet, and never riſe again.

Eum vellem ne ſubſequatur dies, ne aurora quidem.

Neither let it ſee the dawning of the day.] He doth not only wiſh away full, clear and perfect light, but the dawning of the day, which is imperfect light; let not ſo much as the beginning or firſt moment of a morning ſucceed that night. The words in the original are, Let it not ſee the eyelids of the morning: It is a very elegant expreſſion, noting the firſt breakings of light, when the Sun peeps above the Horizon, which Poets call the rayes of light, ſtreams of light, or the wings of the morning: As our Lord Chriſt, the Sun of righteouſneſs, is ſaid to riſe with healing in his wings (Mal. 4. 2.) So the eye-lids of the morning, alluding to the Sun, which is the eye of heaven, and when the day dawneth, the eye-lids of heaven open, the Sun awakens, and looks out; even as when a man awakes firſt, his eyelids open: Theſe rayes of the Sun are compared to eyelids, becauſe, like the eye-lids, they twinkle or move continually, darting themſelves forth into the air, and upon the earth.

בעפעפי שחר Primus albicantis auroræ ſplendor, quem cælii poetæ radios capillos, pennas auroræ dicant.

Sunt palpebræ auroræ radii qui ſub auroram emicare ſolent. Mercer

In that Job forbids the Star-light, and would take away the hope of Sun-light from that night, obſerve,

First, That, In ſad times ſmall comforts may paſs for great mercies.

In the day-time, no man looks after the ſtars; ſtar-light is not valued, while ſun-light is enjoyed; but in the night, a ſtar is a welcom ſight. He that is full (ſaith Solomon) deſpiſeth the honey-comb; but to the hungry ſoul, every bitter thing is ſweet. When a man is hungry and wants, a little is pleaſant to him; as our proverb hath it. Half a loaf is better then none. A great Emperor once drank puddle-water with more delight (he profeſſed) then ever he had drunk the moſt delicious wines. Sad times and hardſhip make that pleaſant and very acceptable; which in plenty we ſlight and paſs by. Hence it follows, That the removing of ſmall comforts in ſad times, are great afflictions. If Stars (which have but little light) be taken from the night, a great affliction is added to the night. Some can loſe more then another mans all, and yet feel it not, yet think they have loſt nothing. We are not troubled at the loſs of ſmall things, when we enjoy greater; but when all we have, are ſmall, then any thing we loſe, is great. As in Nathan's Parable, (2 *Sam.*12.) when the poor man, having loſt but one Lamb had loſt all, he complains greatly.

Artaxerxes penè ſiti pereunte, cum aquam ebibiſſet ſordidam, quæſivit ab eo Eunuchus ecquid non plurimum moleſtiæ hoc potu ſenſiſſet? Reſpondit rex, nunquam ita ſuaviter ſe vel vinum bibiſſe vel aquam puriſſimam. Pezal. Mel. hiſtor. l. 1.

Secondly, Job ſaith, Let it look for light, but have none; there is much in that: he doth not ſay, Let this night have no light; but, Let it look for light, but have none. From this we may obſerve,

That, The want of that, afflicteth us moſt, which we expect moſt.

If the night (that is, man in the night) did not expect and look for light, it would not be much troubled with the abſence of light. To loſe our expectation, is more then the loſs of the thing expected. It is ſaid of Siſera's mother (Judg. 5. 28.) when her Son was upon that expedition againſt the people of God, that ſhe looked out at a window, and cried through the latteſs, why is his chariot ſo long in coming? why tarry the wheels of his chariot? She looked for a victorious ſucceſs, and rich ſpoiles; for her wiſe Ladies anſwered her, yea, ſhe returned anſwer to her ſelf; have they not ſped? have they not divided the prey? to every man a damoſel or two, to Siſera a prey of divers colours? &c. This cut her to the heart, that ſhe looked for great booty, and reckoned upon a victory, when Siſera was faſt nailed through the Temples, never to return.

That man is greatly burdened, from whom others expect much; but he who expects much, is in danger to be more burdened. Therefore David prayes, Pſal. 119. 116. Let me not be aſhamed of my hope. As ſhame ariſes from doing a thing againſt known light and common principles, ſo alſo from loſing or ſuffering a thing againſt known hope and common expectation. It is noted as an aggravation of that peoples affliction in the Prophet, We looked for peace, and behold, no good came; and for a time of health, and behold trouble, Jer. 8. 15. For a people to be in expectation of ſome great mercy, doubles the ſorrow of their miſcarriage: Now in theſe times, we being in our night of trouble, and (as it were) looking when day will break, when our peace will return, when truth will prevail and be ſetled, when error and the abettors of it ſhall be overthrown: How would it augment our ſorrows, if we, looking for theſe mercies, ſhould not have them? As it is a greater affliction to be miſerable to be miſerable, when we have been happy; ſo when we have long hoped to be happy. God expreſſes himſelf, as much troubled, when he loſes his expectation from us: It provokes the Spirit of God to anger againſt us, when he looks for the fruits of his care and love in our obedience, and findeth none (Iſa. 5.) God looked that his vineyard ſhould have brought forth grapes, and it brought forth wild grapes. He looked for judgment, and behold oppreſſion; for righteouſneſs, & behold a cry: This diſappointment provoked the Lord to lay his vineyard waſte. So in the Goſpel, when Chriſt cometh to the fig-tree three years, ſeeking or looking for fruit, and findeth none: What then? Cut it down, ſaith Chriſt; he is very angry, thus miſſing his expectation. Now, as it provokes the anger of God to come looking upon man, his creature, for duty, and finds none; ſo it doth likewiſe exceedingly grieve the ſpirit of man, when he looks to God for mercy, and finds none. And how juſt is it, that God ſhould croſs our expectation, when we ſo often croſs his. No marvel if we look for light, and behold darkneſs; for peace, and behold trouble; for ſucceſs, and behold diſappointments: whenas God looks upon us for repentance, and behold preſumption; for faith, and behold unbelief; for patience, and behold complaining; for reformation, and behold backſliding; for fruit, and behold barrenneſs, or but leaves.

Fourthly, He ſaith, Let it not ſee the dawning of the day, that is, let it be quite out of hope ever to receive any light; therefore let it not ſee ſo much as a glimpſe of light. It is the ſtrongeſt denial of the whole, to deny the leaſt of the firſt part: As when the Apoſtle would have us abſtain from all evil, he exhorts us to abſtain from the appearance of evil (1 Theſ. 5.) So here, when Job would put his night quite out of hope to ſee the day, he ſaith, Let it not ſee (ſo much as) the dawning (that is, the leaſt appearance) of the day. And this, as it is the laſt, ſo the heavieſt ſentence upon his night. Hence obſerve,

That, A hopeleſs condition is the worſt condition of all other.

Let a night be never ſo dark, never ſo tempeſtuous, yet the hope of a morning is a mercy and a light. A man will bear any heavineſs, when he can ſay as David, Heavineſs may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning. Solomon tells us, that the hope deferred makes the heart ſick, Prov. 13. 12. How ſick then are they who are hopeleſs, or, who have quite loſt their hope? Everlaſtingneſs is the head of the arrow, the ſting and poiſon of all miſeries, it is indeed the ſting of Hell; that hell is ſuch a night as never ſhall ſee the dawning of the day, hath more torment and pain in it, then all the pains in hell. As the puniſhment of loſs in hell, pinches more then the puniſhment of ſenſe, ſo in the loſs, this pinches moſt that the loſs is irrecoverable: They are deprived of the glory of God, and ſhall never ſee the leaſt ray of it for ever; they are in darkneſs, and they have no hope of light at all for ever.

As that which makes heaven ſo full of joy, is, that heaven is above all fear; ſo that which makes hell ſo full of terror, is, that hell is below all hope; heaven is a day which ſhall never ſee any approaches of night, and hell is a night that ſhall never ſee any dawnings of the day. So, proportionably in any affliction of this life, to be hopeleſs of deliverance, to ſay it ſhall never have end, I am in ſuch a night as ſhall have no day, no, not the dawning of a day, this is the utmoſt evil, the extremity of affliction.

So much concerning the curſe it ſelf, which Job powred out with ſo much paſſion, both againſt the day of his birth, and the night of his conception. We ſhall now here ſee the reaſon of this paſſion, in the words which follow.

VERS. 10, 11, 12, 13.

Becauſe it ſhut not up the doors of my mothers womb, nor hid ſorrow from mine eyes.

Why died not I from the womb? why did I not give up the ghoſt when I came out of the belly?

Why did the knees prevent me? or why the breſts, that I ſhould ſuck?

For now ſhould I have lien ſtill, and been quiet, I ſhould have ſlept; then had I been at reſt.

We are now come to the ſecond general part of this Chapter. You may remember, the whole was divided into three Sections. The firſt ſhewed us the curſe which Job powred out upon his day. The ſecond, The cauſe or ground of that curſe. And the third, A vehement expoſtulation about the continuance of his life, and the lengthning of his dayes.

We have heard the curſe opened already in the nine former verſes, now followeth the cauſe of the curſe. Job gives an account or reaſon of his paſſion: If any ſhould check him with, Why doſt thou thus breath out complaints againſt the day of thy birth? why doſt thou write ſuch bitter things againſt the night of thy conception? he anſwered as David did his brethren, in another caſe, 1 Sam. 17. Why, what have I done or ſpoken? is there not a cauſe? Or, as Jonah, when God reproves him about his paſſion for the withered gourd; Doſt thou well to be angry? Jonah replies, yes, I do well to be angry, even unto death, chap. 4. 9. So ſaith Job here to any that ſhould rebuke him with, do you well to be thus angry with your day? yes, I do well to be angry with my day, and I ſhew you why; becauſe it ſhut not up the doors of my mothers womb, &c.

The reaſon of the argument ſtands thus; There is cauſe I ſhould curſe that day and that night, which not hindring my conception or my birth, brought me forth upon the ſtage of the world, to act a part in all theſe ſorrows; but the day and the night did not hinder my conception or my birth, therefore I have cauſe, I have reaſon enough to break out in ſuch complaints, and curſe them: I do it, becauſe theſe ſhut not up the doors of my mothers womb. This is the argument or reaſon by which he defers his paſſion; and this argument will be found to have more paſſion in it, then reaſon, if we examine it to the bottom. For he complains of that as the cauſe, which was not the cauſe of his troubles: what did the night or the day, that he thus chargeth them? they had no efficiency in bringing thoſe evils upon him; circumſtances are not cauſes: Effects are produced in time, but time doth not produce effects; only this we may ſay to help it, he doth not curſe the day, as if he could have ſhut the doors of his mothers womb, but becauſe on that day thoſe doors were not ſhut.

But leaving the reaſon of his ſpeech, we will conſider the ſence of it.

The Hebrew word for word is thus rendred, Becauſe it ſhut not up the doors of my belly. And that the Chaldee Paraphraſt renders thus by way of explanation, becauſe it did not ſhut up the doors of my lips; the mouth (ſaith he) being (as it were) the door or the in-let to the belly or ſtomach, every thing goeth in by that door; and ſo he carries the ſence thus, let that night be curſed, becauſe it did not ſtop my breath, and ſo make an end of me. The Septuagint hath it thus, Becauſe it ſhut not up [the doors of my mothers belly) which anſwers our Tranſlation, the doors of my mothers womb. Mr. Broughton to the ſame ſence; Becauſe it ſhut not up the door of the belly that did bear me, that is, my mothers belly.

Quia non-cluſit portas maxillarum mearum, quæ ſunt oſtia ventris.

πύλας γαστρὸς μητρὸς μου. Sept.

I ſhall in ſilence paſs over that ſecret or myſtery in nature, which may be the ground of this expreſſion. There are two ſecrets in Divinity, which are the g[illegible]nds of it; and of them I ſhall ſpeak.

The firſt is this, When God layes that affliction of barrenneſs upon the woman, he, according to the phraſe of Scripture, is ſaid to ſhut up the womb; and when he ſendeth the bleſſing of fruitfulneſs, he is ſaid to open the womb. We have both, Gen. 20. 18. When Abimelech had taken Sarah, Abraham's wife, the Lord faſt cloſed up all the wombs of the houſe of Abimelech. The meaning of it is this, he made all the women barren; or with-held the bleſſing of conception;

tion; the Jewiſh Expoſitors render the meaning of the very words of this Text, that the Lord had ſhut up all the doors of the wombs of the houſe of Abimelech. And ſo likewiſe for fruitfulneſs God is ſaid to open the womb, as Gen. 29. 31. And when the Lord ſaw that Leah was hated, he opened her womb; but Rachel was barren. Then, to ſhut the doors of the womb, notes the power of God in denying; and to open thoſe doors, the bleſſing of God in giving conception and making fruitful.

Secondly, It may refer to the birth: for, there muſt be an opening of thoſe doors, and that by an Almighty power, for production as well as for conception, and therefore David (Pſal. 22. 9.) aſcribes it to the Lord; Lord thou art he who tookeſt me out of my mothers womb. It was not the Midwife did it; it was not the womens help that ſtood about his mother, But Lord thou didſt it: The hand of God only is able to open that door and let man into the world: Unleſs he (as we may ſo ſpeak) turn the key, the poor Infant muſt for ever lye in priſon, and make his mothers womb his grave.

In either or both theſe reſpects Job here ſpeaks againſt the night, becauſe it ſhut not up the door of his mothers womb, to ſtop his conception, or ſtay him in the birth: For then, either he had not been, or he had not been brought forth as the ſubject of all thoſe calamities.

Hence obſerve, firſt, That fruitfulneſs or conception is the ſpecial work and bleſſing of God.

God carries the key of the womb in his own hand. From him we receive life and breath, (Acts 17. 25.) yea in his book are all our members written, which in continuance were faſhioned, when as yet there was none of them: We are fearfully and wonderfully made: Our ſubſtance is not hid from God, when we are made in ſecret, and curiouſly wrought in the loweſt parts of the earth. As the holy Ghoſt admirably and moſt elegantly deſcribes the conception and formation of man in the womb, Pſal. 139. 14, 15, 16.

There are four keyes in nature, all kept in the hand of God.

Firſt, The key of the Rain. The Clouds cannot open themſelves, the Flood gates of Heaven cannot be unlocked, nor thoſe ſluces opened to let down a drop of Rain, until God turn the key, Deut. 28. 12. The Lord ſhall open unto thee his good treaſure, the Heaven to give the rain unto thy land in his ſeaſon.

Secondly, The key of Nutrition, or of Food, Pſal. 145. 16. Thou openeſt thy hand and ſatisfieſt the deſire of every living thing. The ſtrength of the creature is ſhut up in the hand of God, and until he unlock his hand; the creatures cannot ſtrengthen or nouriſh us, though we have our houſes and our hands full of them.

Thirdly, The key of the Grave, Ezek. 37. 13. I will open your graves, and cauſe you to come out of your graves. We are ſo faſt lockt up in death, that all the power in the world is not able to releaſe us, till God ſpeak the word, and turn the key of the Graves door. That place in Ezekiel is meant (I know) of a civil death: But it is as true of natural death: And the argument is ſtronger for it: If when a Nation (as the Nation of the Jews then did) lyes in the grave of bondage and captivity, no man can unlock that door without the key of Gods ſpecial providence; much leſs can any hand or power, but his, open the door, and bring us out of the grave of our corporal diſſolution.

There is this fourth key, belonging to the door ſpoken of in the Text, The door of the womb: Which was ſhadowed in that Ceremonial Law among the Jews, of giving their firſt-born unto God, as a thankful acknowledgment, that the beginning of all propagation and increaſe was from him.

Further obſerve, That our birth and production is the ſpecial work of God.

Thou art he that tookeſt me out of my mothers womb, (ſaith David.) And he apprehended the power of God, ſo great in his natural birth, that he from thence takes an argument to ſtrengthen his faith, that God could do any other thing for him, how hard ſoever. He knew he could never be in ſuch ſtraights, but the power of God could deliver him, when he once remembred that it was God who took him out of his mothers womb: For in the words immediately fore-going, he bringeth in his enemics laughing at, yea reproaching him, and ſaying, He truſted in God that he would deliver him, let him deliver him, ſeeing he delighted in him: They jeer him with his God, Let him deliver him. David anſwers, What do you think God cannot deliver me? Lord (ſaith he) thou art he that tookeſt me out of my Mothers womb. Can I ever be in ſuch ſtraights as I was then? Can I be ever in a more helpleſs condition? Can I ever be in more need of an Almighty help, then when I was ſtrugling to get into the world? There is more of the power of God put forth in bringing a poor Infant into the world, then in bringing him out of any trouble or ſtraight he can fall into, in his travels through the world: And hence the great deliverances of a people from danger, and their reformations from error, are called a birth, as King Hezekiah ſpeaks in his meſſage to Iſaiah, 2 Kings 19. 4. The children are come to the birth, and there is no ſtrength to bring forth. As if he had ſaid, Great things are now attempted, but nothing can be perfected: Great troubles are diſcovered, but we cannot be delivered by any humane power or policy: Therefore lift up a prayer for the remnant that is left. Every new deliverance and reformation of a Church is a new birth of that Church. Who hath heard ſuch a thing? who hath ſeen ſuch things? ſhall the earth be made to bring forth in one day? or ſhall a nation be born at once? for as ſoon as Zion travelled, ſhe brought forth her children. That is, Sions mercies were ſpeedily and ſuddenly obtained. She uſes to have long travail and many throes, but now the mighty power of God opened the door of the womb, a door of hope, and Sion was eaſily delivered of a man-child. A glorious mercy, Iſa. 66. 8. You ſee how the holy Ghoſt parallels the working of great things for the Church, to the travail of a woman, whoſe Infant ſticks in the birth, if God ſuſpend his help; but if he open the door by a hand of gracious providence, ſhe brings forth, Even before ſhe travails, (as the ſame Prophet ſpeaks,) and before ſhe is in pain ſhe is delivered. I have adventured to lengthen out this notion ſomewhat further then that hint in the Text doth well bear, only becauſe we being a people now in ſtrong travail, and wanting ſtrength to bring forth, may be directed to conſider whoſe hand holds the key, which opens the womb of Nations as well as perſons, and at the turning of whoſe hand, we ſhall quickly be delivered; and being delivered, we ſhall quickly forget all our pains and pangs, for joy that a man-child, ſuch a maſculine bleſſing, is born into the world. But the Text goes on ſtill in tears. As follows.

Nor hid ſorrow from mine eyes.

The word which we tranſlate ſorrow, ſignifies more properly labour, and wearineſs, or the wearineſs that doth ariſe from labour, and ſo from thence it is tranſlated to ſignifie any kind of ſorrow or trouble.

עמל

Becauſe it hid not ſorrow from mine eyes.] By the hiding of ſorrow from his eyes, he noteth only thus much, that he ſhould have been delivered from the ſenſe and experience of ſorrow. He had miſt thoſe evils which he met with, ſince his coming into the world, if thoſe doors being ſhut, had ſhut him out of the world. When ſorrow is hid from our eyes, then all evil is removed; as in that ſpeech, (Iſa. 65. 16.) Becauſe the former troubles are forgotten, becauſe they are hidden from mine eyes; that is, as if he had ſaid, we fear no trouble, no danger, no evil hangs over our heads; now the former evils are forgotten, they are hidden from mine eyes: As we uſe to ſay of great dangers, that they are imminent dangers; they hang over our heads, or hang before our eyes; becauſe they lye ſo near, and are in ſuch readineſs to oppreſs and fall upon us.

Now when Job ſubjoyneth ſorrow to his birth; as if as ſoon as ever the doors were open for him to ſtep into the world, the firſt object he met with was trouble, and he was ſaluted by ſorrow as ſoon as ever he ſaw the light.

Obſerve, That man is born to ſorrow:

He ſees ſorrow the firſt thing he ſees. Sorrow is the firſt acquaintance. The connexion is very cloſe, Becauſe it ſhut not up the doors of the womb, nor hid ſorrow from mine eyes. Eliphaz tells us (chap. 5. 7.) That man is born unto trouble, as the ſparks fly upward. He is born to it; the expreſſion implyes, that trouble and ſorrow take hold of us, and we enter upon, and take hold of trouble, as ſoon as ever we enter upon the world, we are born to them; trouble and ſorrow are a mans inheritance; as an Heir is born to his land or eſtate. Man hath a right to thoſe troubles; they are his birth-right, and all his birth-right by nature; and as ſoon as ever he is born, he takes poſſeſſion of ſorrow, or ſorrow poſſeſſes him. Many a man is born to riches, and a great eſtate, but he ſtayeth a great while for the poſſeſſion of them; man is born to trouble, and he enters upon that as ſoon as ever he enters the world; ſorrow is not his inheritance in reverſion, but in poſſeſſion; Even as the ſparks fly upward; that explains it to be ſo, as the ſons of the Coal, (ſo the Hebrew) that is, ſparks, as ſoon as ever they are born out of the coal, fly upward, and are preſently aſcending; ſo is man tending unto trouble. Few and evil have the dayes of the years of my life been, ſaith Jacob, (Gen. 47.9.) How few ſoever they have been, they have been evil: if his life had been but one day, that had been an evil day. If his life had not been lengthened to the leaſt number of dayes, yet his evils had multiplied to a number: in few hours we have many ſorrows.

Some make the Infants tears a preſage of theſe ſorrows, as if he wept to think upon what a ſhore of troubles he is landed: Or rather, into what a Sea of ſtorms he is lanching, when he comes into the world; ſuch ſtorms as he ſhall never be fully quit of, till he is harboured in his grave. Wherefore as the Angel ſaid unto the woman, Luke 24. 5. Why ſeek ye the living among the dead? So I may ſay to you, why ſeek ye peace in a land of trouble, and joy in a land of ſorrow? Theſe are reſerved for us in our Countrey which is above, expect them not here, for this is not your reſt.

Secondly, we may note from this expreſſion, Nor hid ſorrow from mine eyes,

That the ſight of the eye wounds the heart.

He doth not ſay, and hid trouble from my ſoul, or trouble from my ſpirit, but hid ſorrow from mine eyes. It is a proverbial ſpeech among us, What the eye ſees not, the heart grieves not. And when the Lord would ſhew how he was moved with the ſufferings, and knew the ſorrows of his people in Egypt, he doubles it upon this ſence, I have ſeen, I have ſeen, or I have ſurely ſeen the affliction of my people, Exod. 3.7. Your ſorrows are not hid from mine eyes. Mine eye affects my heart, ſaith the Prophet Jeremy, Lam. 3. 51. That is, mine eye afflicts mine heart. While Jeremy went about the City, and ſaw many woful ſpectacles in the ruine and captivity of his people, that ſight ſmote him to the heart. It is ſaid, that when Chriſt came to Jeruſalem, and beheld the City, he wept over it, Luke 19. 41. And for the ſorrow of repentance, the ſight of the eye hath a great influence upon the heart, They ſhall look on me whom they have pierced, and they ſhall mourn, &c. Zach. 12. 10. As the eye doth affect, or rather infect the heart with ſin, from ſin-occaſioning objects; a ſin that is in the eye will be preſently at the heart, which cauſed Job to ſay, (Chap. 31. 1.) I made a covenant with mine eyes, why then ſhould I think upon a maid? He meaneth, ſinfully to luſt after her: As if he had ſaid, there is a quick, a ſpeedy paſſage from the eye to the heart, though in the fabrick of the body there ſeems a great diſtance between them: Therefore I have made a covenant with my eyes to avoid occaſions of ſin, leſt mine eyes ſhould pollute my heart with motions unto ſin. And as it is in pleaſure-provoking objects, that which is a pleaſure to the eye, will preſently be a pleaſure to the heart, a refreſhing to our ſpirits: And that pleaſure which ſhall laſt for evermore in Heaven, is from a viſion that ſhall laſt for ever. Joy ſhall for ever be before the eye, and therefore joy ſhall for ever fill the heart. The joy of Heaven conſiſts in viſion, in ſeeing God as he is, (1 John 3. 2.) or in ſeeing face to face, (1 Cor. 13. 12.) which is the viſion beatifical. So likewiſe there is an afflicting viſion. The eye affects the heart with ſorrow-occaſioning objects; if ſorrow be in the eye, it will not ſtay long from the heart. Hence when Sarah, Abraham's Wife, was dead, Abraham thus beſpeaks the people among whom he dwelt, If it be your mind, that I ſhould bury my dead out of my ſight, &c. (Gen. 23. 8.) It did afflict the heart of Abraham with ſorrow, to ſee the body of his deceaſed Wife, or the Coffin wherein ſhe lay, whom he had ſo intirely loved, therefore bury her out of my ſight. It is very obſervable, that when Joſeph would do ſomewhat purpoſely to afflict and touch the heart of his brethren with more remorſe for their former unkindneſs unto him, the hiſtory ſaith (Gen. 42. 24.) That he took from them Simeon, and bound him before their eyes: He heard them in their private conference whiſper one to another, We are verily guilty concerning our brother, in that we ſaw the anguiſh of his ſoul, when he beſought us, and we would not hear, therefore is this diſtreſs come upon us. When Joſeph perceived their conſciences began thus to work, he reſolves to give them a pill at their eyes, (even a doleful ſpectacle, yet the lively picture of their dealing with him) to make their conſciences work faſter, with godly ſorrow: He took from them Simeon, and bound him before their eyes. And Judah, when he pleadeth afterward, Chap. 44. for the carrying back of Benjamin, you know what a pathetical Oration he makes; O, ſaith he, do not detain Benjamin, for when I come to thy ſervant my father, and the lad be not with us (ſeeing that his life is bound up in the lads life) it ſhall come to paſs, that when he ſeeth that the lad is not with us, he will dye, ver. 30, 31. That very ſight will kill my father: and for me to ſee my father dye, will be death to me alſo: For ſo he concludes, ver. 34. How ſhall I go to my father, and the lad be not with me, leſt peradventure I ſee the evil that ſhall come upon my father. Oh (ſaith he) let me carry him back; my father will dye if he ſee not the lad, and ſo ſhall I, if I ſee the evil that ſhall come upon my father: He knew that ſight would be as a ſword to his heart, and as a dagger in his bowels. The Lord threatens his people thus in caſe of diſobedience, Deut. 28. 31. Thine Ox ſhall be ſlain before thine eyes, thine Aſs ſhall be violently taken away from before thy face. Thy ſons and thy daughters ſhall be given to another people, &c. So that thou ſhalt be mad for the ſight of thine eyes which thou ſhalt ſee, ver. 34. and ver. 67. He ſhews what convulſions and diviſions of ſpirit, the viſions of the eye would bring upon them. In the morning thou ſhalt ſay, would God it were even; and at even thou ſhalt ſay, would God it were morning, for the fear of thine heart wherewith thou ſhalt fear, and for the ſight of thine eyes which thou ſhalt ſee. The fear of the heart, and the ſight of the eye, are nearly joyned. The ſight of the eye cauſed the fear of the heart, and both were as concauſes of thoſe diſtracting thoughts, and wiſhes, of haſtning the morning to the evening, and again ſuddenly reducing back the evening to the morning. Unleſs ſorrow be hid from the eyes, it can hardly be kept from the heart. It is an uſual cuſtom, if a man be but let blood, to bid him turn away his head, if he be faint-hearted, for the ſight of his bloud will make his heart faint: And ſo from more ghaſtly ſpectacles, men commonly turn away their faces, &c. Which is to hide ſorrow from their eyes. It follows,

Why died I not from the womb? why did not I give up the ghoſt when I came out of the belly? why did the knees prevent me, &c.

Theſe two verſes contain a further aggravation of the former reaſon by three other ſteps. Before he ſpoke againſt his conception and his birth, now, Why dyed I not from the womb? As if he had ſaid, though I were conceived, and ſecondly, though I were born, yet why did not I make my cradle, my grave, or my firſt ſwadling clothes my winding ſheet; though I were born, yet why did not I dye ſo ſoon as ever I was born? Why dyed I not from the womb? why gave I not up the ghoſt when I came out of the belly? Having received the diſcourteſie of a birth, death would have been a favour: It had been beſt for me, not to have been born, and next beſt to have died quickly, or as ſoon as I was born; that's the meaning in general of the eleventh and twelfth verſes. But I ſhall a little examine and enlighten the particular expreſſions.

Why did I not give up the ghoſt?] The Hebrew is but one word, which coſts us five in Engliſh, I give up the ghoſt; the word ſignifieth, that laſt act of thoſe who are in the agony of death: In the Greek and Latine that act is expreſt by one word, Luke 23. 46. Where it is ſaid, that Chriſt gave up the ghoſt. The word is conceived to note a willing chearful reſignation of our ſelves in death; a dying without much reluctance or reſiſtance, a being active in death rather then paſſive, we call it well a giving up the ghoſt. Some apply it only to the death of the godly, (as Gen. 25. 8.) of Abraham, &c. whoſe lives are not violently ſnatcht from them, but willingly ſurrendred. When a godly man dyes a violent death, he doth not dye violently: Whereas a wicked ἐξέπνευσεν Expiravit. Leniter mortuus eſt, ſine morbo & dolore diuturniore: quando quis facile moritur ita ut non diu decumbat.

אגוע from גוע

wicked man dyes violently, when he dyes naturally: and though ſometimes (being weary of his life, or deſpairing of relief) he drives out his ghoſt, yet in a ſtrict ſence he never gives up the ghoſt. It is ſaid to the wicked rich man in the Goſpel, (Luke 12. 20.) Thou fool, this night ſhall thy ſoul be required of thee; demanded indeed; but O how unwillingly doth the rich man pay his natural debt, who is ſo able to pay all civil debts. Yet it muſt be confeſt, that we find the word often uſed promiſcuouſly, applyed as well to the death of the wicked as of the godly: To Iſhmael (Gen. 25. 8.) as well as Abraham, to Ananias and Saphira, Acts 5. 10. Yea it is applied to the death of any or all living things, Gen. 7. 21. And all fleſh dyed that moved upon the earth, both of fowl, and of cattel, and of beaſts, and of every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth, and every man.

Then again, If I had not ſo much favour to dye as ſoon as ever I came from the womb, or to dye in the very birth; yet, Why did the knees prevent me? or the breaſts that I ſhould ſuck?

Here are two ſteps aggravating the cauſe of his curſe againſt his day. If I had not been born dead, ſaith Job, or dyed naturally as ſoon as I was born, yet why was I not left to periſh? I ſhould have dyed quickly, if they had let me alone, though I were born alive into the world; that is the meaning of thoſe words, Why did the knees prevent me? why was there any care taken of me? why did the Midwiſe and the aſſiſtant women take me upon their knees? why did they waſh me, ſwathe me, and bind me up? If they had not been ſo kind, it had been a kindneſs unto me; if they had ſpared their labour, they had done me a favour; If they had omitted their care, how many cares had I eſcaped?

Why did the knees prevent me?] or (which is a further ſtep, and the fifth ſtep by which this ſpeech aſcends) why the breaſts that I ſhould ſuck? As if he had ſaid, If they would needs be ſo favourable as to take me up upon the knee, to waſh me, to bind me up and cloath me, yet why was the breaſt preſented to me? why was I layed to the breaſt? If they had kept me from ſucking the breaſt, I ſhould have ſuckt but little breath, I had dyed quickly.

So that in theſe words there are five gradations, by which Job aggravateth the cauſe of this curſe againſt his day. Firſt, Becauſe he was conceived. Secondly, Becauſe the door was opened for him to be born. Thirdly, Becauſe being born, he did not preſently give up the ghoſt, or dye as ſoon as he came into the world. Fourthly, Becauſe there was ſo much care taken for him, as to take him upon the knee, and bind him up. Fifthly, Becauſe there was a breaſt provided, and paps for him to ſuck: If any of theſe latter acts had been neglected, Job had dyed, and ſo eſcaped all theſe enſuing troubles of his life, Sorrow had been hidden from his eyes.

And it is obſerved (eſpecially in theſe latter acts of this gradation) that Job alludes to the cuſtom of thoſe times, wherein unnatural women left their children upon the cold earth, naked and helpleſs, as ſoon as they were born: or caſting them out, expoſe them to miſery, or the caſual nurſery of nature lent them by beaſts, more merciful then thoſe beaſtly mothers, who would not afford them knees to prevent, nor breaſts to give them ſuck. As in that place, Ezek. 16. 4, 5. the woful condition of ſuch an Infant is expreſt, to ſhadow out the ſinfully polluted and wofully helpleſs eſtate of that people, and of all people by nature, till the Lord prevents them by the knees of free grace, and ſuckles them with the breaſts of his conſolation. Thy father was an Amorite, and thy mother an Hittite (of a barbarous people; and what then?) In the day thou waſt born, thy navel was not cut, neither waſt thou waſhed in water, thou waſt not ſalted at all, nor ſwadled at all, none eye pittied thee to do any of theſe unto thee, but thou waſt caſt out in the open field, to the loathing of thy perſon, in the day that thou waſt born. Now this is a certain rule, that ſuch parabolical and allegorical Scriptures are grounded upon known cuſtoms and things in uſe: It is certain there were ſome ſo unnatural to their Infants, that they would beſtow no care upon them when they were born, neither waſh, nor cleanſe, nor bind them up, but caſt them out, (as the Prophet ſpeaks) to the loathing of their perſons. The Heathen Romans had a ſpecial Goddeſs, or Deity, whoſe name imported her care and office, that Children, when they were born, ſhould be taken up from the earth, and ſet upon the knee. And for the preventing of this unnatural cruelty, (very frequent, as it ſeems, amongſt them) the Thebanes made an expreſs law, that Infants ſhould not be neglected or caſt out when they were born, though the parents thought they would be a burden to them by reaſon of the charge, or no delight to them by reaſon of their deformity.

Parabolæ non ſumuntur niſi ab his quæ crebro & de more fiunt.

Levana dea pro levandis è terra infantibus, Aug. de Civ. Dei. l. 4. c. 11

Thebanorum lex de non exponendis infantibus, Apud Ælian. de Var. Hiſt. l. 11.

Now ſaith Job, I could wiſh, I had ſuch a father, or ſuch a mother, or ſuch friends, who forgetting natural affection, would have caſt me out when I came firſt into the world; Why did the knees prevent me? From hence alſo we may obſerve, > Firſt, That an Infant, as ſoon as he liveth, hath in him the ſeeds of death.

So Job ſpeaks of himſelf, Why dyed I not from the womb? why did I not give up the ghoſt when I came out of my mothers belly? Or why was I not ſtifled in the womb? why was ever that door opened to let me into the world? I could have dyed as ſoon as I lived. Not only is man acting ſin, but his nature infected with ſin, the ſubject of, and ſubjected to the power of death: ſo the Apoſtle teacheth us, (Rom. 5. 14.) Death reigned from Adam to Moſes, even over them that had not ſinned after the ſimilitude of Adam's tranſgreſſion: And who were thoſe? Even little Infants; they had life, yet death reigned over them, they were under the dominion of death, and ſubject to that King of terror. Sin is the ſeed of death, and the principle of corruption. God doth Infants no wrong when they dye; their death is of themſelves, for they have the ſeed of death in them: We may affirm in one ſence, that when Infants dye, they have no loſs; and we are ſure (in every ſence) when they dye, they have no wrong: All death (except death to ſin) is the wages of ſin, and therefore can be no injury to the ſinner.

Secondly, We may obſerve concerning man in his birth, what a helpleſs creature man is. If I (ſaith Job) had been left a little, I had been gone quickly, there had been an end of me, I could not have helped my ſelf: if the knees had not prevented me, if the breaſts had not given me ſuck, if I had been deſtitute of theſe ſuccours, then preſently I ſhould have been free among the dead, I ſhould have been quiet and gone into ſilence.

> Thirdly, Obſerve, That every ſtep of life ſtands in need of a ſtep of mercy.

When the Infant is conceived, there muſt be an act of mercy to quicken it, an act of mercy to nouriſh it in the womb; an act of mercy for the birth, and an act of mercy, being born, to take it upon the knee, an act of mercy to bind it up, an act of mercy to give it ſuck. The beginning of our lives, and the progreſs of our lives, our generation, and our preſervation, call for acts of mercy, or elſe (poor creatures as we are) we quickly periſh and return unto our duſt. We owe our lives to God at firſt, and we owe them every moment; if he did not renew mercy every moment, we could not continue life one moment: As it is with our ſpiritual life, ſo it is with our natural; Our lives are hid with Chriſt in God, Col. 3. 3. Of and from our ſelves we cannot ſubſiſt, either in grace or nature. It follows,

> For now ſhould I have lyen ſtill, and been quiet, I ſhould have ſlept; then had I been at reſt.

Theſe words are an inlargement of the former reaſon taken from a deſcription of the ſtate and condition of the dead; For now (ſaith Job) I ſhould have lyen ſtill. If you ſhould ask me a reaſon of my former reaſon, Why was I ſo angry with that day, or night, wherein I was conceived and born, wherein I had that (to me unacceptable) mercy to be preſerved and kept alive? This I ſubjoyn for the reaſon of it, If none of thoſe unwelcome favours or natural rights had been done me, then, I had lyen ſtill, I had been quiet, I ſhould have ſlept, I had been at reſt: Either I ſhould have been as one that never was, or I ſhould have been at reſt and quiet. The argument lyes thus; Reſt and quiet are deſirable things, but death, in the omiſſion of thoſe ſuccours, would have given me reſt; therefore I deſire thoſe ſuccours had been omitted. This concluſion is in the eleventh and twelfth verſes, which we heard before. The aſſumption is in this thirteenth verſe, which he further confirms in the ſix verſes following, by an argument which we may thus form. I will prove, ſaith he, that in death I ſhould have reſt, and been quiet, and lyen ſtill, for all conditions and ſorts of men are quiet and lye ſtill in death. There (or in that eſtate) where all degrees and ſorts of perſons are at reſt, there ſure I ſhould have found reſt; but in death all ſorts and degrees of perſons have found reſt, therefore I ſhould have found reſt too.

Now that all ſorts of people lye ſtill, and are at reſt in death, he proves by an elegant enumeration of the ſeveral ſorts and conditions of men. He makes an argument by way of induction of all or moſt of the ranks of men. Firſt, He ſhews it in Kings and Counſellors of the earth; theſe men that make ſuch a buſſle in the world, when once they are dead, they are quiet enough. And then he ſhews it in Rich men and Princes, who load themſelves with thick clay, who toil and moil all their dayes to heap up and amaſs much wealth; when theſe come to the grave, there's an end of all their labours, then they muſt give over all their purſuit of riches. Fourthly, He ſhews it in children, either abortives, born before natures time, or born in full perfection of nature, ver. 16. Laſtly, He ſhews it in oppreſſors and the oppreſſed; in priſoners and thoſe that impriſon them; in the ſmall and in the great; in the ſervants and in their Maſters: Thus making an enumeration of all theſe, from thence he infers; That if all theſe are quiet, when they are in the grave, then ſurely his condition had been ſo too; I ſhould have been quiet, and lyen ſtill, then I ſhould have ſlept and been at reſt.

We muſt here take notice, that Job ſpeaking of the ſtate of death, ſpeaks only in reference to an outward condition, and our reſting from outward calamities and troubles; he doth not handle the point at all concerning mans eternal eſtate: For, death is not reſt to all ſorts of men in that ſence: Kings, and Counſellors, and rich men, &c. may reſt from the troubles of this world, and go to a world of everlaſting troubles. Such a total reſt is the ſole priviledge of the Saints. Thus only bleſſed are the dead which dye in the Lord, from henceforth, yea, ſaith the Spirit, that they may reſt from their labours, and their works follow them, Rev. 14. 13. When the Saints dye, they reſt from their labours, and their works follow them (through free grace) in glorious rewards. When the wicked dye, they reſt from their labours, but their works follow them (through divine Juſtice) in everlaſting puniſhments. And Job reſting aſſured of his own eternal reſt, wiſhes only a reſt from thoſe temporal commotions.

Apertè his verbis oſtendit, ſe adeo de futura vita ſecurũ eſſe, ut tantũ ſuerit ſolicitus de quiete à præſentibus calamitatibus.

Further, We may obſerve four words uſed by Job to expreſs the ſame thing. Firſt, I ſhould have lyen ſtill. And been quiet, there is a ſecond. I ſhould have ſlept, there is a third: And fourthly, Then I had been at reſt.

שכב

I ſhould have lyen ſtill.] The word ſignifies to lye down in any kind, and it ſignifies to ſleep, Gen. 19. 4. Before they lay down; that is, before they went to bed: It is applyed likewiſe to the ſleep of death, 2 Sam. 7. 12. Iſa. 43. 17. They ſhall lye down, they ſhall not riſe, (they ſhall dye, ſo the next words expound it) They are extinct, they are quenched as tow.

שקט

Securus fuit, in pace degit, etiam ſiluit.

And been quiet.] The word ſignifieth alſo to be ſilent; we may put both together, Then had I lyen ſtill and been ſilent; and you know, death and the grave are called ſilence; I had been like thoſe that go down into ſilence (ſaith the Pſalmiſt, Pſal. 115. 17.) that is, like thoſe that go down into the grave. And Hezekiah in his mourning deſcribes that ſilence, Iſa. 38. 18. The grave cannot praiſe thee, death cannot celebrate thee.

I ſhould have ſlept.] Sleep is the image of death; and death is more then the image of ſleep: Sleep is a ſhort death, and death is a long ſleep. Many of them that ſleep in the duſt of the earth ſhall awake, ſome to everlaſting life, and ſome to everlaſting contempt, Dan. 12. 2. Our friend Lazarus ſleepeth, (ſaith Chriſt to his Diſciples, John 11. 11.) but I go that I may awake him out of ſleep. In the fourteenth verſe, Jeſus ſaid unto them plainly, Lazarus is dead.

Then had I been at reſt.] We uſually ſay when a man goes to ſleep, he goes to reſt: Yet reſt is more then ſleep, for ſometimes a man ſleeps when he doth not reſt, his very ſleep being troubled, and he troubled in his ſleep: But when reſt is joyned with ſleep, it is perfect ſleep. The word here uſed, ſignifies a very quiet, ſetled and peaceable condition.

נוח

Hence Noah had his name, And he called his name Noah, ſaying, this ſon ſhall comfort us, concerning our work and toil of our hands, becauſe of the ground which the Lord hath curſed, (Gen. 5. 29.) He was reſt and comfort to the old world, by preaching righteouſneſs, even the righteouſneſs which is by faith, which alone gives reſt unto the ſoul, and is able to refreſh us in the midſt of all thoſe toils and labours which that firſt curſe brought upon the world, both new and old. Such reſt and ſweet repoſe had I found (ſaith Job) from all my toil in the houſe of death, and bed of the grave.

Having thus, four words concurring in the ſame ſence, we may here not unprofitably take notice of that elegant multiplication of words in the holy Scriptures. There, ſtore is no ſore, and variety is no ſuperfluity, yea, there tautology is no ſuperfluity: It is the uſual rhetorick of the Holy Ghoſt, to ſpeak the ſame thing in divers words, yea ſometime in the ſame words: We find ſuch a congeries or heaping up of words, uſed for the moſt part in ſome heat of paſſion, or vehemency of ſpirit: As firſt, when God would expreſs a great deal of anger and wrath againſt a people, he ſpeaks thus, (Iſa. 14. 22, 23.) I will riſe up againſt them, ſaith the Lord of hoſts, and cut off from Babylon the name and remnant, and ſon and nephew, I will alſo make it a poſſeſſion for the Bittern and pools of water, and I will ſweep it with the beſom of deſtruction. Here are a multitude of words, and all tending to the ſame purpoſe, ſetting forth the fierceneſs of Gods anger, and the reſolvedneſs of his judgment for the ruining of Babylon. The towring confuſed pride of the King of Babylon, is preſented to us in ſuch a heap of words, (Iſa. 14. 13, 14.) hear the pure language of pride from that Kings heart; Thou haſt ſaid in thine heart, I will aſcend into Heaven, I will exalt my throne above the Stars of God, I will ſit alſo upon the mount of the Congregation, I will aſcend above the heights of the clouds, I will be like the moſt High. The manifold apoſtacies and backſlidings of Judah, are deſcribed in many words by the Prophet Zephany, chap. 1. 6. And them that are turned back from the Lord, and thoſe that have not ſought the Lord, nor enquired for him: (Chap. 3. 2.) She obeyed not the voice, ſhe received not correction, ſhe truſted not in the Lord, ſhe drew not near to her God. When our Lord Chriſt would ſhew the extream ignorance and darkneſs of his Diſciples, in thoſe great Articles of his ſufferings, death and reſurrection, having taken the twelve unto him, and diſcourſed of thoſe points, he concludes, Luke 18. 31, 34. And they underſtood none of theſe things, and this ſaying was hid from them, neither knew they the things that were ſpoken. As if Chriſt had ſaid, their ignorance in theſe myſteries was ſo great, that they had not the leaſt glimpſe or glimmerings of light about them. So here, I ſhould have lyen ſtill, and been quiet, I ſhould have ſlept, and been at reſt, and all to note the uninterrupted quiet and tranquillity of the grave. As if he had ſaid, Had I dyed then, not only had not theſe ſtorms been upon me, nor theſe waves gone over me, but the leaſt breath of wind had never blown upon me. Hence obſerve, > Firſt, That in regard of all outward troubles, death is the reſt of man.

Bleſſed are the dead that dye in the Lord, for they reſt from their labours. And they who dye out of the Lord, reſt from all that labour they have had in this world. There is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wiſdom in the grave, whither thou goeſt, Eccleſ. 9. 10. This life is a day of working, and death is a night of reſting. The Sun ariſeth, man goeth forth to his labour until the evening, Pſal. 104. 23. When the Sun of our life ariſeth, we go forth to our labour, until the evening of death. This life is a continued motion; death is a continued reſt. This life is but noiſe and tumult; death is ſilence. Our life is a ſtormy paſſage, a tempeſtuous ſea-voyage; death bringeth us to the harbour.

There is a four-fold reſt which we obtain in death. Firſt, A reſt from labour and travel; no working there. Secondly, There is a reſt from trouble and oppreſſion; no wars, no bloody battels there. Thirdly, There is a reſt from paſſion; no ſorrow, no grief ſhall afflict us there. In the grave there is a fourth reſt better then all theſe; a reſt from ſin, a reſt from the drudgery of Satan, a reſt from the winnowings and buffettings of Satan; a reſt from the law of our members, warring againſt the law of our minds. When Saul went to the Witch of Endor for advice with Samuel, that Samuel, or the Devil in the appearance of Samuel, ſpeaks as one diſturb'd being raiſed from the grave; Why (ſaith he) haſt thou diſquieted me to bring me up? 1 Sam. 28. 15. I was at reſt, why didſt thou call me up to a land of trouble? It is the obſervation of an ancient Father, and the reſolution of an ancient Council, concerning Chriſts weeping over Lazarus, John 11. That not his death, but his riſing drew thoſe tears. When Chriſt came to the grave where Lazarus lay, the Text ſaith, that Jeſus wept. Why did Chriſt weep, ſaith Jerome, in comforting a mother that had loſt her daughter? It is clear, that Chriſt wept over Lazarus that was dead; but he did not weep thy tears: Chriſt did not weep becauſe Lazarus was dead; but he wept rather, becauſe Lazarus was to be raiſed up again; he wept to think that his friend Lazarus ſhould be brought back into ſo troubleſome a world. And it was the reſolution of the third Toletane Council, That Chriſt did not weep over Lazarus becauſe he was dead, but becauſe he was to be raiſed up again to feel the burdens and afflictions of this life: that was their apprehenſion of it. And it is a truth, that whoſoever lives the common life of nature, lives in trouble: But ſuch is not the life of him who is raiſed from the dead: The lives of ſuch, though here upon the earth, muſt needs lye out of the common courſe: And what their condition is, is ſuch a ſecret as we cannot underſtand but by injoying it.

Planè Lazarum mortuum flevit Chriſtus, ſed non tuas lachrimas ſudit. Dolavit Lazarum non dormientem ſed potius reſurgentem. Hieron. Ep. ad Tryaſiã ſuper mortẽ filiæ. Chriſtus non ploravit Lazarum mortuum, ſed ad hujus vitæ ærumnas ploravit reſuſcitandum, Concil. Tolet. tert.

Again, from that particular expreſſion, in that he ſaith, I ſhould have ſlept, we may obſerve,

That as death is the reſt of the whole man, ſo death is the ſleep of the body.

So you find it often in the Scripture; Our friend Lazarus ſleepeth, ſaith Chriſt, when he was dead, John 11. And the Apoſtle, 1 Theſ. 4. 13. I would not have you ignorant concerning thoſe which ſleep; that is, concerning thoſe who are dead. Lighten mine eyes (ſaith David) leſt I ſleep the ſleep of death; or as the Hebrew, Leſt I ſleep death, Pſal. 13. 3. And hence the grave is called a bed, Iſa. 57. 2. The righteous are taken away, &c. they ſhall enter into peace, they ſhall reſt in their beds. When a righteous man dyes, or is taken away, he is but gone to bed. Therefore we call thoſe places where the dead are laid up and buried, Dormitories, or ſleeping places. Both the Greek and Latine words meet in the ſame ſignification.

κοιμητήριον Dormitoriũ.

Some of the Ancients were of opinion, that this ſleep took hold of, and ſeiz'd upon, all man, namely, upon his ſoul as well as upon his body; aſſerting, that the ſoul is in a ſleep, or ſlumber; that is, that the ſoul, from the time of its diſunion from the body until the reſurrection, lyes ſtill without any motion or operation. I grant that many operations of the ſoul do ceaſe when it parteth from the body. There are ſome acts of the ſoul which are organical; and there are other acts that are inorganical, or immaterial: The organical acts, that is, whatſoever the ſoul acts by the members of the body, thoſe acts, I ſay, muſt needs ceaſe; but the ſoul can act of it ſelf without the aſſiſtance of the body; as we may collect by many experiments while our bodies and ſouls are joyned together. How often do we find our ſouls at work, when our bodies lye ſtill and do nothing; when ſleep binds up all our ſenſes, and ſhuts up the windows of the body ſo cloſe, that we can neither hear nor ſee: yet then the ſoul frames to it ſelf, and beholds a thouſand various ſhapes, and hears all ſorts of ſounds and voices; then the ſoul ſees, and the ſoul hears, the ſoul deviſeth, and the ſoul diſcourſeth, the ſoul grieves, and the ſoul rejoyceth, the ſoul hopes, and the ſoul fears, the ſoul electeth, and the ſoul refuſeth: All this the ſoul doth in dreams and viſions of the night, when deep ſleep falls upon man. So alſo in extaſies and raviſhments, the body is, as it were, laid by, as uſeleſs and uninſtrumental to the ſoul. I knew a man in Chriſt about fourteen years ago, (ſo the Apoſtle Paul ſaith) whether in the body, I cannot tell, or out of the body, I cannot tell, God knoweth, 2 Cor. 12. 2. As if he had ſaid, I was loſt as to my body, I could not tell what I was, I did not feel my ſelf; yet he had mighty operations in his ſoul, his ſpirit wrought ſtrangely, and then took in ſuch revelations of God and from God, as his bodily organs could never faſhion into words, or repreſent by ſpeech: He heard *unſpeakable words, which is not *lawful (or poſſible) for man to utter. The ſoul hath an ear to hear ſuch words as the body cannot find a tongue to expreſs. So the Apoſtle John in his divine raviſhments, I was in the Spirit upon the Lords day. As for his body, that was, as to that buſineſs, laid by and ſuſpended, as uſeleſs in that day; and his ſpirit called up to that angelical work, the receiving of viſions and revelations from on high. And among other things which John ſaw, He ſaw under the Altar the ſouls of them that had been ſlain, for the word of God, and for the teſtimony which they held: Theſe ſouls were not aſleep, though their bodies were, for they cryed with a loud voice, ſaying, How long, O Lord holy and true, doſt thou not judge and avenge our blood, &c. Rev. 6. 9, 10. From all theſe Texts and experiences we may conclude, that the ſoul wakes while the body ſleeps that ſleep of death. And the death of the body is called a ſleep,

* Quæ fando explicari a quoquã homine non poſſunt. Beza.

* Quæ nulla vine Sanctorum quidem poſſit explicari, nempe quia divinum eſt numen. Sic explicat Clemens Alex. Strom. 5. Beza.

Firſt, Becauſe as ſleep, ſo death brings the body to reſt, as was obſerved in the former point.

Secondly, Natural ſleep is not perpetual, we ſleep and wake again; ſo though the body lye in the grave, yet death is but a ſleep, the man ſhall awake and riſe again.

Thirdly, As a body aſleep can eaſily be awaked and called up by the power of man; ſo the body, being dead, can with infinitely more eaſe be raiſed by the power of God: It is but a call from Heaven, and we awaken out of the duſt; God can beyond all compariſon more eaſily awaken us from that dead ſleep of death, then we can awaken one another from the lighteſt ſlumber.

There are two Queſtions which I ſhall propound and endeavour to reſolve upon the whole matter of this context.

Firſt, We find Job complaining, becauſe things were not otherwiſe ordered about him; he is troubled, becauſe he was born, or becauſe he was not caſt away in the birth; for then it had been better with him, he had been aſleep and quiet; he was troubled things were with him as they were. Hence it may be queſtioned, Whether it be lawful for us to wiſh, or to deſire, that had not come to paſs, which wee ſee come to paſs? And are we not bound to reſt ſatisfied with the preſent and fore-paſt diſpenſations of God, and ſo be content with the things that are, or with things as they are?

For this, I ſay in general, ſuch wiſhes or deſires are not ſinful. It is not abſolutely ſinful, to wiſh that not to be, which is: Nay, ſome things which are, ought to be wiſhed they had not been; and it is a ſin not to wiſh, they had not been. As thoſe things that are diſpleaſing to God, provocations to the eyes of his glory, things that are diſhonourable to God, we ought to wiſh that ſuch things had never been. God himſelf wiſheth in that manner, Pſal. 81. 13. O that my people had hearkened unto me, and Iſrael had walked in my wayes! They did not walk in his wayes; he wiſheth they had; he deſireth they had been better, more holy and more obedient then they were. To wiſh that a thing had not been, out of a tenderneſs that God ſhould be offended by ſin, is not only lawful, but very commendable. But to wiſh things otherwiſe then they are, as murmuring againſt, and miſliking Gods adminiſtration, or out of a tenderneſs, becauſe we ſuffer, is not only ſinful, but abominable: When our wills riſe up againſt the will of God, when we cannot be contented to be what God will have us to be, and to ſuffer what God would have us ſuffer; when we, who ſhould learn to be content in every eſtate, are angry with our eſtates, and on that ground wiſh, O that this had never been, O that I had never ſeen this day, becauſe it hath ſo much trouble in it; this wiſh hath I know not how much evil in it. So likewiſe when man ſhall (as it were) take upon him to direct the Almighty and only wiſe God in governing the world, ſecretly ſurmizing, or openly complaining, that things might be diſpenced and manag'd with more wiſdom, juſtice and moderation; ſuch boldneſs is plain blaſphemy. Some are ready to ſay in their hearts, about the Lord Chriſts governing the world, as Abſalom did concerning his Father David's government of Iſrael: Things are carried, as if there were none deputed to hear or redreſs the wrongs of men. O that I were made Judge of the world, that every man which hath any ſuit or cauſe might come to me, and I would do him juſtice: Things ſhould not go thus if I had the ordering of them; ſuch boldneſs is higheſt blaſphemy. And yet with caution of due reverence to the Name of God, he gives us leave to debate the the matter with him, both concerning the ſtate of things in publick, and our own perſonal eſtates.

2 Sam. 15. 3, 4.

Firſt thus, If we, while we are debating, adore his ſacred Juſtice and unſearchable Wiſdom, in that which we neither ſee, nor are able to underſtand. Thus while the Prophet Jeremy took liberty to plead with God about the miniſtrations of the world, he humbly premiſes, Righteous art thou, O Lord, when I plead with thee; yet let me talk with thee of thy judgments: why doth the way of the wicked proſper? We may aſk God the queſtion, and plead with him about his judgments, but we muſt not have the leaſt jealouſie or ſuſpition of his righteouſneſs, or of his judgments.

Illud ſemper retinere debemus, ἄμεμπτον ϗ ἄμωμον, eſſe Deum.

Secondly, We may ſit down and bewail the ſtate of things, or our private eſtates; In that ſence we may wiſh things not to be that are, ſo as to bewail that ſuch things are; and this is it which Job eſpecially doth in this Chapter, he ſits down bewailing his condition: And ſo may we while we keep within our bounds, and duly regulate our lamentings. The bounds and rules may be ſuch as theſe. Firſt, Deal not too much with the creature, either in complaining of the creature, or in complaining to the creature. Let ſecond cauſes paſs, or look upon them but in the ſecond place: pour your complaints into the boſom of God. Secondly, Conſider from whence your bewailings move; take heed they ſpring not from delicacy of ſpirit, or an unwillingneſs to lye under the croſs, becauſe it ſpoils your fair ſhew in the fleſh: While we bewail our own croſs, or publick croſſes, we ſhould be working our hearts to a willing and chearful ſufferance of the croſs. Though a man doth not love that which he bears, yet let him love to bear: It is an high ſtrain of ſpiritualneſs in bearing, when a Chriſtian can ſay, I love not that which I ſuffer, yet I love to ſuffer: I love not that which I bear, yet I love to bear. To bear, is the patience of neceſſity; to love to bear, is the patience of vertue: To love to bear, hath in it the higheſt affection, and the loweſt ſubjection unto Chriſt. The Apoſtles ſpirit was raiſed to this heroick pitch, and ſomewhat above it, when he ſaid, I rejoyce in my ſufferings, Col. 1. 24. (Joy is a degree beyond love) when he ſaid, I take pleaſure in reproaches, in neceſſities, in perſecutions, in diſtreſſes for Chriſts ſake, 2 Cor. 12. 10. (Pleaſure is a degree beyond joy.) But eſpecially when he ſaid, I glory in tribulations, Rom. 5. 3.) And God forbid that I ſhould glory (in any thing elſe) ſave in the croſs of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, Gal. 6. 14. To glory in a thing is more then to take pleaſure in it. Again, take heed your complaints and bewailings do not ariſe out of diſtruſt and unbelief; ſuch complainings are provocations. It was called the provocation, when the people of Iſrael made ſuch diſtruſting complaints, Pſal. 95. 8. Harden not your hearts as in the provocation in the day of temptation in the wilderneſs. And that the provocation lay in their unbelief, the Apoſtle is expreſs, Heb. 3. where quoting this text of the Pſalm, he concludes his whole diſcourſe thus, ver. 19. So we ſee they could not enter in becauſe of unbelief. If we mix faith with our tears, and while we bemoan our condition, yet believe, that God is good, and good to us; that God is all-ſufficient, and all-ſufficient to deliver us; we may wiſh that the things that are, were not; and that God, who changes not, would make a change in our eſtate.

Gal. 6.12.

Tolerare eſt patientia neceſſitatis, amare tolerare eſt patientia virtutis.

For the cloſe of this point, I ſhall lay down theſe three Concluſions.

Firſt, A man may deſire that, which God wills not, and not ſin in that deſire: As the deliverance of a people whom God will deſtroy.

Secondly, A man may ſin in deſiring that, which God wills: When it is the will of God that the father ſhall dye, the child ſins in deſiring it.

Thirdly, A man may, without ſin, deſire that not to be, which God wills; or which is the ſame, that not to be, which is: ſuch deſires being qualified according to the cautions before given.

There is a ſecond queſtion ariſing upon a part of this complaint: For Job complains not only of his troubles, but of his life: And ſeems to have been angry with his very being; while he wiſhes he had never been conceived, or that his Mother had been denyed the bleſſing of conception. The queſtion then is, Whether an evil or a troubleſome being be worſe then no being? Or whether it be better not to be, then to be miſerable?

I anſwer, There is a twofold miſerable being, one Temporal, the other Eternal. An eternal miſerable being is eternally worſe then a not being. But a temporal miſerable being, at the worſt, is better then a not being: And the reaſon is, becauſe our being is far more excellent then the outward comforts of our being, theſe being only accidental to our being; and therefore it neceſſarily follows, that it is better to be without outward comforts, then to be without a being. Again, life is better then all outward things, (Satan ſpake truly in the former Chapter, All that a man hath will he give for his life.) That which a man parts with rather then his life, is below his life. If then life be better then riches, or health, or pleaſures, then much more is our being better then all theſe. As a man may hold his life when all his eſtate and comforts are gone, ſo he doth hold his being when his life is gone: Life is brittle ware at the beſt, but mans being is of an everlaſting make. I know there are ſome who diſpute and conclude, that a being, even an eternally miſerable being, is better then no being: And I grant it is ſo in a metaphyſical, or a philoſophical notion; but in a theological notion it is not. A Philoſopher (keeping within the ſphere of Nature) can ſee no miſery ſo miſerable, or evil ſo bad, as not to be. But a Divine can, he ſees two things worſe. Firſt, An everlaſting ſtain and guilt of ſin lying upon the ſoul. Secondly, The everlaſting wrath and diſpleaſure of God poured out upon the whole man. Hence Chriſt ſaith of Judas, who betrayed him, Mat. 26. 24. It had been good for that man, if he had not been born; becauſe that accurſed act, joyned with his impenitence and unbelief, ſubjected him to everlaſting miſery, to wrath for evermore; It had been good he had never been born, rather then to fall into ſuch a ſin, and from that to fall into Hell. Not to be born, is in this place, as much as not to be. And it had been good for him not to have been born, is as much as to ſay, it had been better for him not to have been born. It had been better for him not to have been, then to have committed ſuch a ſin, to lye under ſuch wrath, and to looſe ſuch happineſs for ever. Though a ſtate of damnation (conſidered abſtractedly) be better then no ſtate all, that is, then a not being; yet, in the concrete, it is not better to be damned then not to be: In it ſelf, eternal miſery is better then a non-entity; but a man eternally miſerable is worſe then a non-ens. And without doubt it will be the eternal deſire of the damned (and that deſire is both a part and an increaſe of their miſery) that they never had been, or now might ceaſe to be, rather then continue to be miſerable.

Si natus non fuiſſet ille homo, i.e. ſi nunquam proceſſiſſet à non eſſe ad eſſe. Melius quippe fuiſſet nunquam fuiſſe quam tanta flagitia perpetrare, gratiâ quoque & gloria in æternum privari: ſed & appetibilius eſt homini abſolutè non eſſe, quam eſſe damnatum, propter æternam pœnatiſſimamq; miſeriam, Dioniſ. Carthuſ. in Mat. 26. v. 24.

Now to ſhut up and reſolve the queſtion, as to the ground of it, Job's complaint in this Text. I ſay, Job was only in the preſent feeling of temporal troubles, and he was beyond the fear of eternal: Therefore number this among his failings, that he wiſht he had never been conceived, becauſe he was thus afflicted.

VERS. 14, 15, 16, 17, 18.

With kings and Counſellors of the earth, which build deſolate places for themſelves.

Or with Princes that had gold, who filled their houſes with ſilver.

Or as an hidden untimely birth, I had not been, as Infants which never ſaw light.

There the wicked ceaſe from troubling, and there the weary be at reſt.

There the priſoners reſt together, they hear not the voice of the oppreſſor, &c.

From the tenth verſe of this Chapter to the end of the nineteenth, we have ſhewed you, that Job layeth down the cauſe of his former bitterneſs and complainings againſt his day. At the tenth verſe he is angry, becauſe it hindred not his conception and his birth: And at the thirteenth he giveth a further cauſe of that cauſe; For then (ſaith he) I ſhould have been at reſt. Now being about to prove, that in death he ſhould have found reſt, he doth it by an induction of particulars. As if he had thus ſaid: Where all ſorts of perſons, even they who have been hardeſt wrought, and moſt troubled in the world, find reſt; there ſurely I ſhould have found reſt alſo: But in death, perſons that have been hardeſt wrought, and moſt troubled in the world, find reſt; therefore there I ſhould have found reſt too. Now for the proving of this aſſumption, that in death all ſorts of perſons find reſt, even thoſe who have been moſt travail'd, tired, and worn out in the world: To prove this (I ſay) he gives inſtance in divers, almoſt all ranks, degrees and conditions of men.

Firſt, In thoſe who are great, rich and wiſe, in Kings and Counſellours of the earth, which build deſolate places for themſelves. And in Princes who had gold, who filled their houſes with treaſure, &c.

With Kings and Counſellors of the earth.

מלר
Regnavit Conſilio & Legibus.

With Kings.] The word here uſed, properly noteth ſuch as rule by Law, ſuch as are oppoſed to Tyrants, who rule according to the dictates of their own will. With ſuch Kings Counſellours are uſually joyned; With Kings and Counſellours of the earth. Great Princes have their Councils; and it is a happy conjunction when good Kings and good Counſellours meet together. Yea many times bad men are good Kings, when they are attended with good Counſellours: Whereas evil Counſellours often make a good man a bad King, and by their poiſonous whiſpers and inſtillations at the ear, corrupt the hearts, and taint the ſpirits of the beſt Princes. In the multitude of Counſellours (ſaith Solomon, Prov. 15.21.) there is ſafety. The ſafety of Kings, and the ſafety of Kingdoms, doth conſiſt in following this multitude. Where there are good Counſellours, and a multitude of them, we may expect good, and much good, a multitude of bleſſings upon a Nation.

Now when Job had named theſe eminent perſons, Kings and Counſellours, he addeth ſomewhat further by way of their deſcription, he giveth as it were a character of them from their ſtudies and imployments, With Kings and Counſellours of the earth, which build deſolate places for themſelves.

חרבות
Proprie deſtructiones.

It may ſeem very doubtful what is here meant by theſe deſolate places, and the building of them. The word in the Hebrew is, deſolations, or deſtructions; It comes from Charab, which ſignifies to dry up, becauſe dry places are deſolate places, as a deſolate wilderneſs for the drineſs of it, being unfit to ſuſtain man or beaſt. Hence the name of the Mount Horeb, Exod. 3.1. called ſo from drineſs, becauſe there was no water, Deut. 8.15. The ſame word alſo ſignifies a ſword; becauſe the ſword (as we ſee by woful experience) makes places deſolate. But what Job ſhould mean by this, That Kings and Counſellours of the earth, build ſolitary places for themſelves, is queſtionable.

Firſt, Some take it for an expreſſion of vaſt and mighty buildings, Pallaces and houſes of ſuch largeneſs, and content, that when great Princes and Kings have their full retinue and families in them, they can ſcarce be ſeen: But I ſee no reaſon at all for that ſenſe, and therefore I paſs it; a little touch will make that opinion deſolate.

Others by theſe deſolate places, conceive that Job meaneth Forreſts and Parks, places of pleaſure, which Kings and great men uſe to build and make up for delight and recreation.

Or thirdly, That by deſolate places, are meant houſes built in deſolate or ſolitary places, in Woods and Forreſts. Princes and great men will have their houſes far remote from Towns and places of reſort, that they may be free from ſuitors, and retire when they pleaſe from the throng of the multitude. It is ſaid concerning Solomon, 1 King. 7.2. that after he had built the Temple, and his own houſe, for his Kingly reſidence, he built a houſe in the Forreſt of Lebanon; But this may be called a building in, rather then a building of, deſolate places.

Innuit loca vaſta & deſtructa deſolataq; quæ ipſi extruebant ad nomen ſibi cõparandum. Druſ.

Fourthly, Rather, I conceive that Kings and Counſellours of the earth may be ſaid to build deſolate places, when finding places deſolate and ruined, they, with vaſt expences raiſe up and build ſtately Fabricks upon them, to get themſelves a name. As want and poverty, war and troubles turn a Pallace into a deſolate place; ſo riches and plenty, power and peace meeting together in Kings and great men, turn deſolate places into Pallaces. Kings and Counſellours are of ſuch wealth and power, that they can alter the moſt deſolate and ruinous places, into delicate edifices and ſtately dwellings.

Or laſtly, Which doth beſt ſuit with the ſubject of Jobs diſcourſe or curſe in this Chapter. He ſpeaking ſo much of death, by the deſolate places, we may underſtand, Tombs and Sepulchers, places of burial, which Kings and Counſellours build to, or for, themſelves: And ſo taken, the ſence may be given thus, as if Job had ſaid, if I had died, I ſhould have lien in the grave with as much eaſe and quiet, as thoſe great Princes and Kings of the earth, who build themſelves ſtately monuments to lie in; It would have been as well with me as with any of them, though interr'd under ſtately tombs. We know it was an ordinary thing for Kings and great men (eſpecially in ancient times) to prepare for themſelves coſtly monuments, while they lived, as houſes for their bodies being dead: Which grew to ſuch exceſſive charge among the Romanes, that they were forced to make a Law to reſtrain it. The Egyptians beſtowed more care and coſt in building their tombs then their houſes. Even Abraham (Gen. 23.16.) bought him a burying place before he built himſelf a houſe; though while he lived, he dwelt in a moveable tent, yet he would be as ſure as he could of a certain grave. And good Joſeph of Arimathea had made himſelf a ſepulcher in a rock, Mat. 27.60. And it is ſaid of Abſolom, 2 Sam. 18.18. That in his life time he had taken and reared up a pillar, (that is, he had artificially raiſed a great pile of goodly ſtones) in the Kings dale, For he ſaid, I have no ſon to keep my name in remembrance; And he called the pillar after his own name. Now as this pillar was to keep his name, ſo he intended it likewiſe to keep his body when he ſhould die; For it being related in the verſe before, how as ſoon as he was ſlain, they made no more ado with him, but caſt him into a great pit in the wood, and laid a very great heap of ſtones upon him. The holy Ghoſt, to ſhew us the vanity of man in preparing for a dead body, while he neglects an immortal ſoul, and how God diſappoints the vain conceits of men in ſuppoſing to perpetuate their own name and greatneſs; The holy Ghoſt (I ſay) to ſhew this, preſently ſubjoyns in the ſacred ſtory, Now Abſolom in his life time, &c. As if he had ſaid, Do ye obſerve how this ambitious Prince was buried, even tumbled into a pit with a rude heap of ſtones caſt upon him. This man had prepared himſelf another kind of monument, even a ſumptuous pillar, &c. So that under, or by, that pillar, he had archt a curious vault for himſelf to be buried in, called Abſaloms place, namely, his burying place.

Noſtræ quidẽ legis interpretes, quo capite jubent ſumptus & luxus removere á Deorum manium Jure, Intelligunt imprimis ſepulchrorum munificentiam eſſe miruendam. Cicero. Major apud Egyptios ſepulchrorũ quã domorum cura.

Inane monumentũ quod vocatur κηνοτάφιον Jun. in loc.

And the word which we have here for deſolate places, is in Scripture clearly applied to the grave, or a place of burial. We have it in Ezek. 26.20. where the Prophet foreſhewing the deſtruction of Tyre, ſpeaks from the Lord, thus; When I ſhall bring thee down with them that deſcend into the pit, and ſhall ſet thee in the low parts of the earth, in places deſolate of old. There are three words in that verſe, and they are all Synonima's, words of the ſame ſignification; Firſt, The pit. Secondly, The low parts of the earth. Thirdly, The deſolate places; and all theſe are but ſeveral expreſſions for the grave, or for a place to bury in: It is no more but this, When I ſhall bring thee down, even with thoſe that lie buried in the grave. So that the word which we tranſlate deſolate places, being alſo in other places uſed for the grave or a place of burial, we may very well expound it ſo here, that deſolate places are the graves or ſepulchers of Kings, and Princes, and Counſellours of the earth; which we may do eſpecially, becauſe Job treats in this place about death, and the ſtate of the dead.

Now Tombs and Monuments may be called deſolate places in two reſpects.

Firſt, Becauſe when the body is layed in there, all company and all friends leave it; you ſhall have a mighty train following their friend to the grave, but there they leave him. Kings and Counſellours have ſtately Funerals, but when their ſubjects or friends, favourites or flatterers, have brought them to the tomb and opened the door of the grave, they go no further, they will not go in with them, and dwell with their bodies in the duſt of death, as much as they honour'd or ador'd them when they lived: ſo that, they are in deſolate places.

Secondly, Graves may be called deſolate places, becauſe Tombs and Sepulchres were in deſolate places, they were made in ſome high Mountain or caved Valley, in ſome place remote from the company and habitations of the living; for in former times they did not bury in Cities or in Towns, but in places where few came, till they were carried ried, and therefore properly called deſolate places. It is obſerved, that among the Romans, the firſt Emperour that was buried in Rome was Trajan. And the law of the the twelve Tables did prohibit both the burial and the burning of the dead within the City. So then it is clear, that anciently Tombs and Monuments were erected in deſolate places, and that great coſt was beſtowed in building and beautifying of them; both which favour and illuſtrate the expoſition given. It follows in the Text;

Eutrop. lib. 8. In Urbe ne ſepelito neve urito.

Or with Princes that had gold, who fill their houſes with treaſure.

שׂר

The word Sar, a Prince, in the Hebrew, as in moſt other languages, ſignifies the chief, the head, the firſt. Some Criticks conceive that our Engliſh word [Sir] comes from it; it is very near in ſound, and ſo is the French word [Mounſier] to this Original for a Prince or Chief.

Job deſcribeth Princes thus, they are ſuch as had gold. noting both what the ſtudy and indeavours of Princes are, namely, to lay up gold; and likewiſe what is requiſite for them. Gold is of great uſe in a high eſtate; Treaſures are neceſſary for Princes. Princes that had gold. Therefore Solomon that wiſe Prince ſaith of himſelf, Eccleſ. 2. 8. And he putteth it among his Princely works, I gathered me alſo ſilver and gold, and the peculiar treaſure of Kings. When the Wiſe-men came to Chriſt, the firſt thing they offered him was gold, and they did wiſely, for he was a Prince: gold being the chief, and as it were the prince of Mettals, is a very proper offering for Princes. And howſoever wiſdom and goodneſs, juſtice and clemency are far more neceſſary requiſites in Princes then gold, yet there is ſuch a neceſſary conjunction of theſe two, that we find him in the Prophet (Iſa. 3. 7.) refuſing the government becauſe he was poor. Be thou our Ruler (ſay they v. 6.) and let this ruine be under thine hand, that is, be thou our Prince, and take charge of us; Not I ſaith he, I will not be an healer, for in mine houſe is neither bread nor cloathing, make me not a Ruler of the people; As if he had ſaid, I am but a poor man, a man of a weak eſtate, Princes muſt have treaſure and great eſtates to bear up the dignity of their places. As covetouſneſs, ſo poverty is very unbecoming in a Prince. The Roman ſtory tells us, that when two great Councels ſtood in competition for a great employment in the affairs of that Common-wealth, One of the Senators being askt upon which of the two he would beſtow his vote, anſwered, upon neither: And gives this reaſon, One hath nothing, and the other can never have enough; One was ſo poor that he had nothing to ſupport him, and the other was ſo covetous that nothing would ſatisfie him. Therefore, as before Job joyned Counſellors with Kings, ſo here he joyneth gold with Princes; The next expedient for Princes to counſel and wiſdom, are gold and treaſures. We find indeed, that God gives it in charge to the Kings of Iſrael, concerning their gathering of treaſures, that they ſhould not be exceſſive, (Deut. 17. 17.) Neither ſhall he greatly multiply to himſelf ſilver and gold. He doth not ſay, your Prince or your King ſhall not multiply ſilver or gold, but he ſhall not greatly multiply ſilver or gold, that is, he ſhall not ſet his heart upon them, or think he never hath enough, he ſhall not greatly do it, but let him be careful to do it proportionably to his occaſions either of peace or war.

Valerius Maximus. l. 6. c. 4.

כסף Argentum quod ab omnibus appetitur.

Further, It is added, Who fill their houſes with treaſure. The word which we here tranſlate treaſure, is ordinarily tranſlated ſilver. The root from which it ſprings, ſignifieth to deſire, and the reaſon is, becauſe treaſure, ſilver or gold, are ſuch deſireable things, or things upon which the deſires of moſt men are ſet: therefore the Hebrews give ſilver a name proper to its own nature, or rather to the nature of men, whoſe deſires are enflamed after it. With this deſireable thing, Princes fill their houſes.

What are theſe houſes?

A houſe is a place wherein man liveth, or inhabiteth while he liveth: this is the ordinary acception of the word; and ſo it may be taken here, for the ordinary dwelling houſes or Pallaces of Princes; and then it is an heightning of the ſenſe, They had gold, yea, they had ſo much, as they filled their houſes with it.

Then again, (That we may keep in this clauſe to the expoſition given in the laſt, of the deſolate places,) we may underſtand by the houſes that theſe Princes filled with treaſure, the graves, the Tombs wherein they were buried; And it is the language of Scripture, to call the grave a houſe, mans houſe. Two Texts I will give you for it, one out of this book, Job 30. 23. where Job ſpeaking of the grave, calleth it the houſe appointed for all living; And Eccleſ. 12. 5. where Solomon calls it our long home. Man dieth, and goeth to his long home; the word in the Original is, he goeth to the houſe of his age, or to the houſe of age. God is called the rock of ages, becauſe he is an everlaſting ſtrength, Iſa. 26. 4. The grave is called an houſe of age, becauſe it is a very laſting houſe, an abiding houſe, a houſe where man muſt abide till God ſound him up by the voice of a Trumpet to the reſurrection. So then the grave is likewiſe called an houſe, the houſe of all living, becauſe thither every one that is living is travailing, man travails to the grave as to his houſe; And a long home, in oppoſition to our ſhort home, our uncertain abode in thoſe houſes wherein we dwell upon the earth.

בית עלם׳ Ad domum ſeculi.

Princes (ſaith Job) that had gold; and this is one uſe they make of it, they fill their houſes, that is, their graves or their tombs with this treaſure. In thoſe times (it ſeems) they did not only beſtow great coſt upon their Tombs and places of burial, but they put great ſtore of treaſure into the Tombs with them. According to this interpretation, the meaning of Job may be thus repreſented, If I had died before, and had been buried poorly and obſcurely, yet I ſhould have done as well as Kings and Counſellours, who with vaſt expence of treaſure build ſtately Tombs for themſelves, yea as well as Princes that put their treaſure into their Tombs with them.

Joſeph. lib. 13. Antiq. c. 15. & lib. 16. cap. 11.

That it was a cuſtom to put in much treaſure into Tombs, is obſerved by Joſephus in his 13th book of Antiquities and 15th chapter, ſhewing how Hircanus opened Davids Sepulcher, and took out three thouſand Talents. And in his 16th book, chap. 11. he notes, that afterward Herod opened the Sepulcher of David, and thought to have found a great deal of treaſure there, but found only ſome precious garments, &c. And the ſtory is famous out of Herodotus concerning Semiramis, That ſhe having built a ſtately Tomb, makes this inſcription upon it, Whatſoever King ſhall ſucceed here and wants money, let him open this Tomb, and he ſhall have enough to ſerve his turn; Which Darius in after-ages being in ſtraights for want of treaſure attempting to do, in ſtead of money found only this reproof written and laid up there, Unleſs thou hadſt been extreamly covetous and greedy of filthy lucre, thou wouldeſt not have opened the graves of the dead to ſeek for money. The Lord threatens by the Prophet Jeremy, that the Chaldeans ſhall bring out the bones of the King of Judah, and the bones of his Princes, and the bones of the Prieſts, and the bones of the Prophets, &c. out of their graves, chap. 8. 1. It is conceived that the reaſon why the Chaldeans digged up and raked in the graves of the Jewes, was not ſo much from cruelty as from covetouſneſs: They having heard that the Jewes uſed to put rich ornaments upon the dead, or riches into their graves with them. Or this might be as a juſt puniſhment of that greedineſs after gain, ſo eminent in the Jewes, that the Prophet in the very Chapter where this is threatned, chargeth them thus, verſ. 10. Every one from the leaſt to the greateſt, is given to covetouſneſs. Thus it is clear, that there was a cuſtom to put riches and treaſure into the grave with the dead, to which Job might allude in this place.

Herodotus, lib. 1.

So much for the opening of the words. From the ſenſe given,

> Obſerve, firſt, That neither power, nor wiſdom, nor riches, are any priviledge at all againſt the ſtroake of death.

Here are Kings, men that have great power; Counſellours, men full of wiſdom; Princes that have riches, ſo much gold that they can ſtuff their graves with it: yet theſe cannot defend themſelves againſt death. Death will not obey the authority of Kings, nor doth it fear their frowns; the ſubtilty or policy of Counſellors is not able to defeat it; there is no eloquence, no Rhetorick can perſwade death to depart; all the gold and riches in the world cannot bribe death or ſtay its hand; I (ſaith Job) ſhould have found Kings and Counſellors, and rich men, even all theſe in the grave, and we ſhould have reſted together. Riches avail not in the day of wrath, (Prov. 11. 4.) but righteouſneſs delivereth from death. Righteouſneſs delivereth eth from death? why, ſhall not righteous men die? Surely Job might have ſaid, with righteous men, with holy men ſhould I have reſted; with Abraham, with Iſaac, and with Jacob, theſe are in the grave, death ſeized on them as well as other Princes, and Kings and Counſellors: How then doth Solomon ſay, that righteouſneſs delivereth from death? Death is there either to be underſtood of ſome dangerous judgment; for, ſaith he, riches avail not in a day of wrath, that is, in a day of publick calamity; but righteouſneſs delivereth from death; that is, from thoſe troubles and dangers: God hath reſpect to a righteous perſon, and hideth him from that death. Or, righteouſneſs doth deliver from death, that is, from the evil of death, from the ſting of death, from the bitterneſs of death; the bitterneſs and evil of death is paſt to a righteous man: but riches they avail not at all; they cannot at all, as not deliver from death, ſo not mitigate the pain, or pull out the ſting, or ſweeten the bitterneſs of death; yea rather, riches increaſe all theſe: That is a truth, O death! how bitter is thy remembrance to a man that is at eaſe in his poſſeſſion? Men may put their riches with them into the grave, but riches cannot keep them a moment out of the grave. This thought, How bitter!

Secondly, When Job ſpeaks of Kings, and Counſellors, and Princes, theſe great men of the world, he ſheweth us, what their ſtudy and buſineſs for the moſt part is in the world; it is about worldly things: They build deſolate places, they have gold, they fill their houſes with treaſure; theſe are their employments, the current of their cares and endeavours runs out this way. Hence obſerve,

> That, The thoughts of the greateſt and wiſeſt of the world are uſually but for, and about the world.

The poor receive the Goſpel, and the rich receive the world. As the godly man is deſcribed by his faith, Abraham believed God; by fear, by uprightneſs, by juſtice, as Job in the firſt Chapter of this Book; by meekneſs, as Moſes, &c. by the heavenlineſs of their ſpirits and converſations; Our converſation is in heaven, Phil. 3. 20. ſo worldly men are deſcribed by their proper ſtudies. Kings, Counſellors, and Princes build palaces, gather riches, heap up gold; they buy, they ſell, they build, they plant, they eat, they drink, as the worldly world is pictured, Luke 17. 27, 28. In Pſalm. 17. great men are called, the men of the world, as if they were for nothing but the world, or all for the world; as if all their proviſions were laid in for this world; ſo it follows, who have their portion in this life, ver. 14. It is a ſad thing to have received our portion. It is ſaid of the rich man, Son, remember that thou in thy life time receivedſt thy good things, thou haſt had thy portion. In Pſal. 49. 11. it is ſaid concerning ſuch men, that their inward thought is, that their houſes ſhall continue for ever, and their dwelling places to all generations; and they call their Lands after their own names. Their inward thoughts are upon theſe things. It is ſomewhat a ſtrange kind of ſpeaking, to ſay, their inward thoughts; for there are no thoughts but inward: thoughts are all wrought in the ſecret ſhop of the heart. But there is an elegancy in it, the Hebrew is, their inwards, their internals; their inwards are, how they may get themſelves a name and riches; not only are their thoughts about theſe things, but the very inmoſt of their thoughts; the moſt retired thoughts and receſſes of the ſoul are about theſe things; theſe lie neareſt to their hearts: as the ſtory ſaith of Queen Mary, when ſhe died, ſhe bade them open her, and they ſhould find Calice at her heart; it was a pitiful caſe, that a rotten Town ſhould lie (where Chriſt ought) at the heart of ſuch a Princeſs: The heart is the place where Chriſt and the thoughts of heaven ſhould lodge: all below heaven, ſhould be below our hearts. But as a godly mans inward thoughts are for heaven, and the things of heaven, for grace & for holineſs; ſo he hath thoughts upon the world, but (if I may ſo ſpeak) they are his outward thoughts, not his inward thoughts; that which lies neareſt his heart; his inward thoughts are for heaven; ſo the inward thoughts of worldly men are for the world: The Apoſtle might well ſay, Not many wiſe, nor many rich, nor many noble are called. The thoughts of wiſe Counſellors, of potent Kings, and rich Princes, are legible in their actions.

Internum vel interiora.

Thirdly, Having expounded theſe deſolate places to be Tombs, and theſe houſes Graves; obſerve,

> That, Some take in their life-time, more care for their Sepulchers, then they do for their Souls.

Here are great men, what do they? They build deſolate places; they will be ſure to have ſtately monuments: And they had gold; they will be ſure to fill their graves with treaſure, they will be buried richly, or they will have their riches buried with them; but what care did theſe take for their poor ſouls in the mean time, where they ſhould lie? Had they taken order what ſhould become of their ſouls? When all things are diſpoſed of, this choice piece, for the moſt part, is left undiſpoſed of, unprovided for: Some will carefully provide for their children, they will provide for their families, they will provide for their dead bodies, for their carkaſes; but for their immortal ſouls there is no proviſion made: While their bodies are aſſured of a reſting-place, they may ſay of, and to their departing ſouls (as that trembling Emperor beſpake his) O our poor fleeting, wandring ſouls! whither are you going, where is the place of your reſt? As it is ſaid of Abſolom in the place before cited, He in his life-time had reared up a pillar (a monument, or a Tomb) for himſelf, in the Kings dale. What a careful Prince was this for his body? But how careleſs was this Prince for his ſoul? He will have a pillar to preſerve his name, and yet runs out in rebellion againſt his own father, to the deſtruction of his ſoul. The great buſineſs of the Saints on earth, is, to get aſſurance of a place for their ſouls to lodge in when they die; it troubles them not much, what lodging their bodies have, if they can put their ſpirits into the hand of Chriſt: What though their bodies be caſt upon a dunghil, or trodden upon, like mire in the ſtreets, by cruel men? A heathen ſaid, The loſs of a Funeral, or a Sepulcher, may eaſily be born: I am ſure a Chriſtian may. That loſs will never undo any man, eſpecially not thoſe that believe: For in the perſon of ſuch, the Apoſtle ſpeaks, 2 Cor. 5. 2. We know that if our earthly houſe of this Tabernacle were diſſolved, we have a building of God, an houſe not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. All that rich worldlings, and ungodly great ones can ſay when they die, is, We know when the earthly houſe of this Tabernacle ſhall be diſſolved, we have a building of man, a ſtately tomb made with hands, and with all the skill of the cunning artificer; we have ſeen it done already, or we have taken order in our wills to have it done. The believer erects his pillar in heaven, and his whole life is a preparation for his houſe which is above; and often he ſettles the buſineſs ſo, that he can ſay, I know, that when this houſe of my body is taken down, I have a building, &c. And he can ſay, I know, with far greater aſſurance then any worldly man, who hath ſealed it in his will, that thus and thus his body ſhall be intombed. It is a ſad thing to take care for a rotting carkaſs, and forget an immortal ſoul.

Facilis jactura ſepulchri.

Job, having thus parallell'd or compared himſelf in death, with Kings, Counſellors, and Princes, notwithſtanding all their pompous Funerals and curious Tombs, paſſeth, as it were, in the next verſe, to the other extream.

Verſe 16. Or as an hidden untimely birth, I had not been, as infants which never ſaw light.

As if he had ſaid, if any think that I have ſtrained too high, in making my ſelf equal in death with Kings, &c. yet ſurely I ſhould have been as thoſe, that never knew themſelves to be in this world; or as thoſe that the world never knew to be, that is, as an hidden untimely birth; or, as infants which never ſaw light.

An hidden untimely birth.] The word [Nephel] in the Hebrew, for an untimely birth, comes from [Naphel] which ſignifieth to fall down, or to fall off, as untimely fruit falls off from a tree; which falling off before it is ripe, is unprofitable and uſeleſs. When the mother miſcarries, her fruit is like the fruit of a tree, ſhaken off and falling down before it be ripe, or in the blooming. And the ſame word is uſed in the Hebrew, to ſignifie a Giant: There were (Nephilim) Giants in the earth in thoſe dayes, Gen. 6. 4. And the reaſon why they are ſo called, is, as ſome apprehend, becauſe they were Apoſtates, ſuch as fell off from God, from true worſhip and Religion: Or, becauſe they did fall upon men, as that phraſe is applied to cruel men, they did fall upon the poor: So the word is uſed, chap. 1. ver. 15. of this Book. The Sabeans fell upon Job's Oxen, &c. They who fall from God by impiety, will quickly fall upon men by cruelty. Or, becauſe the dread and terrour of them made men to fall down for fear before them. It is very obſervable, that the ſame word ſhould ſignifie an infant of leſs then a ſpan long, and a Giant (it may be) of more then ſix cubits and a ſpan (1 Sam. 17. 4.) and both upon equal reaſon, and with equal ſignificancy,

Quaſi deciduus aut immaturus fructus qui ante maturitatis tempus ex arbore decidit inutilis. Bold. in loc.

Further, We may take notice, that the Hebrews expreſs any dead body or carkaſs by the ſame word; the dead body of the oldeſt man is called Mappeleth, from the ſame root and reaſon too in part, from which they denominate an untimely birth, that never lived a day. When the old man dies, he falls as well as the newly conceived embryon; the one falls off as a bloſſom from the tree, and the other as the fruit fully ripe, which (if you pull it not off) muſt fall off. The Greek word for a dead body, and the Latine, have the ſame reaſon of their derivation; namely from falling; ſo ſaith Job, I had been as one of theſe untimely births, that fall to the earth before their time. The Apoſtle Paul ſaith concerning himſelf (1 Cor. 15. 3.) I was as one born out of due time; I was an untimely birth. Some of the Naturaliſts ſay, that word ſignifies ſuch abortions as are after the ſeventh, and before, or at the fortieth day of conception. Others, that it ſignifies thoſe who are born the eighth moneth; which, uſually as they are untimely, ſo they die. Now Paul calleth himſelf an untimely birth, to ſuit the humble thoughts which he had of himſelf, with an humble expreſſion of himſelf; which reaſon he ſeems to give in the next words, ver. 9. For I am the leaſt of the Apoſtles, that am not meet to be called an Apoſtle, &c. Even as an untimely birth is not fit to be called a birth; or, becauſe children that are ſo born, are very imperfect, they are leſſer and weaker then thoſe of full growth: So ſaith he, I am as a poor abortive, as a child born out of due time; I am the leaſt of the Apoſtles, and am leſs then the leaſt of all Saints, Eph. 3. 8. I am not come to that ſtature and growth of a timely birth. Secondly, He calleth himſelf an untimely birth, or one born out of due time, probably for this reaſon, becauſe of the ſuddenneſs or violence of his converſion; for you know, every abortion or untimely birth comes from ſome ſudden danger into which the mother falleth; ſome ſtrain or violence cauſeth abortion: Paul in this ſence was an untimely birth, his converſion was a wonderful violent converſion; Chriſt came upon him of a ſudden, whereas the other Apoſtles were a great while a forming, a ſhaping, a fitting to an Apoſtleſhip; but Paul was, as it were, in a moment conceived and born, brought forth and perfected an Apoſtle; and ſo from the ſuddenneſs and violence of his new-birth, he may call himſelf an untimely birth.

πτῶμα à πίπτειν, Cadaver, à cadendo.

ἔκτρωμα, apud Ariſtotelem ſignificat fœtum poſt ſeptimum & intra quadrageſimum diem conceptum; Apud Hippocratem, octavo menſe natos. Ariſtot. l. 7. de Hiſt. Animal. c. 7.

Juſtum temporis ordinē ſervavit dominus in creandis fovendis & formandis Apoſtolis. Paulus vero vix dum bene concepto ſpiritu vitali ex utero projectus fuerat, momento ſimul genitus & natus, & vir plenæ ætatis fuit. Pined.

But to paſs on from that, to the words of Job, As an hidden untimely birth, I had not been. Here are two things diſtinct about this birth. Firſt, It is called an untimely birth. Secondly, A hidden birth.

An untimely birth is called a hidden birth, becauſe it is hid from the eyes of others; abortives are unpleaſing and undeſirable ſpectacles, therefore they are covered and laid by; there is no remembrance of their form or likeneſs; therefore Solomon ſpeaking of an untimely birth, Eccleſ. 6. 4. thus deſcribes it, He cometh in with vanity, and departeth in darkneſs, and his name ſhall be covered with darkneſs.

As a hidden untimely birth, [I had not been.]

An untimely birth is ſaid not to have been. A not being is taken two wayes. Firſt, Strictly, for that which never had any life at all; and ſo ſome interpret this; for there are abortions or untimely births before quickning, or before there is any life. Secondly, Not to be, is, not to ſubſiſt, or not to live: When that which hath lived, dies, it is ſaid not to be. The Prophet brings in Rachel, weeping for her children, and would not be comforted, becauſe they were not, Jer. 31. 15. that is, becauſe they were dead. Joſeph's Brethren, pleading before unknown Joſeph, tell him, Thy ſervants are twelve brethren, and behold, the youngeſt is this day with his father, and one is not, Gen. 42. 13. that is, one is dead. So Jacob ſpeaks at ver. 30. of the ſame Chapter; Joſeph is not, &c. Hence that anſwer of the wiſe man to Alexander, who demanding of him, whether the living or the dead were more in number? ſaid, the living; for the dead are not.

Eſſe dicitur qui vivit; & non eſſe, qui mortuus eſt.

As infants that never ſaw the light.] This clauſe may be an expoſition of the former clauſe, ſhewing what Job means by an untimely birth; even an infant that never ſaw the light. Yet all infants that never ſee the light, are not untimely births. Infants are often ſtill-born, when their mothers have gone out their time to the laſt hour, before the pains of travail come upon them. And therefore I rather underſtand this as diſtinct from the former. In the one Job intending ſuch as are born before time, which births are commonly called abortions or miſcarriages. And in the other, thoſe who die in the birth, who are commonly called ſtill-born. The word which is here uſed for an infant, ſignifies properly a weaned infant; but it is likewiſe transferred to ſignifie an infant dying in the birth; which is therefore ſaid never to ſee the light; ſo Solomon expreſſeth it too, in that place, Eccleſ. 6. 5. Moreover, he hath not ſeen the Sun: And in alluſion to this, David, when he curſeth the plots of wicked men, that though they have conceived miſchief, and though they have gone with it a long time, and are ready to bring it forth; yet, in Pſal. 58. 8. ſaith he, Let them be (that is, let their counſels and deſignes be) like the untimely birth of a woman, that they may not ſee the ſun; that is, let them be daſhed and blaſted, let them never bring forth their poyſonous brood, to the hurt and trouble of the world. To theſe, ſaith Job, I am ſure, I ſhould have been like, if not to Kings and Counſellors, and it had been as well, and all one to me. In death, untimely births, and thoſe that go down to the grave, as a ſheaf of corn that cometh in ripe, are all one; there is no difference in the grave, between the Infant that never ſaw the ſun, and him that hath lived to ſee an hundred recourſes of the ſun.

עולל Significat parvulum ablactatum, per Catachreſin uſurpatur de infantibus in utero matris extinctis.

The ſpeech of Job proceeds to a third ſort; he ſtrengthens his argument of reſt in death. I ſhould certainly have had reſt in death; for in death, even they who have been moſt vexed, who have had leaſt reſt, who have been even reſtleſs in the world, they have found reſt in death; this he clears by a further induction, in verſ. 17, 18, 19.

There the wicked ceaſe from troubling, and there the weary be at reſt.

There the priſoners reſt together, they hear not the voyce of the oppreſſor.

The ſmall and great are there, and the ſervant is free from his maſter.

When he had ſpoken of the reſt of death, concerning thoſe great and mighty ones; and the reſt of death, concerning untimely births and infants; then he ſpeaks of the reſt which poor oppreſſed ones, or which wicked oppreſſors have in death; all theſe have a reſt in regard of outward bodily troubles, agitations and labours, in the grave, therefore certainly there I ſhould have been at reſt.

There (that is, in the grave) the wicked ceaſe from troubling.] True reſt and wickedneſs never meet; reſt and the wicked meet but ſeldom. And it is but half a reſt, and it is reſt but to half a wicked man, to his bones in the grave; and it is reſt to that half but for a little time, only till the reſurrection.

The word which is here uſed for wicked, is conſiderable: Though every wicked man be a ſinner, yet every ſinner is not a wicked man: It is one thing to ſin, and another thing to be wicked; there are divers words in the hebrew tongue, which ſignifie, as it were, the divers ſtatures of ſinners, and the degrees of ſin; and the hebrew, which uſually expreſſeth many things by one word, doth here uſe many words to ſignifie one thing, only differing in degree.

רשעים

Firſt, A ſinner is called ſometime [Cata] that's the loweſt expreſſion; noting one that doth miſs a mark, or his way; he aimes at the mark, yet miſſes it; he would go in the right way, yet miſtakes it, or is miſled: So every man, the holieſt men are ſinners; they often miſs the mark, the white which God ſets up, though they take their aim, and carefully level at it.

חטא Erravit à ſcopo vel via, ea potiſſimum peccata ſignificat, quæ vel errore, vel per ignorantiam vel infirmitate carnis committuntur, Moller. in pſal. 106. v. 6.

Secondly, A ſinner is called [Peſhang] which ſignifieth a willingneſs to ſin, and an unwillingneſs to obey; it ſignifieth pride in ſinning, or a ſinning from pride, which is plain rebellion.

Thirdly, The word here uſed, and in divers other places, ſignifieth wickedneſs in the height, and men moſt active in wickedneſs. So that when Job ſaith, There the wicked are at reſt, he means, thoſe who had been reſtleſs in ſin, who פשע Peccatum ex ſuperbia, tranſgreſſio non ſimplex & qualiſcunq;, ſed malitioſa ac temeraria, unde & ali-

could

quãdo rebellio vocatur. Muſ. in Pſ. 5. v. 10.

could not ſleep, till they had done miſchief, nor ſcarce ſleep for doing miſchief; he means thoſe, who had out-run others in the ſinful activity, or rather turbulency and unquietneſs of their ſpirits; ſuch as are without peace themſelves, and ſeek to moleſt and diſturb the peace of others: The Prophet deſcribes them to be like the troubled ſea, which cannot reſt, (*Iſa.*57. 20) The proper ſignification of the word (wicked) in the hebrew, is the word unquiet, vexatious, or without reſt, 1 Sam. 14. 47. Whereſoever Saul turned himſelf, he vexed the enemy. So, Job 34. 29. And the reaſon of it is given, becauſe men of this height and ſtature in ſin, are men of troubled, unquiet and reſtleſs ſpirits. As it notes a height in holineſs and grace, to have a kind of unquietneſs upon the ſpirit, till we can do good, and compaſs holy deſigns and purpoſes; when we are not only pious, but zealous; as David reſolves, *Pſal.*132.3,4. Surely I will not come into the Tabernacle of my houſe, nor go up into my bed; I will not give ſleep to mine eyes, nor ſlumber to mine eye-lids, until I find out a place for the Lord, &c. So unquietneſs upon the ſpirit, till it can put ſin into act, and compaſs an evil project, notes a compleatneſs in the ſinner. Sin wakes and works in them to purpoſe, who cannot ſleep till they have wrought out their ſin; of theſe, it is properly, that Job ſpeaks here; theſe troublers of themſelves, and troublers of Iſrael; theſe, whom the Lord ſhall trouble this day, or one day: There ſo, in the grave, theſe wicked ones ceaſe from troubling; there they have a kind of reſt, being dead, who could not reſt while they lived; there, at leaſt, they ceaſe from raging. This word (Ragaz) notes any vehement motion, either of mind or body, ariſing from fear, or grief, or anger, or the concurrence of them all: As when David heard of the death of Abſolom, the text ſaith, 2 Sam. 18. 33. The King was much moved, &c. He was, as it were, for a time, enraged and diſtracted, much troubled, I am ſure, with paſſions, or the working of many paſſions together. The word, you ſee, in the hebrew, hath a near affinity in ſound and ſence, with our Engliſh word raging; and we tranſlate it ſo, Pſal. 2. Why do the heathen rage? It is the ſame word; ſo here, the wicked ceaſe from raging, or, from troubling; that is, from that madneſs of rage in troubling the poor, eſpecially ſuch as fear God: Wicked men are not only ſinful, but they are mad in their ſin; as Paul ſpeaks of himſelf before his converſion; I puniſhed them oft in every Synagogue, and compelled them to blaſpheme; and being exceedingly mad againſt them, I perſecuted them even unto ſtrange Cities, Acts 26. 11. In Paul unconverted, ſee the picture of a wicked mans ſpirit; he could not ceaſe from troubling, but in death he ſhall.

And there the weary are at reſt.

Sicut prior pars de tyrannis & oppreſſoribus intelligitur, ita hæc ſecunda poteſt de afflictis & oppreſſis. Sed congruentiùs ſi tota hæc periodus referetur ad viros famoſos, qui dicuntur feſſi robore, mille ſeſe objiciẽtes vitæ diſcriminibus. Pined.

The weary.] Some, by the weary, underſtand thoſe whom the wicked have wearied, by troubling them; and that is a truth, that in the grave, the wearied, thoſe that wicked men have turmoiled and vexed, are at reſt. But rather, by the wearied, we are to underſtand only the wicked themſelves; There the wicked ceaſe from troubling, and there the weary be at reſt, that is, there thoſe wicked men, who weary and tire out themſelves with vexing and troubling of others, are at reſt; they then ceaſe from thoſe vexatious undertakings, which have conſumed their ſpirits, and worn out their bodies; and the reaſon why I rather expound the weary to be the wicked (though the other be a good ſence) is, becauſe Job afterward ſpeaks of the reſt of thoſe that are wearied, who are paſſive under the cruelties and plottings of thoſe wicked ones, There the wicked ceaſe from troubling, and there the weary be at reſt. Hence obſerve, > Firſt, That, Wicked men are troublers both of themſelves and others.

There the wicked ceaſe from troubling; as if the wicked did nothing in the world, but trouble the world. As before Job had given the ſpecial character of great ones and Princes, They get Gold, build Palaces and Sepulchers, and fill them with treaſure: So, when he ſpeaks of wicked ones, he ſaith, There the wicked ceaſe from troubling; as intimating, that while they live in the world, they are a perpetual trouble to the world. The Prophet Iſaiah is expreſs, (chap. 57. 20.) The wicked are as the troubled ſea, that cannot reſt; they can do any thing better, then be quiet; they have not ſtrength enough to ſit ſtill, they cannot reſt. King Ahab had this apprehenſion of Elijah (1 Kings 18. 17.) when the Kingdom of Iſrael was full of trouble (for God did vex them with great adverſity.) Art not thou he (ſaith Ahab) that troubleth Iſrael? No, ſaith Elijah (who could make up a better judgment then Ahab, in that point) I am not he that troubleth Iſrael, but it is thou and thy fathers houſe. Ahab had ſold himſelf to work wickedneſs, and ſo had ſtock enough to purchaſe trouble for Iſrael: Wicked ones are the troublers of all; they are troublers of their own families, troublers of the places and cities where they live, the troublers of a whole Kingdom, troublers of the Churches of Chriſt, and the troublers of their own ſouls; they are born to trouble both active and paſſive, they love to trouble, and they have what they love: It is the character, and the argument of an extream wicked man, to be a troubler; even as it is a great argument of great grace, when you ſee one a comforter of others, or buſie to help others, to do good to others: The tree is known by its fruits.

Secondly, Taking the latter words of this verſe (There the weary be at reſt) for thoſe wicked men who are wearied by troubling others, we may obſerve,

> That, Wicked men, by troubling others, do as much weary and tire out themſelves.

And though they find, that in troubling others, they weary themſelves, yet they will not give it over, they will trouble ſtill. Job ſaith thus of a wicked man in chap. 15. of this Book, v. 20. The wicked man travaileth with pain all his dayes; not only doth he put others to pain, but himſelf is in pain: and they are frequently expreſſed in Scripture, as wearying themſelves; ſometimes, as weary of themſelves; ſo Jer. 9. 5. They weary themſelves to commit iniquity. And, Thou art wearied in the multitude of thy counſels, Iſa. 47. 13. Thou art wearied in the greatneſs of thy way, Iſa. 57. 10. and that was but a way of troubling the Church: She wearieth her ſelf with lies, Ezek. 24. 12. The ſins which wicked men commit only in and againſt themſelves, weary them; but they are moſt wearied, when they are perſecutors of others. It is obſerved of Antiochus Epiphanes, that famous troubler of the Church (by him that hath written the Itinerary of the Saints) that he did undertake more troubleſom journyes, and went upon more hazardous deſignes, meerly to trouble, and vex, and oppoſe the Church of the Jews, then ever any of his predeceſſors did about any other conqueſt or noble enterprize; that he travelled more miles to do miſchief, then (as the Author doth compare their journies) any of the Saints did to do good; and therefore he concludes the ſtory of him, with this general truth concerning perſecutors, All ſuch wicked men go with more trouble to eternal death, then the Saints do to eternal life; they toil themſelves more, and ſuffer more, to work out their own damnation, then the godly do, in working out their ſalvation: To be wicked in the height, is the height of trouble. Solomon ſaith, that a good man is merciful to his beaſt, but a wicked man is unmerciful to himſelf; he will tire himſelf more then a good man will tire his beaſt. This is a certain truth, he that will follow ſin, and ſerve his own luſts (eſpecially the luſts of pride and oppreſſion, whoſoever ſerveth thoſe luſts) ſerveth a hard maſter, a maſter that will make him toil and ſweat, and weary himſelf while he lives, and at laſt pay him with death. The work of ſin is bad enough, but (as to the ſinner) the wages of ſin is worſe.

The laſt thing I ſhall note from it is this; There the wicked ceaſe from troubling. There, where is that? At the grave, when they come to die, they make an end of their troubling, not before. Hence obſerve, > Wicked men will never ceaſe troubling, until they ceaſe to live.

In the grave they ceaſe troubling, there they are at reſt; If they ſhould live an eternity in this world, they would trouble the world to eternity. As a godly man never gives over doing good, he will do good as long as he lives, though he fetches many a weary ſtep; ſo wicked men never give over doing evil, until they ſtep into the grave: And the reaſon of it is, becauſe it is their nature to do evil; and that which men do naturally, they do alwayes, they never give it over. Nothing but death can ſuſpend and ſtop nature.

There are indeed two caſes wherein wicked men ceaſe troubling, while they live; one is, when they are deſperate in their deſigns, and ſee they cannot by troubling themſelves, trouble others ſufficiently; when they cannot have their will, nor compaſs their ends fully; they being in deſpair of doing the miſchief they would, will do no more: So the Hiſtorian notes concerning Diocleſian, the moſt bloody perſecutor that ever the Church had; at laſt he gave over the empire, and declined the government (not becauſe he was weary of perſecuting, but he was weary of being diſappointed) becauſe he ſaw he could not hatch that which he had long brooded, or bring forth thoſe deſignes he had contrived for the utter extirpation of the Chriſtians: Being thus out of hope to do all the miſchief he intended, he puts himſelf out of power to do that miſchief, reſignes the Empire. A ſecond caſe, wherein wicked men ceaſe troubling, is, when they have fully attained their ends in this life; ſometimes they bring their work to ſuch a perfection, to ſuch a period, that they think they have attained all, all their plots have taken, all's theirs; and when they have fully done the Devils work, then he gives them a play day, they have ſome ceſſation: But otherwiſe, except in theſe two caſes, they never ceaſe from troubling; therefore the Apoſtle Paul, Gal. 5. 12. prayeth, that they which trouble them, might even be cut off: As if he had ſaid, they are ſuch a kind of men, there is no curing of them; they will never have done doing miſchief, until they be cut off by death. As God threatens death, to deter men from ſin; ſo ſometimes, he is (as it were) conſtrained to ſend death to keep men off from ſin: A godly man ſaith, If God kill me, yet will I truſt in him; and ſome wicked men ſay (in effect, if not in the letter) till God kills us, we will ſin againſt him. The Pſalmiſt asks the queſtion, Pſal. 94. 4, 5. How long ſhall the wicked, how long ſhall the wicked triumph? How long ſhall they utter and ſpeak hard things? and all the workers of iniquity boaſt themſelves? They break in pieces thy people, O Lord. What anſwer ſhall we give, what date ſhall we put to this, How long? The anſwer is given, ver. 23. The Lord ſhall bring upon them their own iniquity, and cut them off in their own wickedneſs: yea, the Lord our God ſhall cut them off. As if he had ſaid, except the Lord cut them off in their wickedneſs, they will never leave off doing wickedly. The wicked (ſaith Hannah, in her ſong, 1 Sam. 2. 9.) ſhall be ſilent in darkneſs. The wicked will ſin while they have any light to ſin by; therefore God puts out their candle, and ſends them down into darkneſs, and there they will be quiet; The wicked ſhall be ſilent in darkneſs. They will ſin againſt the light of the word, as long as they enjoy the light of the world; and do the works of ſpiritual darkneſs, till they are ſhut up in pœnal darkneſs. It follows,

Exiſtimant aliqui Diocletianum etiam dolore motum fuiſſe, ut imperium deponeret cum perficere ſe non poſſe videret ea quæ contra Chriſtianos molitus fuerat. Chr. Pez. Mellif. hiſt. Par. 2.

Quam mortem comminatus eſt Deus homini, ut à peccando illum deterreat; eandem ipſum infert ut à peccando ceſſet.

There the priſoners reſt together, they hear not the voyce of the oppreſſor.

Here is another ſort [The priſoners.] The word is, thoſe that are bound: And theſe priſoners may be of two ſorts. Firſt, Slaves and captives, who are under hard task-maſters, ſuch as ſet them to hard labour; or, men that are in debt, and put into priſon, by cruel Creditors: Priſoners, in either of theſe reſpects, are at reſt, or they reſt together in the grave: When they have paid that debt to nature, all their other debts are diſcharged; death is their debt to nature, and when they have paid that debt, they (ſaith Job) receive an acquittance (a quietus eſt) they reſt together; when they have done that work, the work of dying, poor captives and priſoners have done all, and paid all.

נגש

It is added [They hear not the voyce of the oppreſſor.] The word which we tranſlate an oppreſſor, ſignifieth, by violence to compel one to work or to pay a debt: So the Task-maſters, Exod. 5. are ſaid to compel the people with violence, to go on about the work. The ſame word ſignifieth both an Exacter and an Oppreſſor; an exacter of debt, an exacter of tribute, an exacter of labour; in all theſe wayes the word is uſed: and becauſe thoſe three (tribute, debt and labour) are demanded many times againſt right and equity, often with much violence and cruelty, therefore the word ſignifies alſo an oppreſſor: Exaction is alwayes within a ſtep of oppreſſion, and is often put for the ſame; and becauſe oppreſſors uſe bitter words, and hard ſpeeches, wounding with their tongues, as much as with their hands; therefore poor priſoners dying, are ſaid to be free from the voice of the oppreſſor. Poor priſoners hear not the voice of the oppreſſor in the grave; there they are beyond the ſound, and out of the hearing of thoſe vexing, railing task-maſters, or exacting creditors. Hence obſerve, Firſt, That, An eſtate of bondage is a miſerable reſtleſs eſtate.

There the priſoners reſt together. Captives and bond-men have little reſt, until they reſt in the grave: The language of priſoners is a ſorrowful language; their ſpeech is ſighs, Pſal. 79 11. Let the ſighing of the priſoners come before thee. And, Pſal. 12. 5. Becauſe of the oppreſſion of the poor, and for the ſighing of the needy. It is a reſtleſs condition, which yields nothing but ſighs and groans: Indeed we read in the Acts (chap. 16. 25.) of priſoners that ſpake another language, even the language of joy; we read there of the ſinging of the priſoners; Paul and Silas did not ſigh, but ſing in the night, while they were bound in priſon; but this was extraordinary: They, receiving enlargement of heart, and wonderful conſolation from the holy Ghoſt, pray in priſon, and ſing praiſe to God; Chriſt ſent the Comforter that night to them, who made them a feaſt in the priſon, and they ſung to it, they made muſick, heavenly muſick; they ſung praiſe to God. It was not from the good chear, or any comfortable meſſage which they had from the Jaylor, or from their oppreſſors; but Chriſt came and viſited them: any place, or any eſtate is comfortable, when Chriſt is preſent to the ſoul; but in it ſelf, impriſonment is a ſad condition. Therefore the Apoſtle biddeth us, remember thoſe that are in bonds, even as bound with them, Heb. 13. 3. And Chriſt takes a priſon-viſit as a ſpecial point of ſervice and kindneſs done unto him; I was in priſon, and ye viſited me; Mat. 25. 36. I, in my afflicted members was in priſon, and your viſit was an eaſe to my affliction, and (as it were) a looſening of my chains. Now therefore remember the bondage and captivity, the hard uſage and impriſonment that many ſuffer from their Oppreſſors. Let the ſighing of the priſoners come up before you, even the ſighing of thoſe Joſephs, whoſe feet are hurt in the ſtocks, and the iron enters into their ſouls; as ſome tranſlate that Pſal. 105. 18. When you are at your tables, and have plenty, then remember the bread of adverſity, and water of affliction which many poor priſoners, are ſerved with, and muſt be contented with every day, or ſtarve in priſon. When you are in your pleaſant warm chambers, and ſoft beds, think of the cold, loathſom dungeons and hard boards, in which, and on which many of them lie. And when you hear the voice of love, and ſuch ſpeaking to you, who have the law of kindneſs in their tongues, Prov. 31. 26. then remember thoſe who hear the voyce of the oppreſſor. From which, take this ſecond Obſervation,

That, The words of oppreſſors are wounding words.

The voice of an oppreſſor is a terrible voice; and therefore Job puts this in, as a ſpecial priviledge, that the poor priſoners ſhall have in the grave, They ſhall not hear the voice of the oppreſſor: Who can reſt where they ſpeak, or hear their words, and not be troubled? Therefore, not to hear the voice of the oppreſſor, is a circumlocution, noting full liberty. The wild Aſs is ſo deſcribed, Job 39. 7. He regardeth not the crying, or the voice of the driver; the original word is that in the text, he regardeth not the voice of the oppreſſor, or of the exacter. This is the liberty of the wild aſs, which was never in hand or under burdens; whereas other aſſes that are in hand, and are employed to bear and travel, they muſt be at the voice of the driver, they hear the voice of their oppreſſors; and ſome men are very unmerciful to their beaſts; it is grievous to the poor cattel to hear the voice of ſuch drivers; and the groans of thoſe beaſts will riſe up in judgment againſt their drivers: And if ſo, how then will the groans of the Saints riſe up againſt their drivers? We have heard of oppreſſors turned drivers, they have driven their poor brethren as beaſts or cattel, before them; and more cruel then any ſuch driver; they have not ſuffered them to drink of the pudled water through which they paſſed: And yet more, the words of theſe drivers, as goads and ſtaves, beat their ears, and prick'd them to the very hearts in their paſſage. The voice of theſe oppreſſors is the voice of ſcorn, the voice of ſlander and reproach; and David ſhews us from his own experience, how reproaches work (Pſal. 42. 10.) as with with a ſword in my bones mine enemies reproach me: And the Apoſtle (Heb. 11. 36.) ſpeaks of the believing, perſecuted Jews, that they had this tryal of cruel mockings; their oppreſſors ſharpened their tongues, as well as their ſwords, againſt them. The tongue wounds deeper then the ſword; the tongue wounds the ſpirit, but the ſword cannot reach beyond the fleſh: And God will take as deep, if not a deeper revenge upon oppreſſors for their tongue-woundings, then for their ſword-woundings: hard words as well as hard blows muſt be accounted for. And the Apoſtle Jude aſſures us, ver. 15. That the Lord cometh to execute vengeance upon all, and to convince all that are ungodly amongſt them, of all their ungodly deeds which they have ungodly committed, and of all their hard ſpeeches which ungodly ſinners have ſpoken againſt him. If any ſhall ſay, when did we ſpeak againſt the Lord? Chriſt will anſwer as in the Goſpel, (Matth. 25.) In as much as you have ſpoken againſt any one (and you have ſpoken againſt many) of the leaſt of theſe my brethren, ye have ſpoken againſt me. To how many of my brethren, have you ſaid, many times, Where is now your God? To how many have you ſaid, as they (Pſal. 22. 9.) in that propheſie of Chriſt, You truſted on the Lord, that he would deliver you, let him deliver you? To how many have you ſaid, Where are your prayers and faſtings? where are your hopes? Theſe are hard ſpeeches. This voice of the oppreſſor cuts the heart of the poor priſoner; he can with more eaſe dye, then hear ſuch blaſphemies and reproaches. The wicked (Mal. 3. 13.) bluſter and ſpeak big againſt God himſelf; Your words have been ſtout againſt me, ſaith the Lord: if wicked men will ſpeak ſtoutly againſt God, the high God, how ſtoutly will they ſpeak againſt a poor oppreſſed captive, that lyes under their feet?

Non audire vocem exactoris, circumlocutio eſt maximæ libertatis.

Seeing then it is ſuch a wound, and a terror, to be under the power of inſulting oppreſſors, who will not only ſtrike with the ſword, but ſtrike with every word: Let us pity and pray for thoſe that are under the hands, yea, feet, and which is worſe, under the tongues of ſuch drivers; pity them, in regard of the wants which they feel, and of the reproachful words that they hear. And let us betimes hearken to another voice, that we may not at laſt come to hear this voice, O that my people had hearkened unto me (ſaith God, Pſal. 81.) If we would hearken to the voice of God, we ſhould not hear the voice of ſuch men. It is the puniſhment which God lays upon a people, (and it is a ſutable puniſhment) for not hearing his voice, that he gives them up to hear this voice: when a Nation will not hear the voice of the Prophets, then they muſt hear the voice of oppreſſors: Let us haſten to hear the voice, the ſweet voice, the pleaſant voice of our God in his Miniſters of the Goſpel, leſt we be given up to hear the dreadful, grating, cutting voice of ſuch, who are the Miniſters of Gods juſt diſpleaſure againſt a diſobedient people. If we, like the deaf adder, ſtop our ears at the voice of the charmer, charm he never ſo wiſely, (Pſal. 58. 5.) doubtleſs the Lord will (yea he hath done it in part already) ſend Serpents and Cockatrices among us, which will not be charmed, and they ſhall bite us, (with bitter and ſharp words,) Jer. 8. 17. Let us therefore ſo hear the voice of the word, that we may be delivered from this rod of the voice (which ſmarts worſe then the voice of the rod,) and from the ſcourge of tongues. And let us pray, that God would haſten the performance, either of that gracious promiſe, (Iſa. 14. 2.) They ſhall take them captives, whoſe captives they were, and they ſhall rule over their oppreſſors: or of that (Iſa. 60. 17.) that he would make thoſe great and notable changes in the Church, and give us for braſs gold, and for iron ſilver, and for wood braſs, and for ſtone iron: That he would alſo make our Officers peace, and our Exactors righteouſneſs: This will be a time of refreſhing indeed. And as the time of the reſtitution of all things, which God hath ſpoken by the mouth of all his holy Prophets, ſince the world began, Acts 3. 21. namely, when our Officers ſhall be peace, and our very Oppreſſors righteouſneſs: When the very troublers of a people become their peace, how great is that peace? when they who were the oppreſſors of a people, are turned to be, very righteouſneſs, how great is that righteouſneſs? And where there is great righteouſneſs, and great peace, how great is the joy of that people? Yet however the wiſe God ſhall order theſe outward diſpenſations, yet His priſoners have freedom in, though not from their captivity; and they ſhall hear the voice of his Spirit ſpeaking more comfort to their hearts, then the voice of their oppreſſors can ſpeak terror to their ears: and their ears ſhall not long be ſmitten with the hard ſpeeches of ungodly men; death, a bleſſed death, will ſhortly lead them into the houſe and chambers of ſilence, where, as Job here ſpeaks, they ſhall never hear the voice of the oppreſſor any more.

Verſ. 19. The ſmall and the great are there, and the ſervant is free from his maſter.

The laſt inſtance which Job gives of reſt in death, is contained in this nineteenth verſe. In the words before he ſaid, There the priſoners reſt together, they hear not the voice of the oppreſſor: here he adds, The ſmall and the great are there, and the ſervant is free from his maſter.

The ſmall and the great are there.

Small and great.] There is two-fold quantity, in which men may be conſidered. There is a natural quantity, and there is a civil quantity; and in both quantities, ſmall and great are there.

Firſt, There is a natural quantity, by which men are diſtinguiſhed into ſmall and great; children, and men of full growth: In the grave ſuch ſmall and great are mixed: little children, children of a ſpan long, mingle their duſt with men of higheſt ſtature.

Again, There is a civil quantity, and ſo the ſmall are the poor, the low, and the mean; they are ſmall ones in a civil account: And civil greatneſs, is power, riches and honour; the honourable, they are the great men, and the rich are great men, in a civil quantity; ſo the word is uſed, Chap. 1. ver. 3. Job was the greateſt of all the men of the Eaſt; he was the greateſt in civil quantity, in regard of his power, honour and riches. The Prophet Jeremy oppoſes the poor and the great, (Chap. 5. ver. 4, 5.) Therefore I ſaid, ſurely theſe are poor, &c. I will get me unto the great men, ſcil. the rich and honourable, the Princes and the Magiſtrates.

The ſmall and the great are there. In Scripture, when we find the two extreams, (ſmall and great are extreams in quantity) we are to underſtand all the middle acts, or things, or perſons, that is, all that lyes between thoſe extreams. We read ſuch Scripture language concerning the actions of men, Pſal. 139. 2. Thou knoweſt my down-ſitting and my up-riſing: Here are two extreams, the two terms of a mans actions and of his life, his down-ſitting, and his up-riſing; now when it is ſaid, God knows theſe two, we are to underſtand, that God knows whatſoever a man doth, all his actions between his down-ſitting and his up-riſing. So in that promiſe of a continual bleſſing from God: Pſal. 121. 8. The Lord ſhall preſerve thy going out and thy coming in. Here are two extreams; between theſe, we are to include and ſuppoſe all that a man doth while he is abroad. God ſhall preſerve thy going out and thy coming in; that is, every thing thou takeſt in hand (according to his will) from the time thou goeſt forth, or beginneſt thy work in the morning, till thy coming home from work, or the end of thy work in the evening; thus it is clear about things, or actions: It is likewiſe clear about perſons, Pſal. 49. 2. when David calls high and low, rich and poor, to hear, he calls all to hear; Give ear all ye inhabitants of the world, ver. 1. So when it is ſaid in this Text, The ſmall and the great are there, it is not, as if thoſe were only there; or that thoſe of a middle quantity, either in regard of natural, or civil proportion, were not there; for death ſeizeth upon middle men, as well as ſmall and great: There are graves of all imaginable ſizes, and dimenſions, between ſmall and great: According to that of the Apoſtle, Heb. 9. 27. It is appointed to men once to dye; to men indefinitely, of what ſort, or degree, or ſize, or quantity, or quality ſoever: It is appointed to men; therefore ſmall and great are there; and many of all ſorts are there.

There is a further elegancy yet in the original; we read it, Small and great are there, but the Hebrew, ſtrictly read in the letter, runs thus, The ſmall and the great are there the ſame: Or as Mr. Broughton renders it, Little and great are there all one. The words taken thus, yield theſe two points to our meditation.

Ex æquo illic ſunt tam parvi quam magni, ſecundum illud, Mors Sceptra ligonibus æquat. Druſ.

הוא

Firſt, this; Death ſeizeth equally upon all ſorts and degrees of men.

The ſmall and the great are there; The ſmall cannot eſcape the hands, or ſlip through the fingers of death, becauſe they are little; the greateſt cannot reſcue themſelves from the power, or break out of the hands of death, becauſe they are big.

That the ſmall are there, ſhould be an admonition to young ones, Take heed of putting off repentance until you are great, for the ſmall are in the grave: That the great are there, ſhould be an admonition to the greateſt and ſtrongeſt, to prepare for death; for all your ſtrength and greatneſs, your honours, your ſwelling titles, your vaſt riches, cannot oppoſe, much leſs prevent, or overcome death. The ſmall and the great are there.

Secondly, Obſerve, That death makes all men equal; or, That all are equal in death.

As death equally takes hold of all men, ſo death makes all men equal; not only are the ſmall and the great there, but there the ſmall and the great are the ſame: Death takes away all diſtinctions, and the grave knows no difference among the ſons of men. While men live, they are at a great diſtance one from another. There is, and there ought to be, diſtinctions among men; and men ought to know their terms of diſtance, and to acknowledge men in their greatneſs, power, and places. As there is one glory of the Sun, and another glory of the Moon, and another glory of the Stars, for one Star differeth from another Star in glory, 1 Cor. 15. 41. So there is one terreſtial glory of Kings, and another glory of Nobles, and another glory of the Common-people, and theſe have not the ſame glory in common; even among them, one man differs from another man in this worldly glory; but when death comes, there is an end of all degrees, of all diſtinctions, There the ſmall and the great are the ſame. As the Apoſtle ſpeaks of our being in Chriſt, in regard of the priviledges of the Goſpel, Col. 3. 11. In Chriſt there is neither Jew, nor Gentile; there is neither male, nor female; there is neither bond, nor free; that is, all have a like and an equal ſhare in Chriſt, and in the priviledges of the Goſpel: the Goſpel makes no diſtinction between poor and rich, in regard of ſpiritual priviledges and benefits; ſo death takes away all diſtinctions in regard of civil priviledges: In death there is neither ſmall, nor great, neither male, nor female; neither bond, nor free; the greateſt ſhall lye as low as the ſmalleſt; and the higheſt, as low as the meaneſt; every one there ſhall be but as his neighbour, and as his brother in the fleſh. There is but one diſtinction that will out-live death; and death cannot take it away; the diſtinction of holy and unholy, clean and unclean, believer and an Infidel; theſe diſtinctions remain after death, and ſhall remain for ever; but rich and poor, honourable and baſe, high and low, King and ſubject, theſe diſtinctions ſhall be done away, and forgotten, as if they had never been: no difference, no diſtinction, (but that which God makes, and that which Grace makes) can ſtand out againſt the power and ſtroke of death; There, the ſmall and the great are the ſame.

And the ſervant is free from his Maſter.

The ſervant.] There are two ſorts of ſervants. There are ſome who are voluntary ſervants, and others who are ſervants by conſtraint. There are ſome who might be free, but they will not; and there are others, who would be free, but they cannot. Of the former ſort we read a Law, Exod. 21. 5. where the ſervant that loved his Maſter, and refuſed his freedom, ſaying, I will not go out free, muſt be brought before the Judges, and have his ears bored through with an awl, in token of his willingneſs to ſerve that Maſter for ever. Others are ſervants by conſtraint, as the people of Iſrael in Egypt; who were made to ſerve with rigour, Exod. 1. 14. to ſerve whether they would or no, which is ſervitude rather then ſervice.

We may underſtand the Text of both, The ſervant; that is, either he that doth voluntarily ſerve, and willingly puts himſelf under the command of another; or he, which is under the command of another whether he will or no: to both theſe death giveth freedom, whether their Maſters will or no; The ſervant is free from his Maſter.

The word which we tranſlate [is free] noteth that formal manumiſſion, or ſetting at liberty, which is uſed in places, or Corporations, where freedoms are either purchaſed by money, or deſerved by appointed ſervice.

And the word here tranſlated [Maſter] is plural, Maſters: It is one of the Names of God, Adonai, which Name the Lord hath from government: That very name is given to Maſters of Families, becauſe they ought to govern and order the affairs and buſineſs of the family, with wiſdom and juſtice; Every Maſter of a family, is a governour of the family; he is (as it were) a King in his own family. The ſervant is free from his Maſter.

Tria ſunt quorum terminatio pluralis & ſenſus ſingularis, videlicet Adonim Dominus, Elohim Deus, Bagnalim, Herus.

Hence note, Firſt, Sin brought in ſervility, and the ſubjection of man to man.

I ground it thus, becauſe Job ſpeaks of ſervice, as of an eſtate of affliction, as of an eſtate of trouble, under which many groan, and ſets them free.

In the ſtate of innocency, there was a dominion granted to man over the beaſts, but there was no dominion granted to man over man: In the ſtate of integrity relations ſhould have continued, but ſubjection ſhould not have been found: only that natural ſubjection of Children to Parents; but as for civil ſubjection, there had been no ſuch thing in the world. Before man forſook the ſervice of God, he needed none to ſerve him; ſervice comes in by ſin, and the increaſe of it, by the increaſe of ſin: As we ſee, when Canaan was ſo vile as to forget the duty of a ſon, he is ſet below, or in the worſt condition of a ſervant, Gen. 9. 5. Curſed be Canaan, a ſervant of ſervants ſhall he be unto his brethren; that is, the loweſt and moſt abject ſervant: As God of Gods, is the greateſt God; and Lord of Lords, is the higheſt Lord; ſo ſervant of ſervants, is the loweſt, the baſeſt ſervant: So then, as civil ſubjection came at firſt from ſin, ſo the increaſe of ſubjection, which is to be a ſervant of ſervants, came from the increaſe and progreſs of ſin.

Gen. 1. 26.

Peccatum ubi intravit, libertatem perdidit & corrupit poteſtatem naturæ datam. Chryſoſt. Hom. 29. in Gen.

Subſtantivũ ſeipſum genitivo caſu regens, ſuperlativam locutionem cum ſingulari energia denotat. Buxtorf.

Obſerve ſecondly, A ſervant is not in his own diſpoſe.

Though he be a voluntary ſervant, yet he muſt ſerve the lawful will of his Maſter. He may, yea he ought, in every ingenuous ſervice, to ſerve willingly; but he is not at his own will, to ſerve when, or where, or how he will.

Servus abjectiſſimus.

Some have thought they have freedom from ſervice, by the liberty of the Goſpel, or Goſpel-priviledge: and that is the reaſon why the Apoſtle, 1 Tim. 6. 1. gives that rule, Let as many ſervants as are under the yoak, count their own Maſters worthy of all honour, &c. He ſpeaks of believing ſervants. Some preſumed they had ſuch freedom by Chriſt, that they might caſt off ſubjection to men: No, ſaith the Apoſtle, As many as are under the yoak; that is, while they continue ſervants, they muſt ſubmit to their condition; yea, though their Maſters be unbelievers, as the next verſe ſhews, And they that have believing Maſters, let them not deſpiſe them, &c. nothing takes away ſubjection, but death; For as he that is called in the Lord, being a ſervant, is the Lords free-man, 1 Cor. 7. 22. So he that is the Lords free-man, being called to it, is and ought to be mans ſervant: The Centurion in the Goſpel ſhews the ſervants duty; I ſay unto one, go, and to another, come, and he cometh, and to my ſervant do this, and he doeth it. The ſervant is at his Maſters beck, not at his own diſpoſe, and nothing can free him but death, ſo long as he continues under the yoak, in that relation.

Hence obſerve, Thirdly, That death concludes the ſubjection of man to man.

In the grave, or There, the ſervant is free from his Maſter; there is no more ſervice due to man, when once Death, that King of terrors, hath carried us into his dominions.

VERS. 20, 21, 22.

Wherefore is light given to him that is in miſery, and life unto the bitter in ſoul?

Which long for death, but it cometh not; and dig for it more then for hid treaſures:

Which rejoyce exceedingly, and are glad when they can find the grave, &c.

AT this twentieth verſe, the third and laſt Section of the Chapter begins, Wherefore is light given to him that is in miſery, and life to the bitter in ſoul?

In the former part of the Chapter, Job wiſhed that death had ſurprized him as ſoon as ever he ſet foot into the world, yea before he came into the world, that he might have dyed in the very womb: Here Job begins to expoſtulate, why he having made ſo long a journey, and in his latter time ſo troubleſome a journey in the world, why (I ſay) he is not (at his requeſt) cut off and taken away, by the ſtroke of death; Why is life given to him that is in miſery, and life to the bitter in ſoul? We may frame his argument thus, out of his words, as they are here couched; There is no reaſon, or if there be, ſhew me a reaſon why his life ſhould be prolonged, who liveth miſerably, and would dye willingly: But I am the man who live miſerably, and I would dye willingly: wherefore then? where is the reaſon, or ſhew me a reaſon why my life is prolonged? That is the force of his argument. The main Propoſition of the argument is contained in verſ. 20, 21, 22, 23. namely, that there is no reaſon why a man that liveth miſerably, ſhould be denied to dye. Wherefore is light given to a man that is in miſery? He endeavours to prove the Aſſumption at verſ. 24. where he ſhews that he lived in great miſery, which he doth ampliſie in the two laſt verſes of the Chapter. This may ſerve for the ſum, and ſcope, or intendment of this laſt Section.

To the words themſelves. Wherefore is light given to him that is in miſery?

Wherefore. There is a wherefore in Scripture, firſt of doubting; and ſecondly, there is a wherefore of mourning; and thirdly, a wherefore of complaining. In this wherefore, in this queſtion, we may include all three. Job doubteth; and Job mourneth; and Job complaineth; Wherefore is light given to him that is in miſery?

Wherefore is light.

Light.] Some take light here for knowledge; Wherefore hath a miſerable man ſo much knowledge to ſee himſelf, and to know himſelf miſerable? It is ſome abatement to the ſenſe of miſery, not to know that we are miſerable; Wherefore is light given? If I did not underſtand the ſadneſs of my condition, it would be leſs to me. There is a truth in that; and it is the thing that will ſo much torment and vex the damned to all eternity, that while they are in the darkneſs of helliſh miſery, they ſhall have ſo much light in Hell, (I mean the light of knowledge concerning their own condition, whereby they ſhall fully and clearly diſcern their own unhappineſs;) if they were ignorant and did not know how miſerable they were, their eſtate were far leſs miſerable. On earth, the light of the knowledge of Gods will increaſes the ſin of men; in Hell, the light of the knowledge of their own woe, will be an increaſe of their puniſhment. As Chriſt ſaith to the Jews, John 9. 41. If ye were blind, ye ſhould have no ſin; but now ye ſay we ſee, therefore your ſin remaineth. So we may ſay of thoſe who are ſeparated from Chriſt for ever; if ye were blind, ye ſhould have no ſorrow; but now becauſe in that eſtate of utter darkneß, ye ſhall have both eyes and light to ſee your miſery, therefore your ſorrow ſhall remain. When a wicked man goes to the generation of his fathers, where he ſhall never ſee light, ſcil. of comfort, Pſal. 49. 19. even then he ſhall have light enough, (and more then he would have) to ſee his ſorrow. And in Hell he ſhall be as much pained with, and hate the light of his own condition, as upon earth he hated and was pained with the light of divine revelation, John 3. 20, &c. So that the damned ſhall for ever cry out, Wherefore is light given to him that is in miſery?

Ad quid prodeſt homini in miſerii conſtituto, quod lucem cognitionis habeat, cum per eam conſideret mala quibus affligitur. Aquin. in loc.

Yet I take not this to be the ſence here, Wherefore is light? by light here underſtand natural light, and then it is no more but this, Why do mine eyes behold the Sun? Wherefore doth the light ſhine upon me, when as I am under the clouds and in the darkneſs of this condition? Or by light, we may underſtand life; and ſo the ſence is, Wherefore is life continued, (which is expreſſed in the next clauſe,) to him that is in miſery?

To be in miſery, is more then to be miſerable. As to be in the fleſh, notes, a meer carnal man, and to be in the ſpirit, notes a very ſpiritual man; ſo to be in miſery, notes a very miſerable man. The Hebrew word properly ſignifies, labour: At the tenth verſe it was tranſlated, ſorrow: And it notes any toilſome moleſtation, which either we our ſelves endure, (Pſal. 25. 18.) or cauſe others, by guile or miſchief done them, to endure. Hence it is tranſlated guile, Pſal. 55. 11. and miſchief, (Pſal. 94. 20.) becauſe by theſe, one man troubles and vexes another, to the making of him miſerable.

עמל Sumitur activè pro labore cum ſumma defatigatione & tædio, paſſivè pro dolore ipſo & miſeria, & ſæpe utroq; modo ſumitur conjunctim, ut in Eccleſiaſte, ubi vitæ humanæ calamitas & miſeria iſto vocabulo explicatur.

And life to the bitter in ſoul.

Life.] Is the union of ſoul and body: when life departeth, ſoul and body take leave and part. The Philoſopher defines life to be the bond or colligation of ſoul and body together: Now (ſaith Job) why is this life? why is this bond continued to a man whoſe ſoul is in bitterneſs? While my life was pleaſant, it was pleaſant to live; while my ſoul was ſweet, it was ſweet to have it knit to my body; but now my ſoul is in bitterneſs, or I am bitter in ſoul, and what ſweetneſs or pleaſure can I find in my body?

To the bitter in ſoul.] Notes deep, intrinſical, or inward ſorrow; the greateſt ſorrow, makes the ſoul bitter: As in Scripture, when we find Soul added, reſpecting the evil of an eſtate, or the good of an eſtate, evil and good are meant in the higheſt degree: As when Chriſt ſaith, Mat. 26. 38. My ſoul is exceeding heavy, or exceeding ſorrowful, even unto death; that is, I am in the loweſt deeps of ſorrow: Sorrow unto death, is ſorrow within one ſtep or degree of death. My ſoul is ſorrowful. There can be no ſorrow but in the ſoul; the body (take it as diſtinct from the ſoul) is not capable of ſorrow; ſorrow is a paſſion, or an affection of the ſoul, an affection of the mind, and therefore all ſorrow is ſeated in the mind; yet when our Lord Chriſt ſaith, My ſoul is exceeding ſorrowful, it is far more then to have ſaid, there is ſorrow, or exceeding much ſorrow in my ſoul. So here, this phraſe, To him that is bitter in ſoul; or whoſe ſoul is bitter; notes the moſt bitter and grievous ſorrow. When the Pſalmiſt would ſet forth the great ſorrow of Joſeph in priſon, Pſal. 105. 18. One Tranſlation ſaith, That the iron entred into his ſoul; and the Hebrew, word for word, is this, His ſoul came into iron. We know the ſoul is ſo pure, and ſpiritual, that iron cannot enter it; We know that only the body can be bound with chains. The ſoul could quickly ſlip from the moſt watchful Keeper, and break out from the ſtrongeſt irons, were it not to keep company with the body. Whereas then it is ſaid, His ſoul came into irons; it is only to ſhew, that Joſeph was under very ſore affliction, even the ſoreſt affliction of the body. As on the other ſide, when Mary ſaid, My ſoul doth magnifie the Lord, my ſpirit rejoyceth in God my Saviour. We know, nothing properly can magnifie the Lord, or rejoyce, but the ſpirit or the ſoul; yet when ſhe ſaith, My ſpirit doth rejoyce; this notes a deep, pure, internal, ſpiritual joy, with which ſhe was raviſh'd at that time: And as they, who rejoyce in ſoul, would even willingly be rid of their bodies, they are above the body: So they, who are bitter in ſoul, are deſirous to be rid of their bodies; the body is a burden when the ſoul is bitter. This bitterneſs of ſoul cauſed thoſe bitter complaints before, and now this vehement expoſtulation.

למרי נפש Qui præ calamitate animo ſunt acerbo & in perpetua mæſtitia, Merc.

Wherefore is light given to him that is in miſery?

Wherefore? We are apt to think there is no reaſon for that, for which we can ſee no reaſon. Job was in a dark condition, and could not ſee the reaſon, and therefore almoſt concludes there was none. When we are poſed, we think all the world is poſed too. If we cannot interpret and expound the dealings of God, we think none can; nay, in ſuch caſes, ſome are ready to think (at leaſt to ſpeak, as if they thought) that God himſelf can ſcarce give a good account of them: This wherefore goes through the earth, and reaches Heaven. Tell me, O my friends, ſhew me, O my God, Wherefore is light given to him that is in miſery?

Why Job, there may be many reaſons, many anſwers given to this, wherefore a man ſhould be in light, though he be in miſery; and why his life ſhould be continued, though his ſoul be in bitterneſs. What if God ſhould appear and tell thee, It ſhall be thus; and the reaſon of it is, becauſe I will have it ſo: Is not that therefore anſwer enough, to any mans wherefore? The will of God is reaſon enough for man, and ought to be the moſt ſatisfying reaſon: If God ſay, I will have life remain in a man, that is bitter in ſoul, that man ſhould ſay, Lord, it is reaſon I ſhould, becauſe it is thy pleaſure, though it be to my own trouble. Yet it is but ſeldome that God makes his will his reaſon, and anſwers by his bare Prerogative: He hath often given weighty reaſons to this quæry. Firſt, The life of nature is continued, that the life of grace may be increaſed. Again, Such live in ſufferings, That they may learn obedience by the things which they ſuffer. God teacheth us by his Works, as well as by his Word, his dealings ſpeak to us: And, It is as great an act of holineſs to ſubmit our ſelves to the will of God in his works, as it is to the will of God in his word. Another reaſon of this wherefore, may be this, God ſets up ſome as patterns to poſterity; He therefore gives the light of life to ſome that are in miſery, to ſhew that it is no new, nor ſtrange thing for his Saints to be in darkneſs: And what if God doth it to magnifie the ſtrength of his own power in ſupporting, and the ſweetneſs of his mercy when he delivers ſuch bitter ſouls?

Further obſerve, Firſt, That the beſt things in this world may come to be burthens to us.

See here a man, weary of light and life. Light, one of the moſt excellent creatures that God made, the moſt excellent next to life; yea life, the beſt, the moſt excellent thing in nature; both theſe become burthenſome. How gladly would Job have been rid of light? how gladly rid of his life? Conſider then, how burthenſome other things (which at the beſt are burdens) may be unto you: If you hear a ſoul complaining of light and life; and why are theſe given me, when I am in miſery? Then what comfort, think you, will honour give you? or what comfort will riches give you? or what comfort will beauty give you, in ſuch a condition, as makes you weary of light and life? What comfort will ſin give you? what eaſe will your luſts give you, in ſuch a condition, as makes you weary of light and life? I never heard of any of the Saints, that were troubled at any time with their grace, or weary of the favour of God; I never heard any of them ſay, why is grace given to one that is in miſery? or the light of Gods countenance to the bitter in ſoul? I never heard any ſay, wherefore is faith given to a man that is in miſery, or hope and patience to the bitter in ſoul? Grace was never a burden to any man, under greateſt burdens, or unſavoury to the bittereſt ſoul; when you are weary of all other things in the world, theſe will be your ſupports. Therefore labour after thoſe things which you ſhall never be weary of, even after thoſe things which will be more pleaſant to us, then ever light was, when light ſhall be to others more troubleſome, then ever darkneſs was to any; let us labour after thoſe things which will be more ſweet to us, then ever life was, when life ſhall be to others, more bitter, then ever death was to any.

Secondly obſerve, It is a trouble to poſſeſs good things when we cannot enjoy them.

Would you know, how Job ſpake here as one weary of light and life? It was not under the notion of light and life, as if he had been weary of theſe in themſelves, but it was becauſe he could not enjoy theſe. Solomon aſſures us, (*Prov.*25.20.) that, As he that taketh away a garment in cold weather, and as vineger upon Nitre, ſo is he that ſingeth ſongs to an heavy heart. Muſick to one that is in ſorrow, doubles his ſorrow, why? becauſe he cannot enjoy the muſick; a heavy heart can worſe intend muſick, then a heavy ear; only thoſe things which we can enjoy in the uſe of them pleaſe in the poſſeſſing of them: Of all temporals, the poſſeſſion and enjoyment may be ſeparated; but for ſpirituals, the very poſſeſſion of them is joy, therefore enjoyment; their preſence is a pleaſure; and therefore their preſence ſhall ever pleaſe. We may diſtinguiſh between their uſe and their comfort, but we can never ſeparate them.

One thing further, When Job ſaith, Wherefore is light given, and life given? The meaning of it is, wherefore is light continued, and wherefore is life continued? for he ſpeaks of himſelf and others that had light and were alive, and yet he ſaith, wherefore is light given? &c. From this we may learn, That Every act of continuance of good things to us, is a new act or deed of gift to us. Mercy is given, every moment it is enjoyed: not only is a new mercy, and a renewed mercy, a new gift, but continued mercy is a gift and a new gift; life is a new gift every hour of time we live on the earth; and glory will be a new gift, every minute of eternity we ſhall live in Heaven.

Which long for death, and it cometh not, and dig for it more then for hid treaſures.

This 21. verſe doth further explicate who are the bitter in ſoul, even ſuch as long for death; when a ſoul (from natural principles) finds a ſweetneſs in death, that ſoul is in bitterneſs; Our affliction and our miſery is indeed wormwood and gall, (as the Church complains, Lament. 2. 19.) when death is as honey, and long'd for as the honey-comb. There is bitterneſs in the death of the body; and yet ſome are ſo bitter in ſoul, that they account the very bitterneſs of death, ſweetneſs; They ſay not as Agag, (1 Sam. 15. 32.) Surely the bitterneſs of death is paſt, but O that the ſweetneſs of death would come. To be rid of ſin makes us long for death ſpiritually; to be rid of pain makes us deſire death naturally; therefore he ſaith, the bitter in ſoul long for death.

The word which we tranſlate [by longing] ſignifieth a very vehement deſire, as you know in our tongue, to long for a thing is the higheſt and hotteſt acting of deſire, after a thing. It ſignifieth properly to gape or to breath: Hence (by a Trope) it ſignifieth ſtrong deſire; becauſe they who deſire a thing much, are ſaid to gape or breath after it; juſt as an hungry man gapes after meat, whereſoever he ſees it, and his mind runs upon it, when he cannot ſee it. That is the force of the word. Hence alſo the wotd is uſed in Scripture, to note the ſtrong actings of faith, and vehement expectations of hope in God; when the ſoul is raiſed up mightily to believe the word of promiſe, then it longs after and opens its mouth wide (as it were) to receive the thing promiſed. As in *Iſa.*8.17. I will wait upon the Lord, who hides his face from the houſe of Jacob, and I will look for him. The Prophet Hoſea applies the word to robbers and thieves, who ſtand watching and longing for the traveller, and looking at every turning, chap.6.9. As troopes of robbers wait for a man. Yet further to clear this, we may take notice, that in the Hebrew there are two words which come from this root, whereof the one ſignifieth the Palate of the mouth; becauſe the palate is the part affected with the taſte of ſuch meats, as we long for; Hence we ſay, the mouth waters after ſuch or ſuch a pleaſing diſh. The other word ſignifies a Fiſh-hook, and the reaſon is double, either becauſe thoſe hooks are pleaſantly baited, which when the fiſh ſees, he longeth after it, and greedily ſwallows it down: Or becauſe when the angler hath caſt in the hook, he is in great expectation, waiting and looking earneſtly when the fiſh will be enticed, and bite. By all theſe uſes of the Original word, we may collect the exceeding intenſiveneſs of that deſire which is here expreſt by longing for death: They long for death, even as a hungry man longeth for any meat, or as a woman with child longeth for ſome ſpecial meat, as a fiſh longs for the bait, or as an angler longeth till the fiſh bites, or as a believer (which as it is the ſpiritual, ſo the moſt ardent deſire of all) deſires to have any promiſe fulfilled, upon which he hath pitched his faith, and anchors at by hope.

המחכים from חכה Hiavit, inhiavit, ore aperto intuitus fuit, concupivit, expectavit. Notat etiã vera fide, patientiq; expectatione anhelare ad rem promiſſam.

חך Palatum, quod cibo inhiet.

חכה Hamus, quòd in eũ piſces inhient, vel potius quod piſces expectet.

Which long for death, and it cometh not, that is, it cometh not ſo ſoon as they would have it; for death will come at one time or other, but death doth not come at their time, or their pace. It cometh not, in the Hebrew it is only thus, which long for death, and it is not; we ſupply, it cometh not.

And dig for it more then for hid treaſures.

To illuſtrate the greatneſs of this deſire after death, he addes a ſimilitude of thoſe who ſeek for treaſures; if there be any natural deſire more ſtrong, then that of a woman with child, or a longing woman, it is the deſire of a covetous man, the deſire of gain or treaſure; covetouſneſs is the ſtrongeſt appetite.

Obſerve but what a gradation there is in this expreſſion, to ſet forth the greatneſs of their deſire after death: they do not only long for it, but they dig for it. Digging you know is no ordinary labour, it is an extraordinary work, a hard labour. As longing is a ſtrong deſire, ſo digging is ſtrong labour, hard labour. And then, it is no ordinary digging neither, but digging for a treaſure; men will dig hard for treaſure; you ſee men will dig hard for a ſtone, for iron, for coals, how then will they dig for a mine of gold or ſilver? A man will dig the earth for a little money; but when a man diggeth, hoping to find money in the earth, that will make him work indeed; now they dig after ſuch a manner: and beyond that, he ſaith, they dig for it as for hidden treaſure; that is a further degree of their endeavour after it.

מטמונים from טמן Abſcondit.

That which we tranſlate, hidden treaſure, is but one word in the Hebrew. It ſignifies any hidden thing, eſpecially treaſures; becauſe treaſures uſe to be hid, or cloſe laid up. And there is a twofold hiding of treaſures; there is a natural hiding, and there is an induſtrious and artificial hiding. There is a natural hiding, ſo treaſures are hid, that lie in the bowels of the earth, they are naturally hid. Then treaſures are hid by induſtry and by art, when we are afraid we ſhall be ſpoiled of our treaſures, or that they ſhall be taken away; then there is a hiding of them, and often a digging to hide them in the earth: As in any times of ſpoil and violence, if a rich man hear that the ſpoilers are nigh, he preſently hides his treaſure. Now either as robbers dig and ſearch for treaſures induſtriouſly hid, or as miners dig and ſearch for treaſures naturally hid, ſo (ſaith Job) with ſuch earneſtneſs do theſe dig for death.

There is one thing to be reſolved here by way of queſtion before we come to the Obſervations; namely, whether it be lawful to wiſh for, or to deſire death? Job here propoſeth ſuch as long for death: Is it lawful to deſire death? doth he ſpeak here only (de facto) of a thing which ſome do, or of that which may be done.

I anſwer, Firſt, That death in it ſelf is no way deſirable, and it is not an object of deſire. We cannot deſire that (for it ſelf) which is an enemy, or deſtructive unto us. If any ſhould deſire death as death, or under the notion of death, they ſhould deſire that which is deſtructive, that which is their enemy; ſo the Apoſtle calls death, 1 Cor. 15. The laſt enemy which ſhall be deſtroyed, is death. Death is an enemy, therefore (as death) no man can deſire it. Indeed, many have deſired death, but ſtill we find ſomewhat elſe at the bottom of that deſire. But what bottom or ground makes the deſire of death lawful? I anſwer, Firſt, It is a holy deſire of death, if we deſire death to be free from ſin; when the ſoul ſaith thus, becauſe I ſee, only the end of living will be the end of ſinning, therefore I long for death, that I may ſin no longer.

Secondly, It is lawful to deſire death, that we may have more full communion with Chriſt the Lord of life. I deſire to be diſſolved, ſaith Paul; but why? not that he deſired diſſolution, but that he might be with Chriſt, Phil. 1. 23. Chriſt is life, and Chriſt is our life. It is better to enjoy life, then to live; how much better then is it to enjoy Chriſt, who is life, then to live?

To both theſe, we may refer that of the Apoſtle, 2 Cor. 5. We that are in this Tabernacle, groan, being burdened; they were burdened with ſorrows, and burdened with ſins, while they were in the tabernacle of the body; yet (ſaith he) it is not that we would be uncloathed, but cloathed upon; he did not groan for the grave, but for glory; not that he might be uncloathed, but cloathed with immortality; not barely that he might die, but that mortality might be ſwallowed up of life.

Under theſe notions we may deſire death; yet with this caution, that for the time of it, we refer our ſelves to the good pleaſure of God. For what the Apoſtle James ſpeaks of the inordinate deſires, and abſolute reſolves of worldly men, about gaining in that or t'other City, is by alluſion, appliable to theſe ſpiritual greedy merchants, after heavenly glory, chap. 4. 13. Go to now, ye that ſay, to day or to morrow we will go into ſuch a City, and continue there a year, and buy, and ſell, and get gain, &c. For that ye ought to ſay, if the Lord will. So I may ſay, go to now, ye that ſay, to day or to morrow I would die (for to die, to us is gain, Phil. 1. 21.) and go to that heavenly City, that City having foundations, whoſe builder and maker is God, and continue there for ever, taking in, and enriching our ſelves with that glory which Chriſt hath bought; for that ye ought to ſay, when the Lord will, or now if the Lord will. On ſuch conditions as theſe, and with this caution, we may deſire death, yea, long for death.

But to long for death, only to be rid of the troubles of this life, to deſire to lie down to ſleep in the bed of the grave, only to eaſe our fleſh, and reſt our outward man, is ſinful. The Apoſtle ſaith (Acts 20. 24.) I count not my life dear, ſo I may finiſh my courſe with joy; but we ſhall account our lives too cheap, if we fear to finiſh our courſe with ſorrow, if we think, that it is not worth the while to live, unleſs we live in outward comforts; we exceedingly undervalue our lives, when a croſs in our lives makes us weary of our lives. This was Jonah's infirmity, when he had taken pet about the gourd (chap. 4.) he would needs die; and he concludeth the matter, it is better for me to die then to live; and all was, becauſe he could not have his will, becauſe he was troubled. This alſo was Elijah's infirmity, when he was perſecuted by, and fled for his life from Jezebel, 1 Kings 19. 4. He requeſted for himſelf, that he might die, and ſaid, it is enough now, O Lord, take away my life; for I am not better then my fathers. This is an infirmity at the beſt. We ought rather to ſeek to God, that he would remove the evil from us, then remove us from the evil; for God hath a thouſand doors to let us out of trouble, though he doth not open the door of the grave, to let us in there, and out of the world. He can end our troubles, and not end our lives.

Periniquum eſt non aliā relinquere Deo levandæ ærumnæ rationem quam ſi vitam adimat, &c. petendū ergo potius, ut ne vultus ſui luce illuſtret, quam ut tenebris mortis obruat.

Yet ſuch a wiſh is much allayed, yea (in ſome caſes) lawful, if we keep the former caution, and ſay, if the Lord will. If we refer our ſelves to the will and good pleaſure of God, we may deſire to be laid to reſt by death, that we may be rid of thoſe pains and evils which we ſuffer in this life. And yet I deſire rather to raiſe the ſpirits of all above theſe troubles while they live, then ſatisfie them how they may deſire freedom from them by death. When Solomon returned, and conſidered all the oppreſſions that are done under the Sun, and beheld the tears of ſuch as were oppreſſed, and they had no comforter; and on the ſide of their oppreſſors there was power, but they had no comforter: then he praiſed the dead, which are already dead, more then the living, which are yet alive (Eccl. 4. 1, 2.) that is, he pronounced the dead to be in a better condition then the living. Yet know, that Solomon in this place, ſpeaks the words of meer natural reaſon, not of divine reaſon: For he ſpeaks (though with a divine ſpirit) yet in the perſon of a natural man. Natural reaſon ſaith, it is better to die, then live under oppreſſions; but divine reaſon ſaith, there is more honour to be gained by living under oppreſſions, then there is eaſe to be attained by dying from under them. To bear a burden well, is more deſirable then to be delivered from a burden; eſpecially, if while we are bearing, we can be doing, doing good (I mean) and I mean it eſpecially, if we can do publick good. A Chriſtian ſhould be content, yea, he ſhould rejoyce, in ſuffering much evil upon himſelf, while he can be doing any, eſpecially if he can do much good to others. A graciouſly publick ſpirit will triumph over perſonal troubles and labours, ſo long as he ſees himſelf a bleſſing or a help to the publick; and though he longs to die for himſelf, and to be with Chriſt, which is better; yet he is loth to die, ſo long as he can ſay with bleſſed Paul, Nevertheleſs to abide in the fleſh, is more needful for you (or others) Phil. 1. 24. When an heathen Emperor, Cæſar, ſaid, he had lived long enough, whether he reſpected Nature or Honour; Tully, the Orator anſwered him well; But you have not lived long enough for the common-wealth. Much more may we ſay, when we ſee able and godly men longing for death, becauſe they have lived long enough, whether they reſpect common nature, or their own honour; But you have not yet lived long enough for the Church of God, and for the common good of his people. We ſhould be willing to live ſo long as God, or his people, have a ſtroke of work to be done, which our abilities and opportunities fit us to do. In this ſence, a living dog is better then a dead lion, Eccleſ. 9. 4. That is, it is better to live (though we are the meaneſt) working for God, then die, or be dead, though we have been the chiefeſt.

I enlarge this the rather, becauſe of the preſent troubles, and the infirmity of our fleſh, which ſometimes is ready to envy thoſe who die, becauſe we live in ſorrow; and is not ſatisfied with this, that our ſouls are here ſheltered from death, and under the covert of Chriſt, unleſs our bodies alſo may be ſheltered in death, and lie under the covert of the grave. So much to that queſtion.

Let us note ſomething from the words themſelves; Which long for death, and it cometh not; and dig for it more then for hid treaſures. Obſerve, Firſt, That, Many afflictions, to our ſenſe, are worſe then death.

They long for death, becauſe they are in miſery. It is ſaid, and it is a truth, O death! how bitter art thou to a man that is at eaſe in his poſſeſſions? And there is a truth alſo in this, O death! how ſweet art thou to a man that is bitter in his ſoul? It often falls out, that to die, is but a ſhort affliction; but affliction many times is a long and continued death, a frequent death; as the Apoſtle ſpeaks of his afflictions, in deaths often (2 Cor. 11. 23.) That there is a bitterneſs in death, the ſpeech of Agag implies (1 Sam. 15.) Surely the bitterneſs of death is paſt; yet while a man (as lamenting Jeremy complains, Lam. 3. 19.) remembers his afflictions, and his miſery, the wormwood and the gall, that is, his afflictions and miſery, more bitter then gall and wormwood, his ſenſe overcomes his judgment, to conclude, that there is a pleaſantneſs in that bitter thing which we call death.

Secondly, Obſerve, That, As death finds many before they look for it, ſo ſome look for death, and cannot find it.

How many are there, whom death ſurprizes before they are aware, and ſeizeth upon them, when they think not of it? when as others are expecting, and longing, and gaping, and gaſping after death, and they cannot meet with it, it cometh not. Indeed, it is a great deal better for a man to expect death when it cometh not, then to have death come upon him, when he expects it not. Some are calling for death, crying out for death, before they know how to die, before they know how to live, yea before they know why they lived. It were well for ſuch, if they might loſe their longing, and long for death long enough before it cometh; for upon the matter (poor ſouls) they long for hell, while they long for death; and while they are haſtning from that life and miſery, which will quickly have an end, they are plunging into that death and miſery which will never end.

Thirdly, Obſerve, As death is a puniſhment to moſt; ſo, not to die, is a puniſhment to ſome.

Mors expectata non veniens, miſerrimam efficit vitam.

Job ſpeaks of it as an affliction upon ſuch; they long for death, and it cometh not. Death is an affliction to all; it is a puniſhment to all unbelievers, a puniſhment with a ſting: And as all wicked men are puniſhed with death, ſo ſome of them are puniſhed with this, that they (for the preſent) cannot die (Rev. 9. 6.) In thoſe dayes men ſhall ſeek death, and ſhall not find it; and ſhall deſire to die, and death ſhall flee from them. It is laid as their puniſhment, that they ſhould live, and as an affliction beyond all their afflictions, that then they could not die. They are in a ſad condition, who can have no remedy or cure of their troubles but death; but how ſad is their condition, who cannot obtain that remedy? It is like the puniſhment of the damned in hell, they ſhall long for death, but it will not come; and they ſhall ever ſeek for death, but ſhall never find it. No wicked man did ever part ſo unwillingly with his ſoul when he died, as he will unwillingly meet with it, when he riſeth again. And as the firſt death doth part ſoul and body unwillingly, ſo the ſecond death keepeth ſoul and body together unwillingly. They have a taſt of this miſery in this life, whoſe ſouls are truly ſaid to be impriſoned in their bodies: And O how deſirous are they to dig down theſe mud-wals, and make an eſcape, but cannot?

Mors prima animan nolentem pellit à corpore; mors ſecũda animam nolentem tenet in corpore. Aug.

Fourthly, Obſerve, It is an affliction to Nature, to be debarred of any thing it deſireth, how deſtructive ſoever it be unto it.

It is (in one ſence) a natural deſire, to long for death; and yet death is the deſtruction of nature: A man under diſtempers of body, a diſeaſe, a Fever, &c. is often troubled and grieved, becauſe he cannot have thoſe things which will hurt him; he longs for ſuch meats and drinks, as given him, would kill him, and yet a denial angers him. The hope of death deferred, will make the heart ſick; and when the deſire (death deſired) comes, it is as a tree of life. Grief ariſeth from the unſatisfaction of our deſires; and therefore though the thing had, which we deſire, will undo us, yet the not having it, doth afflict us.

Which long for death, and it cometh not; and they dig for it more then for hidden treaſures. Take ſomewhat from this latter branch, and they dig for it more then for hid treaſure. As ſoon as ever Job had expreſt their longing deſire after death, you ſee preſently, he tells us that they dig for death. Hence obſerve,

That, Where deſires are true, they preſently produce endeavors.

He that longs for a thing, will labour for it, they are digging preſently (Prov. 18. 1.) Through deſire, a man having ſeparated himſelf, intermedleth with all wiſdom: If it be death a man deſireth, he will be endeavouring after it. There are ſome velleities, liſtleſs wiſhings and wouldings, which produce no endeavours; but true deſires are ever active; natural deſires are ſeconded with natural endeavours, and ſo ſpiritual deſires with ſpiritual endeavours. If a man deſire death, he will dig for it; ſurely then, he that deſires Chriſt, and longs for eternal life, will be digging for the enjoyment of them. Obſerve further,

That, Proportionably to the ſtrength of our deſires, is the ſtrength and earneſtneſs of our endeavours.

As real deſire cauſeth real endeavour, ſo ſtrong deſires cauſe ſtrong endeavours: It was not a bare deſire, but an earneſt longing (as was cleared in opening the words). And it is not a bare labour, but hard labour; digging is ſtrong labour. A meer natural man, whoſe deſires after ſin, are ſtrong and vehement, acts ſin with equal vehemency. The Holy Ghoſt ſaith, he doth evil as he can, that is, to his utmoſt cunning or ability; he draws iniquity with cords of vanity, and ſin as it were, with cart-ropes. He doth evil (ſaith another Scripture, Mic. 7. 3.) with both hands greedily. To do a thing with both hands, notes the greateſt endeavour. As when the Phariſees are ſaid not to touch the burdens which they laid on others with their little finger, it notes their refuſal of the leaſt endeavour, Mat. 23. 4. So a ſpiritual heart, having his deſires turned heaven-ward, he digs for heavenly treaſure every day, and gives diligence to make his calling and election ſure. They who have ſtrong deſires after Chriſt, labour ſtrongly after Chriſt. So they are expreſt (Prov. 2. 4.) where Solomon ſpeaks of Wiſdom, which is Chriſt, and all that is Chriſts; If thou ſeekeſt her as ſilver, and ſearcheſt for her as for hid treaſures; ſuch is the ſearch and endeavour that ought to be after Chriſt, and ſuch it will be, if there be true and great deſires after Chriſt.

Thirdly, In that he ſaith, They dig for it, as for hid treaſure, we may obſerve,

That, The beſt things are hardeſt to come by.

If you will have treaſures, you muſt dig for them; you may have pebble-ſtones, flints, above ground; but treaſures lie deep: And in proportion, the better every thing is, the more digging it requireth; and the beſt things ought to be moſt digged for. They that will have the great bleſſing, muſt wreſtle for it; or the Crown, they muſt ſtrive for it. We muſt dig for heavenly hidden treaſure, before we have it; and yet both the treaſure, and the ſtrength to dig for it, are freely given.

Fourthly, obſerve, That, Thoſe things which we eſteem moſt, we labour to ſecure moſt.

It is ſaid, that they digged for treaſures, and that the treaſures were hid. I told you, in opening the words, there is a natural hiding of treaſure, and an induſtrious hiding. Take it in the laſt ſence; men that have treaſures, will labour to preſerve them: why? becauſe treaſures are much eſteemed, and the things we eſteem moſt, we preſerve moſt. In the Hebrew, the word that ſignifies treaſure, ſignifies the hiding of treaſure, or hidden treaſure. Among all treaſures, ſpiritual treaſures are moſt hidden; they are ſo hidden, that they are called myſteries, or ſecrets. The knowledge of Chriſt was a hidden treaſure, for ſome thouſands of years. The Apoſtle, in his time, calls it, the myſtery which was kept ſecret ſince the world began, Rom. 16. 25. Again, he calls it The wiſdom of God in a myſtery, even the hidden wiſdom which God ordained before the world, unto our glory; which none of the Princes of this world knew, 1 Cor. 2. 8, 9. And as ſpiritual knowledge, ſo our ſpiritual life, is called a hidden life; your life is hidden with God in Chriſt, Col. 3. 3. And as our life, ſo our ſpiritual comforts are hidden; therefore called Hidden Manna, Revel. 2. 17. All our ſpiritual eſtate is treaſure, and it is all hidden treaſure, ſo hidden, that the Saints dig deep to find it, and when they have found it, they hide it, as Chriſt ſhews us, (Mat. 13. 44.) ſpeaking of the Kingdom of God, which he compares to a treaſure hid in the field, the which when a man hath found, he hideth: He hideth it, not to obſcure it from the light, but to ſecure it from danger. Mary hid thoſe precious ſayings of Chriſt, her Son, and her Saviour, in her heart, Luke 2. 51. And David having found the Commandments of God, which he prized above any treaſure, above thouſands of gold and ſilver, he hid them in his heart. Thy word (ſaith he) have I hid in my heart, that I might not ſin againſt thee, Pſal. 119. 11.

Verſe 22. Which rejoyce exceedingly, and are glad when they can find the grave.

Having ſaid, That they long for death, and dig for it as for hidden treaſure. Now ſuppoſing, that they find death, he ſhews how it affects them; They rejoyce exceedingly, and are glad when they can find the grave. There is little or no obſcurity in theſe words, only conſider the emphaſis of this expreſſion; the word which we tranſlate rejoyce, or rejoyce exceedingly, noteth ſuch a rejoycing as breaks forth in ſome outward geſture, as when a man doth leap for ioy: And Mr. Broughton tranſlates it thus, Which joy till they skip again; noting an extraordinary joy, and gladneſs, when they can find the grave; that is, when they dye. Yet ſome joyn the ſence of this verſe with the former, to carry on, or lengthen out the ſimilitude thus; Which long for death, and dig for it as for hid treaſures: And finding death, they are affected as they who (ſeeking for treaſures) find a grave: For if in digging, they did but hit upon a grave, then they thought themſelves ſure of treaſure and great riches; becauſe treaſure and riches was uſed to be put into graves, as was ſhewed in opening the fifteenth verſe of this Chapter. The ſence is fair, and comes up to the ſame point, from either of theſe expoſitions.

גיל ישישו Summo gaudio & incredibili lætitia etiam ſignis exterioribus prodita geſtiunt, vel præ lætitia exultant, vel lætantur ad exultationem. Druſ.

Obſerve hence, firſt, That, What at one time we fear moſt, in that, at another time, we may exceedingly rejoyce.

Death is dreadful, and the grave is a place of darkneſs, yet here is joy and rejoycing, yea exceeding joy, and rejoycing, when they find the grave.

Secondly, They rejoyce in it, but why? It was that which they had longed for, that which they had long ſought for: if at another time they had been ſhewed the grave, or commanded into the grave, they would have taken little pleaſure in it. The ſame thing inflicted or threatned by another is dreadful to us, which deſired by our ſelves is pleaſant and delightful: It pleaſeth us to have our deſire ſatisfied, though the thing deſired be never ſo unpleaſant: And to be eaſed of preſent evil, makes a future evil appear in the likeneſs of a preſent good. For Joy is an affection of the mind, ariſing from the apprehenſion of ſome preſent good, even as hope ſprings from the apprehenſion of ſome good that is to come.

Further, We may conſider the iſſue of all theſe acts. After they had longed for death, and digged for death, and found death; preſently upon the finding of it, they rejoyce, and rejoyce exceedingly.

Hence obſerve, That which any one truly deſireth and endeavoureth to find, cauſeth him to rejoyce, when he hath found it.

If you deſire death, and ſeek for the grave, the finding of theſe will be to you as life, and as a houſe of mirth: How much more then ſhall we rejoyce, having found good things, the beſt things, after earneſt longing and digging for them. When the wiſe Merchant had found the treaſure hid in the field, the next words inform us of his joy, Mat. 13. 44. When the man, after long ſeeking on the mountains, had found his loſt Sheep; and the woman, after lighting her candle, and ſweeping her houſe, and diligent ſearch, had found the loſt groat; they both rejoyced, and called in their neighbours and friends to rejoyce with them, (Luke 15.) It troubles a man to be found of that, or him, whom he hates, or fears; Haſt thou found me, O mine enemy? ſaith Ahab to Eliah, 1 Kings 21. 20. And it cannot but delight us, to find that, or him, whom we love and long for: Have I found thee, O my friend? will ſuch an one ſay. And if a miſerable man rejoyces exceedingly, when deſiring he finds death, and a grave; how will the ſoul leap for joy, when we ſhall find him, who is the longing and deſire of all Nations, Jeſus Chriſt! How exceeding exceedingly will the ſoul rejoyce, when we ſhall find what we have ſo much longed for; not death, but life; and life not only in Chriſt, but with Chriſt; when we ſhall find, not the houſe of the grave, but a houſe of glory, and glory in the height, an exceeding, excelling, ſuperexcellent weight of glory.

And by this effect, we may make proof of grace here. If thou haſt found Chriſt, in Ordinances, in Duties, in Meditation, in Prayer, in the Promiſes; for here, in theſe things, the longing ſoul digs after Chriſt: Joy will at one time or other fill thy heart, yea thy heart will leap for joy; thou wilt rejoyce in Spirit, as Chriſt did, in his Father, Luke 10. 21. For this joy is a fruit of the Spirit, (Gal. 5. 22.) and one of the firſt fruits. And God ſeldome miſſes to give the ſoul a taſt of this joy at the firſt, or preſently after converſion, though afterwards clouds may come over us, or at leaſt our light of joy be not ſo clear.

Further, If a man long after any truth, and digs it, how exceeding joyful will he be, when he can find that truth? When a Philoſopher had found out the reſolution of a Queſtion in the Mathematicks, he was ſo raviſhed with it, that he ran about crying, I have found it, I have found it: Surely the finding of one Divine truth (which is the mind of Chriſt) ſhould affect us more then the compleat knowledge of all that is knowable, or can be known in the whole courſe of Nature. Every truth is beautiful, but the Truths of God are beauty. Thus we may try our deſires in all their purſuits, by this iſſue of them, joy in finding the things which we purſue.

Archimides.

Laſtly obſerve, That as he doth rejoyce, ſo this joy anſwers to the deſire in the degree of it: Proportionable to our deſires and endeavours in ſeeking, are our joyes and comforts when we have found. There is not only a joy, but a proportionable joy; the deſire was very great, and the endeavour was very great, and now the joy comes up to both, that is very great too; not only do they rejoyce, but they rejoyce exceedingly; they rejoyce, ſo as they skip for joy: That is (I am ſure it ought to be) more apparent, in our regular deſires after things good for us, then in our irregular deſires, after things which are hurtful to us. If that exceeding deſire after death, will produce exceeding joy in death; then exceeding deſire after life, and ſpiritual good things, will work exceeding joy when we have found them; deſire is that which widens the veſſel to take in abundance of joy; large deſires after any thing open the heart, and inlarge the faculties to take in abundance of joy, when we have found the thing which we deſire.

VERS. 23, 24, 25, 26.

Why is light given to a man, whoſe way is hid, and whom God hath hedged in?

For my ſighing cometh before I eat, and my roarings are poured out like the waters.

For the thing which I greatly feared is come upon me; and that which I was afraid of, is come unto me.

I was not in ſafety, neither had I reſt, neither was I quiet; yet trouble came.

At the twentieth verſe of this Chapter, Job begins to expoſtulate concerning the continuance of his life; and he caſts his complaint into an argument, which was formed to his purpoſe, thus. There is no reaſon; or if there be, ſhew me a reaſon why his life is continued, that liveth miſerably, and would dye willingly: But I am the man who live miſerably, and would dye willingly: Therefore why is light, or life, continued unto me? The former part of this argument is contained in verſ. 20, 21, 22, 23. In which Job demonſtrates, that there is no reaſon; or, at leaſt, if there be a reaſon, it is ſuch, as he could not make out, why that man ſhould have his life continued, who lives in miſery, and is willing to dye. Three of thoſe verſes we have already finiſhed; and there remaineth ver. 23. (which is a part of the ſame reaſon) to be yet opened.

In this ver. 23. he (as it were) repeats his argument: He had ſaid before, Why is light given to him that is in miſery? &c. and ſo he doth illuſtrate it in the two verſes following: In this ver. 23. he re-inforceth what he had ſaid in other words, Why is light given to a man, whoſe way is hid, and whom God hath hedged in? He doubleth his call for a reaſon, or proof of this thing.

Why is light given?] Thoſe words are not here expreſly in the Hebrew, but they are ſupplied by our Tranſlators, and by Tranſlators in other Languages, from ver. 20. to make up the ſence. The Original runs thus, To a man whoſe way is hid, and whom God hath hedged in: But the Queſtion is implied as in the former, and here to be prefixed, Why is light given to a man, whoſe way is hid, and whom God hath hedged in? Mr. Broughton readeth it without the Queſtion, (Why is light given?) thus: The Wight, or man, whoſe way is hid, over whom the puiſſant caſteth a covering.

To a man, whoſe way is hid.] Job ſpeaks not here of a way in a proper ſence, the way wherein men travel, and paſs in their journeys, from place to place: but the way, is a way, in a Metaphor: And ſo in Scripture, the way of a man is taken: Firſt, for the purpoſe or intention of a man: Secondly, for the courſe and converſation of a man: and that either for the courſe, wherein we walk toward others, or for the courſe wherein others walk towards us. When it is ſaid here, Why is light given to a man, whoſe way is hid? the way, is either the courſe wherein Job walked, reſpecting God; or the courſe which God took, reſpecting Job; Why is light given to a man, whoſe way is hid?

The way of man, in his walking before God, is twofold.

First, Internal.
Secondly, External.

There is an internal, and inward way, which the ſoul treads in converſe with God; a ſecret path, a path which no eye hath ſeen. And then there is the outward way of walking. That ſpeech of God to Abraham takes in both, Walk before me, and be perfect; that is, converſe and carry thy ſelf uprightly before me, in thy affections, and in thy actions. Now when Job ſaith, His way was hid, he means neither of theſe: for though the internal way, whether it be the way of ſin, or the way of obedience, be a path ſo ſecret, as that it is alwayes hid from the eyes of men, yet Job knew well enough that God ſaw even that way, and therefore he could not complain, that his moſt ſecret way was hid from God. Yea, in another place, he comforts himſelf with this, that God knew the ſecret wayes of his heart: For when his friends accuſe him, and charge him with hypocriſie, he ſupports himſelf with this, My witneſs is above, and my record is in Heaven; there is one there that knoweth the way, the ſecret way of my ſpirit with him, to be ſincerity, though you charge the way of my ſpirit with hypocriſie. The ſoul hath many wayes of communion with God, which are altogether hidden from the eye of man: man cannot ſee, or diſcern, the private paſſages between God and the ſpirit; either when the ſoul approves it ſelf to God, or rejoyceth and exults in God. And as concerning this way, this inward way, as Job knew that it was not hid from God; ſo (I conceive) it did not trouble him, that this way was hid from man: As there are in God certain (Arcana Conſilii) ſecret myſteries, and hidden wayes of counſel, which he will not communicate to holy men; ſo there are in holy men (Arcana Pietatis) ſome ſecrets, ſome myſteries of godlineſs, which they do not communicate to the world; and therefore the complaint doth not lye in either of theſe reſpects.

The Church complained, but ſhe was check'd for complaining, that her way was hid from God, Iſa. 40. 27. Why ſayeſt thou, O Jacob, and ſpeakeſt, O Iſrael, My way is hid from the Lord, and my judgment is paſſed over from my God?

Yet that place is not to be underſtood of a hiding from the eye of Gods inſpection, as if the Church had any ſuſpition that the Lord did not know, or did not ſee how matters went with them, or in what condition they were; but it is to be underſtood of the eye of Gods compaſſion: There is a ſeeing eye, or contemplating eye, and a compaſſionating or ſuccouring eye. So the meaning of that complaint is only this, Why ſayeſt thou my way is hid from the Lord? that is, why doeſt thou ſpeak, as if God did not regard thee in thy troubles; as if God had no pity nor compaſſion on thee, no bowels toward thee; Why ſayeſt thou my way is hid from the Lord? In the third of Exodus, when God comes to help the people of Iſrael, he telleth Moſes, I have ſeen, I have ſeen, or I have ſurely ſeen; namely, with an eye compaſſionating their condition, as the next words ſhew, For I know their ſorrows. Now when the Church complained, that Her way was hid from God; her meaning was, that God did not take notice, ſo, as to pity and deliver her. Excepting in that ſence, ſhe could not conceive that her way was hidden from God: neither is the way of the Church, ſo hidden from God, but as to our ſenſe; for the Lord pities his people when he corrects them; and therefore Jacob is chidden for ſaying ſo; Why ſayeſt thou, O Jacob, my way is hidden from the Lord? Therefore this Text is not to be underſtood of Job's way, in reſpect of God, but of the hiding of Gods way, or the hidden dealings of God toward Job. My way is hid, ſaith Job, that, I cannot underſtand, nor interpret, nor expound the meaning of Gods dealing with me; I am not able to give an interpretation of it, I know not what this thing meaneth: My way is hid.

The way of Gods dealing with him, was a hidden way, in two reſpects.

Firſt, In regard of the cauſe of his affliction: It was hidden from him, why God had laid ſo ſore and ſo heavy a burthen upon him; and that is it which Elihu in Chap. 34. of this Book, ver. 31, 32. hints at, where he telleth Job, Surely (ſaith he) it is meet to be ſaid unto God, that which I ſee not, teach thou me. He anſwers ſuch a complaint as this. I (ſaith Job) cannot ſee the reaſon why God doth afflict me: Elihu tells him, It is meet to be ſaid unto God, that which I ſee not, teach thou me; and if I have done iniquity, I will do ſo no more: Lord, if thou wilt ſhew me that my ſin is the cauſe, and what ſin is the cauſe, I do here promiſe, I will lay down my ſin, and (through thy help) do ſo no more.

Sunt qui viam enarrãt viam elabendi. Druſ.

Or again, It was hidden in regard of the iſſue, or event. My way is hid; that is, I can ſee no paſſage out of this way; I cannot tell when theſe troubles will end; I ſee no help; I have no glimpſe of light breaking out to me in this way; it is a dark, a hidden way unto me: This darkneſs troubles him, as much as all his troubles. And it is, as if he had ſaid, I am ſo encompaſt with clouds, that I walk in darkneſs, and ſee no light: My life is ſo intangled, and wrapt up in troubles, that I ſee no way of deliverance, or eſcape.

And this expoſition ſeems moſt proper, if we take in the latter part of the verſe, where he ſaith, And whom God hath hedged in: This explains the hiding of his way, to be the hedging of his way; ſuch an encompaſſing of him about with ſorrows, that he could not make his way out.

In the firſt Chapter, you may remember, that Satan was much troubled, that God had made a hedge about Job: And now Job himſelf is much troubled, that God had made a hedge about him: I am the man, ſaith he, [Whom God hath hedged in.] That which before was the object of Satans envy, is now become the object of Job's complaint, a hedge: Sure then it was not the ſame hedge. No; that which Satan complained of, and envied at, was a hedge of mercy, and a hedge of bleſſings, a hedge of favour, and of protection: But this which Job complaineth of, is a hedge of thorny troubles, and of pricking ſorrows: The former was (as we may ſpeak) a hedge of Roſes; and this was a hedge of Bryars. That was a hedge ſo high, and ſtrong, that no evil could come in, or break through, to annoy him: And this was a hedge ſo high, and ſtrong, that no good could come, or be brought unto him.

So then, take the ſence thus, Why is light given to a man, whoſe way is hid, and whom God hath hedged in? That is, why doth God continue my life, when I am in ſuch a condition, as that I can neither diſcover the reaſon why I came into it, nor am I able to diſcover any paſſage out of it.

And this is it which the Church complains of, (Lam. 3. 7.) He hath hedged me about, that I cannot get out; and ver. 9. He hath encloſed my wayes with hewen ſtones. God had built up a wall (as it were) by Art, with hewen ſtones; he had ſet them ſo cloſe together, that there was no paſſing by, no getting through.

Obſerve hence, Firſt, That affliction is uſually accompanied with much darkneſs.

Affliction is often called darkneſs in Scripture. And as it is darkneſs without, ſo it often cauſeth darkneſs within. An afflicted perſon hath ſuch darkneſs upon his perſon, that he cannot diſcern, many times, either why God doth afflict him, or when God will make an end of his afflictions. That in the Prophet (Iſa. 50. 10.) is true of outward afflictions, as well as inward, Who is there among you that feareth the Lord, that obeyeth the voice of his ſervant, that walketh in darkneſs? There's many an afflicted perſon walks in a way, hidden in a three-fold darkneſs. Firſt, The way is hid in the darkneſs of the cauſe for which he came into it. Secondly, The way is hid in the darkneſs of the event, how to get out of it. Thirdly, The way is hid in the darkneſs of his preſent duty, what to do in it. The way of affliction is often wrapt up, and hidden, in this three-fold darkneſs.

Further, Seeing Job ſpeaks of this as an addition to all his ſorrows, and as the complement of them all, that he was thus ſhut up and hedged in, and that his way was thus dark, in regard of the cauſe of it, > Obſerve, That, It increaſeth an affliction greatly, not to know the reaſon of an affliction; or to have the way of Gods dealings hidden from our eyes.

It is a trouble, not to ſee the reaſon of things: The mind is exceedingly eaſed, when the underſtanding hath light: This made Jeremy inquire, Why doth the way of the wicked proſper? As if he had ſaid, If I could ſee the reaſon of it, it would ſatisfie me; but while thou keepeſt me in the dark, and I can give no account to my own ſoul, or thoſe that ask me, of this thy diſpenſation to wicked men, This is the burthen of my ſoul. It is uſually ſaid, They are happy, who know the cauſes of things. And in regard of the diſeaſes of the body, we ſay, That a diſeaſe is half cured, when the cauſe of it is diſcovered: But when a Phyſitian is in the dark, and cannot find out the cauſe of a diſeaſe, he muſt needs be in the dark for the remedy of it. So it is alſo with a man, in regard of any affliction, when he cannot find out the cauſe, he knoweth not what to pitch upon as a remedy. When Rebeckah (Gen. 25. 22.) had Twins in her womb, and they ſtrugled together within her, ſhe was much troubled, and nothing would ſatisfie her, until ſhe went to God to know the reaſon of the thing; Lord (ſaith ſhe) why am I thus? And when God had told her, that Two Nations were in her womb; and that two manner of people ſhould be ſeparated from her bowels; ſhe made no more complaints. So when there are ſuch ſtrivings, ſuch ſtruglings, and contrary motions of trouble in us, or about us, the ſoul goes to God, and inquires why it is thus? Lord, I am more troubled with the ignorance of my troubles, then with the weight, or ſmart of them.

Fœlix qui potuit rerũ cognoſcere cauſas.

Thirdly, Take the words as reſpecting the iſſue, or deliverance from trouble, and they afford us this Obſervation:

> That, It is a great addition to an affliction, not to ſee, or diſcern, a way to eſcape, or get out of affliction.

To be in an affliction, out of which there appears no paſſage, (unleſs the ſoul be mightily ſupported by the hand and power of Chriſt) brings within a ſtep of deſpair. The Apoſtle ſpeaks as much when he ſaith, (1 Cor. 10. 13.) There is no temptation hath taken hold of you, but that which is common to man; (and then it follows,) but God is faithful, who will not ſuffer you to be tempted above that you are able; but will, with the temptation, alſo make a way to eſcape, that ye may be able to bear it. As if he ſhould ſay, If God did not indeed diſcover, or make out to you ſome way of eſcaping, I muſt needs ſay, you were never able to bear it; but (ſaith he) God will make a way for you to eſcape, that ye may be able to bear it: Meaning, that the opening of this way, would revive their ſpirits, and then they would be able (through the ſtrength of Chriſt) to bear it.

If ſo, then how ſhall the ſoul bear an affliction, when God inſtead of making a way to eſcape, doth as it were make a hedge to ſtop all eſcape? Therefore when the Lord would ſupport his people in their troubles, he promiſed that they ſhould have a door of hope opened to them, I will give her the valley of Achor for a door of hope, Hoſ. 2. 15. He would give her ſome appearance, ſome glimpſes and openings of deliverance, in and from their preſent dangers. It is threatned, (Deut. 28. 25.) thou ſhalt come out one way againſt thine enemies, and flie ſeven wayes before them: they ſhould flie many wayes, but they ſhould eſcape no way. Thou ſhalt come out one way, and flie ſeven wayes, that is, thou ſhalt trie this, and that, and every way to eſcape, but thou ſhalt find a hedge at every wayes end, to ſtop and hinder thy eſcape. We uſe to ſay of a man in a diſtreſſed condition, He is in a wood, or in a wilderneſs. And when God entangles men in their own deviſes, it is ſaid, He poureth contempt upon Princes, and cauſeth them to wander in the wilderneſs, where there is no way, Pſal. 107. 40. So Pharaoh ſaid of the children of Iſrael, They are entangled in the land, the wilderneſs hath ſhut them in, Exod. 14. 3. And when a people are as the children of Iſrael were, having a Sea before them, an Army behind them, and Mountains on either hand, then they may ſay (as Job did) Their way is hid, and God hath hedged them in.

Tentabis ſemper & diverſis viis effugere, ſed fruſtra, nuſquam tibi patebit effugium.

For my ſighing cometh before I eat, and my roarings are poured out like water.

Here Job takes up the former Propoſition, and applyes it particularly to his own perſon. Before, he ſaid only in the general, Why is light given to him that is in miſery? and why is light given to a man whoſe way is hid, and whom God hath hedged in? Now he ſaith in effect, it is thus with me, I am a man in miſery, and I am a man, whoſe way God hath hid and hedged in, wherefore then is my life continued? And he proves that he was in ſuch a condition, by the effects of it, ſighs and roarings. So that this verſe holds forth two things about Job's ſorrow. Firſt, The continuance of it, in thoſe words, My ſighing comes before I eat. Secondly, The extremity of it, in thoſe, My roarings are poured out, &c. The Argument may be thus framed: That man is in extream and continual miſery, who doth not ſo much breath, as ſigh, who, when he would ſpeak, is forced to roar: But thus it is with me, My ſighing cometh before I eat, and my roarings are poured out like water, therefore my miſery is extream and continual.

My ſighing cometh before I eat.] In the Hebrew it is word for word thus, Before the face of my bread my ſighings come. Which Hebraiſm, (Before the face of my bread) hath a great emphaſis in it: It notes the continuance of his ſorrows without any intermiſſion. When a thing is ſaid to be before the face of another, it notes an equal continuance with that, before the face of which it is ſaid to be. As in the negative, (Exod. 20. 3.) Thou ſhalt have no other gods before me, ſo we tranſlate it: The Hebrew is, Thou ſhalt have no other gods before my face; that is, ſo long as I continue to be thy God, thou ſhalt have no other god; but I ſhall be thy God to all eternity, therefore thou ſhalt have no other gods but me, for ever. So in the affirmative, Pſal. 72. 5. where, under the type of Solomon's Kingdom, the continuance of the Kingdom of Chriſt is propheſied, the Holy Ghoſt ſaith, It ſhall continue ſo long, as the Sun and Moon endureth: the Hebrew is, it ſhall continue before the face of the Sun and of the Moon; that is, there ſhall be an equal duration of the Kingdom of Chriſt, and of thoſe lights of Heaven, the Sun and the Moon: The Kingdom of Chriſt ſhall laſt as long as the world ſhall laſt.

לפני
לחמי
ἐις πρόσωπον ἄρτȣ μȣ̃ Aquila.

So then (according to this ſence) Before the face of my bread my ſighings come, is, as if he had ſaid, look how long I have my bread before me, look how much time I ſpend in eating, ſo much time I ſpend in ſighing, my ſorrowings are of the ſame continuance with my refreſhings. The phraſe imports the un-intermittedneſs (as we may ſo ſpeak) of his ſorrows; that he had no ſtop, no breathing time, which was not a ſighing time, no not for a meal time; while he was eating, with every bit of meat, he had a morſel of ſorrows: He might ſay as the Pſalmiſt, (Pſal. 102. 9.) I have eaten aſhes like bread, and mingled my drink with weeping; when I drink, my tears flow into my cup; When I take in a few drops of comfort, I weep out ſtreams of ſorrow: Or my ſighings come and return ſo faſt upon me, that I have no time to eat my bread: I am ſo plyed and followed with theſe afflictions, that I have no leiſure to be comforted.

A Deo perpetua eſt hæc calamitas, ut ne cibi quidem aut ullius neceſſitas cauſa dolores poſſim fallere & uno momento à gemitibus aberrare. Vel tam frequentes mihi ſunt gemitus ut vix mihi tẽpus ſuperſit ad capiendũ cibum.

If at any time a man gets reſpite from his grief, it is when he eats; how reſpiteleſs then was Job's grief, before whom ſorrow and ſighings ſate (as gueſts) continually at his table.

My roarings are powred out like water.

As the former words ſhewed the continuance, ſo this the extremity of Job's ſorrows. It is a great affliction that makes a man of ſpirit ſpeak, or complain: . It is a great affliction that makes a man of ſpirit weep or mourn. How great an affliction then is it, which makes a man of ſpirit cry out and roar? When a man of courage roars, he is pained to purpoſe. Job, a man of ſpirit and courage, doth not only ſigh, but roar; ſighings are more ſecret ſorrows, but roarings muſt be heard; eſpecially, his roarings, which were powred out like water.

Metaphora à leonibus famelicis.
Iſa. 11.4.
Pſal. 46.3.

Roaring is the Lions voice, and here is an alluſion to the hungry Lion, roaring on his prey: Or to the troubled waves of the ſea, which alſo are ſaid to roar. Exceſſive ſorrow is often ſet forth by roaring. Pſal. 22. 1. Why art thou ſo far from the voyce of my roaring? ſaith David, typing the ſorrows of Chriſt: I do not only cry, but I roar out unto thee. Lord, why doſt thou not hear my ſtrong cries, cries like the roaring of the Lion, or the noiſe of troubled waters? So, Pſal. 32. 3. David, to ſhew his extremity of pain and trouble, while he kept in, and did not confeſs his ſin, ſpeaks thus, while I kept ſilence (while I ſmothered my ſin in ſecret) I roared for the very diſquietneſs of my ſoul. Silence in not confeſſing ſin, cauſes roaring under the guilt of ſin. Thoſe are great burdens of ſin, and great burdens of ſorrow, that cauſe roaring. My roarings are powred out like water.

This notes further yet, the abundance and the ſtrength of his ſorrows. I am powred out like water (I am, as it were, all melted into ſorrows) is ſaid of Chriſt, in that Pſalm of his paſſion (Pſal. 22. 14.) I am powred out like water, my heart in the midſt of my bowels is like melted wax. When the Prophet Ezekiel would ſhew how that people ſhould be affected with the tidings of their afflictions, he ſaith, Every heart ſhall melt, and all hands ſhall be feeble, and every ſpirit ſhall faint, and all knees ſhall be weak as water, (chap. 21. 7.) The hebrew is, all knees ſhall go into water. The ſorrows of repentance are expreſt by the powring out of water, to note, both the abundance of them, and the intenſiveneſs of them, in that known place, 1 Sam. 7. 9. They gathered together to Mizpeh, and drew water, and powred it out before the Lord, that is, they mourned abundantly, and they mourned with all their ſtrength.

Madet metu. Plaut.

How ſtrong and abundant the ſorrows of Job were, hath been often ſhewed before, and Obſervations drawn down from them; and therefore I ſhall need do no more then clear the words, and give the ſence. It followeth,

For the thing which I greatly feared is come upon me; and that which I was afraid of, is come unto me.

כי
Particula (quia) interdum non reddit cauſam, ſed vel ornatus vel aſſeverationis cauſa adhibetur.

For the thing which I greatly feared.] The cauſal particle in the beginning, doth not alwayes infer a cauſe. This verſe is not a reaſon of what he ſpake before; but this particle is often uſed, in Scripture, for affirmation or illuſtration, and not as cauſal, or by way of demonſtration; as, John 4. 17. Chriſt tells the woman of Samaria, Thou ſpeakeſt well, I have no husband; the Greek is, for I have no husband. We tranſlate it only by way of aſſertion. So, Mat. 7. 23. Then will I profeſs unto them, I never knew you; the Greek is, Then I will profeſs unto them, for I never knew you; we render it only as an aſſeveration: So very frequent in the Hebrew, the particle [Chi] which is here uſed, hath in it only the force of an affirmation; For the thing I greatly feared, is come upon me, that is, certainly, or aſſuredly, the thing which I greatly feared, is come upon me; as if Job ſhould make this as the concluſion and the ſum of all his complainings; this is it which now I muſt conclude, that the thing which I greatly feared, is come upon me; and that which I was afraid of, is come unto me.

פחד פחדתי
Metuere metum ita dicitur ut gaudere gaudium, pugnare pugnam, ἑορτάζειν ἑορτὴν. Druſ.

The thing which I greatly feared.] The Hebrew word is, I feared a fear, and it is come upon me. And ſo fear is in the Scripture, frequently put for the thing feared, by a Metonymie of the effect for the cauſe, the abſtract being put for the concrete; as, Prov. 1. 26. I will mock when your fear cometh; that is, when the trouble which you feared, ſhall come upon you: As if Job ſhould have ſaid, this evil is that which I have fore-ſeen and fore-thought; I had ſuch miſgrievings in my ſpirit long before this, that ſuch a black day might come upon me, and I might be thus hedged in: now I ſee my thoughts are come to paſs, and my conjectures prove true; the thing which I feared, and greatly feared, is come upon me. We tranſlate well, I greatly feared; the Hebrew is, I feared a fear: Such expreſſions raiſe the ſence; as when we are ſaid to be bought with a price, it notes, that there was a great price paid for our redemption: To rejoyce with joy, ſhews the greatneſs of joy. So here, to fear a fear, ſhews that he was in a great fear; as we tranſlate, I feared a fear, I greatly feared.

Here it may be queſtioned, whether theſe fears of Job were lawful? doth it become us to have ſuch miſgrievings of heart, in reſpect of our outward condition? The Apoſtle biddeth us, be careful in nothing (Phil. 4. 6.) and was it a virtue or a grace, was it commendable, or ſo much as approveable in Job to be fearful in all things? Chriſt rebukes his Diſciples, becauſe they were afraid in a ſtorm; and was it well in Job, that he was fearful in a Sun-ſhine, when he had the faireſt weather, and proſpered in all things? Doth it become a godly man, to be alwayes ſolicitous about his eſtate, and doubting that troubles will come? One would think there is trouble enough in troubles, when they come; a man ſhould not trouble himſelf with them before they come. Beſides, it is ſaid, Prov. 10. 24. reſpecting wicked men, that God will bring that which they fear upon them; ſo it ſeemeth, God is angry with thoſe, who are alwayes fearing, or ſtand poring upon ſuch and ſuch evils as they fear may come upon them: To theſe, God ſaith (Iſa. 66. 3.) I alſo will chooſe their deluſions, and will bring their fear upon them; becauſe you feared theſe things, you ſhall have your fear. As God gives ſome their prayers in anger, ſo he gives many their fears in anger; and it is as great a ſin, inordinately to fear, that God will take away the meat of our neceſſity or convenience, as it is to pray that God would give us meat to ſatisfie our luſts or wantonneſs.

To clear this, we muſt diſtinguiſh of fear, as to the purpoſe we have in hand. There are divers ſorts of fear.

Firſt, There is a fear of wiſdom and caution, and there is a fear of torment and vexation. That which the Apoſtle John ſpeaks (1 John 4. 18.) Fear hath torment, is not meant of all fear: there is a fear that is a tormenting paſſion, a fear which diſtracts and divides the thoughts about troubles which may come; and there is a fear, which only directs us to avoid or prevent the coming of trouble.

Secondly, There is a fear, which is oppoſed to comfort. It was David's ſin, that he wanted the fear oppoſed to ſecurity; when he ſaid, In my proſperity I ſhall never be moved: Lord, by thy favour, thou haſt made my mountain to ſtand ſtrong, Pſal. 30. 6, 7. The fear of Job, in his proſperity, was oppoſed to this ſecurity; he did not ſay, I ſhall never be moved; he thought he might be moved: The favour of God had made his mountain ſtrong, yet he knew it had but the ſtrength of clay, and therefore might be caſt down. This was his fear; he looked upon creatures, as they are, mutable and moveable. Chriſt ſpeaks of a faith of miracles, which will remove mountains; and that fear is not contrary to ſaving faith, which cauſeth us to think, that our mountains may be removed. Job's fear was grounded on the uncertainty of creature-comforts; he knew wealth was brittle ware, and might quickly receive a crack. This fear we ought to carry about us, in regard of our ſpiritual eſtates; though grace be everlaſting ware, though we are high-built, and full-grown in grace; though through the favour of God, our mountain of holineſs and comforts be very ſtrong, yet we muſt not be ſecure; though we are high-built, we muſt not be high-minded. Hence the Apoſtle Paul warns the believing Gentiles, that they ſhould fear: I grant, ye are in a good eſtate, in compariſon of the Jews; they are caſt off, ye are graffed in; yet let me give you this caution, Be not high-minded, but fear. That fear which is oppoſed to preſumption and ſecurity, is a good and neceſſary fear, in the beſt of our eſtate, whether in grace or nature, whether in worldly or heavenly riches. And ſuch was the fear of Job.

Rom. 11. 20.

Thirdly, There is a fear which makes us provide for an evil day, and there is a fear which hindreth us from enjoying the comforts of a good day. The former was in Job; doubtleſs leſs his fear in good dayes, made him diligent to provide for the evil day. As it is ſaid of Noah (Heb. 11. 7.) That Noah being warned of God, of things not ſeen as yet, through faith, moved with fear, prepared an Ark, for the ſaving of his houſe. Noah knew the flood would come, this holy fear ſet him awork to provide an Ark. It is an argument both of wiſdom and of grace, in a calm, to provide for a ſtorm; in peace, to conſider what to do in a time of war; in health, to lay up thoughts about our ſickneſs; & in a day when the light of Gods countenance ſhines into our hearts, and we walk in the comforts of the holy Ghoſt, then to think, a night of deſertion may come; and what ſhall I do, if I ſhould walk in darkneſs, and ſee no light? Such as this, was the fear which Job feared.

Fourthly, There is a fear which makes us diſtruſt God, that he will afflict us; and there is a fear, which keepeth us from doing that, which may provoke God to afflict us: This was Job's fear, as was ſhewed (chap. 1. 1.) He feared God, and eſchewed evil. He was loth to grieve and offend God, or give him any occaſion to be angry.

Laſtly, There is a fear, which is oppoſed to hardneſs of heart; and a fear, that is oppoſed to courage of heart. Job's fear was oppoſed to hardneſs of heart; of this, Solomon ſpeaks (Prov. 28. 14.) Bleſſed is the man that feareth alwayes. And to clear what fear he means, he adds in the next words; But he that hardneth his heart, ſhall fall into miſchief. Where we ſee, Firſt, That there is a fear oppoſed to hardneſs of heart. And, Secondly, That to fear that fear alwayes, even in our greateſt proſperity, is not only our duty, but our happineſs; that fear will not interrupt our comforts, but comfort us. Yea, this fear doth not only conſiſt with comfort, but with courage; and though we may fall into the troubles which we thus fear, yet we ſhall not fall under them: Such as this was Job's fear.

So then, to take up all; Job's fear was a fear of wiſdom and caution, not of torment and vexation; a fear oppoſed to ſecurity and preſumption, not to joy and conſolation; a fear that made him diligent to prepare againſt an evil day, not a fear that did eat out all the comforts of a good day; a fear which kept him from doing that, which might move God to afflict him; not a fear which made him diſtruſt, that God would afflict him; a fear oppoſed to hardneſs of heart, not a fear oppoſed to courage and ſtrength of heart. Such a fear as this, is a holy fear; ſuch a fear as this, is a good companion in our beſt eſtate: this fear, and our comforts may well joyn together; this fear will not trouble, but regulate our lives; not break, but ſweeten our ſleep. Hence obſerve,

That, Holy wiſdom, ſanctified prudence, biddeth us fear, and prepare for evil, in our good dayes.

Sapienti meliora ſunt in votis, deteriora verò in expectatione. Plut. in Tranquil.

I was afraid of theſe things, ſaith Job: We muſt not ſuſpect, but we ought often to think of evils, before they come. A wiſe moral man, much more, a wiſe Chriſtian, while he is earneſtly praying for good, is alſo carefully providing for evil. Leſt the Diſciples ſhould forget trouble in times of peace, Chriſt ſaith to them, Behold (Mat. 24. 25.) I have told you before; now you are at pretty good eaſe, it may be, you think, it will be thus with you alwayes; but take heed of ſuch thoughts, I have told you what will be hereafter; Behold, I have told you before. And again (John 16. 33.) Theſe things have I ſpoken unto you, that in me ye might have peace; in the world ye ſhall have tribulation. In the peace we have with Chriſt, we ſhould expect tribulation from the world. The Spirit of God often hints ſuch things aforehand, to the ſpirits of his people, that they may not be ſurprized. Paul teſtifies (Acts 20.23.) that the holy Ghoſt every where witneſſed that bonds and afflictions did abide him; he lookt for trouble in all places, this made him both patient under, and victorious over all his troubles. Ungodly men feel trouble, before they ſee it; and are often paſt all hope, before they have had any fear; when they have a good day, they think their day will be an eternity, and laſt for ever. Thoſe in Amos (chap. 6. 3.) were merry, they were ſinging and feaſting, eating the fat, and drinking the ſweet; and what do they in theſe their good, their only good dayes? The Prophet ſhews us in the next words; They put the evil day far from them: they would have no thought that their eſtate might change, when they had a mind their eſtate ſhould continue. Hence the Prophet Iſaiah (chap. 28. 15. deſcribes them, making a covenant with death, and coming to an agreement with hell; and then they ſuppoſed themſelves ſafe and under covert, come what would. The Prophets indeed have been talking of judgments and ſcourges; but what of that? we have got a protection, we have covenants in our pockets, will be our ſecurity; ſo they were promiſed, and ſo they believed, as their words witneſs; If the overflowing ſcourge ſhall paſs through, it ſhall not come near us. Theſe are the thoughts of fooliſh and ungodly men, they make bargains and agreements, as it were, with all troubles, that they ſhall not be touched; others may ſmart, but they have taken order for their own indemnity: They have made lies their refuge, and under falſhood have they hid themſelves. And ſo they call chearfully for their wine; come fetch wine, and we will fill our ſelves with ſtrong drink; and then conclude confidently (as if all the world, and time were at their command) To morrow ſhall be as this day, and much more abundant, Iſa. 56. 12. When a wiſe man falleth into trouble, he falleth forward, that is, he falleth into thoſe troubles which he did foreſee; but when an ungodly man, a wicked man falleth into trouble, he falleth backward; he falleth into thoſe evils, which he never thought of, much leſs, feared. Many of the people of God, at this day, do, and may ſay of the evils which are now upon us, the things which we feared are come; theſe ſtorms were ſeen long ago in the clouds; yea, in the Sun-ſhine, in fair dayes; theſe foul rainie dayes were foreſeen: and they who have foreſeen them, and foreſeen them with ſuch an eye of faith and holy fear, as we have deſcribed, are in beſt caſe to grapple with them, and will be gainers by them. It is well for us, when we can ſay, the things we feared, are come upon us. They are in a ſad condition, upon whom thoſe evils fall, which they never feared; when troubles come, they go neareſt their hearts, who have put them fartheſt off, before they came. Hence obſerve,

Secondly, That, The more preparing fears we have before troubles come, the leſs we are preſt with fears, when trouble comes.

If we conſider Job, how unmoveable he ſtood the charge and aſſault of theſe afflictions, how he wreſtled with all the diſtreſſes, which at once took hold of him, we are to look (next to the ſupport he had immediately from Chriſt) to this wiſe caution of his, that he feared ſuch a ſtorm might overtake him, before he got to his journeyes end: He thought theſe things might come, and therefore laid in proviſion for them, againſt they came. Thoſe blows wound deepeſt, which we expect not. Dangers unknown, do eaſily ſurprize us and oppreſs us; whereas thoſe which we fear and think of, may either be prevented in their coming, or we may be provided againſt they come. That which the Naturaliſts ſay of the Cockatrice, that if the Cockatrice ſee a man firſt, the man dieth; but if the man ſeeth the Cockatrice firſt, the Cockatrice dies; is an experienced truth, reſpecting the point we have in hand; that if troubles ſee us firſt, we die; but if we ſee them firſt, they die; that is, their ſting and ſtrength (as to us) is much abated. Dangers are moſt felt, where they are not foreſeen; and ſometime, being foreſeen, they are not felt at all; for a prepared expectation doth either weaken them, or ſtrengthen us, make us more able to ſuſtain them, or them leſs able to hurt us; whereas indeed every croſs, which findeth us ſecure, hath an advantage to leave us deſperate. When Nabal heard of danger paſt, which he never dreamt might come, his heart died in him like a ſtone (1 Sam. 25.) How then had he been aſtoniſhed into a ſtone, if he had ſeen the evil falling upon him? Such can ill bear trouble, who look for nothing but comfort. It was an addition to the affliction of that afflicted people (Jer. 8. 15.) When they looked for peace, but no good came; and for a time of health, and behold trouble; If they who are in trouble, are more troubled, when they cannot have the peace they looked for, then ſurely they muſt be more perplexed with trouble (when it comes) who enjoying peace, never had a thought, that trouble would come. When a people are ſo far from looking for evil, that they look for nothing but good, and build upon it, that they ſhall never ſee ſorrow; then to ſee ſorrow, is a killing ſight, The ſorrows of Babylon ſhall be mightily increas'd and augmented, doubled and trebled upon her, becauſe when they are coming upon her, ſhe ſhall be ſaying, I ſit as a Queen, and ſhall ſee no ſorrow; ſhe was fearleſs, and ſhe ſhall be comfortleſs: Trouble will lie heavy enough upon us, when we look and prepare for it; but it will be intolerable to thoſe, who never look'd for, nor laid in one thought of preparation againſt it's coming. The fool in the Goſpel, ſaid to his ſoul, take thine eaſe, thou haſt goods laid up for many years: But it is beſt for us, when we have abundance of outward goods, to ſay to our ſouls, theſe may be loſt in a few hours: Therefore ſay to thy ſelf, in the time of thy fulneſs,, what if a day of emptying ſhould come? ſay, when you are rich, it may be, before I die, I may be poor; what ſhall I do then? Now I have a houſe, it may be, before I die, or within a few dayes, I ſhall be turned out of doors; in what poſture do I find my ſelf for ſuch a condition? Now I am at liberty, and enjoy my friends; it may be, ſhortly I may be caſt into a priſon, and come into the hand of enemies; now I have my wife and children about me, my vine and my olive-plants, at, and round about my table; I may ſhortly be deprived of them; and, O my ſoul, how canſt thou bear theſe changes? It is good to put theſe caſes to our ſelves now; ſurely Job often tutor'd his ſpirit with ſuch queſtions as theſe, and catechized his heart in them from day to day; hence he ſaith, The things I feared, are come upon me. To proceed;

Gravius eſt vulnus quod non expectatur, & illa ægrius tolerantur, quibus homo ſe non prius aſſuefacit.

I was not in ſafety, neither had I reſt, nor was I quiet; yet trouble came.

This is both an addition to, and an expoſition of the former verſe. Theſe words explain what he meant by ſaying, I feared a fear; even this, I was not in ſafety, neither had I reſt, &c.

I was not in ſafety.] No? was not Job in ſafety in the dayes of his proſperity? Is it not ſaid, that he had a hedge about him, and ſuch a hedge as the Devil could not break through, to hurt him? and was not Job in ſafety then?

לא שלותי

Significat in quiete vel pace agere, vel tranquil'è & in otio vivere. Nec multum abludit à voce Hebræa Latinum ſalus. Moller in Pſal.122. 6. Shiloh non tantum habet ſignificationem paſſivam, quaſi dicas, tranquillum, fœlicem, cui omnia proſpere cedunt; ſed activam etiam, ut Shiloh ſit ſoſpitator, ſeu promiſſæ fœlicitatis author.

The hebrew word, from the root [Shalah] doth alſo ſignifie, I was not ſecure, I was not in ſecurity; or, I did not ſit ſafe in my own thoughts, in my own opinion; I did not live ſecurely or without fear in my moſt flouriſhing dayes. And from this root, Chriſt is called Shiloh, Gen 49. 10. The Scepter ſhall not depart from Judah till Shiloh come. Chriſt is Shiloh, that is, he, in whom all perſons may ſecurely truſt; you may ſit down in ſafety in Chriſt, and reſt your ſouls for ever; he is Shilah, our preſerver; and the Hebrews uſe that word to ſignifie the fleſhy mantle in which the infant is wrapped in the mothers belly, becauſe the infant lieth there quietly and ſecurely; it is out of fear, and hath no thought of any danger, but lieth ſecurely, out of harms way. So that when Job ſaith, I was not in ſafety, he means, I did not think my ſelf ſafe, or beyond the reach of danger, I was not taken up in outward contentments; I did not look upon my poſſeſſions as perpetulties, or upon my houſe, as that which ſhould endure for ever, or my dwelling-place to all generations. Job was not like the great Monarch of Babylon, (Dan. 4. 4.) who ſaid, I Nebuchadnezzar was at reſt in my houſe (it is the ſame word which is uſed in the Text) I, ſaith Nebuchadnezzar, counted my ſelf the greateſt man in the world, and I thought none could touch or moleſt me; I was at reſt and ſafe: We have ſuch a deſcription made by the Prophet, of a whole Nation, as this King makes of his own perſon, Jer. 49. 31. Ariſe, get ye up unto the wealthy Nation that dwelleth at eaſe; or (it is the ſame word) to a Nation without either fear or care, a ſecure Nation; as it is explained by the words following, which have neither gates nor bars, which dwell alone. If you come to a mans houſe that hath neither lock nor key, nor door, nor bar, you may well reſolve, that he dwelleth ſecurely, and is in ſafety. And if you come to a City that hath neither gates nor bars, you will ſay, either this City hath no enemies, or elſe it fears none. A City without gates and bars, is the embleme of ſecurity. Job's temper was directly oppoſed to this; I was not in ſafety.

Neither had I reſt, nor was I quiet.

Theſe two latter expreſſions are of the ſame importance with the former: Both theſe words have been opened at the thirteenth verſe of this Chapter, both being there applied to reſt and quietneſs in the grave. There he ſaid, if he had died, he had been at reſt and quiet; but all his life-time, he had no reſt, neither was he quiet. But is this agreeable to the duty or character of a godly man, to ſay he hath no reſt, he is not quiet? Surely a godly man ought to be quiet, when all the world is hudled together in confuſion; when the mountains skip like lambs, and the little hills like young ſheep, then, even then, he ought to ſtand like mount Sion, that cannot be moved: And did it become Job, or is it any part of his commendation, that in the times of his peace, he had no reſt? When the Prophet ſhews the temper of wicked men, he compares them to the troubled Sea, when it cannot reſt, Iſa. 57. 20. It ſhould ſeem that Job was like a troubled ſea; for himſelf ſaith, he could not reſt. I anſwer, by diſtinguiſhing, firſt, of a twofold reſt; there is a reſt of contentation, and a reſt of confidence. Job had not a reſt of confidence, he truſted not in his outward peace; but he had the reſt of contentation, even in his outward troubles. A wicked mans conſcience is like a troubled ſea, when he enjoyes outward peace; but Job enjoyed peace of conſcience while his outward eſtate was like a troubled ſea: He was fully ſetled in his mind, when he had no reſt; and was ſatisfied in ſpirit, when he had not this quietneſs: ſo that when he ſaith, I had no reſt, neither was I quiet; his meaning is only this, I never placed my happineſs in theſe things, I never built my hopes upon creatures, I never truſted upon them, nor expected much from them. Or, if you will more clearly apprehend the ſence of this laſt verſe, you may read it in that contrary practice of the rich man, Luke 12. 19. His houſe was full, but his heart was fuller of the creature; and he made the creature both his rock to build upon, and his pillow to ſleep upon; when his ground brought forth plentifully, and he had built new barns to lay up his fruits, then he layes himſelf down to ſleep; and that he might ſleep quickly and quietly, he ſings a requiem to his ſoul; Soul, thou haſt much goods laid up for many years, take thine eaſe, eat, drink, and be merry; no face can be more unanſwerable to a face; heaven and hell, light and darkneſs, are not more unlike, then theſe words of the rich man are unanſwerable in likeneſs, to thoſe words of Job. That rich mans words are the affirmatives of all Job's negatives; and may be thus rendred in full ſence: I was (and I reſolved I ſhould ſo continue) in ſafety, at reſt and quiet. Job's eſtate was as full as his, but his heart was emptied of all creature-confidence and complacence; I (ſaid he) never thought my ſelf the ſafer for theſe, and therefore I ſaid to my ſoul, ſoul, take not thy reſt, quiet not thy ſelf in theſe: this is his intent in ſaying, I was not in ſafety, neither had I reſt, nor was I quiet. It follows,

Yet (though it was thus with me) trouble came; though my heart was looſe from the creature, yet I loſt all I had in the creature: though I made not the world my comfort, yet I found ſorrow in the world; I never expected much peace in it, none at all from it; yet trouble came: ſuch trouble came, as might move and ſhake me to pieces. Job, you ſee, when he had abundance of all outward things, yet ſaith, he was not in ſafety, and at quiet; he did not reſt in or upon them. Hence obſerve,

A godly man never ſetteth up his reſt in Creatures.

Though he have never ſo much riches in poſſeſſion, yet he doth not make riches his portion. He lives by that caution (Pſal. 62. 10) If riches flow in or encreaſe, yet ſet not thine heart upon them. In the higheſt flood and ſpring-tide of worldly proſperity, we ſhould keep our hearts within the channel: When riches are increaſed into a mountain, and (to the eye of nature) into a mountain of rocks, yet then do not ſet thy heart upon them, as upon a foundation, (ſo the Hebrew word imports) to ſettle thy contentments. All the creatures in heaven and earth, are not ſtrong enough to bear the weight of a mans heart (God only can do that) who is the rock of ages, or an everlaſting ſtrength, Iſa. 26. 3. All, beſides him, is a foundation of ſand, and ſo a godly man takes them. What nature looks at as a foundation of rocks, that grace ſees to be a foundation of ſand, and therefore will not reſt upon it; neither indeed can it. A godly man, in his afflictions, is, as having nothing, and yet poſſeſſing all things (2 Cor. 6. 10.) and in his abundance, he hath all things, but poſſeſſeth nothing; for he ſo poſſeſſes things, as if he did not poſſeſs them; as the Apoſtles counſel is (1 Cor. 7. 31.) He marries as if he married not; he weeps, as if he wept not; he rejoyces, as if he rejoyced not; he buyes, as if he poſſeſſed not; becauſe the faſhion of this world paſſeth away. It was an excellent ſpeech of Luther, concerning worldly things, I have proteſted, that I will never be ſatisfied with the creature (this is to be a Proteſtant in deed, as well as in truth.) A godly man is an Epicure in Chriſt, he would never play the Epicure, but in Chriſt, and in God: In them, and towards them, he gives his affections their full ſwing, and as a wicked man is ſaid to enlarge his deſires (after the Earth) as Hell (Hab. 2. 5.) So he enlarges his deſires (after Heaven) as Heaven, and complains his deſires are no larger. In the thoughts of Chriſt he ſits down, and would take his fill; he ſaith, I am ſafe in him, I am quiet and at reſt; He ſaith to his ſoul, ſoul, doſt thou ſee that Chriſt, and doſt thou take notice of thoſe promiſes? Thou haſt goods laid up in him, in them for many years, yea, for eternity; ſoul, take thine eaſe, take it fully, thou haſt riches, thou haſt an eſtate that can never be ſpent; ſoul, eat, drink and be merry; his blood is drink indeed, and his fleſh is meat indeed; joy in Chriſt is joy indeed, unſpeakable joy here, and fulneſs of joy hereafter: In his preſence there is fulneſs of joy, and at his right hand there are pleaſures for evermore. Until the ſoul pitches thus on Chriſt, it is not in ſafety, much leſs in reſt or quiet. As the Needle in the Compaſs is in continual motion till it points towards the North, where (as it is conceived) there are Rocks of Loadſtone, with which it ſympathizeth, ſo the ſoul is in continual motion, until it points to Chriſt, who (we are ſure) is that living Rock, with whom all Believers ſympathize; and the true Loadſtone which attracts all Believers to him. A Believer, like Noah's Dove, finds no reſt (all the world over) for the feet of his ſoul, until he returns to this Ark of ſafety and ſalvation: And therefore after all his flights and flutterings among the Creatures, he ſaith (with the Pſalmiſt) Return unto thy reſt (thy Chriſt) O my ſoul, for the Lord hath dealt bountifully with thee, Pſal. 116. 7. Thou haſt been abroad in the world, and that (like a narrow hearted Maſter) deals niggardly with thee: If thou ſhouldeſt ſtay long, either in the ſervice of, or dependance upon the world, the world would ſtarve thee: Therefore return unto thy reſt in the Lord; for the Lord hath dealt (and will yet deal more) bountifully with thee, O my ſoul.

שורת

Laſtly, In that Job ſaith, I was not in ſafety, neither had I reſt, &c. yet trouble came; we may obſerve,

> That, The more our hearts are looſened from the creatures, the more aſſurance we may have of enjoying the Creatures.

It is as if Job had ſaid, I was not faſtened to the world, my heart was not engaged to any thing on this ſide Chriſt; and this was the faireſt, the moſt probable way for the continuance of my outward comforts; yet trouble came. The Redditive Particle, yet, ſuppoſes ſomewhat in reaſon or probability at leaſt, that might have carried it another way. As when the Prophet Amos, reckoning up the judgments of God upon his people, ſpeaks to them thus in his name (chap. 4. 6, 8, 9.) I have ſent you cleanneſs of teeth, yet you have not returned unto me; I have ſent you the peſtilence, the ſword, yet have you not returned unto me. The yet, ſhews there was great reaſon God ſhould expect their return, or that he had done that, which, in all probability, might have cauſed them to return, when he ſent thoſe judgments. So here, when Job ſaith, I was not in ſafety, &c. yet trouble came; the yet, implies that there was ſomewhat even in that unquietneſs, which gave him hopes of ſettlement in his outward comforts: It ſeems to carry ſuch a ſence in it, as if he had in more words explained himſelf thus; Had I dwelt ſecurely, and given my ſelf up to the contentments of my fleſh, or truſted in an arm of fleſh for ſafety, I ſhould not have wondred at my calamity, or thought ſtrange of my trouble; but this is a riddle which I cannot yet expound, that when my heart was no way ſet upon my eſtate, my eſtate ſhould fall: That when I reſted not in the creature, I ſhould meet with ſuch troubles in the creature. This is not the manner of God, it is not uſual for God to do thus in his diſpenſations toward his people and ſervants. It is very rare that he takes their outward comforts from them, when they are not taken with their comforts. Hence it is (as I apprehend) that Job putteth it in with a yet trouble came. This way of God with me, is out of the ordinary courſe of Providence. I confeſs, Mercer, a very learned Commentator, doth not favour this expoſition of laying ſuch a weight upon the particle yet, and therefore renders the Original (Vau) as a bare Copulative. I was not in ſafety, &c. And trouble came. Yet having the authority of our Tranſlation, and the frequent uſe of the word to that ſence in other places, we may venture upon it; yea, I think it no venture, but a certain advantage both to the Text and to our ſelves. And I am certain the poſition is true, though the expoſition ſhould not prove ſo: For the truth is, troubles are never ſo near, as when we put them furtheſt off; nor is the world ever ſo unſure to us, as when we make ſureſt of it. God often pulls their comforts from them, whoſe hearts are glued to their comforts; As it is ſaid of thoſe in 1 Theſ. 5. 3. When they ſhall ſay, peace and ſafety, then ſudden deſtruction ſhall come upon them, as pain upon a woman in travail, and they ſhall not eſcape; Mark, when they ſhall ſay, that is, conclude all's their own, when out of the abundance of their hearts, their mouths ſpeak of nothing but of peace and ſafety, all is well, and all will be well, then ſudden deſtruction cometh: When a man ſaith, I have riches, I have a full eſtate, I have honour, I am a happy man, I may take my reſt; then poverty, want, diſgrace, miſery, vexations and troubles, fall upon him as an armed man, Thus for the moſt part, God wreſts the creatures ſooneſt out of their hands, who hold them faſteſt. In Luke 17. Chriſt inſtanceth in the dayes of Noah, and in the dayes of Lot, when they were ſecure, buying and ſelling, building and planting, marrying and giving in marriage, as if the world had been their own; and as if they meant to take the heart of it out, and leave a poor world for the next age, then the flood came, and then fire came, and they, with theirs, were ſwept away and conſumed, as in a moment. The Maſter of the ſervant in the Goſpel, ſhall come in a day. In what day? Firſt, In a day when he looked not for him. Secondly, In a day when his heart was let out upon the creature; When he ſhall be eating and drinking with the drunken, when he ſhall be ſmiting his fellow-ſervants; when he ſhall think all ſure, and the day his own; in that day ſhall his Maſter come, even in the day that he looketh not for him, and in an hour when he is not aware, Luke 12. 45, 46. To have the ſpirit ſteept and drencht in worldly pleaſures or profits, endangers us to ſome ſudden ſweeping judgment: And when we value the enjoyment of the creature more then we ought, we ſhall not long enjoy it ſo much as we might. Earthly things fail us ſooneſt, when we truſt in them, or think our ſelves ſafe by them.

Non placet quod quidã putant Jobum velle hoc loco, quòd non intumuerit, neq; inſolentior fuit rebus affluentibus, & tamen in hæc mala inciderit, Mercer.

From this obſerve (in paſſage) a vaſt difference between God and the world, between earthly things and ſpiritual; the way to hold ſpiritual things faſt, is to take faſt hold of them, to cleave to them with a full purpoſe of heart never to let them go. If you carry looſe affections towards Chriſt, you may quickly loſe the comforts of his preſence: The more we reſt upon Chriſt, the more we truſt on God, and make him our ſafety, the more ſafe we are. Him doth God eſtabliſh in peace, in perfect peace, whoſe mind is ſtayed upon him, even becauſe he truſts upon him, Iſa. 26. 3. We have moſt peace from God, when we expect moſt; and may look for more reſt and quiet, when we reſt quietly in him, and ſay, In God I have enough; yea, as Jacob (Gen. 33. 11.) I have all. But if you would have reſt in the world, ſay as the Prophet Micah directs (chap. 2. 10.) This is not our reſt. Keep your hearts at a due diſtance from the world, and you ſhall (moſt probably) keep the world. What Chriſt ſpeaks of this life, is true of the things of this life; he that will loſe (that is, he who is ready) to loſe the things of this life, ſhall ſave them; and he that will ſave, that is, he who is reſolved to ſave the things of this life, ſhall loſe them; put them out of your hearts, and you may hold them in your hands: you ſtand firmeſt upon the earth, when you do but touch it, and touch it (as a round body doth a plain) only in a point. You are freeſt from danger, when you ſay, we are not in ſafety; freeſt from motion, when you ſay, we are not in reſt: And when in Job's ſenſe) you are not quiet, then (according to the ordinary dealings of God, with his people) you are furtheſt from trouble.

So much concerning this Chapter, containing Job's bitter curſe upon the day of his birth, and his vehement expoſtulation about the continuance of his life.

His Three Friends ſtood ſilent all this while, much divided between compaſſion and indignation; they pitied his ſad afflictions, but they were angry (and they thought they had reaſon to be angry, in the behalf of God) with his impatience and complaint. Their zeal kindled, and their hearts waxed hot within them; while they were thus mute and muſing, the fire burned and brake forth; at laſt they ſpake (every man in his order) with their tongues: A hot diſpute enſues; Eliphaz begins, the reſt follow: After a long ventilation and debate, God himſelf (appearing as Moderator) ſtates the queſtion between them, determines and concludes for Job againſt thoſe three; Ye have not ſpoken of me the thing that is right, as my ſervant Job hath, chap. 42. 7. To this God the moſt wiſe, the only wiſe God, the infallible moderator of all perſons, actions, things and queſtions, both in Heaven and upon the Earth, be glory and praiſe for ever, Amen.

TO

AN

EXPOSITION

WITH

Practical Obſervations

UPON THE

FOURTH, FIFTH, SIXTH

AND SEVENTH CHAPTERS

Of the Book of

JOB.

TO THE CHRISTIAN READER:

To thoſe chiefly of this CITY, who have been the MOVERS, and are the PROMOTERS of this WORK.

SIRS,

Your continued Care and labour of Love, engages a like degree of both, for the growth of this Infant-work. And therefore (though in the midſt of manifold diverſions) theſe pieces are ventured out. We live in an Age (O that we could live it) wherein the hand of Providence works glorioufly, yea, terribly: Having then got three or four ſteps further into this Book of Providence, it will not be unſeaſonable to ſhew you the Prints of them: Eſpecially ſeeing this Hiſtory of Job*'s Affliction, looks ſo like a Propheſie of ours; and (almoſt in every Line) gives us ſome Lineament of our preſent troubles and diſtempers, of our hopes and fears.*

In the three former Chapters we had a Narrative of the Caſe, and of thoſe occurrences out of which the Queſtion here debated receives its ſtate; as alſo the bringing together of the Interlocutors or perſons maintaining this Diſcourſe; as we may alwayes obſerve in the writings of the Ancients, whether Natural, Moral or Divine, which are compoſed into Dialogues or Diſputes.

This great Divinity-act (one of the greateſt ſurely and moſt ſolemn, I think the firſt that ever was held out in ſuch a formality, in the world) is principally ſpent upon that Noble probleme, How the Juſtice and Goodneſs of God can be ſalved, while his Providence diſtributes good to the evil, and evil to the good? A Queſtion ſtarted and toucht in many Books of the Holy Scriptures; but is here (ex profeſſo) purpoſely handled; Firſt, In a very long Diſputation between Job the Reſpondent, and his three Friends Opponents; Then in a full Determination, Firſt, By Elihu, an acute and wiſe; then by God himſelf, the moſt wiſe, and infallible Moderator.

The Method here obſerved is after the manner of the Schools (pro and contra) every one of the four Diſputants having his ſeveral Opinion, and each one his arguments in favour of his own. Which, yet, are not preſented in that affected plainneſs of the Schoolmen, with their down-right (videtur quod ſic, probatur quod non) This I affirm, this I approve; this I deny, this diſprove. The Pen-men of the Holy Ghoſt never diſcuſs Queſtions ſo; no, nor any of the old Philoſophers. This covert carriage of their Opinions, and cloſe contexture of their Arguments, Anſwers and Replies about them, render the Book ſomewhat dark and obſcure to the Readers meditation. And therefore it will be a Deſign not unprofitable (if that end offered at, may be attained) briefly to draw them forth, and ſet them before you in a more open light. And doubtleſs, what they hold, and by what Mediums they mannage their proofs, may (by the bleſſing of God, upon ſerious thoughts, and frequent reviews) be made out to a very great plainneſs.

Towards which, it is obſervable, that there are many threds of the ſame colour and ſubſtance, mixt and inter-woven by the Diſputants throughout this whole Diſcourſe. And that, though the three Opponents, with one conſent, ſet up Job, as their common Mark to ſhoot at; yet they take up very different ſtandings, if not different levels, varying each from other in ſome things, as well as all (upon the main) from him.

The reaſon of the former is this, becauſe there are ſome common Principles, wherein they all agree; which, if we abſtract, with what is ſpoken in the illuſtration of them, taking in alſo thoſe Concluſions which ſpring from them, as their firſt-born: Then the remainder will ſhew us that proper and diſtinctive Opinion which each of them holds about this grand Queſtion of Providence; the events and diſtribution whereof, ſeem ſo croſs-handed in giving trouble and ſorrow to godly men, joy and proſperity to the wicked.

There are three Principles wherein Job concurs with his three friends ; and a fourth, wherein they three concur againſt him.

The three, wherein all four agree, are theſe ;

Firſt, That all the afflictions and calamities which befal man, fall within the eye and certain knowledge of God.

Secondly, That, God is the author and efficient Cauſe, the orderer and diſpoſer of all thoſe afflictions and calamities.

Thirdly, That, In regard of his moſt holy Majeſty, and unqueſtionable Soveraignty, he neither doth, nor can do any wrong or injury to any of his creatures, whatſoever affliction he layes, or how long ſoever he is pleaſed to continue it upon them.

Theſe three Principles and ſuch Concluſions as are immediately deducible from them, are copiouſly handled and inſiſted upon by them all. In purſuance whereof, they all ſpeak very glorious things of the Power, Wiſdom, Juſtice, Holineſs and Soveraignty of the Lord. In proclaiming every of which Attributes, the tongue of Job, like a ſilver Trumpet, lifts up the name of God ſo high, that he ſeems to drown the ſound of the other three, and makes their praiſe almoſt ſilent.

But Job's three Friends proceed to a fourth Principle; which he utterly denies ; about which, ſo much of his anſwer, as is contradictory to their objections and rejoynders, wholly conſiſts. That, their fourth Principle ſeems to be bottom'd upon two grounds.

Firſt, That, whoſoever is good, and doth good, ſhall receive a preſent good reward, according to the meaſure of the good he hath done ; and, That whoſoever is wicked, and doth wickedly, ſhall be paid with preſent puniſhments, according to the meaſure of his Demerits.

Secondly, That if (at any time) a wicked man flouriſh in outward proſperity, yet his flouriſhing is very momentany, and ſuddenly (in this life) turns to, or ends in viſible judgments: And, that (if at any time) a godly man be withered with adverſity, yet his withering is very ſhort, and ſuddenly (in this life) turns to, or ends in viſible Bleſſings.

Upon theſe two Grounds or Suppoſitions, they raiſe and build their fourth Principle, from which, they three make continual Batteries upon the Innocency of Job. We may conceive the Poſition in this frame ;

That, Whoſoever is greatly afflicted, and is held long under the preſſure of his affliction, that man is to be numbered with the wicked, though no other evidence or witneſs appear or ſpeak a word againſt him. Hence,

The peculiar Opinion of Eliphaz riſes thus ; That, All the outward evils which overtake man in the courſe of this life, are the proceeds of his own ſin, and ſo from the proceſs of Gods Juſtice. He gives us this ſence, for his, in expreſs terms, chap. 4. 8. They that plow iniquity, and ſow wickedneſs, reap the ſame: Which he applies perſonally to Job (chap. 22. 5, 6.) Is not thy wickedneſs great, and thine iniquities infinite? Thou haſt taken a pledge from thy brother for nought, and ſtripped the naked of their cloathing, &c. The whole ſcope of his ſpeech bends the ſame way, and is, as if he had ſaid to Job, Though thy carriage hath been ſo plauſible among us, that we are not able to accuſe thee of ſin ; yet theſe judgments accuſe thee, and are ſufficient witneſſes againſt thee: Theſe cry out with a loud voyce, That thou haſt taken a pledge from thy brother for nought, &c. Though we have not ſeen thee act theſe ſins, yet, in theſe effects we ſee thou haſt acted them: The ſnares which are round about thee, tell us, thou haſt laid ſnares for others ; and he that runs may read how terrible, how troubleſome thou haſt been to the poor, in the terrors which have ſeiz'd thy ſpirit, and in the troubles which have ſpoiled thee of thy riches.

Bildad the Shuhite ſpeaks ſecond ; His Opinion is not ſo rigid as that of Eliphaz: He grants that afflictions may fall upon a righteous perſon ; yet ſo, that if God ſend not deliverance ſpeedily, if he reſtore him not quickly to his former eſtate and honour, then (upon the ſecond ground of the Fourth Principle) ſuch a man may be cenſured, caſt and condemned as unrighteous. That ſuch was Bildad's judgment in this caſe, is clear, chap. 8. 5, 6. If thou wert pure and upright, ſurely now he would awake for thee, and make the habitation of thy righteouſneſs proſperous; though thy beginning was ſmall, yet thy latter end ſhall greatly encreaſe. And, verſ. 20. 21. Behold God will not caſt away a perfect man, &c.

&c. till he fill thy mouth with laughing, and thy lips with rejoycing. As if he had ſaid I cannot aſſent to my Brother Eliphaz, affirming, That every man afflicted, is afflicted for his wickedneſs; I (for my part) believe, and am perſwaded, that a godly man may be afflicted for the trial and exerciſe of his Graces, &c. But, then I am aſſured, that God never lets him lie in his afflictions; for as ſoon as he cries and calls, the Lord awakes preſently, makes his habitation proſperous again, and encreaſes him more then ever. I grant, the Lord may caſt down a perfect man, but he will not (in this life) caſt him away; no, he will ſpeedily fill his mouth with laughing, and his lips with rejoycing.

Zophar, The third Deponent, differs from the two former, in this great controverſie, affirming, That the reaſon of all thoſe afflictions which preſs the children of men, is to be reſolved into the abſolute will and pleaſure of God; that we are not further to enquire about his Wiſdom, Juſtice or Mercy in diſpenſing them, his counſels being unſearchable, and his wayes paſt finding out. Thus he delivers his mind (chap. 11. 7, 8.) Canſt thou by ſearching find out God? canſt thou by ſearching find him out to perfection? It is as high as heaven, what canſt thou do? Deeper then hell, what canſt thou know? Verſe 12. Vain man would be wiſe, though man be born like a wild Aſſes colt. In the reſt of his ſpeech he comes neareſt the opinion of Bildad, verſ. 14, 15, 16. And gives out as hard thoughts of Job as either of his brethren, numbring him among the wicked, and aſſigning him the reward of an hypocrite (chap. 20. 29.) This is the portion of a wicked man from God, and the heritage appointed to him by God.

Theſe (I conceive) are the Characteriſtical opinions of Job's three friends about his Caſe. All conſiſtent with thoſe four Principles which they hold in common, all equally cloſing in the cenſure and condemnation of Job, though in ſome things diſſenting and falling off from one another.

But what thinks Job? or how doth he acquit or extricate himſelf from theſe difficulties? Very well; His ſentence is plainly this:

That the Providence of God diſpences outward proſperity and affliction ſo indifferently to good and bad, to the righteous and the wicked, that no un-erring judgment can poſſibly be made up of any mans ſpiritual eſtate by the face, and upon the view of his temporal. He declares this as his opinion, in clear, reſolute and Categorical terms (chap. 9. 22, 23.) This is one thing, therefore I ſaid it. He deſtroyeth the perfect and the wicked; if the ſcourge ſlay ſuddenly, he will laugh at the trial of the innocent. Which opinion hath no quarrel at all with any of thoſe three Principles held by Job joyntly, and in conſort with his three Friends, but only with their fourth: which he throughout refutes as heterodox and unſound in it ſelf, as uncomfortable to the ſpirits, and inconſiſtent with experiences of the Saints.

In the Strong-hold and Fort-Royal of this holy Truth, Job ſecures himſelf againſt all the Aſſaults, and ſcatters all the Objections of his Opponents; reſolving to maintain it to the very death; he will lay his bones by this Poſition, ſay his unkind friends what they can againſt him, and let the moſt wiſe God do what he pleaſes with him.

That he was a ſinner, he readily grants; that he was an hypocrite, he flatly denies.

That the Lord was righteous in all his dealings with him, he readily grants. That himſelf was unrighteous, becauſe the Lord had dealt ſo with him, he flatly denies.

How perfect ſoever he was, he confeſſes, that he needed the Free Grace and Mercies of the Lord to juſtifie him; but withal, aſſerts, that he was perfect enough to juſtifie himſelf againſt all the challenges of man.

In theſe acknowledgments of his ſinfulneſs and denials of inſincerity; in theſe humblings of himſelf before God, and acquittings of himſelf before men; in theſe implorings of mercy from the Lord, and complainings of the unkindneſs of his brethren, the ſtrength of Job's Anſwer conſiſts, and the ſpecialties of it may be ſummed up.

'Tis true, that through the extremity of his pain, the anguiſh of his ſpirit, and the provocation of his Friends, ſome unwary ſpeeches ſlipt from him; for which Elihu reproved him gravely and ſharply; of which himſelf repented ſorrowfully and heartily, all which the moſt gracious God paſſed by and pardoned freely, not imputing ſin unto him.

Thus (Chriſtian Reader) I have endeavoured (as heretofore of the whole Book, ſo now) to give a brief account concerning the Argumentative part of it; and to repreſent how far in this great Controverſie, the Anſwerer and his Objectors agree in judgment, and where they part.

If this Diſcovery adminiſter any help, as a Thred to lead your meditations through the many ſecret turnings and intricacies of this Diſpute, the labour in drawing it out, is abundantly ſatisfied. And if any further light ſubſervient to this end, ſhall be given in from the Father of Lights, that alſo in its ſeaſon may be held forth, and ſet upon a Candleſtick.

What is now received, together with the Textual Expoſitions upon this firſt undertaking between Eliphaz and Job, I leave in your hands; praying for a bleſſing from on high, to convey Truth home to every heart; deſiring earneſt prayers for the Spirit of Grace and Illumination to be powred out, according to the meaſure of the gift of Chriſt, upon April 28. 1645.

Your very Affectionate Friend and

Servant in this Work of the Lord,

JOSEPH CARYL.

AN EXPOSITION
WITH Practical Obſervations
UPON THE
FOURTH, FIFTH, SIXTH AND SEVENTH CHAPTERS
Of the Book of
JOB.

CHAP. 4. Verſ. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6.

Then Eliphaz the Temanite anſwered, and ſaid,

If we aſſay to commune with thee, wilt thou be grieved? But who can withhold himſelf from ſpeaking?

Behold, thou haſt inſtructed many, and thou haſt ſtrengthened the weak hands.

Thy words have upholden him that was falling, and thou haſt ſtrengthened the feeble knees.

But now it is come upon thee, and thou fainteſt; it toucheth thee, and thou art troubled.

Is not this thy fear, thy confidence, the uprightneſs of thy wayes, and thy hope?

JOB's complaint ended in the former Chapter; in this, a hot diſpute begins. Job having curſed his day, is now chid himſelf; and he had ſuch a chiding, as was indeed a wounding, ſuch, as almoſt at every word, drew blood; and was not only a rod upon his back, but a ſword at his heart. Job was wounded firſt by Satan, he was wounded a ſecond time by his Wife, a third time he was wounded (not as it is ſpoken in the Prophet, in the houſe of his friends, but) in his own houſe, by his friends; theſe laſt wounds are judged (by good Phyſitians in ſoul-afflictions) his deepeſt and soreſt wounds.

Then Eliphaz the Temanite anſwered, and ſaid,

Eliphaz being (as is ſuppoſed) the elder and chief of the three, firſt enters the liſt of this debate with Job; concerning whoſe name, perſon and pedigree, we have ſpoken before at the eleventh verſe of the ſecond Chapter; and therefore referring the Reader thither, for thoſe circumſtantials of the ſpeaker, I ſhall immediately deſcend unto the matter here ſpoken.

If we aſſay to commune with thee, wilt thou be grieved? &c.

The whole diſcourſe of Eliphaz may be divided into three general parts.

1. The Preface
2. The Body } of his Speech.
3. The Concluſion

The Preface of his ſpeech is contained in the ſecond verſe, If we aſſay to commune with thee, wilt thou be grieved? &c.

The body of his Speech is extended through this fourth, and to the laſt verſe of the fifth Chapter: It conſiſteth eſpecially of two members, or two ſorts of matter, in which Eliphaz deals with Job.

The firſt is reprehenſory, by way of conviction and reproof.

The ſecond is exhortatory, by way of counſel and advice.

Firſt, Eliphaz reprehends Job. This work of reprehenſion begins at the third verſe of this Chapter, and is continued to the end of the fourth verſe of the fifth Chapter. And to ſhew that he did not reprehend him upon paſſion, he grounds his reprehenſion upon reaſon, and ſtrengthens his reproof with arguments. And there are four Reaſons or ſpecial Arguments, which Eliphaz takes up to make this reprehenſion convincing; the naming of them will give light to the whole, before we come to the particulars.

The firſt Argument is contained in the words I have read, to the end of the ſixth verſe: And it is taken from the unſuitableneſs of his preſent practice, to his former precepts.

Or from the unequality of the courſe he now took under affliction, to the counſel he had given others under affliction.

His ſecond Argument beginning at the ſeventh verſe, and carried on to the twelfth, is grounded upon a ſuppoſed inequality of Gods preſent dealing with him, in reference to his former dealings with godly men.

Eliphaz thought thus, ſurely Job is an hypocrite, otherwiſe God would have dealt with him, as with an innocent; Remember (ſaith he) I pray thee, who ever periſhed being innocent? I will convince thee by all examples, by whatſoever is upon record in the hiſtory of all ages, that thou art a hypocrite, a wicked perſon; for ſee, if thou canſt find an inſtance in any Story, of an innocent perſon periſhing. That is his ſecond Argument.

His third Argument is continued from the twelfth verſe, to the end of this fourth Chapter; and that he might make the deeper impreſſion upon Job's ſpirit, he brings it in with a dreadful preamble: A viſion from God at once terrifying and inſtructing him, thus to reaſon down the pride of man. The Argument it ſelf is coucht in the ſeventeenth verſe. It is drawn from an evidence of preſumption in all ſuch as ſhall dare to implead Gods juſtice, or plead their own: as if Eliphaz had ſaid, ſurely thou art a proud and a wicked perſon; for there was never any godly man upon the face of the earth, no nor any Angel in heaven, that durſt be ſo bold with God as thou haſt been: Shall mortal man (ſaith he) be more juſt then God? ſhall a man be more pure then his maker? Behold, he put no truſt in his ſervants, and his Angels be charged with folly.

His fourth Argument begins at the fifth Chapter, and ends with the fourth verſe; and it is taken from the unlikeneſs of Job's carriage under his afflictions, to that which any of the Saints in any age of the world, did ever ſhew forth under their afflictions. He carries himſelf ſo as none of the Saints ever carried themſelves, gives an evidence againſt his Saintſhip. Call now to the Saints, either thoſe now living upon the earth, or ſearch the records concerning all the Saints that ever lived; conſider, and ſee whether thou canſt obſerve or read any parallel of thy complaints and unreaſonable expoſtulations. So much for the ſum of his convictions.

Then Eliphaz turns himſelf to admonition and exhortation in the following part of that fifth Chapter; and there are two heads of his admonitory exhortation.

Firſt, He admoniſhes him to ſeek unto God, and to call upon him, ver. 8. I would ſeek unto God, and unto God would I commit my cauſe. I give thee no other counſel then I would take my ſelf. If I were in thy caſe, I would not ſtand thus complaining and curſing my day, but this I would do, I would ſeek unto God, and unto God would I commit my cauſe. This admonition is enforced by divers Arguments, to ver. 17.

The ſecond head of his exhortation beginneth at ver. 17. and it is to prevail with him, patiently to bear, and quietly to accept his affliction or the puniſhment of his iniquity; in purſuance of this, he ſhews him many benefits and bleſſings, attending thoſe who graciouſly comply with the correcting hand of God upon them. Behold (ſaith he, ver. 17.) happy is the man whom God correcteth; therefore deſpiſe not thou the chaſtening of the Almighty; he concludeth all from his certain knowledge, and infallible experience of what he had ſaid (ver. 27.) Lo this, we have ſearched it, ſo it is; back'd with a warranty, that if he obey, his own experience ſhall quickly teach him this truth; Hear it, and know thou it for thy good.

So much concerning the Diviſion or Parts of this firſt Speech or Diſpute made by Eliphaz, in anſwer to the former complaint, poured out by Job againſt the day of his birth, and the night of his conception, in chap. 3.

The ſix verſes (lately read) contain (as I ſaid before) the firſt Argument, we have the Preface in the ſecond verſe, and the Argument it ſelf in the four following. The point which Eliphaz deſires to prove and clear is this; that Job was guilty of hypocriſie, of cloſe hypocriſie at the leaſt, if not of groſs hypocriſie. The Medium or reaſon by which he would prove it, is the unſuitableneſs of his preſent practice, to his former Doctrine. His actions under ſufferings contradict what himſelf had taught other ſufferers: And this ſpeaks him guilty. The Argument may be thus formed.

> That mans Religion is but vain, and his profeſſion hypocritical, who having comforted others in, and taught them patience under affliction, is himſelf (being afflicted) comfortleſs and impatient.
>
> But Job, thus it is with thee; thou haſt been a man very forward to comfort others, and teach them patience, yet now thou art comfortleſs and impatient:
>
> Therefore thy Religion is vain, and thy Profeſſion hypocritical.

Is not this thy fear? Here is a goodly Religion indeed, a proper piece of profeſſion; and ſuch is thine, this is all thou art able to make out. Thus you have the Logical ſtrength of the Argument contained in the words. We ſhall now examine them in the Grammatical ſence of every part, as they lie here in order. And firſt, for the Preface.

If we aſſay to commune with thee, wilt thou be grieved? but who can withhold himſelf from ſpeaking?

The words import, as if Eliphaz had ſaid thus unto Job; we thy friends have all this while ſtood ſilent, we have given thee full liberty and ſcope to ſpeak out all that was in thy heart; let it not grieve thee, if we now take liberty to ſpeak our ſelves: and indeed a neceſſity lies upon us to ſpeak. Two things Eliphaz puts into this Preface, whereby he labours to prepare the mind of Job, readily to hear and receive what he had to ſay unto him.

Firſt, He tells him that he ſpeaks out of good-will, and as a friend to him. If we aſſay to commune with thee, wilt thou be grieved? Pray do not take it ill, we mean you no harm, we would but give you faithful counſel, we ſpeak from our hearts, not from our ſpleen, we ſpeak from love to thee, let it not be thy grief.

Secondly, He ſhews that he was neceſſitated to ſpeak; as love provokes, ſo neceſſity conſtrains; Who can withhold himſelf from ſpeaking? Either of theſe conſiderations is enough to unlock both ear and heart to take in wholeſom counſel. What ear, what heart will not the golden key of love, or the iron key of neceſſity open to inſtruction? When a friend ſpeakes, and he ſpeaks as bound, when kindneſs and duty mix in conference, how powerful!

If we aſſay,] or try. The word ſignifies properly to tempt, either for good or evil; and becauſe in temptation, an aſſay or experiment is made of man, how bad or how good he is; therefore the word is applied to any aſſaying or experimenting of things or perſons. This very word is winning and gaining upon Job. We will but try a little if we can do thee any good, or bring lenitives to thy ſorrows, we will not be burthenſom or tedious; we will but aſſay to commune with thee. The word notes ſerious ſpeaking. The place where God communed with his people, in giving anſwers from Heaven, is expreſſed by this word, 1 King. 6. 19. The Oracle he prepared in the houſe within, &c. or the communing-place where God ſpake.

נסה Tentavit in bonum vel in malum, periculum fecit, expertus eſt.

winning

דביר Adytum quaſi Oraculum vel loquutorium dictum, quod Deus inde reſponſa daret.

להה Feſſus corpore vel animo, inſanivit, furiit.

Wilt thou be grieved?] The word ſignifies to be extreamly wearied even unto rage or fainting. Here Eliphaz ſeems to hint at Job's former diſtempered ſpeeches. If we ſpeak, wilt thou promiſe us not to fall into ſuch a fit of paſſion as even now thou waſt in. And yet whatſoever comes of it, or howſoever thou takeſt it, I muſt diſcharge my duty and my conſcience: Therefore he adds,

Who can withhold himſelf from ſpeaking?] That is, no man can withhold himſelf from ſpeaking in ſuch a caſe as this: To hear thee ſpeak thus, would even make a dumb man ſpeak. Chriſt ſaith in the Goſpel, If theſe ſhould hold their peace, the ſtones would cry; there is ſuch a ſence in theſe words: If we thy friends ſhould hold our peace, when thou ſpeakeſt thus, the very ſtones would cry out againſt thee for ſpeaking, and againſt us for holding our peace. The Hebrew word tranſlated withhold, ſignifies to ſhut up a thing ſo as that it cannot come out: It is applyed to the locking up of the Clouds that they rain not; to the holding in of fire that it cannot break forth, Jer. 20. 9. where the Prophet very elegantly fits it to the reſtraining of ſpeech, which is the very point in hand. His word was in my heart as a burning fire was ſhut up in my bones, I was weary with forbearing. So it implies, that the friends of Job had as it were a fire in their boſoms, which they could no longer reſtrain, they were as clouds full of water, full of dew and rain; they were not able to ſuſpend themſelves from diſſolving and ſhowring upon Job, both reproof and counſel, adviſes and exhortations. We may Obſerve from this Preamble,

עצר Clauſit, coercuit. 1 King. 8. 35

That, it is wiſdom to ſweeten reproof with friendly inſinuation.

Gal. 6. 1.

Reproof is a bitter Pill; it is a wholſom yet a bitter Pill, and there is need to wrap it up in Gold and Suger, that pleaſing both eye and palat it may be taken down the better. It is the Apoſtles counſel to his Galathians, Brethren, if a man be overtaken with a fault, ye that are ſpiritual reſtore ſuch an one in the ſpirit of meekneſs. The word reſtore, is an alluſion to the Art of Chyrurgery, in ſetting a bone out of joynt; ſoft words and a ſoft hand fit the Patients mind to endure that painful operation. By falls into ſin, the ſoul breaks or disjoynts a bone; he that will ſet ſuch a mind muſt handle it gently. We may obſerve the holy skill of ſome of the Saints in prayer, preparing God for receiving of Petitions, by Prefaces and humble Inſinuations (as it were) getting within him. Thus did Abraham, Gen. 18. when he prayed for Sodom, Let not my Lord be angry, if I, who am but duſt and aſhes, ſpeak unto thee. There is ſuch a ſpiritual art in winding a reproof into the boſom and ſpirit of a man, Let it not trouble thee that I thus ſpeak, take my words in good part, If we aſſay to commune with thee, wilt thou be grieved?

Secondly Obſerve, That, it is no eaſie thing to bear reproof.

To take a reproof well, is as high a point of ſpiritual wiſdom, as to give it well. When we reprove the ſin, we ſhould love the man; but there are few men who can love their reprovers. You know what is ſaid in the Prophet, They hate him that reproveth in the gate. Reproofs are uſually entertained with hatred, and ill taken by evil perſons; reproof is not alwayes taken in good part, by thoſe who are good. It is but need to have ſome way made for its due entertainment, by the beſt tempered ſpirits. Wilt thou be grieved? it may be weariſom and troubleſom unto thee, but I pray let it not.

Thirdly Obſerve from the Preface, That, in ſome caſes it is our duty to ſpeak and reprove, whether men are troubled or no.

How ſhould I be pleaſed, if thou wouldeſt receive my ſpeech in good part? but I cannot withhold my ſelf from ſpeaking, though thou art diſpleaſed; take it how you will, I muſt ſpeak, theſe reproofs muſt out. When we ſee plainly, that God is diſhonoured, and that the ſoul of our brother is greatly endangered, we muſt then ſpeak (as God chargeth the Prophet) whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear. In ſuch caſes we muſt adventure to ſave men by fear, plucking them out of the fire.

Jude 23.

Laſtly Obſerve, That, when the heart is full, it is a very hard thing, not to give it vent at the lips by ſpeaking.

When the heart is full of matter, the tongue will be full of words; the tongue muſt bring forth the treaſures that are laid up in the heart: Who (ſaith Eliphaz) can withhold himſelf from ſpeaking? The Prophet Jeremiah, Chap. 20. 9. thought to ſtifle the meſſage of God in his heart, I ſaid I will not make mention of him, nor ſpeak any more in his name: he began to take up a reſolution to withhold himſelf from ſpeaking; but (ſaith he) his word was in mine heart as a burning fire ſhut up in my bones, and I was weary with forbearing, and I could not ſtay, I could not hold it any longer. So the Apoſtles, Act. 4. 19. We cannot but ſpeak that which we have heard and ſeen, it is impoſſible for us, the Lord hath ſpoken, who can but propheſie? that is, who can withhold himſelf from propheſying when once the Lord bids him ſpeak. Words are the conceptions of our minds; and when our thoughts are form'd and organized, as it were, and grown to perfection, when thoſe children come to the birth, a little ſtrength will bring them forth: Or rather, great ſtrength cannot keep them from being brought forth. It is as poſſible for her that is with child to withhold the birth, as it is for thoſe that have pregnant conceptions, or an errand from God, to withhold themſelves from ſpeaking. When David kept ſilence (it is a ſtrange connexion) he roared, Pſal. 32. 3. When he held his peace from good, his ſorrow was ſtirred, Pſal. 39. 2. Pangs took hold on him as upon a woman in travel, which made him roar. His heart waxt hot, and the fire burned, till he ſpake with his tongue. He was then delivered. Our Engliſh phraſe of Delivering a mans mind, may hit this ſenſe well. Their hearts are barren, whoſe mouths are always ſhut. Who can withhold himſelf from ſpeaking?

Amos 3. 8.

But what is it that he could not forbear? He could not forbear to tell him, that (as he ſuppoſed) he acted againſt his own principles.

Behold thou haſt inſtructed many, and thou haſt ſtrengthened the weak hands, &c.

Ecce doctorē egregiū! Ecce medicū aliorum qui ſeipsō curare neſciat.

Behold,] This word is ſometime uſed in a way of deriſion, as Gen. 3. 22. where God ſaith concerning Adam, Behold the man is become as one of us, do you not ſee what a God he is? how like a God he looks? ſo, Behold thou haſt inſtructed many, (ſome make that the ſenſe) ſee now your great Teacher, your learned Doctor; he that hath been ſo forward and buſie in teaching others, ſee in what diſorder, how uncompoſed he is himſelf: he would needs Phyſick his neighbours, but knows not how to cure his own diſtempers.

But rather take it by way of aſſeveration, Behold, as if he ſhould ſay, This is a thing clear and certain, all that are about thee, can witneſs it; that thou haſt inſtructed many, and that thou haſt ſtrengthened the weak hands. But how art thou changed? thou art not like the man thou waſt.

Here are four ſpecial acts of ſpiritual Charity, ſo we may call and diſtinguiſh them. Firſt, inſtructing of the ignorant; ſecondly, encouraging of the weak and ſlothful; thirdly, ſupporting of thoſe that are ready to fall; and fourthly, comforting thoſe that are ready to faint. In theſe four duties Job had been very converſant. 1. Inſtruction of the ignorant, Behold thou haſt inſtructed many. 2. Encouragement of the weak and ſloathful, Thou haſt ſtrengthened the weak hands. 3. Supportation of the weak, Thy words have upholden him that was falling. 4. Conſolation of thoſe who were ready to faint, Thou haſt ſtrengthened the feeble knees.

1 Indoctos docere.
2 Torpentes excitare.
3 Labentes erigere.
4 Mœſtos conſolari.
2 Tim. 3. 15

Here you ſee the four uſes which Job made in his counſels; Firſt, of Inſtruction; Secondly, of Exhortation; Thirdly, of Admonition; Fourthly, of Conſolation: Job was a perfect Preacher, he applies the word to all the ſervices and ends of it, reſpecting the ſeveral conditions, tempers or diſtempers of thoſe with whom he had to do.

Further, ſome take the three latter to be but as explications or branches of the firſt; Behold thou haſt inſtructed many, namely, concerning the nature of afflictions, and their duty in the bearing affliction; yea, thou haſt inſtructed them ſo far, that thou haſt ſtrengthned the weak hands, upholden thoſe that were falling, and ſtrengthned the feeble knees.

I come now to the opening of the ſeveral expreſſions.

יסר Erudivit, caſtigavit ut patres & præceptores ſolent pueros. Reſpondet Græcorum παιδεύειν docere verbis & verberibus.

Thou haſt inſtructed many.] The word which we tranſlate inſtructed, ſignifieth both to correct and to teach; and the Hebrews give the reaſon of it, becauſe uſually with inſtruction correction is joyned; and ſo the ſame Greek word ſignifies both to teach and to chaſten: As there is a voyce of the Rod, inſtruction in correction; ſo a Rod ſometimes goes with the voyce, correction is helpful to inſtruction: In either or both the ſences we may underſtand it here, thou haſt inſtructed many, thou haſt taught and directed, thou haſt (where need was) chaſtned and corrected many.

Many.] We have heard in the firſt Chapter, that Job prayed for his children, for his Sons and Daughters; but now we ſee Job's piety extended further then his own children. Yea, the word may well be carried out beyond his own Family. He prayed for his children, and not only did he pray for them, but alſo teach and inſtruct them; and not only them but others, he inlarges his School, he inſtructs many, it is an indefinite word, a word of number without a number. Job's School of holy diſcipline was a large one, he ſet up his School where ever he came; he was an univerſal Teacher, an Apoſtle of the holy World; thou haſt inſtructed many.

And thou haſt ſtrengthned the weak hands.

רפה Debilis, laxus, hinc Rephaim ſignificat mortuos, ex eo quod in illis omne robur & vires naturales elanguerunt. Manus laſſæ & dejecta brachia pertinent ad habitum aut molliter aut ſegniter ambulantis, aut currere non valentis. E contra vero adducere brachia, manus comprimere, fortiter jactare cubitos ſtrenuè currentis eſt.

The word ſignifies, Remiſs hands, or the hands that hang down, looſe and lax. Hence by a Metaphor it notes one, that is negligent or idle; a man with his hands hanging down and his arms looſe, is the emblem of idleneſs or of ſadneſs. Thou haſt ſtrengthned the weak hands, that is, thoſe that were idle or grieved, negligent or dejected. Hence the word (Rephaim) is uſed, to ſignifie thoſe that are dead; and the reaſon is, becauſe all ſtrength, natural vigour and activity depart when life departeth: Giants alſo are expreſſed in the Hebrew by this word, becauſe they are ſuch dreadful perſons, that their very aſpect or ſight terrifies the ſpirit, makes the hands hang down, and the knees of beholders feeble; they called thoſe mighty men, weak, from that effect wrought upon others, becauſe they made others weak and terrible at their approaches. Hence, when Goliah the Giant challenged and defied the Hoſt of Iſrael, it is ſaid, that all the men of Iſrael, when they ſaw the man, fled from him, or fled from his face, (he overcame them with his looks) and were ſore afraid, 1 Sam. 17. 24.

This weakneſs of hands (as we find inſtanc'd in Scripture) ariſes four wayes. Firſt, from ſloath and idleneſs (as we noted before) ſome have ſtrong heads, but they have weak hands; they are ſufficiently inſtructed, but they cannot act, or they are unactive, and an unactive man is a weak-handed man.

Secondly, Weakneſs of the hands cometh from fear; and ſo that phraſe, to ſtrengthen the hands, notes incouraging of a perſon, as Zech. 8. 9, 13. Fear not, let thy hand be ſtrong, that is, let not fear weaken thy hands: and Jer. 38. 4. the Princes came to the King and beg'd of him that Jeremiah might be put to death; and they give the reaſon from this, For (ſay they) he weakens the hands of the men of war that remaine in the City, and the hands of all the people; that is, he diſcourages them, makes them believe they ſhall never be able to ſtand out againſt the King of Babylon, but that he ſhall certainly take the City; this is called weakning of the hands: So Iſa. 35. 3. Strengthen ye the weak hands, and confirm the feeble knees; ſay to them that are of a fearful heart, be ſtrong, fear not. So ye ſee weakneſs of the hands is cauſed by fear; when the bands of the heart are diſſolved (as it were) and looſened by fear, the hand muſt needs be diſſolved and looſened from labour; the hand is not able to work at all when fear works much upon the heart.

Thirdly, Weakneſs of the hands ariſeth from irreſolution, when a man is not reſolved what to do, not ſetled upon a buſineſs, then his hands are weak. Hence it was the counſel of Achitophel to Abſolom, that he ſhould go up upon the houſe top, in the ſight of all Iſrael, and abuſe his Fathers Concubines; and he gives the reaſon of it, then (ſaith he) ſhall the hands of all that are with thee be ſtrong; his meaning is, then they will be ſo reſolved to ſtick to thee, that they will do their utmoſt; he grounds his counſel upon the preſent irreſolution of the people, he doubted whether Abſaloms party would adhere cordially to him or no, therefore (ſaith he) do an act which may render thy ſelf and all that are with thee irreconcileable to the King; this will unite them to thee, and their hands will be ſtrong. If once they be out of hope to be receiv'd into the Kings favour, thou mayſt be out of fear that they will return to the Kings obedience. In any lawful and good deſign it is beſt to raiſe up reſolution, and ingage it to the higheſt. Where the heart is ſtrongly reſolved, the hands will act ſtrongly. The reaſon why men are ſlow and dull in great undertakings, is, becauſe they are off and on, full of neutrality and indifferency, in what they undertake. Unſettled ſpirits can never ſettle actions. A double minded man is unſtable (and weak-handed) in all his wayes.

2 Sam. 16. 21.

James 1. 8.

Laſtly, There is a weakneſs of the hands (which is I conceive moſt proper to this place) ariſing from ſorrow and grief; from the weight and burthen of affliction, or from a ſudden ſurpriſe of trouble. As it is ſaid of Balteſhazzar (Dan. 5. 6.) who ſeeing the hand-writing upon the plaiſter of the wall, preſently changed countenance, and his thoughts troubled him, ſo that the joynts of his loyns were looſed, and his knees ſmote one againſt another.

Thou haſt ſtrengthned the weak hands.] That is, thoſe, whoſe hands are weak by reaſon of manifold tryals and tribulations: thou haſt ſpoken words to them, which have been as ſinews to their hands, and ſtrength unto their joynts. In this ſence the Apoſtle uſes both the expreſſions of the Text, Heb. 12. 6. where having treated about the nature of afflictions, together with the fruit and benefit of them, he concludes thus, wherefore lift up the hands which hang down, and the feeble knees; as if he ſhould ſay, it is probable that affliction hath made your hands hang down, that ſorrow and grief have looſened your ſpirits and your loyns too, therefore now be of good cheer, lift up your hands that hang down, and the feeble knees. This Symptom or effect of ſorrow is elegantly deſcribed, Ezek. 7. 17. where the Prophet having ſhewed that many ſhould mourn, as Doves of the Valleys, adds, all hands ſhall be feeble, and all knees ſhall be weak as water.

Columbis pro cantu gemitus eſt & in amœnum murmur. Sanct. in Ezek. cap. 7.

Thy words have upheld him that was falling.] Some afflictions lie ſo hard and heavy upon us, that they do not only weaken, but caſt down: Job ſtood ready to uphold ſuch as was ready to fall. Timely advice may catch a man before he is quite down, and prevent his fall.

from כושל כשל Impingere, & quod ſæpe conſequitur, ruere cadere.

The word which we tranſlate falling, ſignifies in its firſt ſence, to ſtumble or ſtrike the foot againſt a thing, and ſo it is put for that which is the conſequent of ſtumbling, falling: he that ſtrikes his foot, or ſtumbles at a thing, is in danger of a fall. So Iſa. 40. 30. The young men ſhall utterly fall, it is this word, but doubled, falling they ſhall fall, that is, they ſhall utterly fall. There is a threefold falling mentioned in Scripture.

ἐν τινι παραπτώματι Præcipuè ſignificat peccata actualia, à παρὰ & πίπτω, ad verbum præter cadere, cum ſcil. ultra rectam juſtitiæ lineam cadimus, ac erratis etiam levioribus uſurpatur, παρὰ in compoſitione minuit ſenſum.

1. There is a falling into ſin, Gal. 6. 1. If a man be overtaken in a fault: that word (like this Hebrew in the Text) ſignifies, a fall taken by ſtumbling or by tripping upon any thing that lies in the way. In this ſence we underſtand the fall of Adam, the fall of Angels, and the falls of the Saints.

2. There is a falling into affliction, a falling into trouble: So Prov. 24. 16. The juſt man falleth ſeven times a day, that is, he meets affliction at every turn, he falls into trouble almoſt at every ſtep. Seven times a day is very often in the day, or often every day.

3. There is a falling under trouble. And of perſons falling ſo, we are chiefly to underſtand this Text. Many fall into trouble, who yet (through the ſtrength of Chriſt) ſtand firmly under trouble. Others no ſooner fall in, but they fall under it. The ſhoulders of ſome are not able to bear a light affliction, and the afflictions of others are ſo heavy that no ſhoulders are able to bear them; the back breaks, the ſpirit ſinks under the load.

To ſuch as theſe Job lent his hand, his ſhoulders: his counſel was as a ſtaff in their hands, as ligaments to their loyns and knees. Job was well ſkil'd in ſetting props and buttreſſes of holy advice to ſuch tottering ſouls. Thou haſt upheld him that was falling. We may take the words in all or either of theſe three interpretations, yet moſt properly of the latter.

ברך Genu quod flecti ſolet in Benedictionibus & ſalutationibus.

Thou haſt ſtrengthned the feeble knees.] The Hebrew word for a knee, ſignifieth (in the root) to bleſs or to pray, becauſe in bleſſing and praying for one, or in ſaluting, we uſe to bow the knee. And here, what we tranſlate the feeble knees, is word for word, the bowing knees; becauſe when knees bow and buckle, or double under us, it proceeds from weakneſs and feebleneſs: hence the bowing knee is called the feeble knee, Dan. 6. 5. it is ſaid of Belſhazzar, his knees ſmote one againſt another; he fainted, his ſpirits ſank within him, when his knees (as a Symptom of his fear) beat one againſt another. The hanging down of hands, notes a kind of deſpair in regard of preſent evils: and feeble quaking knees, ſeem to refer to ſome expected evil. Taking the words with that difference, Job's work of love appears more full; he not only upheld in preſent troubles, but labour'd to ſtrengthen againſt ſuch as were to come. Thou haſt inſtructed many, and inſtructed them many, even all theſe wayes. We may Note, διδάκτικος.

First, That, to teach, inſtruct and comfort others, is not only a mans duty, but his praiſe.

For here Eliphaz ſpeaks it in a way of commendation, though with an intent to ground a reproof upon it. Job himſelf ſpeaks of what he had done in that kind, as a defence of his own innocence, Chap. 29. Verſ. 21, &c. Unto me men gave ear and waited, and kept ſilence at my counſel: after my words they ſpake not again, and my ſpeech dropped upon them, and they waited for me as for the rain, and they opened their mouth wide, as for the latter rain. This was his practiſe, and this was the praiſe of Job. That which the Apoſtle ſpeaks as a ſpecial qualification or gift of a Biſhop, 1 Tim. 3. 2. is an excellent, a noble qualification in any perſon, of what rank or degree ſoever, to be apt to teach.

Secondly, Conſider who Job was; he was a holy man, one that had much acquaintance and communion with God. Now though his friends miſtook what was in his heart, yet they hit right upon his practiſe; and we knowing both what his heart was, by the teſtimony of God: and what his practiſe was, from the teſtimony of men, may ground a ſecond point upon it.

That, ſuch as know God in truth and holineſs, are very ready to communicate the knowledge of God unto others.

They who know God themſelves, are deſirous that others ſhould know God too. David (Pſal. 51. 13.) promiſeth and profeſſeth, that he would communicate his experiences of Gods love, in pardoning his ſin, when he had taſted the ſweetneſs of a pardon. Then will I teach tranſgreſſors thy ways, and ſinners ſhall be converted unto thee: when my heart hath learned more of God, others ſhall learn more of God from my mouth. This is ſpiritual charity, and it is the moſt excellent and nobleſt charity of all. Charity to the ſoul is the ſoul of charity; charity to the better part, is the beſt charity. In this ſence alſo, Job was eyes to the blind, and feet to the lame, by guiding them to ſee, and by directing their feet to walk, in the wayes of God. To give knowledge is better then to give gold. Inſtruction is the higheſt alms.

Quæ autem eſt certior eleemoſyna, quod majus opus miſericordiæ, quã docere rudes ſegnes ad bene agendũ extimulare, labentem erigere, mæſtos conſolori.
Job 29. 15.

Thirdly, If we conſider Job (of whom all this is affirmed) as he was a great rich man, we may Note thus much.

That, honourable and great men, loſe nothing of their honour and greatneſs by deſcending to the inſtruction of others, though their inferiors.

Some think it belongs only unto Miniſters to inſtruct: What wee inſtruct? They reſent it as a diſparagement: they truſt out that work wholly into the hands of others. Where ſhall we find an Abraham (a great Prince in his time) of whom God gave this Teſtimony, I know him that he will command his children, &c. and they ſhall keep the way of the Lord: and becauſe he was willing to teach others, God condeſcends to teach him: Shall I hide from Abraham that thing which I do. They receive moſt knowledge, who are moſt ready to impart it. And we find before this, Abraham ſo ſucceſsful in teaching, that he had an Army of Scholars in his houſe. The Text ſaith, when he prepar'd for that expedition to reſcue his Nephew Lot, that he armed three hundred and eighteen of his trained, catechized, or inſtructed ſervants. The word ſignifies to train in the principles of Religion, as well as in the poſtures of war: being the ſame word uſed in the Book of Proverbs, for teaching a child the firſt elements of holy knowledge. And that place of Geneſis may very well comprehend both.

Gen. 18. 17, 18, 19.

חניכיו: Gen. 14. 14. Prov. 22. 6

Fourthly Obſerve, That, charity, eſpecially ſpiritual charity, is very liberal and open-hearted.

Job inſtructed not only his own, but he inſtructed others, he inſtructed many; he did not confine his doctrine and his advice to his own walls, but the ſound thereof went whereſoever he went: he inſtructed many. And if Job who had no ſpecial, no direct calling to it, were a teacher of many: what ſhall we think of thoſe, whoſe calling and buſineſs it is to teach, and yet teach not any at all? their trade, their profeſſion is to teach, yet they are ſo far from teaching that they teach none, and which is worſe, they hinder teaching: they ſtop the mouth of the teacher, and (if they can) the ear of the learner, they take away the key of knowledge. They neither open the door themſelves, nor ſuffer thoſe that wonld. This is the very ſpirit of wickedneſs.

Further, Taking thoſe other parts of his inſtruction, as they reſpect perſons afflicted, who are here deſcribed by weak hands and feeble knees, ready to fall, unable to ſtand.

Obſerve firſt, That, ſore afflictions do exceedingly indiſpoſe for duty.

Sore afflictions make weak hands and feeble knees: the weak hand and the feeble knee, are (as I ſaid before) emblems of one unfit for any buſineſs; unfit to work, unfit to walk: when the hand is weak and the knee is feeble, what is a man fit for? Great ſufferings unfit us for action. Hence it is that the Lord moderates the afflictions of his people, ſweetens the bitterneſs, and takes off the oppreſſing weight of them. God promiſeth to come with reviving, and that he will not contend for ever with his people. Why? A principal reaſon is, Leſt their ſpirits ſhould fail before me, and the ſouls which I have made. Leſt the ſpirit ſhould fail; that is, leſt they ſhould fail in their duties: the ſpirit cannot fail in the eſſence of it, the ſpirit is of an eternal conſtitution; but it faileth in the duty often. And if afflictions lie too hard and too long upon a people, their ſpirits fail, their faith fails, their courage fails, their labors cannot be laborious, to carry on and carry out their work. Therefore when Job ſaw any under afflictions, he endeavour'd to put courage into their hearts, and ſo ſtrength into their hands.

Iſa. 57. 16.

Secondly, In the general we may Note further,

That, the words of the wiſe have a mighty power, ſtrength, and prevalency in them.

You ſee how efficacious the words of Job were. Job's inſtructions were ſtrengthnings: thou haſt ſtrengthned the weak hands and feeble knees; his words were as ſtays to hold them up that were ready to fall: Eliphaz doth not only ſay, thou didſt inſtruct many, and in inſtructing thou didſt intend, it was thy deſign and aim to ſtrengthen the weak hands, but he ſpeaks of what Job had effected and wrought; thy words put ſinews into the hands and knees of men that were weak and ready to fall, thy words were as props to hold and bear up the ſpirits of thoſe that were ſinking. Words wiſely diſpenſed and followed, with the bleſſing of God, what can they not do? God doth the greateſt things in the world by a word ſpeaking. As at the firſt he made the World it ſelf by a word ſpeaking: ſo he hath done the greateſt things, and wrought the greateſt changes in the world, by a word ſpeaking. When a word goes forth clothed with the authority and power of God, it works wonders. How hath it raiſed up ſinking ſpirits? How hath it made the fearful, undaunted; and the weak-hearted, couragious? God by his Word in the mouth of a weak man overthrows the ſtrong holds of ſin, and by a word brings every thought of man into ſubjection to Jeſus Chriſt. By a word he ſtops the mouth of blaſphemy and evil ſpeaking; by a word ſpeaking, he makes a man deny himſelf; by a word he opens the eyes of the blind, and makes the lame to run and leap like a Hart, in the way of holineſs.

2 Cor. 10. 4, 5.

And I could wiſh that the word which I now ſpeak, might (through the bleſſing of God) have ſuch an effect upon your ſpirits. O that it might ſtrengthen all weak hands and feeble knees! O that it might uphold all who are ready to fall! we are caſt upon knee-feebling, hand-weakning, yea, heart-weakning times: The ſight of thoſe things which our eyes do ſee, and the hearing of thoſe things which our ears do hear, cauſe many to fear, and the ſpirits of ſome to fall. Now a word inveſted with commiſſion from God, to go and comfort, will maſter all our ſorrows, and diſpel all theſe fears. If the Lord breath upon a word, that word will breath lively activity into a very carkaſs. Look to thoſe many and gracious promiſes made to thoſe that mourn, and comfort will flow in. Promiſes are the treaſures of comfort; promiſes hold the Churches ſtock, they are the patrimony of believers; it is their priviledge and their honour, to be called heirs of the promiſe. While Chriſt and the promiſe lives, how can faith die or languiſh, eying a promiſe?

Heb. 6. 17.

So much of the firſt branch of the minor propoſition, in the third and fourth verſes.

The ſecond branch lies in the fifth verſe.

Now it is come upon thee, and thou fainteſt; it toucheth thee, and thou art troubled.

Thou haſt inſtructed many, thou haſt ſtrengthened the weak hands, &c. But now it is come upon thee, &c. That is, trouble and affliction are come upon thee.

להה

Laſſus fuit corpore vel animo, præ laſſitudine neſcivit quod ageret.

And thou fainteſt.] The word ſignifies an extraordinary fainting; when a man is ſo wearied and ſpent, that he knows not what he doth, when his reaſon ſeems tired, as much as his ſtrength. So that the words, Now it is come upon thee, thou fainteſt, may import thus much; thou art in ſuch a caſe, that thou ſeemeſt to be beſides thy ſelf, thou knoweſt not what thou doſt, thou ſpeakeſt thou knoweſt not what. The word is tranſlated in the firſt verſe, by grieved; in other Scriptures, by mad and furious (Prov. 26. 18.) As a mad man who caſteth firebrands, &c. And whereas we ſay (Gen. 47. 13.) The Land of Egypt fainted by reaſon of the famine, many render it, The Land of Egypt was enraged or mad, becauſe of the famine. Want of bread turns to want of reaſon; famine diſtracts. The Egyptians were ſo extreamly pinched with hunger, that it did even take away their wits from them; and ſcarcity of food for their bodies, made a dearth in their underſtandings. So there is this force in the word, Thou who haſt given ſuch grave and wiſe inſtruction unto others, from thoſe higher principles of grace, now it is come upon thee, thou art even as a mad man, as a man diſtracted, not able to act by the common principles of reaſon.

Inſanivit terra Ægypti, nam propter famem nimiam inſanit homo. Furebat terra, i.e. tumultuabantur anno quinto famis mentem illis adimente fame. Jun. in loc.

It toucheth thee.] It is the ſame word which we opened before; the Devil deſired that he might but touch Job; now his friend telleth him he is touched.

בהל

And thou art troubled.] That word alſo hath a great emphaſis in it. It ſignifies a vehement amazed trouble; as in that place (1 Sam. 28. 21.) where, when the woman, the witch of Endor, had raiſed up Samuel (in appearance) as Saul deſired, the Text ſaith, that when all was ended, ſhe came unto Saul, and ſhe ſaw he was ſore troubled: think what trouble might fall upon a man in ſuch a condition as Saul was in, after this acquaintance with the viſions of hell; think what a deep aſtoniſhment of ſpirit ſeized upon him, ſuch diſorder of mind this word layes upon Job: Now it toucheth thee, and thou art troubled. Hence obſerve, Firſt, To commend a man with a But, is a wound inſtead of a commendation.

Thou haſt inſtructed many, But, &c How many are there who ſalute their friends very fair to their faces, or ſpeak them very fair behind their backs, yet ſuddenly (as Joab to Amaſa) draw out this ſecret dagger, and ſtab their honour and honeſty to the heart. As it is ſaid of Naaman, 2 Kings 5. 1. He was an honourable man, and a mighty man of valour, but he was a Leper, &c. So, &c.

Secondly, Obſerve, Great afflictions may diſturb the very ſeat of reaſon, and leave a Saint, in ſome acts, below a man.

Some acts of holineſs repreſent the Saints as mad-men to carnal men. So Paul appeared to Feſtus, and ſo to many of his Corinthians, 2 Cor. 5. 13. For whether we be beſides our ſelves, it is to God. Workings of Grace are ſometimes ſo far above reaſon, that they ſeem to be without reaſon. So ſome acts of infirmity repreſent the Saints, to carnal men, as mad-men. A gracious man works ſo much below reaſon ſometimes, that he ſeems to be without reaſon.

Thirdly, Note, That, When we ſee any doing ill, it is good to mind him of the good which he hath done.

Eliphaz ſaw Job fainting, enraged as a mad-man, or as a man aſtoniſhed; he tells him of the wiſe and grave counſel and inſtruction he had given before: conſider what thou haſt done. As in the Revelation, Chriſt ſpeaks to the Church of Epheſus, (Rev. 2. 5.) Remember from whence thou art fallen, and do thy firſt works; when the Church did ill, then he tells her what ſhe had formerly done well. So the Apoſtle, Ye did run well; having begun in the ſpirit, will ye end in the fleſh? When he ſaw them run upon fleſhly Ceremonies and Ordinances, ye began in the ſpirit (ſaith he) conſider that, and end as ye began. As in diſpute and reaſoning, a falſe concluſion cannot be derived from true premiſes, ſo neither can it in practice, or in living. Holy premiſes conclude in holineſs. He never began well, that ends ill.

Fourthly, Obſerve, That, The good we have done, is a kind of reproach to us, when we do the contrary evil.

When a mans latter actions contradict his former, or when his actions contradict his profeſſions, the former good is a ſtain or blemiſh to him. It had been better for them not to have known the way of righteouſneſs, then after they have known it, to turn from the holy Commandment given unto them.

2 Pet. 2. 2

Further, take this likewiſe, It is an eaſier matter to inſtruct others in trouble, then to be inſtructed, or take inſtruction our ſelves in our own troubles.

Even Job, holy Job could give thoſe counſels of patience, and meekneſs, and quietneſs under the hand of God, which he could not follow to the full, when it fell upon himſelf. For though he did not fail to that height, which Eliphaz implieth in this reproof, yet fail he did. He had ſet others a Copie, which he could not write by, or imitate, when his own turn came. A good man may quickly give counſel, above his own ſtrength to practiſe.

Laſtly, Obſerve, It is a ſhame for us to teach others the right way, and to go in the wrong our ſelves.

Eliphaz ſeeks to ſhame and convince Job upon this very ground; thou haſt done thus and thus, thou haſt taught others patience, and thou art mad thy ſelf: art thou not aſhamed to complain and cry out of thy afflictions, when thou haſt bid others be quiet and chearful under them? It is an excellent thing, when our words are made viſible by our actions; as he ſaid in the Church ſtory, The faith which is ſeen, is a great deal better then the faith which is heard; ſo we may ſay in another kind, the wiſdom which is ſeen in bearing of affliction, is far better then the wiſdom which is heard. Phyſitian, heal thy ſelf. He ſaved others, himſelf he cannot ſave, ſay the Jews to Chriſt. Man may juſtly be reproved with, thou teacheſt others, thy ſelf thou canſt not teach. When the ſame fault which we reprehend in others, may be reprehended in our ſelves, our fault is doubled, and the act is not only ſinful, but ſhameful. The Apoſtle convinces the Jews mightily by this argument, Rom. 2. 19. Thou art confident that thou thy ſelf art a guide of the blind, a light of them which are in darkneſs, an inſtructer of the fooliſh, &c. Thou takeſt upon thee all this; thou therefore (ſaith he) that teacheſt another, teacheſt thou thy ſelf? Thou that preacheſt a man ſhould not ſteal, doſt thou ſteal? He goes on preſſing it upon them, as matter of ſhame and bluſhing, that their actions ran ſo croſs and contradictory to their own profeſſions.

Turpe eſt doctorum cũ culpa redarguit ipſum.

Thus we have opened the minor propoſition or aſſumption

tion of the firſt argument, couched in theſe two verſes; thou haſt comforted, inſtructed, and taught many, yet when trouble cometh upon thee, thou knoweſt not how to order thy ſelf. Is not this thy fear, thy confidence, the uprightneſs of thy wayes, and thy hope? Thus he gathers the concluſion, and from hence infers Job a hypocrite in Religion, or irreligious.

Is not this thy fear? &c.] As if he had ſaid, thy fear, thy confidence, thy uprightneſs, thy hope, thy religion, call it what thou wilt, is but thus much, or is but this.

Is not this thy fear?] In the firſt verſe of the firſt chapter, it was ſhewed what the fear of God is; part of Job's character being thus given, A man fearing God. Now Eliphaz, by this firſt point of his Interrogatories, taxes Job, in the firſt Part of his character or commendation; thou art reported to be a man fearing God; Is not this thy fear?

Fear is taken either for the whole compaſs of Gods worſhip, or for that awfulneſs of affection with which we worſhip God; which we ought to mingle and mix in all our actions and duties. Therefore (ſaith the Apoſtle, Heb. 12.) Let us have grace to ſerve him with reverence and godly fear. And, Pſal. 2. Serve the Lord with fear. God is to be ſerved in love, and yet God loves no ſervice which hath not this ingredient, holy fear.

Fear is the moſt proper affection, which, we creatures, duſt and aſhes, who are at ſuch an infinite diſtance from God, can put forth in his worſhip. God condeſcends ſo far as to be loved by us; yea, he calleth for our love as a friend, or as a father, as a familiar, as one in near relation; but conſidered in his Majeſty, Glory and greatneſs, fear is the moſt ſutable affection in our approaches unto God. The name of God, in ſome languages, is derived from fear; and God is expreſly called Fear by Jacob, Gen. 31. in that diſpute with Laban; where he telleth him, Except the fear of his father Iſaac had been with him, &c. ver. 42. And Jacob ſware by the fear of his father Iſaac, ver. 53. that is, by that God whom his father Iſaac feared: Jacob was a man ſo holy, that he would take nothing into his mouth to ſwear by, but only the holy Name of God. Religious ſwearing is one of the higheſt acts of worſhipping, as vain ſwearing is one of the higheſt acts of prophaning the name of God.

כסל Inconſtantia levitas, per Antiphraſin conſtantia, confidentia.

Thy confidence.] The word which we tranſlate confidence, ſignifies alſo, and that moſt properly, folly, inconſtancy, levity; when the Prophet Jeremy reproveth the idolatry of thoſe times, and ſpeaks to worſhippers of Idols, he expreſſes it by this word; they are altogether brutiſh and fooliſh, Jer. 10. 8. And holy David, (Pſal. 49. 13.) ſpeaking of wicked men, who make riches their portion, and who lay out all their endeavours in the raiſing of an outward eſtate, gives this account of their practice in ver. 13. This their way is their folly: this is the courſe that worldly men take, and they think it is a very wiſe courſe; but indeed their way is their folly. Some Tranſlators read that Text, This their way is their confidence; as here in Job: and ſo ſo they make the ſence out thus; this way of worldly men, in gathering riches, in heaping up abundance of theſe outward things, is their confidence, that is, they have nothing elſe to truſt unto; they have nothing beyond the world to truſt unto, this their way is their confidence. So again, Prov. 15. 26. A fooliſh man, or, a man of folly, deſpiſeth his mother. And once more, Pſal. 85. 8. Where the Pſalmiſt goeth up, like Habakkuk, to his Watch-tower, to hearken for an anſwer of his Prayer; I will hearken what the Lord will ſay, for he will ſpeak peace unto his people; but let them not return again to folly. So ſome read it in this Text of Job; Is not this thy fear, thy folly? that is, was it not meer folly for thee to brag and boaſt of thy fear? ſc. that thou didſt fear God, &c.

כסל אדם

But the word is often taken in a contrary ſence, as we tranſlate, for conſtancy or confidence, and ſometimes for hope; and thus Job 31. 24. If I have ſaid to gold, thou art my hope, or my confidence; and, chap. 8. 14. ſpeaking of the hypocrite, whoſe hope ſhall be cut off; the ſame word is uſed: and, Prov. 3. 26. The Lord ſhall be thy confidence, and he ſhall keep thy foot from being taken; and (not to heap many places) Pſal. 78. 7. That they may ſet their hope in God. In this ſence it is generally underſtood here, Is not this thy fear and thy confidence? ſc. all the truſt thou haſt placed in thy God?

Fear and confidence are acts of natural worſhip. Confidence or truſt is the reſting of the ſoul upon another; here the reſting of the ſoul upon the word or promiſes of God, upon the power, faithfulneſs and truth of God, an act thus put forth by the ſoul, is confidence. Now, ſaith Eliphaz, Is not this thy confidence? Thou haſt ſpoken much of reſting and truſting upon God and his word, upon his power and faithfulneſs; is not this that which thou haſt all this while talked of? See what a godly confidence it is! Doth it look like a proper piece of grace?

Confidence is an act beyond faith; a ſoul confiding walks in a higher region of grace and comfort, then a ſoul only believing; there may be believing, where there is not this confiding. As patience is hope lengthned, ſo confidence is hope ſtrengthned. Aſſurance is the higheſt degree of faith, and confidence is the higheſt degree of aſſurance. It carries with it, firſt, Chearfulneſs, oppoſite to ſorrow: ſecondly, Courage, oppoſite to fear and deſpondency of ſpirit: thirdly, Boldneſs and adventurouſneſs, oppoſite to cowardice. Confidence, having a good cauſe, and a good call, will take a Bear by the tooth, or a Lion by the beard: fourthly, It notes boaſting, or a kind of ſpiritual wiſe bragging, oppoſite to ſinful modeſty and concealment of what God hath done for us. Or take it thus; Confidence is the nobleſt exerciſe of Faith, which looking ſteadily upon God in himſelf, and in Chriſt, through the promiſes, raiſes the ſoul above all fears and diſcouragements, above all doubts and diſquietments, either about the removing of evil, or the obtaining of good.

Hence confidence is well called the reſt of the ſoul; therefore ſuch as attain to confidence, are ſaid to be in peace, in perfect peace. Him wilt thou eſtabliſh in perfect peace, whoſe heart doth truſt upon thee. And this act of confidence or truſt, is proper and peculiar to God, no creature muſt ſhare in it. This is worſhip commanded in the firſt Precept; Thou ſhalt have no other gods before me. Whatſoever we confide in, unleſs it be in ſubordination unto God, we make it our god. And it is one of the higheſt acts of the ſoul, not only as we reſpect the taking in, our own comforts, but alſo, the giving out, glory unto God. This confidence is well coupled with holy fear; the more we fear God ſo, the more we truſt him; ſuch fear is the mother and nurſe of confidence: But confidence is directly contrary, yea, and contradictory to carnal fear; he that truſts God indeed, leaves both ſoul and body, temporal and eternal eſtate with him, without ever ſending a fearful thought, or a jealous look after either. It follows,

Iſa. 26. 3.

And the uprightneſs of thy heart.] It is the word uſed in the deſcription of Job, chap. 1. 1. There it is in the concrete, perfect; here in the abſtract, uprightneſs; We may read it, Is not this the perfection of thy wayes? Uprightneſs is the Saints perfection in this life. Uprightneſs may have a double notion; Firſt, as it reſpects the ſincerity of our hearts towards God. Secondly, as it reſpects the juſtice and equity of our actions towards man. In both ſences we may extend it here; Thou haſt been reported for a perfect man, now if thou art perfect in thy being, thou wouldeſt be perfect in thy working; if thou wert upright in thy nature, thou wouldſt be upright in thy actions. Now conſider thy uprightneſs or perfection, is not this the uprightneſs of thy wayes? Is not this all, even lately diſcovered in thy impatient complainings?

And thy hope.] That word is derived two wayes. Firſt, From a root that ſignifieth a line, rule or meaſure; ſo in Gen. 1. 9. Let the waters under the heavens be gathered together into one place; the word ſignifies a gathering together by rule, as if God by that act had meaſured out the water (that unruly, turbulent, wandring element) and had brought it into compaſs, by a rule or line, which it could not exceed or go beyond, without permiſſion or commiſſion from himſelf; thereby giving us a mighty proof of his almighty power and infinite wiſdom. So ſome tranſlate the word here, taking it to be derived from that root, Is not this thy rule? Is not this the rule that thou haſt heretofore walked by, whatſoever thou haſt pretended? Is not this the righteouſneſs of thy wayes, the courſe or meaſure, by which thou haſt directed, ſquared thy actions?

תקוה

קוי Linea, regula, ſic veteres Hebræi deducunt. Videtur Moſes non ſine magna emphaſi hoc verbum obſervaſſe, nimirum ad exprimendū infinitam verbi Dei potentiam, qui fluxum illud & vagum elementum, totam ſuperficiem terræ occupans, tanquam ad amuſſim & perpendiculum in unum locum cogit. Paulus Fagius In prim. cap. Gen.

But

קוה Expectavit. Significat magna intentione & corporis erectione expectare, atque id eſt quod Paulus Græco verbo dicit, ἀποκαραδοκεῖν. ἀποκαραδοκία.

But ſecondly, rather the word is derived from (Kavah) which ſignifieth to expect, hope or wait: and it notes a very vehement intention both of body and of mind, in waiting, expecting, or hoping; when a man waits (as it were) ſtretching forth his ſpirit or his mind, putting himſelf out exceedingly to hope or wait for a thing. Pſalm 37. 9. & Iſa. 8. 17. the ſame word is uſed with the ſame emphaſis. And that Greek word which the Apoſtle Paul hath (Rom. 8. 19.) comes up fully to it, The earneſt expectation of the creature, &c. So the meaning here may be thus conceived, Is not this thy hope, or thy earneſt expectation? Is it not come to this now? Thou haſt boaſted much of thy hope, what treaſures thou hadſt laid up in that, beyond all thy preſent poſſeſſions; is not all ſhrunk up to this, yea, changed into deſpair? Thy deſperate ſpeeches give me ground to think ſo. Is not this thy hope? So much for the words.

הלא

There are four interpretations given of this verſe. Firſt, Some make out the ſence, by a different conſtruction of the firſt particle in the Hebrew, which, they tranſlate, not (as we) Is not? but where is? So the vulgar and divers others, reading it thus, where is thy fear and thy confidence, thy patience, and the perfection of thy wayes? As if he had ſaid, What's become of all thoſe graces, of which thou haſt ſpoken, and with which thou haſt been reported to be moſt richly endowed? where are they at this time? in this day of thy trouble, in this day of thy trial? Taking the words in that ſence, they yield us theſe Obſervations.

> Firſt, That, times of trouble are ſpecial times for the uſe of our graces.

It is as if Eliphaz had ſaid, Thou thy ſelf, and all that knew thee, have ſpoken much of thy grace, but now is the time to uſe it, where is it? Shew it me now, where is thy fear, and thy confidence? If a man have been reported very skilful at his weapon, when he comes into danger, then is the time to ſhew his skill: and we may ſay to him, Where is thy skill now? Where is thy art now? So here, Now, that thou haſt moſt need of thy graces, Where are they? Bring them forth, are they to ſeek now? Is thy righteouſneſs as the morning dew, and as a cloud vaniſhed away? Times of trouble will put every grace to a ſtreſs; and we had need look to it, that we have not our graces to ſeek, when we have moſt need to uſe them; that when it ſhall be ſaid unto us, Where is your faith? Where is your hope? we may be able to hold them forth, and anſwer the queſtion in our actions, here they are, here is my fear, here is my confidence, here is my hope, here is my uprightneſs; I can make proof of them, and render them viſible in my life: I can (through the ſtrength of Chriſt) act them, and walk according to the rule of every one of theſe graces.

Secondly, From the ground of this argument, which is, that true grace holds out and perſeveres unto the end: For hereby (ſaith Eliphaz) I will convince thee for an Hypocrite, and that thy grace is but a ſhadow of grace, becauſe it is decayed and gone. This being the ground of conviction by theſe words, Where is thy fear? Obſerve,

> That, falſe grace, or a ſhew of grace, fails us when we have moſt need of it.

A Hypocrite ſeems to ſtand in grace, till he falls into trouble. When good is in ſight, he ſuppoſes he hath a great ſtock of faith; he is joyful in believing any thing, when nothing pinches him: And when he enjoyeth what he deſired, he hopes as much as is promiſed: But when outward comforts are withdrawn and eclipſed, when he muſt live upon a word, and relieve himſelf upon inviſibles, when he hath nothing in the creature to ſupport him, and muſt truſt what he cannot ſee: then this phancy of faith, this vain hope, and pretended confidence diſappear, and where are they? how much charity will ſome make profeſſion of, until a real object of charity preſent it ſelf? Then excuſes are made, they have but little for themſelves, times are hard, they may be ſuddenly caſt into ſtreights, they know not what a day may bring forth. Falſe charity, and falſe hope vaniſh when they ſhould act their parts, and make good what they have profeſſed. As Chriſt ſpeaks of the two houſes, Matth. 7. One built upon the rock, the other upon the ſand: theſe two houſes were alike skilfully and ſtrongly built in all appearance; while the Sun ſhone, and the weather was fair, none could diſcern but that the houſe upon the ſand, was built as well, and might have ſtood as long, as the other upon the rock; but when the rain fell, and the floods came, when the winds blew and beat upon the houſe, then it fell, the foundation failed, and all the fair ſuperſtructions came down into the duſt. Where is the Hypocrite with all his faith and fear in a wet windy day? Is he not like a houſe founded on the ſand? Or is not he and his goodly outſide of holy fear and hope like the Apples of Sodom (reported in Hiſtory) which are fair to the eye, but touch them, and they crumble to aſhes in your hand; ſo is the faith and the fear, the hope and confidence of hypocrites: Where are theſe? they are no where, for they never were.

Take the words in a ſecond conſtruction, and ſo they are thus rendred, Is not thy fear thy confidence? and the uprightneſs of thy ways thy hope? So Mr. Broughton, Is not thy Religion thy hope? and thy right wayes thy confidence? and then the ſence is, as if Eliphaz had thus ſpoken unto Job, Doth it not now plainly appear, that Satan charged thee rightly, that thou ſerveſt God for ends of profit and outward comforts, ſeeing thou art thus impatient and unquiet, when the hand of God takes away thy profit and outward comforts? Is it not a clear argument, that thou heretofore didſt obey God, only to gain by him, or becauſe thou waſt confident he would protect and ſave thee harmleſs, he would bleſs and proſper thee with encreaſe? Was not the uprightneſs of thy wayes thy hope? that is, didſt thou not look to thrive by upright dealing with men, and fair carriage in all thy actions? thou hadſt no love to Religion, none to Juſtice, thy love was to thy purſe, thy profit; and thou didſt believe, at leaſt hope, that profit would come in at the door of the Sanctuary, or elſe thou hadſt never gone ſo often thither. This is the ſecond ſence, predicating the firſt term of the ſecond, Is not thy fear thy confidence? and is not thy uprightneſs thy hope? ſurely 'tis. This is a fair expoſition of the words, and from it we may Obſerve,

> That, A Hypocrites profeſſion of Religion is grounded on his confidence to gain by it.

Is not thy fear thy confidence? thy Religion was nothing elſe but a hope to be rich. It was Satans objection, and now Eliphaz (reſuming and managing Satans argument) makes it his conviction. And it is a truth in the general theſis, that the Religion or the fear of Hypocrites, is nothing but their confidence; they conſider the word of promiſe, which God hath given to thoſe that ſerve him; they in their thoughts ſurveigh the land of promiſe, and taſte the milk and honey of it: they read that God will give both grace and glory, and no good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly; therefore that they may be under the influence of theſe promiſes, or upon a confidence that they ſhall receive golden ſhowers out of theſe precious promiſes, and dig aboundant treaſure out of theſe heavenly mines, they fear and worſhip God, they are upright in their wayes, and honeſt in their dealings among men: Chriſt found it was love to the loaves, not to his doctrine, which brought ſo many after him, Joh. 6. They liked a miracle to feed them, more then a Sermon to inſtruct them: And were affected with the meat which endures to everlaſting life, onely in ſubordination to the meat which periſheth. How many ſay, at leaſt in their hearts, at this day, if I caſt my ſelf into ſuch and ſuch courſes of holineſs, ſhall I not have credit and cuſtom, good acquaintance and profitable correſpondence? In many men their wickedneſs is their confidence, that is, the very reaſon why they are ſo wicked, is, becauſe they are confident they ſhall get by their wickedneſs; ſo thoſe entiſers ſaid to the young man (Prov. 1. 11.) Come let us lay wait for blood, there was their wickedneſs; now at the twelfth verſe, you ſhall find, that the riſe of their wickedneſs was this confidence; we ſhall find all precious treaſure, we ſhall fill our houſes with ſpoil. Some (I confeſs) have ſuch a ſpirit of wickedneſs, that they are wicked for wickedneſs ſake: and they love the very ſin it ſelf, more then the ends of profit or pleaſure, which may poſſibly follow the ſin; but others act the ſin, out of confidence they ſhall advance themſelves by it: And ſo there are many, ſo refined in their aims, and heightned in the wayes of holineſs, that they are holy for holineſs ſake, and religious for religions ſake; yet there is a generation, whoſe Religion is nothing but this confidence; I will caſt in my lot with the godly, I will take their way, ſhall I not fill my houſe with treaſure, and raiſe an eſtate by it? The Apoſtle ſpeaks of ſuch (1 Tim. 6. 5.) Men ſuppoſing that gain is godlineſs, and they are godly only that they may gain by it. Whereas they whoſe hearts are perfect with God, love godlineſs for Gods ſake; and they are holy, not out of confidence of gaining by it, but out of a delight in acting of it; there is a beauty, an excellency in holineſs which takes their hearts: And they are above, not only this poor confidence, to be enriched by it; but alſo above that rich, that heavenly confidence, to be ſaved by it, to get Heaven by it. The fear of ſome, who are above the former, is yet but equal to this confidence; they ſee there is no other way to be ſaved, to go to Heaven, but this. Now I ſay, holineſs in the height and purity of it, keeps under the reſpect of Heaven it ſelf; it is ſo much above theſe things below, that it is above thoſe things above: That is a ſecond ſenſe.

Ego furtum facere volui nulla compulſus egeſtate ſed faſtidio juſtitiæ; nec ea refrui volebam quam furto appetebam, ſed ipſo furto & peccato; Aug. l. 3. Confeſſ. c. 4. & paulo poſt. Eram gratis malus, amavi defectum meum, non illud ad quod deficiebam.

Thirdly, The words are underſtood by divers of the Hebrew writers, for a direct and ſimple aſſertion, and they give it thus. Will not, or would not thy fear be thy confidence? and the uprightneſs of thy wayes thy hope? As if Eliphaz had thus ſaid unto him; Job thou haſt pretended much holineſs and Religion, fear and uprightneſs: why art thou ſo diſquieted, now, that the hand of God is upon thee? why art thou ſo amazed under theſe ſufferings? would not that fear be thy confidence? and would not that uprightneſs of thy wayes be thy hope? ſurely it would, if thou hadſt any ſuch fear as thou pretendeſt: this fear would be thy confidence, and this uprightneſs thy hope; thou wouldeſt be very bold, and by hope caſt Anchor upon the goodneſs and faithfulneſs of God, in the midſt of all this ſtorm: thy heart would be poiſed, ſettled and eſtabliſhed, notwithſtanding all theſe ſhakings. Would not thy fear be thy confidence? It would. Hence Obſerve;

Firſt, That, they who fear moſt in times of peace, have moſt reaſon to be confident in times of trouble.

Timidum eſſe ad mala patranda genus eſt fortitudinis & fiduciæ.

They who fear moſt (in one ſence) fear leaſt; they who fear God moſt, fear creatures leaſt, and creature-troubles leaſt. We have this point in ſo many words, Prov. 14. 26. In the fear of the Lord is ſtrong confidence. The fear of the Lord is the cure of all other fears. They who are moſt fearful of the evil of ſin, are moſt courageous among the evils of ſuffering. To be fearful thus, raiſeth the higheſt acts of confidence, Pſal. 112. 7, 8. We read of one that will not be afraid for any evil tidings, his heart is fixed; Who is this confident man? this fearleſs man? It is this divine coward (as we may call him,) you ſhall find him ſo expreſs'd, ver. 1. Bleſſed is the man that feareth God, he ſhall not be afraid for any evil tidings, Exod. 20. 20. When the people of Iſrael were much amazed and aſtoniſhed at the giving of the Law, Moſes comes to cure them of that fear; but what is the medicine? Fear not, for God is come to prove you, and that his fear may be before your faces, that ye ſin not. As if he had ſaid, when God hath put his fear into your hearts, ſuch fears as theſe will be removed and vaniſh: when your hearts are filled with this fear of God, you will have confidence to hear, and ſee the thunder and lightening of Mount Sinai; you ſhall not fear, no not this terrible tempeſt, in which the Law it ſelf is given. So when the people were in a fear, another time, Samuel thus beſpeaks them in that ſhaking fit, 1 Sam. 12. 20. Fear not, only fear the Lord. If you will be confident in ſuch a time as this (for by prayer he procured thunder and rain in that time of wheat-harveſt) fear the Lord. The fear of the Lord will be our confidence in the wetteſt day, in the moſt tempeſtuous and ſtormy night that ever fell upon the ſecure, ſinful world. A man fearing God is the only dreadnought.

Secondly, We may obſerve from the other branch, (for the ſence is the ſame) And would not thy uprightneſs be thy hope?

The uprightneſs of a mans wayes in good times, doth mightily ſtrengthen his hope in evil times.

When a man can look back, and approve his heart to God, that he hath been upright in peace and plenty, how full of hope will he be in trouble and in wants? It was that which Hezekiah pleaded before God, in the day of his trouble and trial, 2 King. 20. 3. I beſeech thee, O Lord, remember how I have walked before thee in truth and with an upright and perfect heart. This was it, when he lay upon his ſick-bed, and as he thought upon his death-bed, that put life into him, and bare up his ſpirit.

A fourth interpretation is taken from our reading: Is not this thy fear, thy confidence, the uprightneſs of thy wayes, and thy hope? So the words contain four diſtinct affirming queſtions, Is not this thy fear? Is not this thy confidence? Is not this the uprightneſs of thy wayes? and is not this thy hope? This is thy fear, &c. As if Eliphaz had ſaid, Job, without doubt thou haſt ſhewed all thy goodneſs at once; or, Is not this all that thou art able to make out and ſhew; Is not this all that thou canſt ſay for, all the teſtimony thou canſt give of, thy religion and holineſs? Haſt thou not ſhewed all? Surely thy great boaſt of Religion is nothing but this. Eliphaz ſeems to call Job to make a further or clearer proof of his grace; Is not this thy fear? or if this be not, ſhew me ſomewhat elſe: Thou art a man very famous in the world, much talked of, and highly commended, for fear and for confidence, for uprightneſs and for hope; what haſt thou more to anſwer that report, and ſave thy own credit, with the credit of thy friends, who have been ſo large in their commendations of, and teſtimonies concerning thee? Note hence;

Firſt, Afflictions diſcover that unto us, which before we knew not.

Is not this thy fear? thou didſt not know of what make or conſtitution thy fear was, untill now: That's Eliphaz his ſuppoſition; and it is a truth, That ſome hypocrites know not, that their graces are falſe, till they are brought to ſuch tryals. They carry falſe, counterfeit coin about them, and ſuppoſe it currant money, till they come to the ballance, or a touch-ſtone. Some are active hypocrites, who go about intentionally to deceive and put a fair mask over a filthy face. Others are paſſive hypocrites, who are miſerably deceived by the colluſions of Satan, and the baſe treachery of their own ſpirits. Many a man is brought to ſee (which before he could not, by reaſon of thoſe miſts of hypocriſie) what his fear is, what his faith, by thoſe changes which affliction works in him.

Secondly thus, We ought to make our graces viſible in our actions.

Is not this thy fear? Shew me what thy fear is; if this be not, make proof of it. The Apoſtle bids Timothy, 2 Tim. 4. 5. Make full proof of his miniſtry. It may be ſaid to ſome Miniſters, is not this your miniſtery; if it be not, make full proof of it: or as the Apoſtle James, in a caſe near this, James 2. 14, 18. Shew me thy faith by thy works; ſo we may ſay, Shew me thy fear by thy works: Is not this it? if it be not, make it appear what it is: The tree is known by the fruits; do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thiſtles? or, do men gather crabs from vines, or ſloes from fig-trees? As an evil tree cannot bring forth good fruit, ſo neither doth a good tree bring forth evil fruit. If thou ſayeſt thou art a vine, make proof of it, by the fruit thou beareſt, or elſe I muſt conclude, thou art but a thorn or a thiſtle. We may queſtion many for this grace, and for the other grace they pretend unto: For their actions have not the leaſt print or impreſſion of ſuch graces upon them. If any one ſhould hold forth much faith and confidence in God, and this man ſhould run or take unlawful courſes to help himſelf, might we not ſay, Is this thy confidence? Or if one ſpeaking much of confidence in God, for the accompliſhing of a buſineſs, ſhould ſit ſtill, and do nothing himſelf, might we not ſay, Is this thy confidence? This is to tempt God, not to truſt in him. Once more, If a man ſhould profeſs much confidence in God, and yet be taken up altogether about the creature, ſwallowed up with creature thoughts, or ſwallowing in creature delights, ſeeking to, and engaging this creature, and that creature, with neglect of God, may we not

Heb. 6. 19. not ſay, Is thy confidence? Hope is an anchor of the ſoul; but thou art driven with every blaſt; is this thy hope? Hope makes not aſhamed; but thou, either art, or oughteſt to be aſhamed, Is this thy hope? The fear of the Lord is clean, but thou art defiled, Is this thy fear? Rom. 5. 5.

Then again conſider this, When Job carries himſelf thus in his trouble, Eliphaz telleth him, what is not this thy fear? Thou art ſurely but an hypocrite, for if thy fear were true, it would have preſerved thee from theſe impatient complainings and diſtempers. Hence Obſerve;

That, true fear, holy fear, preſerve the ſoul, and keeps it holy.

Holy fear is as a golden bridle to the ſoul, when it would run out to any evil: It is like the banks to the Sea, which keeps in the raging waves of corruption, when they would overflow all. If thou hadſt fear indeed, thou wouldſt never thus break the bounds of patience. The fear of the Lord is to depart from evil, that's the definition of it; therefore if thou hadſt any fear of God indeed, thou wouldeſt never have done this evil, curſe thy day, Prov. 14.27. The fear of the Lord is a fountain of life, to depart from the ſnares of death; that is, either from ſin, which is ſpiritual death, or from damnation, which is perpetual death; the fear of the Lord is a fountain of life, to depart from both theſe ſnares of death; where this fear is not, we are ready to joyn with every evil, and ſo to fall into the jaws of every death. Abraham (Gen. 20.11.) argues ſo, The fear of the Lord is not in this place, therefore they will kill me; when we perceive a bent of ſpirit, to deviſe evil, and a readineſs of the hand to practiſe it, (we may conclude) the fear of the Lord is not lodged in that heart.

Fourthly Obſerve, That, truſt, or confidence in God, ſettles the heart in all conditions.

Is not this thy confidence? Thy confidence certainly is but a ſhadow, for if it had been real, thou hadſt been eſtabliſhed and upheld, notwithſtanding all that weight of affliction that lies upon thee. When there was an unquietneſs upon the ſoul of David, he firſt queſtions his ſoul about it, Why art thou diſquieted O my ſoul? and then directs, truſt in God, Pſal. 42.11. So the Prophet promiſeth, (Iſa. 26.3.) Him wilt thou eſtabliſh in perfect peace, whoſe heart doth truſt upon thee. They that truſt in the Lord ſhall be as mount Zion, Pſal. 125.1. He that is carried and toſſed thus about, with every wind of trouble and guſt of ſorrow, ſhews he hath not caſt out this anchor of hope, upon the Rock Jeſus Chriſt.

But here a queſtion muſt be anſwered, for the clearing of all, and likewiſe for diſcovering the ſtrength or weakneſs of this argument brought by Eliphaz, in this particular caſe of Job. Eliphaz taxed Job with hypocriſie, becauſe his graces did not act, or they did not act like themſelves, like graces; he gave not proof of them at that time. Hence the doubt is, Do a mans failings or declinings from what he was before, or what he did before, argue him inſincere? Is their ſufficient ſtrength in this Argument for Eliphaz to ſay, Job thou haſt been a comforter of others, thou haſt profeſt much holineſs heretofore, and now thou art come to the trial, thou canſt not make it out thy ſelf; therefore thou haſt no grace, therefore all thy religion is vain.

For the reſolving of that, I anſwer firſt, that the propoſition is not ſimply true, that every one who faileth or declineth or falleth off from what formerly he was, or held forth, is therefore an Hypocrite, or that his graces are falſe, and but pretences; there may be many declinings and failings, many breaches and backſlidings, and yet the ſpirit upright. Indeed falling away and quite falling off, are an argument of inſincerity and hypocriſie; for true grace is everlaſting grace, true holineſs endures for ever. Therefore we are here to conſider, whence theſe failings were occaſioned in Job, and how a failing may be expreſt, and continue, ſo, as to conclude inſincerity or hypocriſie.

Firſt, It was from a ſudden perturbation, not from a ſetled reſolution. Job was not reſolvedly thus impatient and unruly: an unexpected ſtorm hurried his ſpirit ſo violently, that he was not maſter of his own actions; Job had not his affections at command, they got the bridle (as it were) on their necks, and away they carried him with ſuch force, that he was not able to ſtop or ſtay them.

Secondly, It came from the ſmart and ſence of pain in his fleſh, not from the perverſeneſs of his ſpirit. If the taint had been in his ſpirit, then Eliphaz had a ground, a certain ground to have argued thus againſt him.

Thirdly, Job's graces were hid and obſcured, they were not loſt or dead; the acts were ſuſpended, the habits were not removed; when the grace which hath been ſhewed, is quite loſt, that grace was nothing but a ſhew of grace, painted fear, and painted confidence: but in Job's caſe there was only a hiding of his graces, or a vail caſt over them.

Laſtly, We muſt not ſay, he falls from grace who falleth into ſin; nor muſt it be concluded that he hath no grace who falls into a great ſin: It follows not, that grace is falſe, or none, becauſe it doth not work like it ſelf, or becauſe it doth not ſometimes work at all. True grace works not alwayes uniformly; though it be alwayes the ſame in it ſelf, yet it is not alwayes the ſame in its effects; true grace is alwayes alive, yet it doth not alwayes act; it retains life, when motion is undiſcern'd. Wherefore they who do not work like themſelves, or do not work at all (for a time) in gracious wayes, are not to be concluded as having no grace, or nothing but a ſhew of grace.

And ſo much be ſpoken concerning this firſt Argument contained in theſe ſix Verſes, the conviction of Job, from his failing in the actings of his grace, the putting forth of that fruit which formerly he had born and ſhewed to the world.

VERS. 7, 8.

Remember I pray thee, who ever periſhed being innocent? or where were the righteous cut off?

Even as I have ſeen, they that plough iniquity, and ſow wickedneſs, reap the ſame.

IN theſe two Verſes and the three following, Eliphaz coucheth and confirmeth his ſecond Argument, wherein he further beſpatters the innocency of Job, and hopes to convince him of hypocriſie. The Argument is taken from the conſtant experience of Gods dealings in the world, Remember, I pray thee, who ever periſhed being innocent? We may give it in this form.

Innocent perſons periſh not, righteous men are not cut off.

But Job, thou periſheſt, and thou art cut off. Therefore thou art no innocent nor righteous perſon.

The major propoſition is plain in the ſeventh Verſe; for that queſtion, Who ever periſhed being innocent? or where were the righteous cut off? is to be reſolved into this Negation, No innocent perſon ever periſhed, nor were the righteous ever cut off. And Eliphaz conceiveth this to be ſo clear a truth, that he challengeth Job to give one inſtance to the contrary, out of his own experience; he appeals to experience (which is a ſtrong way of arguing) Remember, I pray thee, who ever periſhed being innocent? ſhew me the man; and withal he profeſſeth, that he could give many inſtances or examples out of his own experience, that wicked men have periſhed and were cut off, this he doth in the eighth Verſe, Even as I have ſeen, they that plough iniquity, and ſow wickedneſs, reap the ſame; which he enlarges in the three following Verſes, by the blaſt of God they periſh, and by the breath of his noſtrils are they conſumed, &c. This in general for the ſum and ſubſtance of the Argument.

We will now conſider the words, and examine the ſtrength of it in particulars.

Remember I pray thee.] He handleth Job tenderly in words, he ſpeaks gently and winningly to him, Remember I pray thee. To remember, noteth often in Scripture a ſerious conſideration of things preſent, and before us, Eccleſ. 12.1. Remember now thy Creator in the dayes of thy youth; that is, ſeriouſly bethink thy ſelf at the preſent, of God and his wayes, and how thou oughteſt to walk holily before him. But properly, to remember, is the calling to mind of things which are paſt: And ſo Eliphaz, in this place, directs Job to ſearch the Records; go and inquire into all the Monuments of Antiquity, look the Regiſters and Hiſtories of the Ages paſt, and ſee if thou canſt find any ſuch thing as this, A righteous man periſhing.

Memory is the Souls ſtore-houſe; there we lay up obſervations, and from thence fetch them out, as occaſion invites. Hence Chriſt, Mat. 12. 57. compareth every Scribe which is inſtructed for the Kingdom of Heaven, to a houſholder, which bringeth forth out of his treaſury things both new and old. This treaſury is the memory; there holy truths and profitable examples are ſtored and reſerved; Remember, I pray thee.

In that Eliphaz ſendeth Job back to former experiences, we may note,

> That, It is our duty to lay up and record the dealings of God, whether publick or perſonal, whether with the godly or with the wicked.

It is our duty to obſerve what God doth, Pſal. 111. 4. He hath made his wonderful works to be remembred; as if the Pſalmiſt had ſaid, God hath not wrought ſuch great things in the world, whether reſpecting perſons or nations, that we ſhould write them upon the water, or in the ſand, which the next puff of wind defaces and blows out; but he hath made his wonderful works to be remembred; he will have them written in braſs with a pen of Iron, and with the point of a Diamond, that all ages may hear the loving kindneſſes of the Lord; he hath made his wonderful works to be remembred, or he hath made them ſo, as that they are moſt worthy to be remembred. David was a great obſerver of experiences (Pſal. 37. 25.) he telleth us, that he had (as it were) collected notes concerning Gods dealings all his dayes; and it is to the very point in hand, I have been young, and now am old, yet never ſaw I the righteous forſaken; himſelf carefully obſerved the dealings of God, in this Pſalm; and in the next (Pſal. 37. 35, 36.) he gives the like direction to others; thus I have done, do you take the ſame courſe too, I have ſeen the wicked in great power, and ſpreading himſelf like a green Bay-tree; then he goes on, Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright. I have conſidered the ſtate of wicked men; let all obſerve the ſtate of the godly; mark the perfect man, & behold the upright. The works of God expound his word; in his works his word is often made viſible. That's an excellent expreſſion, Pſal. 111. 7. The works of his hands are verity and judgment: The acts of God are verity, that is, God acts his own truths. As the works of our hands ought to be the verity and judgments of God (every action of a Chriſtian ſhould be one of Chriſts truths) ſo it is exactly with God himſelf; the works of his hands are his own verity and judgments. When we cannot find the meaning of God in his word, we may find it out in his works; his works are a comment, an infallible comment upon his word.

Yet we muſt take this Caution. The dealings of God in the ſurface and outward part of them, appear ſometimes contrary to his word, contrary unto his promiſe; but they only appear ſo, they are never ſo. When a man reads a promiſe, and finds much good ſtored up in it for the righteous, and then looks upon the ſtate of the righteous, and ſeeth it full of evil; here is a ſeeming contrariety between the word and the works of God; but it is only a ſeeming contrariety, as we ſhall ſee ſomewhat further anon. Therefore in that Pſal. 111. 2. where he ſaith, The works of God are verity and judgment, he adds, The works of God are ſought out. If you will have the verity or judgment that is in the works of God, you muſt not only look upon the outſide of them, but you muſt ſeek them out, ſtudy them, ſtudy them as you ſtudy the Scriptures; and then you will find out the meaning of them, and ſee how exactly they ſquare with every part of the word. Why doth Eliphaz ſend Job to experience? The ground is this, the works of God are like the word of God; therefore if thou canſt not make it out by experience from his works, thou canſt hardly make it out, as a poſition, from his word, that righteous perſons are cut off.

Remember now, I pray thee, who ever periſhed being innocent? Or where were the righteous cut off?

Here are four terms to be opened, periſhed, cut off, innocent, righteous. We will conſider, Firſt, What we are to underſtand by periſhing, and by cutting off. Secondly, Whom we are to underſtand by innocent and righteous perſons: And then apply the whole ſentence, by ſhewing wherein the truth of this propoſition ſtands, that a righteous man, or an innocent perſon, cannot periſh or be cut off.

The word which we tranſlate periſhed, hath divers ſignifications.

ו אבד

Firſt, A returning to nothing, an utter conſumption, which is to periſh as a beaſt, Pſal. 49. 20. The holy Ghoſt deſcribing a man who is not acquainted with God in his great eſtate, compares him thus; Man being in honour and not underſtanding (ſc. the things of God) becometh like the beaſts that periſh; not that he periſheth as a beaſt doth, but he is like a periſhing beaſt; the ſimilitude is not in periſhing, but in his qualities who periſheth; he hath but ſuch qualities, he is (upon the matter) even of as groſs a temper as a periſhing beaſt.

Secondly, To periſh, ſignifies to die. The diſſolution of man, or the diſ-union of ſoul and body, Iſa. 57. 1. is thus expreſt; the righteous periſh, that is, they die; as it is explained afterward, they are taken away from the evil to come, they reſt in their beds, ſc. in their graves: So, Mat. 8. 25. Maſter, ſave us, we periſh, ſay the Diſciples, when they thought they ſhould all be drowned. Lord, help us, or elſe we all die preſently: and ſo we tranſlate Job 34. 15. where Elihu ſpeaking of the power of God, thus deſcribes it, If he ſhould but ſhew himſelf, all fleſh (ſaith he) ſhall periſh together, that is, all fleſh ſhall die; they are not able to ſtand before Gods power and greatneſs: the word which he uſeth there, ſtrictly taken, ſignifies to expire or give up the ghoſt; yet we tranſlate it, all fleſh ſhall periſh together; that is, they ſhall all give up the ghoſt and die, if God ſhould appear in his power and greatneſs.

גוע

Thirdly, By periſhing, we may underſtand outward afflictions and troubles falling upon, either godly or wicked men; theſe are called a periſhing (Joſh. 23. 13.) Joſhua tells the people, If you will not obey and walk according to the Commandments of God, ye ſhall quickly periſh from off this good land, that is, ye ſhall be removed by outward afflictions from your land, you ſhall go into captivity. And ſo, If I periſh, I periſh, ſaith Eſther, chap. 4. 17. that is, if I bring trouble and affliction upon my ſelf, let it be ſo, I will venture it; A Syrian ready to periſh was my Father, Deut. 26. It is meant of Jacob, a man much verſt in trouble, as he himſelf acknowledgeth; Few and evil are the dayes of my pilgrimage.

Fourthly, To periſh, notes eternal miſery; as it is put for the miſeries of this life, ſo for the life of miſery; for that life which is an everlaſting death, John 3. 16. God ſo loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whoſoever believeth in him, ſhould not periſh, but have everlaſting life. Periſhing is oppoſed to everlaſting life, and therefore implies everlaſting death.

Omnimodam rei perditionem ſignificat, opponitur enim generationi.

Fifthly, To periſh, notes utter deſolation and total ruine. A cutting off, or a deſtroying the very name and remembrance of a perſon or of a people. He that ſpeaks lies, ſhall periſh, Pſal. 19, 9. that is, he ſhall be utterly deſtroyed. In this ſence the word is uſed for the Devil, becauſe he is a deſtroyer to the utmoſt, as Chriſt is a Saviour to the utmoſt: He is called Abaddon, from Abad (the word here uſed) Rev. 9. 12. and Apollyon; his buſineſs is to deſtroy totally and eternally. Thus alſo Antichriſt, The firſt-born of the Devil (2 Theſ. 2. 3.) is called the ſon of perdition: take it actively, he is a deſtroying ſon, one that deſtroyeth bodies and ſouls; as in Scripture, a bloody man is called Iſh dammim, a man of blood; and paſſively, he is a ſon of perdition, that is, a man to be deſtroyed both body and ſoul.

Theſe two latter ſences, namely, eternal deſtruction in Hell, and utter deſtruction in this life, are joyned together, Prov. 15. 11. Hell and deſtruction (or hell and periſhing) are before the Lord; and chap. 27. 20. we have the ſame words again, hell and perdition, or hell and deſtruction are never full. So that to periſh (in a ſtrict ſence) notes, even in this life, an utter extirpation; ſo ſome render it here who ever ſaw the righteous plucked up by the roots, ſo as there ſhould be no remembrance, no remainder of them? The other word which is joyned in the Text, cut off, carries the ſame ſence; though it ſignifies properly, to hide a thing, yet it is ſo to hide it, as it appeareth no more; or ſo to hide it, that it can neither be heard of, nor ſeen no more. Hence by a Metonymie, it ſignifies, to take away, or to cut off, becauſe things that are taken away and cut off, are as things hidden and ſeen no more. Here then is the height of the ſence, either to take it for periſhing in hell, or for ſuch a periſhing in this life, as is joyned with total deſolation and deſertion.

כחד Abſcondit, ut amplius audiatur, vel videatur, per metonymiā ſublatus, deletus, ſucciſus; ſublata enim è medio non apparent amplius, ſed abſconduntur.

נקה Then for the terms, innocent and righteous. The word we tranſlate innocent, ſignifieth empty: And it is therefore applied to an innocent perſon, becauſe innocent perſons are emptied of malice and wickedneſs, their hearts are ſwept and cleanſed, purged and waſhed; there is in ſome ſenſe a vacuum, a holy vacuum in the hearts of holy perſons; they are freed from that fulneſs of evil which lies in their hearts by nature, that filth is caſt out. Every mans heart, by nature, is brim-full, top-full of wickedneſs, as the Apoſtle deſcribes the Gentiles, Rom. 1. 29. Being filled with all unrighteouſneſs; and it is a truth of every mans heart, it is a Cage full of unclean birds, a Stable full of filthy dung, he hath in him a throng of filthy thoughts, a multitude of prophane gueſts lodging in him. Now a perſon converted, is emptied of theſe; theſe gueſts are turned out of their lodgings, the rooms are ſwept and emptied, therefore an holy perſon is called an empty perſon; emptied, not abſolutely emptied of all ſin, but comparatively; there is abundance caſt out; ſo that conſidering how full of ſin he was, he may be ſaid to be emptied of ſin, and that his malice is caſt out. נקיון שנים In Amos 4. the Prophet threatens cleanneſs of teeth (it is a ſuitable judgment, that unclean hearts and lives ſhould be puniſhed with clean teeth) or innocency of teeth; for it is the word of the Text: Famine is elegantly ſo called. Want of bread makes empty or clean teeth,

And where were the righteous (that's the other text) cut off? One may put the queſtion, where were the righteous? Surely Job had very good eyes, if he could find any righteous man upon the earth, he might ſeem to have clearer eyes then the Lord himſelf, if he could find any righteous; God looked down from heaven, and he ſaw none righteous, no, not one, Pſal. 53. 3, 4. Yet here Eliphaz bids Job enquire about the righteous, where they were cut off. To clear that;

By righteous here, we are to underſtand, not righteous perſons in a ſtrict and legal ſence, but in a Goſpel-mollified ſence; righteous with an allay, righteous by way of interpretation, and not in the ſtrictneſs of the letter. And ſo men are called righteous, firſt, in reference to the work of regeneration. There are none righteous in the root or original, in their firſt ſetting and plantation in the ſoil of the world; but there are righteous perſons as regenerate, and tranſplanted into the body of Chriſt, as wrought and faſhioned by the Spirit of Chriſt.

Secondly, There are none righteous, that is, none exactly, perfectly, compleatly righteous, but inchoately and intentionally; ſo many men are righteous, and are called righteous in the language of the Scripture.

Thirdly, There are none righteous, that is, none righteous by way of merit or deſert; none are ſo righteous, as that they can challenge any thing at Gods hand, of right; the moſt righteous perſon is an unprofitable ſervant; he hath nothing to plead before God but free grace, nothing to ſhew unto God, but Chriſts fulneſs, and his own emptineſs, the riches of Chriſt, and his own poverty. Yet there are righteous in Gods acceptance, he accounteth and accepteth them for righteous, and honours them to be called righteous.

Laſtly, We may anſwer it thus, there are none righteous in themſelves, or from themſelves, none have any righteouſneſs of their own making; but the Scripture ſhews us thoſe who have righteouſneſs, and are righteous in another, and from another; we have the righteouſneſs of juſtification in Chriſt, and the righteouſneſs of ſanctification from Chriſt: Righteouſneſs is both imputed to, and floweth into the ſoul by virtue of the union which is promiſed in the Covenant of Grace, with Chriſt the righteous, with the Lord our righteouſneſs. In theſe reſpects there are righteous perſons, and of ſuch we may underſtand this enquiry, where were ever the righteous cut off? The righteous by regeneration, the righteous by inchoation, the righteous by acceptation, or the righteous by imputation; where were any ſuch righteous in all the world, of whom thou canſt ſay, they have ever periſhed, or have been cut off?

Having opened the ſence of the ſingle terms, we will look to the ſence of the propoſition, and conſider wherein we may clear the truth of it, That innocent perſons do not periſh, or, that the righteous are not cut off.

Take periſhing or cutting off in the firſt ſenſe, namely, for annihilation and returning to nothing, and ſo neither righteous nor unrighteous, guilty nor innocent can periſh; no man ſhall periſh ſo, man is of an everlaſting make.

Then take periſhing in the ſecond ſence, as it is put for dying and going out of the land of the living; thus all righteous and innocent perſons periſh and are cut off, namely, by the ſword and ſythe of death: we may ſay all. God indeed hath made ſome few exceptions out of the general rule; but the ſtatute is plain, It is appointed unto all men once to die: Enoch was tranſlated, and ſo was Elijah, and many ſhall be found alive when Chriſt cometh to judgment, who ſhall not die; they ſhall be but changed, and have a metaphorical, not a proper death; this makes ſome ſmall abatement from, but doth not croſs the general rule, that all muſt die.

Take periſhing in the third ſence, for ſome temporal outward ſuffering in the world, either from the hand of God immediately, or mediately from the hand of man. Thus righteous and innocent perſons may periſh too, that is, they may fall under ſore and great afflictions; thus righteous Abel periſhed, and thus Jacob was a Syrian ready to periſh; and thus the godly party among the Jews, in the time of their captivity, periſhed (they periſhed from off the Land, as it was threatned, Joſh. 23.) with the reſt of the wicked; of which the two baskets of figs, one bad, and the other good, were a famous type, Jer. 24. 3.

And in regard of this outward, preſent, temporal periſhing, we find it often, that the righteous periſh, while the unrighteous flouriſh. Pſal. 73.12. Behold (ſaith David) theſe are the ungodly that proſper in the world; and at the fourth verſe, All the day long have I been plagued, and chaſtened every morning. As ſure, or as ſoon as I riſe, I have a whipping, and my breakfaſt is bread of ſorrow, and the water of adverſity; theſe proſper, and I periſh. And the Prophet (Jer. 12. 1, 2.) expoſtulates with holy ſubmiſſion, about this flouriſhing eſtate of the wicked, and periſhing eſtate of the godly: Wherefore doth the way of the wicked proſper? &c. And in the next verſe, Thou haſt planted them, yea, they have taken root, they grow, yea, they bring forth fruit. What a gradation is here of the flouriſhing proſperity of wicked men, while the righteous ſeem to wither? Thou haſt planted them. Every tree that is planted, doth not take root; but theſe take root. Every tree that taketh root, doth not grow up to any ſtrength; but theſe take root, and they grow. There are trees that grow, yet they bring not forth fruit; but theſe bring forth fruit alſo; yea (ſaith he) they bring forth fruit; theſe were flouriſhing trees indeed, yet in the mean time, thouſands of righteous perſons periſhed in, and by, outward troubles.

Sometime (we find on the other hand) that the wicked periſh in outward troubles, while the righteous are delivered, and have Arks provided to ſave them in a common deluge. God makes that difference ſometime, even in this life; he pulled Lot out of Sodom, while Sodom periſhed by fire; and righteous Noah was ſaved in the Ark, while the world of the ungodly periſhed by water.

And laſtly, Both the righteous and the wicked may be wrapped up in the very ſame outward periſhing condition, yet alwayes with a difference; though both alike periſh, yet their periſhing is not alike. As it is with the righteous and wicked in regard of ſin, ſo of ſufferings: They may both commit the ſame ſin for the matter, as it is a tranſgreſſion of the Law; but a righteous man can never ſin as the wicked: he ſins not, with ſuch formalities of ſinning, he hath not ſuch a heart, ſuch a temper and bent of ſpirit, as a wicked man hath in ſinning; to ſin ſo, is utterly inconſiſtent with the new nature. Thus alſo it is with the periſhings, afflictions and troubles which they fall into; God ſometimes ſends the very ſame affliction for the matter, as ſuppoſe poverty, want, impriſonment, captivity and the like, upon the one, as upon the other: But are the righteous ſmitten, as God ſmites thoſe that ſmite them? Surely no; in meaſure he debateth with them, Iſa. 27. 7, 8. They ſin not againſt God with the ſame heart, or at the ſame rate as wicked men do: and God never ſtrikes them with the ſame heart, and at the ſame rate, as he doth the wicked; he cannot do it, the ſtrength of his love to them, makes this impoſſible for him: Therefore, though, as the Preacher reſolves the caſe, Eccleſ. 9. 1. No man knoweth either love or hatred, hatred, by all that is before him. In the matter of events, love or hatred are not viſible; yet in the manner of events, there is much love and hatred viſible; and the ſpirits of ſuch as are under thoſe events, may diſcern love or hatred, when no eye can: One ſeeth hatred, and another ſeeth love, abundance of love mixed in his cup of ſorrow. God never gives his own a cup of pure wrath to drink; there are alwayes ſome ingredients of comfort and ſweetneſs put into it. This is the third ſence, how righteous ones may, or may not periſh.

Take periſhing in the fourth ſence, as periſhing is an eternal deſtruction; and ſo the propoſition of Eliphaz is true throughout, ſtrictly true; that no righteous ever periſhed, or were cut off: an innocent perſon is, in that ſence, paſt periſhing; a righteous man is paſt cutting off, John 10. 28. I do give unto them eternal life, and they ſhall never periſh. Rejoyce in this, ye righteous, ye are beyond periſhing, ye are paſt periſhing, while ye live in a periſhing world.

Laſtly, Take it in the fifth ſence, and you may have a further truth, which I conceive, is that which Eliphaz purpoſely aims at; take periſhing, for outward deſtruction, joyned with a total deſertion, and in that ſence, the propoſition of Eliphaz is true alſo; No righteous man, no innocent man ever periſhed, or was ſo cut off with any temporal judgment: The Apoſtle is direct for it (2 Cor. 4. 8, 9.) We are in trouble on every ſide (we ſee trouble which way ſoever we turn) but we are not diſtreſſed; we are perplexed (we are in the briars as well as ungodly men) but not in deſpair (we are in hope ſtill, and if there be hope for us, God is for us:) we are perſecuted, but not forſaken (God is near us, though all the world ſtand aloof) we are caſt down, but not deſtroyed; we ſhall up again. So that, while he admits of periſhing, in the former ſence, reſpecting outward affliction; yet he denies it conſtantly in this latter ſence, ſo as to be cut off quite from the comforts and ſupports of God. That obſervation of David, may be thus underſtood (Pſal. 37. 25.) I have been young, and now am old, yet have I not ſeen the righteous forſaken (he doth not ſay, in my experience I never ſaw the righteous afflicted; but, I never ſaw him left or forſaken in his afflictions) and I never ſaw his ſeed begging their bread: he puts in that, becauſe begging of bread, eſpecially in the Common-wealth of Iſrael, and in the ſtate of the Jews, was a note of utter dereliction; for though God had told them, that they ſhould have the poor alwayes with them, yet he had given an expreſs law, that there ſhould be no beggar among them; therefore, ſaith he, I have not ſeen the righteous ſo forſaken, that they ſhould be forced to live by begging.

Caſus tranſitorii non reddunt mẽdicum.

If any ſay, that David himſelf begged, he asked bread of Abimelech and Nabal. I anſwer, It is a good rule, and it reſolves the caſe; tranſitory caſes, and ſudden accidents, make no beggars: we muſt not ſay, David was a beggar, or begged his bread, becauſe once he was in a ſtraight, and asked bread of Abimelech; and in a ſecond ſtraight, ſent to Nabal: In ſuch ſudden caſes, the richeſt man in the world, may be put to ask a piece of bread. A good man may fall into ſuch wants; but good men are rarely, if ever, or at all, left in them.

Now to apply it particularly to the intent of Eliphaz in this place. We have given three interpretations, in which we have ſhewed, how righteous men may periſh; and two, wherein the righteous cannot poſſibly periſh; in both which, the words here ſpoken by Eliphaz, are a truth. And concerning the fifth and laſt, I conceive, Eliphaz is particularly to be underſtood; for he ſpeaks not here of the eternal eſtate of Job (though that be involved) when he concludeth him a wicked man; but he ſpeaks of the dealings of God in temporals: he look'd upon Job as a loſt man, a man utterly forſaken of his God; as a man of a forlorn hope, cut down, and pluckt up root and branch; when he ſaw his ſtock conſumed, his children ſlain, his body diſeaſed, and his ſpirit ſo diſtempered. And ſo the Minor, or the Aſſumption only is falſe, the Propoſition true: Righteous men do not periſh thus, innocent perſons are not thus cut off; but thou Job periſheſt, and art cut off: hold there, that's falſe; Job, in the ſence Eliphaz intended, periſhed not, was not cut off; for in the ſequel, God gave him both comfort and deliverance; Love was mingled with the affliction, ſtre gth was miniſtred to bear the affliction; and at laſt a gracious way was made out of the affliction. The bleſſing of God cauſed him to ſpring out again; though his goodly branches were broken, and his fruit pluckt off, yet his roots were not pluckt up.

Pſal. 7. 3.
Jer. 12. 1.

It will not be unneceſſary, for the clearing of this Scripture, to ſubjoyn a reaſon, why in the Old Teſtament, or under the old Covenant, there was ſo much ſtumbling at the afflictions and troubles of the righteous; for it put even a David, a Jeremiah, and a Habakkuk hard to it, for an anſwer, when they ſaw ſuch under ſufferings; the reaſon was this, becauſe God, in thoſe times, made more ſpecial temporal promiſes to his people, in caſe of obedience, then he hath done in the times of the Goſpel. Read Deut. 28. Lev. 27. and other places; where you ſhall find, how all the promiſes run upon things that concern the outward man; they ſhall be bleſſed in their basket and in their ſtore, they ſhall have this and that, and all outward things abundantly; and the curſe threatned, was the loſs and deprivation of theſe outward bleſſings, in caſe of diſobedience: For God did win and carry them on in that non-age of the Church, by outward and temporal promiſes; hence they were much troubled and offended, when they ſaw righteous men under heavy preſſures and breaking afflictions. Now ſince the coming of Chriſt in the fleſh, and the powring out of thoſe ſpecial ſpiritual bleſſings upon his people, by the holy Ghoſt, he doth not feed us ſo much with theſe outward hopes or enjoyments. Therefore in the Goſpel, we read what hard meat he giveth his people; foretelling them plainly, If any will follow me, let him deny himſelf, and take up his Croſs; there is ſcarce ſuch a word in all the Old Teſtament as that, he which will follow me, ſhall find a Croſs, and be ſure of perſecution; they were but children, ſuch words and ſights might terrifie them; therefore they were (as it were) dandled on the knee, and allured by ſenſible comforts, a land flowing with milk and honey, if they did obey; and they heard of rods and ſtripes in caſe of ſtubbornneſs and diſobedience: Say to the righteous, it ſhall be well with them, for they ſhall eat the fruit of their doings; wo the wicked, it ſhall be ill with him, &c. Iſa. 3. 10, 11. David ſaith (indeed) many are the troubles of the righteous, but (it is not put among the terms of their ſtate or ſervice) it is not ſaid, if ye will be righteous, ye ſhall have trouble. Moſes never told them, If any will be my Diſciple, let him take up his Croſs, &c. So then, Gods dealings and diſpenſations being moſt in outward things at that time, they were very apt to ſtumble at the Croſs. And there is greater reaſon why they ſhould ſtumble at a molehill, then we at a mountain of trouble; God having told us, that ſeeing he had given us ſuch excellent things in Chriſt, ſuch glorious mercies, and tranſcendent priviledges in the Goſpel, we may well take afflictions and troubles into the bargain, and never ſhrink or ſtrain at them, but rather take them well. So much for that verſe; The righteous are not cut off, neither do innocent perſons periſh.

Ver. 8.

Eliphaz having given Job his turn to ſearch his experiences, brings forth his own, in the next words: Even as I have ſeen, they that plow iniquity, and ſow wickedneſs, reap the ſame: As if he ſhould ſay, Job, I know you are not able to give me one inſtance of a righteous mans periſhing, but I could give you many and many inſtances, I could write whole books concerning wicked men periſhing, and of the ungodly cut off. This he carries under a Metaphor, and by continued Metaphors, makes up an elegant Allegory, in thoſe terms of plowing, ſowing, reaping.

ראה Significat non ſimpliciter videre, ſed curioſè inſpicere.

Even as I have ſeen.] That word notes a curious obſervation, not a light, tranſitory glance of the eye, but a critical conſideration of any thing. As it is ſaid, Gen. 1. 4. God ſaw the light that he had made, God ſaw it diſcerningly; for he found it was very good: and ſo it is ſaid, Gen. 34. 1, 2. that Dinah went forth to ſee the Daughters of the land, that is, curiouſly (though vainly) to obſerve the manners and faſhions of the people; and in the ſame verſe, Hamor the ſon of Sechem ſaw her; he ſaw her ſo exactly, as to be taken with her beauty, his eye entangling his heart, and both entangling his life. So here, Even as I have ſeen, that is, by a diligent inſpection, and judicious conſideration of what I ſaw. And what was that? Myſtical Hubandry.

They that plow iniquity, and ſow wickedneſs, reap the ſame.

חרש
Fodit ſundum, aravit per metaphoram fodit cogitatione, vel intentus fuit rei alicui conficiendæ, ſicut arator præparat terrã ante ſeminatorem.

They that plow iniquity.] The word which we tranſlate, to plow, ſignifies the uſe of any kind of art or manufacture; as the work of a Smith, or of a Carpenter, in Iron, Wood, or Timber; and as the Art, ſo the Artiſt or handicraftsman (Iſa. 44. 12.) is expreſt by this word: The Smith with his tongs, worketh in the coals. And, Zech. 1. 20. it is put for a Carpenter; The Lord ſhewed me four Carpenters: Now here it is applied to the Plowman, and to his plowing. So, Hoſ. 10. 13. Ye have plowed wickedneſs, ye have reaped iniquity, ye have eaten the fruit of lies.

And this plowing of iniquity, or plowing of wickedneſs, takes in both the outward act of ſin (to plow iniquity, is to commit and practiſe iniquity) and the inward act of ſin; to plow iniquity, is as much as to deviſe and meditate iniquity, Prov. 3. 29. Deviſe not (Heb. Plow not) evil againſt thy neighbour. So, Prov. 6. 18. A heart that deviſeth, or ploweth, wicked imaginations. And, Prov. 21. 4. The plowing of the wicked is ſin; that is, whatſoever they deviſe, or whatſoever they do, inſide and outſide, the cloth and linings of their garments are all ſin.

Likewiſe this word denotes, not only ſpeculative evils, but alſo ſecreſie of practice, or a plot carried and acted ſecretly. Thus (2 Sam. 23. 9.) it is ſaid, David knew that Saul ſecretly practiſed evil againſt him; the hebrew is, he knew that Saul plowed evil againſt him. So that it may be taken, either for the meditating of evil, or for a politick cloſe way of effecting any evil or wicked deſign.

And the Scripture elegantly calls the muſing or meditating of ſin, plowing, becauſe a man in meditation (when he would accompliſh any wickedneſs) turns up (as it were) all the corruptions that are in his heart, and all the conveniences that are in the world, to attain his end. As a man that meditates upon any holy thing, upon Chriſt, or Free-grace, &c. turns up all the graces and abilities that are in his ſpirit, he plows up his heart, that he may fetch up the ſtrength, and enjoy the ſweetneſs of them.

So then this plowing noteth two things chiefly; firſt, the pains and labour which wicked men take in ſinful courſes; every one that ſins, doth not plow ſin, or is not a worker (which is an equivalent phraſe) of iniquity. Secondly, It implies the black art and helliſh skill of wicked men in ſinning. To plow, is a skill, and ſo is ſome kind of ſinning (though to ſin in general, be as natural, as to ſee, and needs as little teaching as the ear to hear) ſome men (as we may ſay) are bunglers in ſinning, others are their craftsmaſters at this plough, and can lay a furrow of iniquity ſo ſtrait, do an act of filthineſs ſo cleanly, that you can hardly ſee any thing amiſs in it: Thoſe words in the New Teſtament, to commit ſin, to work iniquity, an abomination, or a lie, Rev. 21. 27, &c. are anſwerable to this in the old Teſtament, a plougher of iniquity.

Qui operantur iniquitatem.

And ſome tranſlate this Text ſo: the vulgar reads it thus, They who work iniquity: All which expreſſions ſet forth, and elegantly deſcribe ſuch, who ſin reſolvedly, induſtriouſly, cunningly, curiouſly, ſuch as have the art (and will ſpare no pains) to do wickedly. Theſe have ſerved an apprentiſhip to their luſts, and are now as Free-men of hell, yet ſtill Satans drudges, and active engineers to plot and execute what God abhors.

Note this further, that plowing in Scripture, refers both to good actions and to bad; there is a plowing for good, the Metaphor is ſo applied, Prov. 4. 27. Do not they err that deviſe evil? (that plow evil) but mercy and truth ſhall be to them that deviſe good (to them that plow good;) the ſame word is uſed in both; and it intimates (as before) both the pains and the skill which a godly man beſtows and ſhews about holy things. The great work of repentance is often Allegorized by plowing; break up the fallow ground. And our obedience to the Goſpel, whether in the profeſſion or preaching of it, is called plowing, Luke 9. 62. He that putteth his hand to the plough, and looks back, is not fit for the Kingdom of God. Grace is as active and as accurate as luſt can be.

It follows, And ſow iniquity, reap the ſame. Eliphaz goes on with the Metaphor; after plowing, comes ſowing, and after ſeed-time, reaping-time or harveſt. Sowing in Scripture is divers wayes applied unto the actions of men.

Firſt, There is a ſowing, which is the work of charity, when we diſpenſe and diſtribute to the help of the poor, eſpecially to the Saints; ſo, 2 Cor. 9, 6. He that ſoweth ſparingly, that is, he that giveth to the poor ſparingly.

Secondly, Sowing is applied to the preaching of the Goſpel, to the ſcattering of the word in at the ears, and into the hearts of men; Luke 8. 5. A ſower went out to ſow.

Thirdly, Sowing is applied unto the burial of the dead, 1 Cor. 15. 42. That which is ſown in weakneſs; the bodies of men are as ſeed in the earth, they ſhall ſpring up again.

Fourthly, Sowing is applied to repenting tears, Pſal. 126. 5. They that ſow in tears, that is, they that go on repenting and mourning, ſhall reap in joy, they ſhall have ſheaves of comfort.

And Fifthly, It is applied generally unto any action good or bad, Gal. 6. 8. He that ſoweth to the fleſh, ſhall of the fleſh reap corruption; and he that ſoweth to the ſpirit, &c. Sowing (as plowing) is uſed in regard of doing good and evil: Sow to your ſelves in righteouſneſs, ſaith the Prophet; and here on the other ſide, They that plough iniquity, and ſow wickedneſs. Here is the progreſs of ſin; ſin goeth on gradually, there is not only a plowing, but a ſowing; ſin is the ſeed, and there is a ſeminal virtue in every ſin; it will ſpring up again, and bring forth an hundred fold more in miſery to the whole man, fleſh and ſpirit, then ever it gave in delights unto the fleſh.

עמל
Seminant dolores. Vulg.

The word which we tranſlate [wickedneſs] ſignifies wearineſs, labour, perverſeneſs; becauſe wicked perſons weary and toil themſelves in ſerving and ſatisfying their luſts, Numb. 23. 21. I have ſeen no perverſeneſs in Iſrael. God did not find them laboriouſly and induſtriouſly wicked at that time. To do wickedly, is a weariſom employment, a hard labour. The vulgar Latine renders it by ſorrow; and ſow ſorrows.

Reap the ſame.] The Apoſtle, 1 Cor. 15. 37. telleth us, That the Husbandman ſoweth not the ſame body that ſhall be; how then is it ſaid, they ſow wickedneſs, and reap the ſame? When they come to the harveſt, what ſhall they have? The ſame, ſaith Eliphaz. It is true; A man that ſoweth, doth not reap the ſame individually or numerically, that is, the very ſame particular ſeed; but he reaps the ſame ſpecifically, the ſame in kind: that's the meaning here; their crop or harveſt ſhall be like their ſeed-time, Gal. 6. 7. Whatſoever a man ſoweth, that ſhall he alſo reap, the ſame in kind, not the ſame in number, Prov. 22. 8. He that ſoweth iniquity, ſhall reap vanity. It is not the ſin it ſelf which is reaped, but the fruit, the product of that ſin, that they ſhall reap; the puniſhment of ſin is the fruit of ſin, and it is called the ſame: Puniſhment is a viſible ſin. Thy way and thy doings have procured theſe things unto thee, this is thy wickedneſs, Jer. 4. 18. The bitter things procured by wickedneſs, are called wickedneſs; as the ſweet fruits of our good works, are called our works, Rev. 14. 13. Bleſſed are the dead that die in the Lord, for they reſt from their labours, and their works follow them: their works follow them, how? Not their works in kind; the very ſame individual works which they have done here, follow them not (for they are tranſient acts, and have no ſubſiſtency) but the fruits of thoſe works, and the bleſſings which lie in the promiſe for ſuch as do thoſe works; theſe fruits, theſe bleſſings follow them: the bleſſings annexed to faith, obedience and holineſs, theſe follow them. So now, when it is ſaid of a wicked man, what a man ploweth and ſoweth, he reapeth the ſame, it is to be underſtood of the ſame thing in the iſſue and conſequents of it, thoſe curſes, thoſe treaſures, that harveſt of wrath, which lie in the threatnings againſt him, theſe are rained down upon him, and are made the portion of his cup.

Again [the ſame] that is, the ſame in degree; if he have ſown much, he ſhall reap much; if he have ſown but little, he ſhall reap but little, he ſhall have his due proportion. The juſtice of God doth neither commute nor compound penalties with wicked men; as it will not wrong or over-charge, ſo neither will it favour or ſpare them in their ſins. God ſpared not his Son, when he was in the place of ſinners, Rom. 8. 32. much leſs will he ſpare any ſinner, who is not in his Son. So much for the opening of theſe words. We ſhall now obſerve ſome things from them.

Even as I have ſeen, they that plough iniquity.

Hence we learn, Firſt, That to be a wicked man is no eaſie task; he muſt go to plough for it.

It is plowing, and you know plowing is laborious, yea it is hard labour. Wicked men in Scripture are called Sons of Belial, that is, ſuch as will not endure the yoke; they will not endure Gods yoke, or the yoke of Chriſt, though it be an eaſie yoke: but they are content ſlaviſhly to yield their (otherwiſe) proud and delicate necks to Satans yoke, to tug and ſweat at his plough all their days. There is a promiſe, in the Prophet, of a time, when ſwords ſhall be turned into plough-ſhares, and ſpears into pruning-hooks; that is, men ſhall leave fighting and go to working, they ſhall have peace: and there are many in the World, who would break their ſwords into theſe myſtical plough-ſhares, and their ſpears into ſinning hooks; they would have peace, why? that they might leave fighting and go to ſinning, that they might work wickedneſs more quickly, and keep cloſe to their Trade, the ploughing of iniquity without diſturbance.

Belial, deduci poteſt à בלי q. e. Non & עול q. e. Jugum, ut ſignificetur impatientia Jugi. Hieron.

Secondly, Obſerve, That, there is an art in wickedneſs.

It is ploughing, or, as the word imports, an artificial working. Some are curious and exact in ſhaping, polliſhing and ſetting off their ſin: ſo the Holy Ghoſt intimates, Rev. 21. 27. Whoſoever worketh abomination, and maketh a lye: There is but one Verb in the Greek, and ſo we may read it full enough in our language, whoſoever worketh an abomination and a lye; to work an abomination or a lye, is more then to do an abomination, or tell a lye. As when we ſay, ſuch a man is a Clockmaker, it notes Art, as well as action. So to ſay, ſuch a man is an Abomination-worker, or a Lye-maker, notes him not only induſtrious, but crafty, or (as the Prophet ſpeaks) wiſe to do evil.

ποιῶν βδέλυγμα καὶ ψεῦδος.

Thirdly, Note from theſe Metaphors, of ploughing and ſowing,

That, wicked men expect benefit in wayes of ſin, and look to be gainers being by evil doers.

They make iniquity their plough; and a mans plough is ſo much his profit, that it is grown into a Proverb, to call that (whatſoever it is) by which a man makes his living or his profit, His plough. And when we ſay, there are many candles burning, and never a plough going: It is to tax unthriftineſs or careleſs ſpending, without honeſt care of getting. Every man tills in expectation of a crop; who would put his plough into the ground to receive nothing? The Apoſtle argues from this, as a dictate of nature, (1 Cor. 9. 10.) He that ploweth, ploweth in hope. And James 5. 7. The husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth; having beſtowed his labour, he doth not count it labour loſt. It is even ſo with wicked men, when they are ſinning, they think themſelves thriving, or laying up that in the earth a while, which will grow and increaſe to a plentiful harveſt. What ſtrange fancies have many to be rich, to be great, by wayes of wickedneſs? Thus they plow in hope, but they ſhall never be partakers of their hope: yea, they ſhall be aſhamed of their hope, their ſin will deceive them. And that which will make their poverty moſt burthenſom, is their hope of riches; the expectation they had to gain, will make their loſs, their breaking, and their undoing, intollerable.

Fourthly, Obſerve from theſe Metaphors,

That, every ſinful act perſiſted in, ſhall have a certain ſorrowful reward.

It ſhall aſſuredly be anſwered with judgment, tribulation, and anguiſh: Aſſuredly it ſhall. Are not plowing and ſeed-time an aſſurance of the harveſt? They that go forth vainly rejoycing, bearing that poyſonous ſeed, ſhall doubtleſs come again, and bring their ſheaves of ſorrow with them. That which God promiſed (Gen. 8. 22.) in regard of natural husbandry, he hath threatned in regard of this myſtical husbandry: after the Flood he promiſed, that while the Earth remained, Summer and Winter, Seed time and Harveſt ſhould not ceaſe. So it is here, only with this difference, the Lord uſeth all means to diſſwade and prevent the ſeed-time of ſin. But when notwithſtanding all thoſe threatnings, men will be ſowing iniquity, he hath made an everlaſting Decree (as firm in its kind, as that about the waters of Noah) that Harveſt ſhall follow, and every ſuch ſoul ſhall both reap and eat, the fruit of his ſinful plowing and ſowings.

Fifthly Obſerve, That, the puniſhment of ſin may come long after the committing of ſin.

The one is the ſeed-time, and the other a reaping-time; there is a great diſtance of time between ſowing and reaping. The ſeeds of ſin may lie many years under the furrowes. A man may commit a ſin in his youth, and not find the harveſt of it till his old age. How many (as Job complains, but in a worſe ſence then he) in their old age, are made to poſſeſs the ſins of their youth, and feel that which they have forgot? The Husbandman (in that place before mentioned, James 5. 7.) waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath long patience for it: and through the long patience of God, ſome wicked men (though they thought their ſins not ſowed, but buried for ever, and never deſire to ſee or hear of them; yet (in a ſence) ſome wicked men, I ſay) wait long for the noxious fruit of their own hearts.

Sometimes indeed the ſeed-time and harveſt of ſin, are found in the ſame hour: and while a man hath ſcarce ended his ſin, his puniſhment begins. The Prophet deſcribing the plenty and proſperity of the Church in the latter dayes, tells us, that the plough-man ſhall overtake the reaper, and the treader of grapes, him that ſoweth the ſeed. The returns of ſin are to ſome as quick and plentiful, judgment rides poſt after them, the reaper overtakes the ſower, or the man reaps as ſoon as he hath ſowed: wrath arreſts him in the very act of ſinning. And we may ſay, as Eliſha in another caſe, Is not the ſound of his maſters feet behind him? The ſound of puniſhment is at the very heels of ſin. That black Oxe comes as ſwift as a Leopard, treading upon his heels: And though ſometimes it comes ſlowly as an Oxe, yet alwayes it treads hardeſt, when it comes ſloweſt. A wicked man may commit evil an hundred times, and his dayes (of peace) be prolonged, for his harveſt of wrath (like Habbakkuks viſion of mercy) is for an appointed time, but in the end it will not lye, (though he would tarry for it) it will not tarry. The natural harveſt belies (ſc. failes) ſome mens hopes; but this myſtical harveſt ſhall not bely his fears (if he have any) it ſhall bely his preſumption, how much ſoever he hath.

Amos 9. 13

2 King. 6. 32.

Eccleſ. 8.

Spem mentita ſeges.

Sixthly Obſerve, That, the puniſhment of ſin ſhall be proportionable to the degrees of ſin.

He ſhall reap, the ſame, ſaith the Text, the ſame in degree. So the Scripture ſpeaks, and ſo experience teacheth concerning natural ſowing; a mans harveſt is gradually ſuch, as is his ſeed-time, if he have ſowen much (as an ordinary courſe) he ſhall reap much: The Apoſtle alludes to this, where he ſpeaks of the ſeed of charity, If ye ſow ſparingly, ye ſhall reap ſparingly; on the other ſide, if ye ſow plentifully, ye ſhall reap plentifully. Sometimes through the judgment of God, (which can eaſily break thorow the principles of nature) it cometh to paſs, as it is Hag. 1. 6. Ye ſow much, and reap little: God makes the Harveſt thin and lean, when the ſeed-time was thick and plentiful; but in regard of ſinning (I ſpeak of ſuch as go on impenitently in their ſins, and have not Chriſt to take off their ſin from them) ſuch perſons as ſow much, ſhall be ſure to reap much: They ſhall be beaten with many ſtripes, who impenitently multiply their tranſgreſſions.

2 Cor. 9. 6.

Seventhly Obſerve, Puniſhment ſhall not exceed the deſert of ſin.

They reap the ſame; The ſame, equal in degree or quantity, not beyond the degree of ſinning. In nature, the corn reap't is more then the corn ſown; ſometimes an hundred fold, ſometimes ſixty, ſometimes thirty; as Chriſt ſpeaks, in the Parable of the Sower, Matth. 13. But the puniſhment of ſin reaped, is not a grain more then the ſin committed. All the puniſhments of this life, are leſs then ſin, as Ezra confeſſeth, After all that is come upon us for our evil deeds, and for our great treſpaſs, ſeeing that thou our God haſt puniſhed us leſs then our iniquity, &c. Chap. 9. 13.

9. 13. And in the life to come, the damned ſhall not be puniſhed more then ſin deſerveth; yea, I may ſay (with reverence to his Almighty power) God cannot puniſh a ſin, beyond that proportion which it deſerveth; and the reaſon is this, Infinite power, cannot inflict a puniſhment, beyond that which infinite juſtice doth require: Infinite juſtice is offended, and muſt be ſatisfied (if not ſatisfied by Chriſt) then by the perſon himſelf offending; therefore, infinite power cannot lay upon a man, more then his ſin doth deſerve, though it may eaſily lay more upon him then his nature can endure. So then, all that wicked men bear in this life, is leſs, and all they ſhall bear in Hell, will not be more then the deſerts of ſin, or the demands of Juſtice.

An objection may ſeem to lye againſt this, from that Rev. 18. 6. award of judgment againſt Babylon: Double to her double, according to her works; It may ſeem that her harveſt of puniſhment muſt exceed in double proportion, her ſeed Pſal. 79. 12. time of ſinning: The Pſalmiſt ſpeaks yet higher, Render unto your neighbours ſevenfold into their boſom, their reproach, wherewith they have reproached thee O Lord. Render ſevenfold, that is, manifold: That number in Scripture, multiplies the ſence into any number; To render ſevenfold, may be rendred the greateſt number.

I anſwer, Babylons puniſhment ſhall be double, reſpecting what Babylon ſhall have acted; but not double, reſpecting what Babylon ſhall have deſerved: Give to her double; if it be poſſible, let her have as much blood more to drink as ſhe hath ſpilt, for ſhe deſerveth to drink an hundred times more. The blood of Saints is precious blood; one drop of the blood of Sion, is more worth then a whole ocean of the blood of Babylon, therefore give her double; though it be more in quantity, it is not ſo much in value. And ſo reward our neighbours that have reproached thee, ſevenfold, it is not ſevenfold beyond their deſerts; for one ſcorn that a wicked man poureth upon a Child of God (and ſo upon God, for that's the meaning of the Pſalm) cannot be recompenſed with ten thouſand reproaches poured upon wicked men. Reproach is the due of ungodly men here, and everlaſting reproach ſhall be their portion hereafter. But the leaſt reproach caſt upon God is an infinite wrong; and the reproach of his people is ſo much his, that he reckons it as his own: And will therefore take away all reproach from his people, and render to their unkind neighbours, their reproach ſevenfold (and that's but equal) into their boſoms.

Laſtly, When it is ſaid, They ſhall reap the ſame: We are taught,

That, the puniſhment of ſin, ſhall be like the ſin in kind.

It ſhall be the ſame, not only in degree, but alſo in likeneſs. Puniſhment often bears the image and ſuperſcription of ſin upon it. You may ſee the fathers face and feature in the child. Whatſoever a man ſoweth, that ſhall he alſo reap, ſaith the Apoſtle, Gal. 6. 7. If a man ſow wheat, he ſhall reap wheat; the harveſt tells you what kind of grain was ſowed in every field: If a man ſows wheat, he ſhall not reap tares; and if a man ſow tares, he ſhall not reap wheat. Thus God often returns the ſin of man upon him: ſin comes to him in his own likeneſs, and he may read the name of it ſtampt upon the affliction; or by the judgment inflicted, interpret the wickedneſs committed: This was openly confeſſed by Adonibezek, (Judg. 1. 7.) As I have done, ſo God hath requited me, juſt ſo; and what was that? He ſpeaks out in the former words: Threeſcore and ten Kings, having their thumbs and their great toes cut off, gathered their meat under my table: There was his ſowing, his reaping was the ſame; they caught him (ſaith the Text) and cut off his thumbs, and his great toes. The very firſt Law that was formally made and publiſhed after the fall, was a Law of Retaliation, or of Counterpaſſion, Gen. 6. 9. Whoſoever ſheddeth mans blood, (what ſhall he reap?) By man ſhall his blood be ſhed, he muſt reap the ſame: The Judicials of Moſes are plain for this, Exod. 21. 24. Eye for eye, and tooth for tooth, &c. Deut 32. 21 They have moved me to jealouſie, ſaith the Lord, by that which is not God; and I will move them to jealouſie, by thoſe who are not a people. Like as ye have forſaken me, and ſerved ſtrange Gods in your Land, ſo ſhall ye ſerve ſtrangers in a Land which is not yours, Jerem. 5. 19. God payeth them in their own coin. Who ſo ſtoppeth his ears at the cry of the poor, he alſo ſhall cry himſelf, but ſhall not be heard, Prov. 21. 13. And ſo concerning the preaching of the word, contemned, (Zach. 7. 13.) Therefore it is come to paſs, that as he cryed, and they would not hear; ſo they cryed, and I would not hear, ſaith the Lord of hoſts: They reap as they ſowed: they would not hear, that was their ſin; they ſhall not be heard, that's the puniſhment; they ſhall ſee how good it is to be wilfully deaf, when God commands, by his being judicially deaf, when they complain. The Sodomites had a fire, of unnatural luſt among them, and God ſent a ſhower of fire unnaturally from Heaven (fire deſcending croſſeth the courſe of nature) to deſtroy them. The Egyptians killed the Iſraelitiſh Children, that was the ſeed they ſowed, they reap the ſame; God ſlew their Children, even all their firſt-born in one night. Nadab and Abihu offered ſtrange fire, there was their wickedneſs; they reaped the ſame; God by fire from Heaven, in a ſtrange manner, ſlew them in a moment.

Yea, we find the Lord ſometimes dealing thus with his own dear ſervants, he will cauſe them to reap that which they have ſown in kind; David had defiled his neighbours wife, Therefore, ſaith the Lord, I will take thy wives from before thine eyes, and give them to thy neighbour, and he ſhall lye with thy wives, in the ſight of this Sun. 2 Sam. 12. 11. Again, the Lord tells him, Thou haſt ſlain Uriah with the ſword of the Children of Ammon, therefore the ſword ſhall never depart from thine houſe. You ſee, here was ſword for ſword, and defilement for defilement, even holy David reaped the ſame which he had ſowed. It is very remarkable, which is reported in the Hiſtory of the Church, by Socrates, concerning Valens the Emperor, Socrat. Hiſt. Eccl. l. 4. c. 3. who was a great perſecuter of the orthodox Chriſtians, and a maintainer of Arrianiſm: The ſtory tells us, that in his wars againſt the Gothes, he was overthrown, and hiding himſelf in a little cottage, the enemy came by, burnt it, and him together: Now ſee, how God in this, gave him to reap what he had ſown: for when fourſcore of the orthodox ſayled from Conſtantinople to Nicomedia, to treat with him, about the points of Arrianiſm, and to ſettle the matter by way of diſpute: The Emperor hearing of their approach, while they were in the haven, and before they could come on ſhore, cauſed the Ships to be fired wherein they were, and ſo conſumed them all. Here was burning for burning. And it is obſerved (in the French Hiſtory) that Charles the ninth of France, who Anno 1572. was the contriver of that great Maſſacre in Paris, wherein ſo many thouſand Proteſtants were forced through a Red Sea, a Sea of blood, to their reſt in Canaan: This bloody King, at laſt dyed himſelf, by a ſtrange eruption of blood from all the paſſages of his body; thus he had alſo reaped what he had ſown; he had poured out blood, and his blood was poured out. It were eaſie to give you plenty of inſtances, bearing witneſs of this accurate juſtice of God. Examples were frequent in Job's time, you ſee Eliphaz had ſtore of theſe in his note-book, Even as I have ſeen, they that plow iniquity, and ſow wickedneſs, reap the ſame.

VERS. 9, 10, 11.

By the blaſt of God they periſh, and by the breath of his noſtrils are they conſumed.
The roaring of the Lion, and the voice of the fierce Lion, and the teeth of the young Lions are broken.
The old Lion periſheth for lack of pray, and the ſtout Lions whelps are ſcattered abroad.

ELiphaz having given an account of his obſervation, in general, that he had often ſeen wicked men periſh, verſ. 8. In theſe three verſes, he illuſtrates his obſervation, by an elegant deſcription of the manner how, or the power by which wicked men periſh and are cut off; namely, by the blaſt of God, ver. 9. By the blaſt of God they periſh, and by the breath of his noſtrils are they conſumed: and leſt any ſhould think, that this blaſt of God carries away only ſtraws and feathers, light and weak perſons into perdition, he adds the weightieſt and the ſtrongeſt: The roaring of the Lion, and the teeth of the young Lions are broken. God by his blaſt can take away, or break, the ſtrongeſt, the mightieſt, Lion-like men, men fierce like Lions, and ſtout like the Lions whelp. Under the ſhadow of which alluſions, he cloſely ſtrikes at Job, who was once a great man, the greateſt of all the men in the Eaſt; a fierce ſpoiling Lion (in the apprehenſion of his friends) and yet God brought him down. This in brief, is the illuſtration of the argument, in theſe three verſes, By the blaſt of God they periſh, &c.

Eliphaz (having in the former verſe, by the metaphor of plowing, ſowing and reaping, ſet forth the actings and expectations, the iſſues and ſucceſſes of wicked men) here (as ſome conceive) continues the metaphor or the Allegory, by this expreſſion of blaſting, which (we know) is often uſed in reference to the ſeed ſown: As if Eliphaz had ſaid, when theſe men have plowed and ſowed, when they are in expectation of a fruitful and plentiful harveſt, then God blaſteth the ſeed, and the ſeeds-man too; he ſendeth forth his rough wind, which dryeth up and withereth ſtalk and ear, the Counſel and the Counſellors: And though blaſting ſpoil or prevent reaping in an ordinary ſence, yet blaſting may be reaping (as here) in a figurative ſence: They who ſow iniquity, are often puniſhed by reaping diſappointments, which is the blaſting of their hopes, and the conſumption of their confidences.

Blaſting of corn and fruits, is often ſpoken of in the Old Teſtament (as 1 Kings 8. 37.) If there be in the Land blaſting and mildew. Amos 4.9. I have ſmitten you with blaſting and mildew: And a people ſpoiled by the ſword, and conſumed by war, are compared to corn blaſted before it be grown up, Iſa. 37. 27. But the word in the Original, for blaſting corn, is different from this in the Text: The root of that, ſignifies to dry up, or cauſe to wither; this to breath, as a man breaths with his noſtrils; By the breath of his noſtrils, or (as we tranſlate) by the blaſt of his noſtrils: So in the deſcription of mans Creation, Gen. 2. 7. Moſes ſaith, God breathed into his noſtrils the breath of life, or the blaſt of life.

שרכה Herba percuſſa uredine eſt percuſſio ſementis vento orientali ingrediente ſpicas; adeo ut non perficiant maturitatem ſuam, Rab. David. in lib. rad.

This blaſting, or blaſt of God, is ſometime put for a ſtorm or mighty tempeſt ſuddenly raiſed up by the Power of God. Thus (Exod. 15. 8.) Moſes relating the ſudden deſtruction of the Egyptians in the Red Sea, ſaith, with the blaſt of thy noſtrils, the waters were gathered together, the floods ſtood upright as an heap, &c. that is, with the wind which God ſent out, as his inſtrument, he gathered the waters to ſwallow up the Egyptians, and ſave his own people. And we find the word (Iſa. 25. 4.) uſed to denote the furious blaſting violence of wicked men, in the day of their rage and madneſs againſt the Church. When the blaſt of the terrible ones is as a ſtorm againſt the wall, thou ſhalt bring down the noiſe of ſtrangers, as the heat in a dry place, &c.

נשמה from נשם Anhelavit.

By the blaſt of God.] God in this act of vengeance againſt the plowers of wickedneſs, is preſented to us in his Name, Eloah, which ſignifies, the mighty or puiſſant God: So Mr. Broughton tranſlates it, By the breath of the puiſſant they periſh. The ſtrong God, or God in his ſtrength, comes armed againſt ſtrong tranſgreſſors. The effect ſhews the ſtrength of this blaſt; For,

By his blaſt they periſh, ſaith the Text; it is the word uſed before: they are not only a little withered or ſcorched, but they are utterly conſumed, they are deſtroyed, root and branch, head and tail, as in one day.

The next words in the Text, by the breath of his noſtrils they are conſumed, are but the repeating of the ſame thing; yet there is a conſiderable difference in the expreſſions. By the breath of his noſtrils.] The word (Ruach) which we there tranſlate breath, ſignifies generally, ſpirit, ghoſt, breath or wind; ſometime the Holy Ghoſt, who is breathed from the Father and Son: The breath of God put alone, notes the wrath of God, Iſa, 30. 33. Tophet is prepared of old, &c. the breath of the Lord, (ſc. the wrath of the Lord) like a ſtream of brimſtone, doth kindle it. This phraſe alſo, The breath of Gods noſtrils, ſignifies the anger and wrath of God. And the anger of God, is called the breath of his noſtrils, after the manner of men and other creatures; becauſe anger breaths out at their noſtrils: The Naturaliſts obſerve, that anger inflaming the ſpirit, and heating the heart, frequent breathing follows (as it were) to cool the fire, and to eaſe that inflammation; an angry man breaths quick and ſhort: When Saul was enraged and mad with malice againſt the Saints, he is ſaid, To breath out threatnings and ſlaughter, Acts 9. 1. therefore alſo, anger is called, the breath of Gods noſtrils.

מרוחאבו

Animalia commota, ſpirant vehementius, & narium flatu iram indicant.

Further it is conſiderable, that the word noſtril, is put alone for the wrath of God: Pſal. 95. 11. He ſware in his noſtril, that is (as we tranſlate it) he ſware in his wrath, that they ſhould not enter into his reſt. Likewiſe Pſal. 2. 12. If his wrath be kindled but a little: The Hebrew is, if his noſe or noſtril be kindled but a little; the noſtril, being an Organ of the body, in which wrath ſhews it ſelf, is put for wrath it ſelf. Paleneſs and ſnuffing of the noſe, are ſymptomes of anger. In our proverbials, to take a thing in ſnuff, is to take it in anger. Again, in Scripture we find that ſlowneſs to anger, and haſtineſs to be angry, are expreſt by the different frame of the noſtrils; as namely, when the Lord is ſaid to be ſlow in anger; the Hebrew is, long of noſtrils: (Pſal. 103. 8.) The Lord is ſlow to anger, or, (Exod. 34. 6.) long-ſuffering. In both places, the Original is, long of noſtrils, that is, of anger, or long ere he be angry. On the other ſide, a paſſionate, cholerick man, a man ready to conceive anger, is ſaid to have a ſtrait or ſhort noſtril; He that is ſoon angry dealeth fooliſhly, Prov. 14. 17. the Hebrew is, he that hath a ſhort or a narrow noſtril, dealeth fooliſhly; becauſe ſuch men are moſt apt to conceive anger: So then, while Eliphaz ſaith, By the breath of his noſtrils they are conſumed, it is, as if he had ſaid, by the wrath and diſpleaſure of God they are conſumed; and the Septuagint tranſlate it, directly by anger; They are conſumed by the breath, or ſpirit of his anger; So others in the Latine, They are conſumed by the ſpirit of his fury. And both theſe words, breath and blaſt, are found together in one place, 2 Sam. 22. 16. At the blaſt of the breath of his noſtrils; the whole verſe runneth thus, The channels of the Sea appeared, the foundations of the earth were diſcovered, at the rebuking of the Lord, at the blaſt of the breath of his noſtrils, that is, at the great diſpleaſure of the Lord.

In naſo enim ira apparet, ex vehementiore ſpiratione, & potiſſimum ex remiſſione aut dilatatione nariū ira conſpicitur.

ארך אפ

קצר אפים Brevis narium, i. e. præceps ad iram.

ἀπὸ πνεύματ۬ος ὀργῆς. Sept. Spiritu furoris ejus deficiunt.

So, we ſee, what we are here to underſtand, by the breath and by the blaſt of the Lord. And in this paſſage, Eliphaz ſeems to hint at the manner of the death of Job's children, who were deſtroyed by the ſtrength of a mighty wind, ſmiting the four corners of the houſe ſo, that it fell upon them: that wind may well be called the breath and the blaſt of God, both in regard of the wonder and ſtrangeneſs of it, as alſo becauſe (though Satan was the inſtrument) he had the ordering and diſpoſing of it. Satans breath, all the wind he can raiſe, cannot blow away a feather, unleſs the Lord give and continue leave and ſtrength to do it.

Obſerve Firſt, God can eaſily deſtroy wicked men.

He doth it by a blaſt, or by a breath. Though, to themſelves and others, they appear as great Mountains, yet before God they are but as duſt, or chaff of the Mountains; by a blaſt or by a breath, he ſcatters and conſums them: So David compares them (Pſal. 1. 4.) The ungodly are not ſo, (not ſo? how? they are not as a tree planted by the waters ſide, that is the portion of the righteous; how are the ungodly then?) they are as the chaff, that the wind ſcattereth or driveth away; the beſt of them, the moſt ſolid of them are no better. And (Iſa. 17. 13.) The Nations ſhall be chaſed, as the chaff of the mountains before the wind, and as a rolling thing before the whirl-wind. Though Nations, mighty, ſtrong, powerful Nations come out againſt God, and his people, fear them not. For if God ſet himſelf againſt them, they are no more before him, then a little chaff, he ſcatters them by the breath of his diſpleaſure.

You know it is no trouble, for a man to breathe, or to make a blaſt with his mouth; and this phraſe is uſed, to ſhew with what eaſe and facility God deſtroyes all the plots and counſels of wicked men; it putteth him to no pain, no ſweating, no travel or labor, to do it; men are put to much expence of pains, and run many hazzards, to oppoſe the wickedneſs of men: but God doth it with a breath. (2 King. 19. 7.) When God ſent to Hezekiah, to aſſure him that he would deliver him from Sennacherib, he not only promiſeth to do it, but ſhews him how he will do it, even as in this Text, Behold, I will ſend a blaſt upon him: that's all I will do, I will not trouble my ſelf much about the buſineſs; you muſt gather armies and make great preparations againſt the enemy, but I will do it with a blaſt.

And which is yet more ſpeedy; Some underſtand this blaſt to note only the will and pleaſure, the intent or purἀπὸ προςτάγματος κυρίου.

poſe of God, by the blaſt of God they periſh, that is, if he do but will it, it is done; it is no more for him to act it, then intend it. The Septuagint tranſlate near this ſence, by the command of God they periſh; as if Eliphaz had ſaid, it is as eaſie for God to do it, as to ſay it ſhall, or to command it to be done. Men can command great things, and talk much what they will do; and all proves but talking and commanding: One man may command more in an hour, then a million can do in a year; but with God, it is all one, to command and accompliſh. It is noted for a high ſpeech, that of Cæſar to Metellus, who oppoſing him, when he came into the Roman Treaſury, to take the money there heaped together; Cæſar (whoſe great ſpirit could not bear oppoſition) ſaith to him, Let me alone, or I will lay thee dead upon the ground; and preſently, at once to qualifie that threat, and magnifie his own power, adds, Young man, it is harder for me to ſpeak this, then to do it. It is moſt certainly ſo with God, he can as eaſily do any thing, as ſpeak it. Yet further, we find the eaſineſs of Gods deſtroying his enemies ſet forth, a degree higher, he doth it by a look; as by a blaſt of his noſtrils, ſo by a caſt of his eye; that's a ſmall trouble, and that's all that it needs coſt God to deſtroy the ſtrongeſt, the vileſt and violenteſt foe in the world: Thus he conſumed the hoſt of Pharoah, even with a look, (Exod. 14. 24.) It came to paſs that in the morning-watch, the Lord looked upon the hoſt of the Egyptians, through the pillar of fire and of the cloud, and troubled the hoſt of the Egyptians. If God hide his face from his people, they are troubled; and if he look upon his enemies, they are troubled. He darts out both beams of life, and beams of death from his eyes. When a godly man is afflicted, if he can but get the Lord to look upon his trouble, he is delivered. And when wicked men proſper, if God do but look upon their glory, they are withered. With ſuch eaſe doth the Scripture expreſs the deſtruction of wicked ones, it is by a breath, by a word, by a command, by a look: An intimation from the eye of God is execution.

Secondly note, God can ſuddenly deſtroy the counſels, and the plottings, the ploughings, and the ſowings of wicked men.

In proverbial ſpeaking, to do a thing ſuddenly, and to do a thing with a breath, are the ſame: God can as ſoon deſtroy his enemies, as a man can breath, Pſal. 73. 10. How are they brought into deſolation in a moment! A blaſt, you know, is gone in a moment, Iſa. 42. 9. Theſe two things ſhall come upon thee in a moment, loſs of Children, and widowhood. God can with one breath, blow away both the husband and the children. So (Jer. 4. 20.) The Church of the Jews ſpeaks thus, Deſtruction upon deſtruction is cried, for the whole Land is ſpoiled, ſuddenly are my tents ſpoiled, and my curtains in a moment: God doth but blow upon the tents, and preſently the cords break, and the ſtakes thereof are looſned. If man be angry, he muſt ſit down and conſult, he muſt lay his plot and contrive a way of revenge: But no ſooner is God angry, but he can revenge. That wrath cannot want an inſtrument, which can make one. Infinite wiſdom ſees all means at once, and infinite power can uſe them at once. As the grace of God knows not long delayes, it comes ſwiftly, as a ſweet blaſt or holy breath; Grace is ſpeedy, and upon the wing; ſo likewiſe the wrath of God knows no tedious long delayes: They who do wickedly, and ſtand out impenitently, ſhall periſh ſuddenly. And though the Lord be ſlow to anger before he ſtrikes, yet when he ſtrikes, he can do it at once; it is but a blaſt of his wrath, and a breath of his diſpleaſure, and the ſtouteſt of the ſons of men are dried like a leaf.

Neſcit tarda molimina Spiritus ſancti gratia.

Thirdly note, That, God deſtroyeth wicked men ſecretly and inviſibly.

To deſtroy by a breath, is a cloſe way of deſtroying. So, (Hag. 1. 9.) his anger is expreſt againſt his own people, for neglecting his Ordinances and Temple; Ye looked for much, but lo, it came to little; and when ye brought it home, I did blow upon it, that is, I ſent an inviſible and ſecret curſe upon it.

Laſtly, We may obſerve from the manner of this deſtruction,

That, The deſtruction of wicked men, the plowers of iniquity, is unavoidable.

It is done by a breath; now the wind bloweth where it liſteth, no man can countermand or ſtop the wind. The wind is ſwift, as well as ſtrong; no man can out-run the ſtorm of Gods diſpleaſure. He that fleeth of them, ſhall not flee away (for it is a wind that followeth them) and he that eſcapeth of them, ſhall not be delivered; it is a blaſt that is gone out after them: they cannot deliver themſelves by art or cunning, by wit or policy; they cannot deceive or cozen the wind; they cannot deliver themſelves by power or ſtrength; they cannot conquer or overcome this wind: it comes ſuddenly, inviſibly, irreſiſtably; who can ſtand before God when he is angry? yea, who knoweth the power of his wrath or blaſt?

Am. 9. 1, 2.

This Eliphaz goes on to ſhew, in verſ. 10, 11. and therefore takes his inſtance from thoſe creatures which are mightieſt, which are ſtrongeſt. The roaring of the Lion, and the voice of the fierce Lion, and the teeth of the young Lion are broken; the old Lion periſheth for lack of prey, and the ſtout Lions whelps are ſcattered abroad.

The expreſſions are very various. Here are five words in theſe two verſes, ſignifying the Lion, yet with a difference and ſpecial reference to the ſeveral ages and conditions of the Lion. 1. The Lion. 2. The fierce Lion. 3. The young Lion. 4. The old Lion. 5. And the ſtout Lion. We have theſe five ſeveral words in our tranſlation, and we give epithites to four of them; whereas in the hebrew they are all ſingle terms, as we ſhall ſee in a brief touch upon them.

Leonum nomina plura ſunt, & ſecundum ætatis gradus diſtinguuntur. Buxtor. lex. 1. Arieh. 2. Shacal. 3. Cephir. 4. Laiſh. 5. Laby.

אריה from ארה carpſit, decerpſit; alii deducunt ab ארי Leo & ראה vidit, quaſi leo videns, quia ſemper eſt oculis intentus ad prædam.

First, The Lion (Arieh) which name is given the Lion, to note his power in renting and tearing; and Mr. Broughton renders it ſo, the roaring of the renting Lion, putting the etymologie or notation of the word into the tranſlation. Others derive it from Arie, a Lion, and Raah, which ſignifieth to ſee, and then it is as much as the Lion-ſeer; and the reaſon of this derivation is given from the Lions watchfulneſs, he is ever intent upon his prey; and, as ſome Naturaliſts obſerve, ſleeps with his eyes open. So that this word entitles him, either from his watchfulneſs, the Lion-ſeer; or from his ſtrength, the Lion-renter.

שחל Leo ferox vel immanis, mediæ ætatis.

The ſecond is a primitive, ſignifying, ſometimes a Leopard, and ſometimes a Lioneſs, or ſhe-Lion. We render it a fierce Lion, which may well refer to the former, becauſe a ſhe-Lion, eſpecially when ſhe hath young ones, is exceeding fierce.

The third word it is (Cephir) a young Lion, and it is ſometimes uſed as an epithete (Cephir Arieh) a young Lion roared on Samſon, Judg. 14. 5.

The fourth word is (Laiſh) ſignifying a Lion, that is grown in years, which periſhes for hunger, not being able to hunt and get prey. So the Text, The old Lion periſhes for lack of prey.

Quaſi leonẽ cordatum & animoſũ dicas. Buxt.

And the fifth word is (Laby) which ſignifies a Lion in greateſt ſtrength and fierceneſs. And the Criticks tell us, it is derived from (Leb) which ſignifieth the heart, as noting a ſtrong-hearted and a couragious Lion; and ſo Mr. Broughton tranſlates, for ſtout Lion, the heart-ſtrong Laby. Judah being compared to this Lion, by dying Jacob, is ſet forth by his majeſtick ſtoutneſs: Judah is a Lions whelp, &c. And as an old Lion, who ſhall rouze him up? Gen. 49. 9.

Theſe ſeveral ſorts of Lions ſhadow out unto us, mighty, ſtrong and powerful wicked men, or plowers of wickedneſs, with all related to them, they and their families, they and their wives, they and their children; all theirs are uſually full of Lion-like qualities, and all theſe ſhall be deſtroyed and periſh, by the blaſt, by the breath of God.

For, as the Apoſtle puts the queſtion in another caſe, about Oxen, Doth God take care for Oxen? So if any ſhould queſtion here, is God angry with Lions? Doth he oppoſe himſelf againſt Lions, that he ſaith here, The Lion ſhall periſh, the young and the old Lions ſhall be deſtroyed?

No, There is a further meaning in it, ſomewhat elſe is ſhadowed under the name or notion of Lions. Firſt, In Scripture, the Lion ſignifies any one in authority, eſpecially in Kingly authority (Gen. 49. 10.) The Tribe of Judah (which was to have the Scepter and the Rule, the Magiſtracy or Government being ſetled in that Tribe) is compared to a Lion; Judah is a Lions whelp, from the prey my ſon, thou art gone up: he ſtooped down, he couched as a Lion, and as an old Lion, who ſhall rouze him up? As Lions are chief, the moſt eminent among the beaſts of the field, ſo

Kings and Magiſtrates are chief, the moſt eminent among the ſons of men. Chriſt is called the Lion of the Tribe of Judah, from the prerogative of his power, and the excellency of his Kingly condition above all others, his name being King of Kings, and Lord of Lords. Secondly, The Devil is compared to a Lion, he is called a roaring Lion, becauſe of his cruelty and devouring nature; He goeth about like a roaring Lion ſeeking whom he may devour. And the Lions here in the text (how old ſoever they be) are whelps of this old Lion, the Devil: not great men in general, but wicked great men, men mighty in power, and mighty in ſin, mighty ſinners. It is frequent in Scripture, to ſhadow out powerful, wicked, tyrannical men by the name of Lions; and the reaſon is, becauſe they imitate the qualities and conditions of the Lion. A man acts by reaſon, and a beaſt acts by ſenſe and paſſion: Reaſon is the difference between a man and a beaſt; therefore when a man acts againſt reaſon, or without reaſon, the name of a beaſt is juſtly put upon him; and the name of that beaſt moſt fitly, whoſe qualities and paſſions he moſt reſembles. Man in regard of his headſtrong unrulineſs, is compared to a horſe and to a mule, Pſal. 32. 9. Be not as the Horſe or as the Mule which have no underſtanding, whoſe mouth muſt be held in with bit and bridle: Be not unruly. For ſubtilty, man is called a Fox; for flattery or filthineſs, a Dog or a Swine; and here, for rapine and cruelty, a Lion. Thus the Prophet Nahum elegantly, chap. 2. 11, 12. Where is the dwelling place of the Lions, and the feeding place of the young Lions? that is, where is the dwelling place of oppreſſors and cruel tyrants? And, Ezek. 19. 1, 2. Take up a lamentation for the Princes of Iſrael, and ſay, what is thy Mother? a Lioneſs, ſhe lay down among Lions, ſhe nouriſhed her whelps among young Lions: the tyrannical Princes in Iſrael, were thus deſcribed: And ſo is tyrannical Pharaoh, (Ezek. 32. 2.) Take up a lamentation for Pharaoh King of Egypt, and ſay unto him, Thou art like a young Lion of the Nations. In general, Solomon (Prov. 28. 15.) telleth us, That as a roaring Lion, and a ranging Bear, ſo is a wicked Ruler over the poor people. And the Apoſtle Paul, ſpeaking of his eſcape from the jaws of that perſecuting Emperor, ſaith, (2 Tim. 4. 17.) I was delivered out of the mouth of the Lion, that is, out of the mouth of Nero, who was ready with open mouth to devour and deſtroy me; or as ſome, (taking it for a proverbial ſpeech, noting any eminent danger) I was delivered from the extreameſt hazard of death; even as a man reſcued out of a Lions mouth, and pulled from between his teeth.

And it will not be amiſs, for the clearing of this a little further, to give you ſome ſpecial things, wherein the reſemblance may be taken between the Tyrant, the oppreſſing Ruler, or any oppreſſing great one, and the Lion: we may draw the picture of a Tyrant by a Lions face, in theſe reſpects.

Firſt, In regard of his pride, ſtatelineſs, and diſtance which he affects to hold towards others. The Lion is a proud and ſtately creature.

Secondly, Tyrants reſemble Lions in regard of courage and animoſity. Couragiouſneſs in any noble or good way, (in which ſence, *Prov.*28.1.(the righteous are bold as a Lion) is the courage of Saints: But to be valiant and couragious in doing miſchief, in wronging and oppreſſing the weak or innocent, is the courage of a beaſt. Courage out of the way of truth and juſtice, is Lion-like cruelty.

Thirdly, They are Lions in regard of their ſtrength. Lions are the ſtrongeſt of creatures: What is ſtronger then a Lion? ſay they, in reſolving Samſons Riddle. And Prov. 30. 30. A Lion which is ſtrongeſt among beaſts. Tyranny muſt have ſtrength to back it. Hence they who mean to oppreſs, fortifie themſelves with titles and priviledges, with honours and relations. Solomon conſidering the oppreſſions that were under the Sun, obſerves tears on the one ſide, and ſtrength on the other; On the one ſide of the oppreſſors there was power, Eccleſ. 4. 1.

Fourthly, They are Lions in regard of their ſubtilty: The Lion is a ſubtil creature, as well as a ſtrong creature; he hath a great ſtock of policy, as well as power: though we uſually oppoſe the Lions skin and the Foxes skin, yet many times they both meet in one: Some are double-skinn'd, as well as double-cloath'd: Hence we have that phraſe, Pſal. 10. 9. (comparing a wicked man to a Lion) He lieth in wait ſecretly, as a Lion in his den; which teacheth us, that the Lion waits and watches for his prey; and ſo do theſe wicked men (Pſal. 17. 12.) Like as a Lion that is greedy of his prey, and as it were a young Lion, lurking in ſecret places.

Fifthly, They are Lions, eſpecially in their cruelty, in their blood-ſucking cruelty. The Lion is a devouring beaſt, therefore when the Devil is called a Lion, it is ſaid he goeth about to devour. And God himſelf (when he would be expreſt in his reſolutions of judgment, ſo as he will not have mercy upon a man, or upon a nation) is pleaſed to take upon him this name too, Hoſ. 5. 14. I will be unto Ephraim as a Lion, and as a young Lion to the houſe of Judah; I, even I, will tear and go away, and none ſhall reſcue him; that is, I am reſolved to execute judgment to the uttermoſt upon him: So, chap. 6. 1. The Lord hath torn, which is (properly) the act of a Lion. And, Job (*chap.*10. 16.) complains thus to God, Thou hunteſt me like a fierce Lion. Aud (Iſa. 38. 13.) Hezekiah fearing, that God would not ſhew him that mercy, to raiſe him from ſickneſs, cries out, as a Lion, ſo will he break all my bones. So that when the Lord would expreſs himſelf in wayes of judgment, and reſolvedneſs to go on in judgment, he takes upon him the name of a Lion. But ſuch is the very nature of wicked men: Such as the Prophet Micah beſpeaks (chap. 3. 2.) Hear this, O ſons of Jacob, and ye Princes of the houſe of Iſrael, is it not for you to know judgment? who hate the good, and love the evil; who pluck off their skins from off them, and their fleſh from off their bones: noting Lion-like cruelty in thoſe, who ſhould have been as ſhepherds, to feed and protect the people.

6. They are compared to Lions, in regard of their terrible roaring; the Lion roareth terribly, ſo terribly, that when the Lion roareth, the beaſts of the forreſt tremble. The Naturaliſts obſerve, that though many creatures are ſwifter of foot then the Lion, yet when he roareth, they fall down, and he overtakes them with his aſtoniſhing voice: ſo tyrannical men, with their roaring words, their loud threatnings, often aſtright and daunt the poor.

7. They reſemble Lions, in the ſowrneſs and ſterneſs of their countenance, and clowdineſs of their brows. Much of mans heart is ſeen in his face: Frowns are as blows; hence we call it brow-beating. The Love of God is expreſſed by the pleaſantneſs of his face, and the light of his countenance: ſo alſo is the love of man; and we may ſee what the intent of another is, in his very looks. Many are, in this reſpect, Lion-like men; they have (as Ariſtotle ſaith of the natural Lion) clouds and ſtorms hanging about their eye-brows. It was a threatning againſt the Jews, in caſe of diſobedience, that God would ſend againſt them, a nation of a fierce countenance, which ſhould not regard the perſon of the old, &c. Deut. 28. 50.

Animalia fortia vocē edunt gravē ut Leo & Taurus. Ar. Tanta illi vocis eliciendæ naturæ præſtitit inſtrumenta, ut animalia longè ipſo celeriora ſolo ſæpe rugitu capiantur. Baſil. Hexam. Hom. 9. Leo aliquid nubis habet circa ſupercilia, ſc. aſpectum minimè ſereni. Ariſt.

Laſtly, They are like Lions, in regard of their greedineſs after prey. They have ſet their eyes bowing down to the earth, like as a Lion that is greedy of his prey, Pſal. 17. 11, 12.

Thus you ſee, both who are here meant by Lions, and likewiſe, how the reſemblance or picture of a wicked man may be taken from a Lion,

Now when it is ſaid, that, the teeth of the Lions are broken, that the old Lions periſh, and the young Lions are ſcattered abroad; by theſe expreſſions of ſcattering, periſhing, and being broken to pieces, the Holy Ghoſt ſhews us, the utter, full, and final conſumption of wicked men; they are not only touched, troubled, and rouzed up out of their dens, but theſe Lions, old and young, are ſcattered and conſumed. They periſh.

There is an opinion currant among the Jewiſh Writers, that this Verſe is to be underſtood, as a deſcription of the means or inſtruments by which God deſtroyes wicked men, and not (as we) of wicked men themſelves, whom God will deſtroy: Junius agrees with this interpretation of the Jews, tranſlating the two verſes, in this ſence; By the blaſt of God they periſh, and by the breath of his noſtrils they are conſumed; by the roaring of the Lion, and by the voyce of the fierce Lion, and by the teeth of young Lions they are conſumed: As if, when wicked men (ſo he giveth the gloſs) are not deſtroyed immediately by the breath, and by the blaſt of God, then God ſtirs up the creatures againſt them, and will deſtroy them by Lions. We know it was a ſpecial judgment threatned in the Law againſt the diſobedient, (Levit. 26. 22.) that God would ſend evil beaſts among them: The Prophet numbers this, among Gods ſore judgments: Sword, famine, peſtilence, and evil beaſts, are put together. In the hiſtory of the Kings, we have a famous Record, how the Lord ſent Lions, who ſlew ſome of thoſe Idolaters, whom the King of Babylon had tranſplanted into the Cities of Samaria. 2 King. 27. 15.

But I rather conceive the former expoſition of the words, to be the truth, and moſt ſutable to the context; and there is this reaſon to be given, becauſe it agrees beſt with the purpoſe of Eliphaz, whoſe work was, ſo to deſcribe the deſtruction of wicked men in general, that he might particularly intimate the deſtruction fallen upon Job and his family, with the reaſon of it: Job was a great man in his time; he was among men as the Lion among beaſts, a chief: His friends thought him a cruel Lion too, and ſo he is told to his face afterward, by one of them, that he (like a greedy Lion) had taken away the pledge and the garment from the poor: This Eliphaz would hint, at leaſt, to Job, and that God had found him out in his Lion-like qualities; that he being a Magiſtrate, and a man in authority, having dealt hardly and cruelly with others, now the Lord had meaſured to him, the ſame meaſure he had given others: He, the Lion; and ſhe, the fierce Lion or Lioneſs his wife; they the young Lions, his children, were all broken, and either periſhed or periſhing. So much for the clearing of the words; I ſhall now add ſome Obſervations from them.

> Firſt, Wicked men, how powerful, how ſtrong ſoever, ſhall fall before the wrath and indignation of God.

The day of the Lord ſhall be againſt every one that is high, and that is lifted up. God deſires in a ſpecial manner to be dealing with theſe, for they, in the pride of their ſpirits, think themſelves a match for God: though indeed, their ſtrength be but weakneſs, and their wiſdom fooliſhneſs; yet in their own conceits they are ſtronger, and wiſer then God himſelf. Hence (like Pharaoh) they ſend defiance to Heaven, and ſay, who is the Lord? Exod. 5. 1. When God ſees the hearts of men ſwoln to this height of inſolent madneſs, he delights to ſhew himſelf, and grapple with them, that the pride of man may be abaſed, and every one that is exalted may be laid low: that he only may be exalted, and his Name ſet up in that day. David was much troubled, at that murther of Abner, yet he could not take vengeance preſently upon the fierce Lion that had ſuckt his blood. Why? his power did not reach it; Ye ſons of Zeruiah (ſaith he) are too hard for me, (2 Sam. 3. 39.) but there are no ſons of Zeruiah too hard for God, no Lions ſo ſtrong, but he can tear them, with infinitely more eaſe, then a Lion can the tender kid.

This ſhould comfort us, when we ſee great and potent enemies riſing up againſt the Church; what are theſe before the great Lion, the Lion of the Tribe of Judah. If the Lord do but roar, if the Lion of the Tribe of Judah come againſt theſe Lions, they will run like a herd of fearful Deer: The Kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief Captains, and the mighty men, are deſcribed, trembling at the preſence of Chriſt, when he appeared but as a lamb, Rev. 6. 15, 19. They cry to the mountains and the rocks to fall upon them, and to hide them from his face. If when Chriſt appears like an angry Lamb, the greateſt in the world fall before him, what then will theſe do when Chriſt ſhall appear as a roaring Lion?

Secondly obſerve, how gradually the Holy Ghoſt expreſſes the deſtruction of wicked Tyrants: All is not done at once; Firſt the roaring of the Lions doth periſh, then their voice, then their teeth are pulled out, next their prey is taken away, laſtly their whelps are ſcattered.

> Note hence, That, uſually God deſtroyes wicked men by degrees.

Here are five ſteps or degrees of Gods juſtice, againſt theſe Lions. Firſt, He ſtops the roaring of the Lions, they ſhall not be able to make ſuch a dreadful noiſe as heretofore; their roaring may be ſtopt, when their voice is not; though they can ſpeak, yet they ſhall not yell.

In the ſecond place, He breaks the very voice of the Lions; they ſhall not only not roar, but they ſhall not ſo much as ſpeak, either againſt the lambs, or againſt the ſheep, or for themſelves; the voice of the fierce Lion ſhall be taken away. God is able to ſilence Lions, and ſtop their mouths, not only from devouring and roaring, but from ſpeaking.

Thirdly, When their voice is taken away and their roaring, yet their teeth may remain: and there will be biting and tearing ſtill, though they have done roaring and yelling, therefore with a third ſtroak God breaks out their teeth; the teeth of the young Lions are broken. So the Pſalmiſt prayes, Pſal. 58. 6. Break their teeth in their mouths, break out the great teeth of the young Lions, O Lord: that is, take away the inſtruments, by which they oppreſs, the means by which they tear and rend, as Lions with their cruel teeth.

Fourthly, Chriſt deals further with theſe Lions, he not only breaks their teeth, by which they uſed to hurt others; but he takes away their prey and their meat, they ſhall not have wherewith to live themſelves; they were wont to ſuck the blood of the ſlain, and to eat the fleſh of the poor; but now the Lord will pluck away their prey, they themſelves ſhall be ſtarved or pincht with hunger.

Laſtly, Not only ſhall their meat be taken away, but they themſelves ſhall be ſcattered and diſperſed; that is the laſt ſtep of their calamity. Their dens ſhall be broken up, and their lurking places ſhall be opened; they ſhall run from place to place, from Nation to Nation. This is the Judgment of the Lord upon Lions, and the portion of cruel enemies from our God.

Further, It is here ſaid in the Text, That the old Lion ſhall periſh for want of prey: It is a ſtrange expreſſion, Lions have the greateſt power to get proviſion, to ſatisfie their hunger, yea their appetites and humour, yet theſe ſhall want; theſe Lions, who have all their life time, preyed upon the eſtates of other men, even theſe ſhall want.

> Note hence the juſtice of God, Such as have made others want, ſhall at laſt come to want themſelves, they ſhall periſh for want of prey.

They ſhall have nothing to eat: when thou ceaſeſt to ſpoil, thou ſhalt be ſpoiled, ſaith the Prophet; and when thou ſhalt make an end to deal treacherouſly, they ſhall deal treacherouſly with thee. We muſt not underſtand it, as if wicked men do ever give over ſinning; ſin and their deſire of ſinning is in a kind infinite; they never ſay, now we have done, and will ſin no more; but the meaning is, when thou canſt ſin no more, nor deal treacherouſly any more; when thou haſt done thy utmoſt, and ſpent thy ſtrength in ſpoiling others, or taken all their ſpoil; ſo that thou haſt done ſpoiling, becauſe there is no more to ſpoil: then others ſhall ſpoil thee; and thou Lion who haſt preyed upon others a long time, ſhalt not have a bit thy ſelf, but ſhalt periſh for want of prey.

It is the promiſe of God unto his own people (Pſal. 34. 10.) That the Lions ſhall lack and ſuffer hunger, but they that fear the Lord, ſhall not want any good thing: He expreſſes it by Lions, to note, that certainly they that fear him ſhall not want; for if any creatures in the world can preſerve themſelves from hunger, Lions can; if they do but roar, the very beaſts will fall down as a prey before them: but yet (ſaith God) theſe, even theſe ſhall rather periſh for hunger, then any one that feareth me ſhall want. God provides for his lambs, for innocent perſons, for thoſe who fear him, though they have no ſtrength to provide for themſelves; but the wicked who have greateſt power, and have been moſt active to provide for themſelves, ſhall pine with want; they who have cauſed ſo many to be bitten with hunger, ſhall at laſt be hunger-bitten, and for want of meat gnaw their tongues.

Laſtly, Where it is ſaid, that the Lions whelps are ſcattered abroad.

> Obſerve, God will not only deſtroy the perſons of wicked men, but their families and poſterities.

They and their whelps ſhall all be ſcattered; he will not leave them ſo much as a name or remembrance, (Pſal. 36. 6.) I ſought his place (ſaith the Prophet) and he could not be found; there was no print of him, no man could remember, that there was ſuch a man in the world, unleſs to curſe his memory.

I ſhall only give one caution reſpecting this, and ſo conclude the point. That which is here affirmed in the general by Eliphaz, concerning the deſtruction of wicked men, Lions and fierce Lions, is not to be taken as a truth in the univerſal experience of it; we are not to underſtand it thus, as if all perſons, all Lion-like perſons at all times periſh, and are deſtroyed, and ſcattered abroad: But Eliphaz ſpeaks of what is uſually done, or he ſpeaks of what God can eaſily do at any time, and of what God may juſtly do at all times. Lions, fierce Lions, Tyrants, Oppreſſors, he both may and can ſcatter when he pleaſeth. Yet we find, that God hath permitted ſome Lions to live fully, and to die quietly; they ſpend all their dayes in roaring and rending, in tearing and devouring, and yet themſelves are not devoured: God often ſuſpends this juſtice, but it is for weighty reaſons; for, in a word, Firſt, If God ſhould deſtroy all Lion-like men, the joynts of the world would be unlooſed, and the bands of humane ſociety broken aſunder. God forbad the children of Iſrael to deſtroy all the Canaanites, leaſt the beaſts of the field ſhould multiply, &c.

Secondly, If God ſhould hunt all theſe Lions out of the world, his own people would live by ſenſe, rather then by faith; and ſeem to be terrified by the viſible actings of wrath, rather then allured by the promiſes of mercy, or tenders of free-grace.

Thirdly, He defers them untill they have ſucked blood enough, rent enough, and done evil enough, even fill'd up the meaſure of their ſin, and fulfill'd his righteous purpoſe, by their unrighteouſneſs. As theſe Lions fill their own bellies, ſo they fulfil Gods counſells; therefore he lets them alone, that they may do his work, though they little think of it, and leſs intend it.

Laſtly, Eliphaz ſpeaks of what God did frequently, in thoſe times of the world, wherein he lived; for then God dealt more by outward judgments, then in theſe Goſpel-times. As his mercies are now more ſpiritual, ſo uſually are his judgments.

VERS. 12, 13.

Now a thing was ſecretly brought unto me, and mine ear received a little thereof.

In thoughts from the viſions of the night, when deep ſleep falleth on men.

THis part of the Chapter, from the twelfth Verſe unto the end, containeth the third Argument, by which Eliphaz labours to convince and reprove Job of his impatient complainings. In the whole context we may obſerve two general parts.

1. The Argument it ſelf by which he reproves him.
2. The confirmation or the proof of that Argument.

The matter of the Argument is contained in the ſeventeenth Verſe. Shall mortal man be more juſt then God? ſhall a man be more pure then his Maker? The Argument may be formed thus.

That man carrieth himſelf raſhly and ſinfully, who would ſeem more juſt and pure then God his Maker.

But thou Job carrieſt thy ſelf as if thou wert more juſt then God thy Maker.

Therefore thou carrieſt thy ſelf very ſinfully and raſhly.

He confirms this Argument two wayes.

Firſt, By an Argument taken from divine authority.

Secondly, By an Argument taken from reaſon.

His Argument taken from Divine authority lies in the former five Verſes of this context, (ſc. 12, 13, 14, 15, & 16.) I may give it thus.

That is to be received as a truth, which God from heaven immediately declareth to his ſervant in a viſion.

But God hath declared and revealed this to me in a viſion, that he who contends with God carries himſelf very ſinfully.

Therefore it is to be received as a truth.

The firſt part of the Argument is unqueſtionable; that it is a truth which God revealeth from Heaven in a Viſion. And that God had revealed this unto Eliphaz from Heaven in a Viſion, he himſelf at large declareth in thoſe five Verſes, deſcribing both the manner how, and the time when this truth was revealed to him.

His ſecond Argument from reaſon is grounded upon the common logical rule, of arguing from the greater to the leſs, (Verſ. 18, 19, 20, 21.) The ſum of it may be thus conceived.

That which would be folly and ſinful boldneſs in Angels, if they ſhould aſpire and take upon them to do, is much more ſinful in a mortal man.

But if Angels ſhould go about to juſtifie themſelves, or ſtand upon termes with God, it would be ſin and folly in them.

Therefore it is much more ſin and folly in mortal man, to juſtifie himſelf before God, &c.

The Major, or the firſt propoſition, is undeniable. The ſecond propoſition is proved and illuſtrated to the end of the Chapter. Wherein is ſhewed in what condition man now ſtandeth: how weak and how poor a thing a man is, compared unto an Angel; therefore if it would be ſin and folly in Angels to compare with God, it muſt much more be ſin and folly in man. So we ſee how Eliphaz confirms the major propoſition of the firſt Syllogiſm.

The ſecond propoſition or aſſumption which he infers upon Job, But thou Job carrieſt thy ſelf ſo as if thou wert more juſt then God: he proves by that ſad expoſtulation Chap. 3. And takes that for granted. We may form it thus,

He that complaineth of God, as if he had done him wrong, makes himſelf more juſt then God.

But thou Job, haſt made ſuch a complaint, Chap. 3. as if God had done thee wrong in afflicting thee, or in giving and in continuing thy life under ſuch afflictions.

Therefore, thou ſeemeſt to make thy ſelf more juſt then God, or to ſay that God hath dealt unjuſtly or injuriouſly with thee.

This I take to be the Logick of the remaining part of this Chapter.

And having cleared his manner of reaſoning in general, I ſhall deſcend to open particulars.

Now a thing was ſecretly brought unto me, and mine ear received a little thereof.

I muſt yet reſolve a queſtion before I explain the tearms; the queſtion is this. Whether this were a true viſion ſent from God, or whether it were only feigned by Eliphaz, thereby to gain authority to what he ſpake?

There are many Expoſitors of great name, who are very confident that this viſion was a fiction or holy fraud; a viſion of Eliphaz his own brain, not a viſion from Heaven. Some have gone further, maintaining that it was a viſion ſent from Hell, an illuſion of the Devil, thereby to ſtrengthen the hands of Eliphaz, in vexing and troubling Job.

It cannot be denied, but that many have pretended viſions from God, when they have received none; they have belyed the Almighty with their Dreams and Revelations, when they have ſeen nothing. Thus (1 Kings 22. 11.) Zedekiah the falſe Prophet takes upon him to have had a viſion from God, by which he would confirm Ahab in his counſel to go up to Ramoth Gilead. And Zedekiah the ſon of Chenaanah made him horns of iron, and he ſaid, thus ſaith the Lord, with theſe ſhalt thou puſh the Syrians till thou haſt conſumed them. And in the Propheſie of Jeremiah you have Hananiah the falſe Prophet, not only ſpeaking the language, but dreſſing himſelf in all the formalities of a viſion; he comes forth with a yoke upon his neck, and breaks it before the people, and telleth them, thus will God break the yoke of your captivity, and at ſuch a time.

The true Prophets complain often of the falſe, for crying up their deceivings under the warrant of viſions and dreams, when all was but a dream indeed, a meer phancy or ſtudied impoſture to miſlead the people, and gain credit to their lies. While a man hath nothing but ordinary humane authority for things extraordinary, he is eaſily rejected.

Man is ſubject to error, he may deceive, and be deceived; therefore when they would put a new nothing upon the world, as an infallible truth, and have it ſwallowed without chewing, received without diſputing, then uſually they pretended that it was (quid Divinum) a doctrine or meſſage received immediately from God. And it is well obſerved, that this courſe of pretending to Divine revelation, was very frequent amongſt the Heathen; when their Wiſemen had a mind to faſten ſome unwonted opinion upon the vulgar. Among the Romans, Numa (to the intent they might be received with greater authority) ſtampt his laws with a kind of divinity, and told the people that he had received them from the goddeſs Ægeria. As if he had ſaid, theſe laws are not ſuch as I have coyned and faſhioned by my own policy, drawn up or enacted by my own power, I had them from the goddeſs. So Plato informs us of another law-maker (Minos the Cretian) that he uſed to enter into Caves and ſolitary places, where (he told the people) he received laws and immediate dictates from Jupiter their god, to govern them by. This drew a great eſtimation and reverence upon him. Valerius Maximus, and Herodotus tell us of thoſe other law-makers, Licurgus and Zaleucus, uſing the like State-ſtratagems to over-rule the people. Licurgus ſaid, he received his laws from Apollo: Zaleucus and Piſiſtratus avouch Minerva for the Directreſs or Doctreſs of Theirs. So that both among the people of God, and among Heathens, it hath been very frequent to pretend Divine authority; that they might with the more eſtimation put off either ſuch points of doctrine or ſuch rules of policy, as themſelves had invented.

Valer. lib. 1.
Herod. lib. 1.

Rem in dubio relinquimus; videtur tamen potius vera fuiſſe viſio, etſi ea abutatur. Merc.

For this of Eliphaz, howſoever ſome charge him directly, and others leave the matter in doubt, only turning the ſcale with a probability [it ſeemeth rather that it was a true viſion.] Yet I ſhall adventure to reſolve directly, that his was a true viſion, as well as a viſion of truth ſent from God. And the reaſons which ſway with me, are theſe three.

Firſt, If we conſider the manner of this viſion. The deſcription here made, holds exact proportion with thoſe, of which there is no queſtion but they were the Oracles of Heaven. When a thing is done as God doth it, it is ſome argument that God hath done it. I grant, this reaſon is not demonſtrative or infallible, becauſe Satan and our own hearts are very apt to make imitations of holy things, for ſinful ends. Satan can transform himſelf into an Angel of light, and the heart can diſguiſe or ſhape its own dark conceptions, by the light of divine revelations.

Take then a ſecond reaſon, Eliphaz was a godly man. Tis granted on all hands, that Eliphaz and his friends were right in their affections, though they failed in this action. God was angry with them indeed, and told them in the cloſe of this diſpute (Chap. 42. 7.) That they had not ſpoken of him the thing that was right, as Job his ſervant had; yet he bids Job pray and offer ſacrifice for them; which he would not have done, unleſs they had been upon good terms with him in general, and in a preſent capacity for mercy and acceptance. Now it being ſuppoſed that Eliphaz was a godly man, it is a ſin not to be ſuppoſed of him, that he would make boaſt of a falſe revelation, and with ſuch deliberate gravity put a lye upon God.

Thirdly, The matter which he profeſſes to have received in this viſion, is a great and a holy truth of God. Man never belyes God to confirm the truth of God. When any boaſt vainly of revelations, it is to confirm their own phancies and deluſions. 'Tis rare when men are ſo zealous for truth, as to improve all that God hath ſpoken, in the maintenance of it: I have not read of any that have fained a word from God, to maintain that which is really the Word of God. We find all along in Scripture, that when viſions from God were falſly pretended, they ever tended to ſecure the heart in falſe opinions, or unwarrantable practiſes.

The Apoſtle Paul found many who falſified the ſtamp of the Spirit, and forged his hand and ſeal to eſtabliſh error, (2 Theſ. 2. 2.) I beſeech you brethren that you be not ſoon ſhaken in mind, or be troubled either by ſpirit, or by word, or by letter, as from us, as that the day of Chriſt is at hand. That groſs error was ſcattered in the Church of Theſſalonica, that the day of Chriſt was at hand, that in thoſe beginnings of the Goſpel, there ſhould be an end of all things. To confirm this, falſe teachers boaſted the ſpirit, an immediate revelation from God: or a word immediately from the mouth, or a letter under the hand of Paul. How active is error to find patronage? It cares not whom it belyes, ſo it ſelf may paſs for truth. Thouſands love errors, but none will own them by that name: and therefore (becauſe children bear their fathers name) they would father them upon the God of truth. Montanus the Heretick, ſaid he had the Holy Ghoſt his Paraclete, dictating thoſe erroneous doctrines to him, beſide his Propheteſſes, Priſca and Maximilla. Mahomet, that Grand helliſh Impoſtor, often pretended viſions from Heaven. And the ſtory aſſures us that he cunningly made uſe of the diſeaſe of his body, to perſwade his diſciples of the ſoundneſs of his doctrine. For being afflicted with the falling ſickneſs, when at any time a fit was upon him, he made the people believe that he was in an extaſie or raviſhment of ſpirit, at the appearance of the Angel Gabriel, who revealed many myſteries to him. And having by long uſe and familiarity taught a Pigeon to feed at his ear, he by art prevailed with the people, to feed at his poyſonous mouth: as if his words had been the inſpirations of the Holy Ghoſt, who (as he affirmed) came then to him, in the form of a Dove, and taught him thoſe ſecrets.

Hiſt. Eccleſ. l. 5. c. 14. 16.

So then, this of Eliphaz was a true viſion, becauſe it was the confirmation of a truth. Invented viſions are in uſe only to gain credit to the inventions of man, or the viſions of the Devil. Now for the matter and words themſelves.

Now a thing was ſecretly brought unto me.

דָּבָר
Τὸ ῥῆμα τῦτο τὸ γεγονὸς.
Factum eſſe verbũ alicui nihil aliud ſignificat quam factã eſſe revelationem in aliquo, & Deum cognitione futurorum, inſtar luminis, mentem illuſtraſſe, Cyril. in 1 c. Hoſ. v. 1.
גנב

We tranſlate [thing,] the Hebrew is [word,] A word was ſecretly brought unto me; but it is uſual both in Hebrew and Greek to call A thing, A word. Luke 2. 15. The Shepherds ſaid, Let us go to Bethlem to ſee this thing, the Greek is, To ſee this word which is done. Though here, it is proper enough, to ſay, A word was brought unto me.

Now a thing, or a word, was brought unto me, it was brought unto me ſecretly. The language of the Prophets was, The word of the Lord came unto me. There are two words in our tranſlation, (ſecretly brought) but the Hebrew is one; and that word ſignifies to ſteal, or to do a thing by ſtealth; ſo it may be tranſlated, A thing was brought unto me by ſtealth, or was ſtole into me: Mr. Broughton near this, A ſpeech came by ſtealth upon me: We tranſlate fully to the ſence, A thing was ſecretly brought to me, as if it were whiſpered into the ear, and ſent in cloſely to the ſpirit. And it is thus expreſſed, by way of oppoſition to another way, in which God reveals his mind unto his people. He ſometimes comes openly and ſpeaks aloud, that all may take notice, or becauſe all ought, Iſa. 58. 1. Cry aloud, lift up thy voice like a trumpet. Things are brought openly to the people, ſecretly to the Prophets: what the Lord ſpeaks in the ear, or to the heart of a Prophet, that he by the Prophet ſpeaks on the houſe top to all his people. A thing was ſecretly brought, or a thing was whiſpered unto Eliphaz. But he ſpeaks it aloud to Job. This word, or this thing, is ſaid to be ſtoln into him, or to be brought unto him by ſtealth, for three reaſons, which I ſhall but name and proceed.

First, A thing done by ſtealth, is done ſuddenly. The theif haſtens to do miſchief, he makes no delayes. Then ſecondly, a thing done by ſtealth, is done ſecretly; a thief comes cloſely in the dark; ſtealth is committed with greateſt privacie; and to ſay, a thing is brought by ſtealth, is as much as to ſay, a thing is brought privately. Thirdly, A thing done by ſtealth, is done unexpectedly. A man ſeldom looks for the thief, he is upon him in the way, upon him in his houſe, before he is aware. A thief is uſually as unexpected, as he is an unwelcome gueſt. So this word came, or was brought in by ſtealth, becauſe it came ſuddenly, it came ſilently, and it came unexpectedly to Eliphaz. And in theſe three reſpects, Chriſt himſelf is ſaid to come as a thief; Behold, I come as thief in the night. As the word of Chriſt comes to many of his people now, ſo the perſon of Chriſt will come at laſt unto all, he will come by ſtealth, or as a thief, ſuddenly, ſecretly, unexpectedly, when the world ſhall little dream of him, and his Church ſcarce be awake for him. Hence note,

Rev. 16. 15.

Firſt, That, Divine Truths are infuſed into us, not born in us, or born with us.

Every thing which is of heaven, cometh unto us from heaven; it is either ſtoln in ſecretly, or thundred in loudly. Sometimes the Prophets and Miniſters of Chriſt, ſpeaking aloud, carry truth into the ſoul; ſometimes God whiſpers it into the Soul; one way or other, truth muſt be brought in, for it grows not in us. Our hearts by nature are not only like white paper, having no inſcription, not a letter of Gods will written in them, but they are like paper blotted and blurred, written all over with the corrupt principles and poſitions of our own wills. God by his Spirit firſt croſſes or wipes out thoſe, and then writes down his own golden rules of holy truth and heavenly wiſdom. This he doth, firſt, in converſion from ſin to grace and holineſs, and afterward in all the increaſes of grace, and growths of holineſs. There is not a ſyllable of the Law of God in any mans heart, till the finger of God writes it there; I will put my law in their mind, and write it in their hearts, which is an alluſion unto the two Tables of the Law. They were firſt written by the finger of God, and then put into the Ark: So God firſt writes the Law in our hearts, and then puts it into our minds; he layes it up in the Ark of our underſtanding and memory.

Secondly, Obſerve, That, God ſteals truths into the hearts of his people unawares.

As they often expect and wait long for knowledge, ſo they ſometime know before they expect. A truth either in whole or part, in the matter or clearer light of it, comes like a thief into the heart, ſuddenly, ſecretly, unlooked for; in which caſe it is ever true, that truth unexpected, is doubly welcomed. The way of the Spirit of God is alwayes undiſcernable to fleſh and blood. The ſoul receives a thing, and the man knows not how; he can ſcarce (poſſibly not at all) tell where, by whom, or which way it came to him; it was brought, ſecretly brought; and with a moſt bleſſed, gracious ſlight of hand, conveyed into his heart. Yet ſometime truth enters in State, and may be ſaid to make its paſſage viſibly into the heart of a man. The Word comes, not as a company of thieves, but as a band of Souldiers, with weapons drawn, and terrible ſhouts, tearing open the ſoul, and breaking open the iron gate of the heart, locked and barred with unbelief, to ſecure that curſed crew of luſts garriſon'd within it. The weapons of our warfare (ſaith the Apoſtle) are mighty through God, 2 Cor. 10.4. The word is mighty, wonderful in ſtrength, it comes upon the ſoul as an armed man, to ſpoil it of all ſinful pleaſures, yea, of the very life of ſin. Sometimes the Lord proclaims war, as by a Herald of Arms, againſt a man, and openly prepares for his ſiege and battery. He ſurprizes another, and ſteals him into a happy captivity to himſelf. A thing was ſecretly brought unto me.

And mine ear received a little thereof.

שמץ Particula, pars, modicum.

Mine ear caught ſomewhat of it; ſo Mr. Broughton. The word ſignifies a part or a portion. Mine ear received a little; yet we are not to underſtand this, as if Eliphaz had taken in only ſome fragments or imperfect notes of what God delivered, or had heard to the halves. For doubtleſs Eliphaz received all that was brought, he turned nothing back; he ſaid not, a little is enough, I need not the reſt: that he received but a little, was not from neglect of the reſt, but from inability to receive more, or to receive it more perfectly. And though he had not all of every part, yet he had a part of all; it was not a little of this, and none of that: little reſpects ſomewhat of every truth, not ſome one truth. He received, though not all, yet a perfect model of all that was brought.

Further, This ſpeech may have reference unto our preſent condition; concerning which the Apoſtle ſaith (1 Cor. 13.) We know but in part; Now when he ſaith, we know but in part. it is not as if we had but a part of Gods will made known unto us. The word of God and the works of God are perfect. And the Apoſtle aſſures the Church of Epheſus, that he had not ſhunned to declare unto them the whole counſel of God, Acts 20. 27. The whole (which concerns man) is declared, but we know that whole but in part. Such is our weakneſs and infirmity, that we cannot take in All of All; no, nor any part of all, in the full latitude and extent of it: Thus we know but in part. So ſaith Eliphaz, when this was brought to me, mine ear received but little of it; my narrow ear could drink in but ſome drops of that Ocean, which was poured out upon me. All that man apprehends, is but little, in reſpect of what God offers now, or of what hereafter he ſhall apprehend. Eliphaz ſpeaks modeſtly and humbly of himſelf; God brought a thing unto me, and I am ſuch a poor ſtreightned veſſel, that I could receive but a little of it; yet ſomewhat I caught hold of, which I am about to make known unto thee. We may note from this, Modeſtè loquitur, quaſi non plenè acceperit, quod ſciendum eſſet de hac re. Quod optimum eſt & eximium comprehendere vir teſt mortalis homo. Merc.

First, Holy truths are very pleaſant to the ear of a holy perſon.

A thing was brought unto me, and mine ear caught a little of it. As when meats pleaſant to the taſte, are brought to a man, he puts forth his hand, and takes them; or when pleaſant muſick ſounds, the ear catches it, or we drink it in greedily at the ear; ſo when holy truths are revealed, a holy heart catches them: The ear is not more affected with pleaſant muſick, or the palat with pleaſant meats, then the underſtanding ſpiritualized, is affected with ſpiritual truths. The ear of a holy man takes in holy things with pleaſure, and therefore he is ſaid to catch them, or drink them in, as with much deſire and raviſhing delight: David found more ſweetneſs in the truths of God, then in the honey or honeycomb. The ſpirit of a regenerate man doth ſo much catch heavenly doctrine, that in the hebrew, the word which ſignifies ſuch doctrine, ſignifies alſo catching or receiving; and a word from the ſame root, ſignifies the palat of the mouth; which may hint us thus much, That heavenly doctrine pleaſes the palat or taſte of a heavenly mind: And the reaſon of it, is, becauſe there is a ſuitableneſs in the heart of every godly man, with every truth of God. All delight ariſes from proportion and ſuitableneſs between the object and the organ, in ſenſitives; between the object and the underſtanding, will, affections, in ſpirituals: That which makes delight to the eye, is the ſuitableneſs of viſibles to the eye; and that which makes delight to the taſte, is the ſuitableneſs of edibles to the palat; and ſo that which makes delight to the ſoul, is the ſuitableneſs of intelligibles to the underſtanding. Hence the reaſon is clear, why wicked men will not receive the things of God, but inſtead of catching them, catch at them, ſnarl and murmure at them, ſpeak, yea, rail and fight againſt them; their hearts are unſuitable to thoſe truths, therefore they diſtaſte them, therefore they reliſh them no more then the white of an egg, or a dry ſtick: nay, not only have they no pleaſant taſte, but they have a bitter taſte in their mouths; they are as gall and wormwood to them, they are a vexation and torment to them. The truth which the two Witneſſes publiſh, torments them that dwell on the earth; and then no marvel, if inſtead of catching thoſe truths to embrace them, they catch the witneſſes and kill them.

Vide Buxt. Lex. in verbo לקח

Rev. 11.

Secondly, obſerve, That, The ear and heart of man in this ſtate of corruption, are veſſels too narrow, to take in, or hold all the truths of God.

I have many things to ſay (ſaith Chriſt to his Diſciples) but ye cannot bear them now, John 16. 12. Nor could they ever fully bear ſo much as Chriſt had to ſay. We have line upon line, precept upon precept, here a little, and there a little, Iſa. 28. 10. becauſe it is but here and there a little, ſome few lines or precepts which we are able to learn and digeſt into our ſpirits. Whole ſhowers of divine truths are often rained upon us (Heb. 6.) yet we drink in but a drop or two; we ſwim, as it were, in a whole ocean, a ſea of holy revelations, but we are narrow-neck'd bottles, and how little is it which bubbleth in! Mine ear received a little thereof. The truth of God is like God himſelf, infinite: Truth is nothing elſe but the mind of God, and that is infinite; therefore we, who are not only finite, but ſtreightned, cannot poſſibly comprehend it.

Thirdly, Mine ear received a little thereof: It was but a little he received, yet he received a little; all did not fall beſide his ear, all did not ſlip away, he caught ſomewhat: Hence note,

That, The ear and heart of a godly man ever receive ſomewhat, when the truths of God are revealed.

I cannot get in all, my heart will not receive all, my memory will not retain all; but a little it will hold, ſomewhat it takes in at every Sermon, and from every viſion of God. (Sermons are the viſions of God, and ſomewhat of Gods mind is brought to you in every holy Sermon.) Natural men are like ſieves, like veſſels without a bottom, or full of holes, into which theſe truths being put, run out every drop: the beſt in this life, are leaking veſſels, much drops out: Eliphaz received a little; how many hear much, and receive nothing! they come empty to the Ordinances, and they return empty; their ears have been filled with a ſound, but their hearts have not caught a ſyllable, not a word of truth is written in their hearts, not a letter laid up in their minds, and that's the reaſon, why not a word is to be ſeen in their lives: How can they hold out the word in a pure converſation, who have not received it into a pure conſcience?

In thoughts from the viſions of the night, when deep ſleep falleth on men.

The former verſe ſhewed us the manner how that thing was brought to Eliphaz; a thing was ſecretly brought to me: this ſhews the time when it was brought; it was (ſaith he) in thoughts from the viſions of the night, when deep ſleep falleth on men.

In thoughts from the viſions of the night.] Some read it, in the thoughts which I had, after the viſions of the night; ſo, Hoſ. 6. 2. From two nights. Heb. After two dayes; or, in thoughts which I had in the viſions of the night; or, in thoughts of the viſions of the night: the Original bears any of theſe readings.

Vel poſt viſiones noctis, ſicut dicimus à cœna, à prandio; ſic Hoſ. 6.2. vel in cogitationibus viſionum noctis, ut Mem Genitivum indicet.

In thoughts.] The Hebrew word ſignifies properly the boughs of a tree; and ſo ſome tranſlate, In the boughs, ſprigs or branches of the viſions of the night; but we render it well, in the thought: And thoughts are called boughs or branches; Firſt, Becauſe thoughts grow from the mind, ſprout and ſhoot up from the mind, as branches from the ſtock of a tree: From the root and ſtock of a mans underſtanding, a branch of thoughts grows up, ſometimes like a tall Cedar of Libanus, as high as heaven. Secondly, The boughs and branches of a tree are many, thick, interwoven, and croſſing one another; ſuch are the thoughts of a man; he hath many, even multitudes of them: In the multitude of my thoughts, ſaith David. The mind puts forth many branches and twigs, they ſprout and ſhoot forth every way; thouſands of various thoughts are moving, upon various objects, and to various ends; ſome are earthly, ſome heavenly. The branches of ſome minds are but briars and thorns, others bear the Lilie and the Roſe, their root is in heaven, and they grow heaven-ward. Thirdly, Thoughts are called branches, becauſe the branch or the bough brings forth and bears the fruit; the ſtock or the body of a tree brings forth fruit at the branches; ſo all the fruit of our ſouls is born upon, or from our thoughts: our actions are the fruits of our thinkings. Thoughts are poſſible actions; look what a man thinketh, that he doth, or would do: And ſuch as our thoughts are, ſuch our actions are, or would be. Thoughts are the firſt-born, the bloſſoms and blooms of the ſoul, the beginnings of our ſtrength, whether for good or evil; therefore the Hebrew word is elegantly tranſlated from a bough or a branch, to a thought.

מחזיונות
לילה
שעפים

The Hebrew word for ſpeech, prayer and meditation, ſprings from a root of the ſame ſignification; becauſe ſpeech, prayer and meditation ſpring up from the ſpirit, as a ſtalk or branches from the ſtock of a tree.

There is one thing further to be obſerved from this word, (for it is a very elegant word, and therefore I ſpend a little the more time upon it) In thoughts from the viſions of the night: The word ſignifies, not only a bough, but the higheſt bough, the top bough of a tree. A tree hath ſome under-boughs, and ſome top-boughs, as the Prophet ſpeaks, (Iſa. 17. 6.) Two or three berries in the top of the uppermoſt bough: it is the ſame word, which here in the text, we tranſlate thoughts; as if Eliphaz ſhould ſay, In my very uppermoſt or higheſt thoughts, in thoſe very top-branches of my higheſt fancy, which I had from the viſions of the night. The higheſt, the top branches which grow from the ſoul of a godly man, are for, or about the higheſt mercies, top-mercies, for heaven and heavenly things. A wicked mans higheſt and uppermoſt thoughts are for the earth; his thoughts for the earth out-grow all his other thoughts: but a godly mans thoughts for heaven and ſpirituals, out-grow all his other thoughts; his thoughts for heaven, are the higheſt and uppermoſt branches of his ſoul. We have this word uſed in 1 Kings 18. 21. How long (ſaith Elijah) will you halt between two opinions? That word which we there tranſlate opinions, is here tranſlated thoughts; hence ſome render that in the Kings thus, How long do ye halt between two top-thoughts, or high thoughts? As if this were the thing which Elijah reproved in that people, that they had high thoughts both of God and of Baal, top-thoughts of both; and they (as it were) ſet Baal, a dumb Idol, as high in their thoughts, eſtimations and opinions, as the living God. Why do ye halt between two uppermoſt opinions, higheſt thoughts, or thoughts of equal height concerning God and Baal? Your thoughts of your Idol are as high as of God himſelf. What! will you make an Idol equal with God? An Idol is a baſe thing, a low thing, a thing below upon the dunghil (therefore called a dunghil-god.) The true God is on high, he is in the higheſt heavens, he is higher then the heaven of heavens; and do you debaſe him thus by halting between two thoughts of equal height, concerning him and Baal? They who ſet up an Idol, make it equal unto God. All falſe worſhip is a ſetting of our poſts by Gods poſts, and of our threſhold by his threſhold; a making both of equal height and worth.

שיח Stirps, frutex, quia ſermo è corde, ut arbor è terra naſcitur. Shin. Elegans metaphora ſumpta à ſupereminentibus arborum ramuſculis; & eſt primigenia hujus vocis ſignificatio) ad phantaſmatum extremitates, ac velut teneras cogitationum ſummitates notionem ſuam extendit. Bold.

Quouſque claudicatis inter duas prominentias. Merc. Quaſi Elias objurgaret populum, quod duas eminentias ſibi conſtituerent; Deū & Baalem quaſi æquales, inter quas nulla eſt comparatio. 2 Cor. 6. 15. Bol.

And to clear it yet further (Pſal. 119. 113.) the ſame word is uſed by David, when he profeſſes, I hate vain thoughts; or as ſome read it, I hate vain things. He calls Idolatrous thoughts vain thoughts, becauſe they are wavering, inconſtant or unſetled thoughts, in further alluſion to the boughs of a tree: As the topmoſt and higheſt boughs of a tree are ſhaken with every puff of wind, and waver to and fro with every blaſt, ſo are the thoughts of Idolaters: or becauſe (as before) Idolatry ſets up too high thoughts, adoring an Idol as much, or in competition and rivality with the ever-living God. The higher our thoughts are of God, the more excellent they are; and to have as high thoughts of an Idol, as of the living and true God, are the vaineſt thoughts of all; thoſe high thoughts are low thoughts, the loweſt thoughts, thoughts moſt hateful. I hate vain thoughts.

Quaſi dicat Idololatriā odio habui, quæ plura eminentia ſupremo cultu reveretur, cum ſit unum.

From the viſions of the night.] As I have opened that word about the thoughts ſomewhat largely, ſo this of the viſions, requires more enlargement; yet I ſhall do it as briefly as I may.

Viſions were a ſpecial way of Divine Revelation: Heb. 1. 1. God, who at ſundry times, and in divers manners ſpake to our Fathers by the Prophets, ſaith the Apoſtle. God ſpake at ſundry times, and he ſpake in divers manners. Now amongſt thoſe divers manners of ſpeaking, ſpeaking by or in viſions was one. The Jewiſh Doctors obſerve four degrees of divine revelation. The firſt they called Prophecy, which included viſion, and any apparition whereby the will of God was made known. They had a ſecond way of divine revelation, which they called, The inſpiration of the Holy Ghoſt, whereby the party was inabled without viſion or apparition to propheſie: either as prophecying is taken for the foretelling of things to come, or for the reſolving of things in doubt: The Rabbins give us the difference between theſe two, prophecy and inſpiration: In prophecy (though it was from the Holy Ghoſt) a man was caſt into a trance, or brought into an extaſie, his ſenſes being taken away; but ſpeaking by inſpiration of the Holy Ghoſt, was without any ſuch change in, or impreſſions upon the body: So David, and other Pen-men of the Scriptures, wrote by the immediate inſpiration of the Holy Ghoſt, yet without viſible apparitions to them, or viſible change upon them. Thirdly, God revealed himſelf by Urim and Thummim, which was an anſwer given by the Ephod, or by the ſtones that were on the breſt-plate of the High Prieſt. Theſe three wayes of divine revelation (as they obſerve) ceaſed in the ſecond Temple. The Jewiſh Writers having this tradition, that after the latter Prophets, Haggai, Zechariah and Malachy, the Holy Ghoſt departed from Iſrael; meaning, the Holy Ghoſt (not in the ordinary work of ſanctification, but) in thoſe extraordinary wayes of Propheſie, Inſpiration, and of Urim and Thummim, went up and departed from them. There was yet a fourth way of divine revelation, which they call Bathcol, the daughter of a voice, or eccho, declaring the will of God immediately from heaven; ſuch ſome conceive to be, the voice heard from heaven, Mat. 3. 17. proclaiming the teſtimony of God concerning Chriſt; A voice was heard from heaven, ſaying, this is my beloved ſon in whom I am well pleaſed.

πολυμέρως ϗ πολυτρόπως.

Paulus Fagius, in Ex. 28.
Goodw. Heb. Antiq.

But to paſs from theſe traditions of the Jews, we ſhall give you the doctrine of divine revelation more diſtinctly from the Scriptures. We find (Numb. 12. 6, 7, 8.) three diſtinct wayes, in which the Lord revealed himſelf of old unto his people: If there be a Prophet among you, I the Lord will make my ſelf known unto him in a viſion, and will ſpeak unto him in a dream; my ſervant Moſes is not ſo, who is faithful in all mine houſe, with him will I ſpeak mouth to mouth, even apparently, and not in dark ſpeeches, and the ſimilitude of the Lord ſhall he behold. This is an illuſtrious Text, deſcribing three diſtinct wayes or degrees of holy revelation. Firſt, By Viſion, which we have here in Job. Secondly, By a Dream, which was, when God preſented ſomewhat to them ſleeping: This kind of revelation God vouchſafed, not only to his own people and Prophets, but to Heathens alſo, and ſtrangers from his Covenant. Pharaoh had a revelation by a dream (Gen. 41.) concerning the ſeven years of famine; and Nebuchadnezzar had a wonderful revelation by a dream (Dan. 2.) concerning the ſtate of the four Monarchies. The wiſe men of the Eaſt were warned in a dream, to return into their Countrey another way, Mat. 2. But with the Saints, theſe revelations by dreams, were very frequent; Jacob (Gen. 28.) in a dream, as he ſlept upon a ſtone, ſaw a ladder, &c. Joſeph, Jacob's ſon, had ſo many dreams, that his brethren jeered him with it, and called him the Captain-dreamer, the dreamer, a maſter of dreams, Gen. 37. 19. Joſeph the husband of Mary, was twice warned in a dream; firſt, that he ſhould not forſake his wife, Mat. 1. and then, that he ſhould go into Egypt, Mat. 3. Many other the like revelations by dreams, might be inſtanced in; but I forbear. There is a third way ſpoken of in this Text, and that is, ſpeaking mouth to mouth; my ſervant Moſes is not ſo, with him will I ſpeak mouth to mouth, even apparently. This is a more eminent way of heavenly manifeſtations then the former: Moſes had a priviledge above the ordinary Prophets. For, to ſpeak mouth to mouth, is expounded by (apparently) I will ſpeak plainly, or apparently, not in a viſion or in a dream. When a man ſpeaks mouth to mouth to his friend, or (as the Scripture phraſes our communion with God in heaven) face to face; this is oppoſed to a more remote or obſcure communion. As our ſeeing God face to face in heaven, ſo his ſpeaking to us mouth to mouth on earth, notes the cleareſt and fulleſt revelation; it is to give us his mind nakedly, without any figure or ſhadow; or (as Chriſt is ſaid once in the Goſpel) to ſpeak plainly, and not in parables. And theſe ſpeakings mouth to mouth, were of two ſorts; either immediate, as himſelf did unto Moſes, or as to others, by the miniſtry of Angels: God often employed Angels in this ſervice, to declare his mind, and bring meſſages to his people: This was a kind of ſpeaking mouth to mouth; but Moſes had an honour beyond this, with him will I ſpeak mouth to mouth, I by my ſelf, not I by a created Angel.

בעל הח
למות

Viſions (to keep the term in hand) were (you ſee) a principal means, by which God broke his mind, and unlock'd the ſecrets of his counſels. If there be a Prophet among you, I the Lord will make my ſelf known unto him in a viſion. And to clear this point about viſions, yet more fully; we may diſtinguiſh of divers ſorts of viſions. Firſt, A viſion is ſometime put for an ordinary diſpenſation of the will of God to his Prophets or Miniſters, who as from God, diſpenſe it to his people; (Prov. 29. 18.) Where viſion faileth, the people periſh, that is, where there are none to publiſh and declare the mind of God (no, not in an ordinary way) to a people, that people are in a ready way to perdition. Without the viſions of Grace there is no ordinary way to the viſions of Glory. Secondly, By a viſion, we underſtand an extraordinary work of God, manifeſting his mind to his Prophets, either to aſſure future ſucceſſes, or to reſolve future Queries. And theſe were called viſions, becauſe by them, things were made ſo manifeſt, as if they had been ſeen before their eyes; and in ſome of theſe revelations, a viſible repreſentation was made to the eye: viſions were often attended with apparitions. In reference to both theſe ſorts of viſions, that is appliable, 1 Sam. 9. 9. Before-time in Iſrael, when a man went to enquire of God, thus he ſpake; Come let us go to the Seer: for he that is now called a Prophet, was beforetime called a Seer. Prophets were called Seers, becauſe in viſions, they had either an ocular, or an intellectual ſight of the mind of God.

Viſio eſt omnis doctrina diviniths revelata; quia Deus quibuſcunq; viſum eſt revelare, res ipſas quodammodo videndas & ſpectandas oculis ſervorum ſuorum exhibet ad obſignandum earum certitudinem. Jun. in Iſa. cap. 1.

Secondly, Viſions may undergo this diviſion: There was an open viſion, and there was a private viſion. In 1 Sam. 3. 1. we have the ground of the diſtinction; In thoſe dayes there was no open viſion: Open is oppoſed to private or ſecret; the word imports a viſion appearing in publick; and the meaning of the text is this; there were no Prophets ſent openly, and (as it were) in State, inveſted with commiſſion, and furniſhed with meſſages from heaven unto the people; there was no open viſion: yet at that time there were private viſions, as to Manoah, Judg. 13. God revealed himſelf in thoſe dark times to ſome of his ſpecial ſervants; and ſo he hath and will at all times. While he hath a Church upon the earth, he never ſhuts himſelf quite in heaven. Open viſion may fail, but all viſions ſhall not fail. So open profeſſion may fail in the reign of Antichriſt, in his hour, and in the power of darkneſs; as it did in the time of Elijah; yet all profeſſion of the truth ſhall never fail: The Lord hath alwayes his thouſands in ſecret, who never bowed their knee to Baal. In many places, ſince Chriſt came in the fleſh, there hath been no open viſion, no holding forth of the truth of Chriſt, and yet even in thoſe places there have been private viſions; and a remnant reſerved, to whom God hath made known the myſteries of the Kingdom of Chriſt. When darkneſs covers all in appearance, there may be light which appears not; and candles under a buſhel, when there are none in the candleſticks. A Goſhen hath light, while Egypt is plagued with darkneſs; and when the Prophets are benighted, it may be day with many of the people.

Fuerūt quidem ſingulares & privatæ viſiones cum piis communicatæ, ut cum Manoah, Jud. 13. Sed publicè Prophetarum omne munus jacebat. Jun. in loc.

Thirdly, Some viſions were without any trance or raviſhment (Gen. 15. 1.) The word of God came in a viſion to Abraham, ſpeaking to his ear, and bidding him look up to heaven with his eyes, ver. 5. But often we find, that viſions were accompanied with trances: 'Twas ſo with Balaam the falſe Prophet (Numb. 24. 16.) He hath ſaid, which ſaw the viſion of the Almighty, falling into a trance, but having his eyes open: And it was ſo with ſome of the true Prophets; Daniel ſaw a viſion, and when he heard the voice, Then (ſaith he) was I in a deep ſleep upon my face, (Dan. 10. 9.) Peter was in a trance, when he had the viſion of a ſheet let down from heaven, Acts 10. And the Apoſtle ſaith (2 Cor. 12. 1.) I will come to viſions and revelations of the Lord, whether in the body, I cannot tell, or whether out of the body, I cannot tell; God knoweth. His ſoul had ſo much acquaintance with God, that he became a ſtranger to his own body; his ſoul was ſo buſied in receiving knowledge from God, that he was fain to put off the knowledge and care of his body wholly to God: What the ſtate of my body was, I know not, God knoweth.

Fourthly, Some viſions were preſented only in bare naked words, others were cloathed in types and figures, in the ſhapes of beaſts of the earth, and fowls of the ayr, of trees and ſtones, &c. As to Ezekiel and Daniel in their Propheſies, and to John, in the book of Revelations. Theſe figures were as an Alphabet of ſacred Letters, which put together and ſpell'd, made the mind of God legible to his ſervants.

Laſtly, The Scripture in hand hints us a fifth difference about viſions. In thoughts from the viſions of the night; that's conſiderable. There were viſions of the day, and viſions of the night; thus it is ſaid (Dan. 2. 19.) when Daniel expounded Nebuchadnezzar's dream, that God made it known to him in viſions of the night, oppoſing it to viſions of the day. Uſually the night was the time for viſions; hence (Numb. 22. 18, 19.) Balaam the falſe Prophet (when the meſſengers of Balak came to him) ſaith, tarry this night, and I will ſhew you in the morning; he thought to have a viſion in the night: So it is obſervable, that when Saul and his ſervant came to Samuel (1 Sam. 9. 19.) to enquire about the ſtray'd Aſſes, he tells him, Ye ſhall eat bread with me to day, and to morrow I will let thee go, and will tell thee all that is in thine heart: he deſired a night, intimating, that God uſed to reveal ſecrets unto him in the night.

So much concerning viſions, with the kinds and differences of them.

From this Doctrine of viſions, we may take notice of our priviledge under the Goſpel. The Apoſtle ſaith, at ſundry times, and in divers manners, God ſpake unto our Fathers by the Prophets; but he hath ſpoken unto us one way, which exceeds them all, even by his Son, who is the brightneſs of his Glory, and the expreſs image of his perſon, Heb. 1. 2, 3. We have a viſion which out-ſhines all the viſions which ever the Prophets or Patriarchs had from the beginning of the world. Their light was darkneſs, at moſt, but a ſhadow; their viſions were obſcurities, and their revelations, concealments, compared with ours. Our viſion is Chriſt, God manifeſted in the fleſh: Mine eyes have ſeen thy ſalvation, ſaith old Simeon; he had a viſion of Chriſt in perſon. The Land of Judah was called the valley of viſion, becauſe God revealed himſelf to that people more frequently and clearly then all the world beſide. Where-ever the Goſpel is preached, that Land is a valley of viſion, a valley of viſion far more lightſom and glorious then the Land of Judah was; the very darkneſs of the Goſpel is clearer then the lightneſs of the Law. That which was more glorious, had no glory, by reaſon of that glory which excelleth, 1 Cor. 3. 10. Only remember, that as our priviledge is greater then theirs, ſo is our duty; A clearer light ſhould be anſwered with a holier life: And we who have more evidence of what God would have done, ſhould make more conſcience to do it. Now we are not taught by dreams and viſions of the night; we ought to walk as children of the day. Not only is darkneſs gone, but the ſhadows are fled away. The true light now ſhines, even he who enlightens every one that comes into the world. We need not dreams or viſions now. Why ſhould we call for Candles when the Sun is up? We need not Star-light, when we have Day-light, or when the promiſed Day-ſtar is riſen in our hearts, 2 Pet. 1. 19.

Sopor eſt ſomnus profundior, ſomnus eſt plus quam dormitatio, & ſopor plus quã ſomnus.

Here is one circumſtance more in the Text about this viſion, very remarkable; it was not only in the night, but in the night when deep ſleep falleth on men; or, on ſorrowful man, man wearied with labour and travel. This is a more diſtinct deſcription of the time then the former. It was in the night, and in that part of the night, when deep ſleep falleth upon men; that is, in the former part or beginning of the night; for the firſt ſleep is the deep ſleep: and we uſe to ſay, that a man, eſpecially a weary hard-wrought man, is in a dead ſleep, when he is in his firſt ſleep. The word ſignifies an extraordinary ſleep. It is uſed (Gen. 2. 21.) where it is ſaid, that God cauſed a deep ſleep to fall upon Adam, when he took out his rib, and formed the woman. The Seventy tranſlate it, Extaſie. Some compare it to a Lethargy; a man in a Lethargie can hardly be awakened. Such a ſleep as Saul was in, 1 Sam. 26. 12. when David came into the Trench, and took away the Spear, and the Cruſe of water from his bolſter. Such a one as Jonas was in, while the Ship was almoſt ſunk with the tempeſt, Jonah 1. 5. In both places we have this original word. At the time when ſuch ſleep falls on wearied man, Eliphaz had this viſion. And he ſpeaks very elegantly, that this deep ſleep falleth on men; becauſe ſuch ſleep ſeems to oppreſs the ſpirits, as a heavy weight the body; it falls as heavy as Lead upon all a mans ſenſes, and overcomes them: we ſay ordinarily, a man falls aſleep; and it is true of ſleep, that it falls upon man, and falls with ſuch a weight, that a man is not able to ſtand under it. We ſay alſo, a man is heavy to ſleep; for ſleep, like a heavy thing, comes down upon him, and then down comes he. Heathen Poets tell us, that at this time they had viſions, or deluſions rather. Satan imitates God in what he can, that he may deceive with better ſucceſs.

תרדמה Significat gravem ſomnum, imo plus quam ſomnum profundum, ſomnum & quaſi lethargum. ἔκστασιν. Tempus erat quo prima quies mortalibus ægris incipit, & dono Divum gratiſſima ſerpit. In ſomno ecce ante oculos mœſtiſſimus Hector viſus adeſſe mihi. Virg. 2 Æneid.

We may obſerve from hence, Seeing Eliphaz had this viſion when deep ſleep falleth upon men;

First, That, The power of Gods Spirit works through all natural impediments.

When tired Nature is willing to fall, or cannot ſtay it ſelf from falling into a deep ſleep, then God can awaken us with his viſions, and make us ſee, when we cannot hold open our eyes. When God will reveal his mind to the ſoul, he overcomes the imperfections of the body. Sleepineſs is an imperfection; if a man be ſleepy, he is unfit to hear: While the eye is thus ſhut, the ear cannot be open. That ſleeper in the Acts, fell down dead while Paul was preaching. Yet when God comes by his mighty power and Spirit, though a mans ear be ſhut, he can break through and get into his heart. The Word hath taken ſome napping and nodding. Yea, God breaks in by his almighty power in revelations of his will, not only when men are in a dead natural ſleep, but when they are in a ſleep of ſpiritual death. The Word breaks open the bars of the grave, and looſens the bands of death.

Joh. 5. 25.

Secondly, Foraſmuch as Eliphaz had this viſion when deep ſleep falleth on men, himſelf being kept awake, or waking. Obſerve,

That, When we are moſt retired from the world, then we are moſt fit to have, and uſually have moſt communion with God.

If a man would abridge himſelf of ſleep, and wake with holy thoughts, when deep ſleep falleth upon ſorrowful labouring men, he might be entertained with viſions from God, though not ſuch viſions as Eliphaz and other Saints have had, yet viſions he might have. Every time God communicates himſelf to the ſoul, there is a viſion of love, or mercy, or power, ſomewhat of God in his nature, or in his will, is ſhewed unto us. David ſhews us divine work when we go to reſt. The bed is not all for ſleep; Commune with your own heart upon your own bed, and be ſtill, Pſal. 4. Be ſtill or quiet, and then commune with your hearts; and if you will commune with your hearts, God will come and commune with your hearts too; his Spirit will give you a loving viſit, and viſions of his love. When Jacob fearing the rage of his brother, had put himſelf into the beſt poſture of defence he could, and had ſent his wives and children, his ſervants and his flocks over the River, the text ſaith, (Gen. 32. 24.) that Jacob was left alone; which is not to be underſtood, as if his company had left or deſerted him: Jacob's ſolitarineſs was not paſſive, but elective. He having diſpoſed of all his family, withdrew himſelf, and ſtayed alone; and what then? then he had a viſion indeed, then there wreſtled a man with him until the breaking of the day; he ſpent not the night in carking and caring what ſhould become of him the morrow; no, he retires to pray for a bleſſing upon his former cares, and a bleſſing he obtains. It is obſervable alſo concerning Iſaac (Gen. 24. 36.) that he went out into the fields to meditate (or as others read it) to pray. Some fooliſhly gloſs upon it, that Iſaac being delighted in Aſtronomy, went out to contemplate on the ſtars. But I believe the walk of Iſaac's ſpirit was above the ſtars. It is a ſweet expreſſion of Bernard, If thou wouldſt meet Chriſt in ſpecial communion, do thou oftentimes retire thy ſelf; O chaſt and lovely ſoul, doſt thou not know thou haſt a modeſt ſpouſe, that will not come to thee in the throng of worldly company and employment. Come my beloved (ſaith the Spouſe, Cant. 7. 11.) let us go forth into the fields, and lodge in the villages; let us get from the tumult of the creature. He loves to find his Spouſe alone, retired into a Chamber, or into a Cloſet, or in the Fields and Groves, in the Gardens and ſhadie Walks, or in thoughts upon thy Bed, having the Curtains drawn, and all the world ſhut out. Some have viſions in the night when deep ſleep falleth upon men; but what are their viſions? ſurely they are viſions of darkneſs, not of light, viſions of hell, rather then viſions of heaven. The Prophet complains of ſuch, who deviſe evil upon their beds; they plot and contrive evil upon their beds, or they have viſions of uncleanneſs, viſions of covetouſneſs, viſions of oppreſſion, black infernal viſions. How much better is it to be blind, then to have ſuch viſions? to be aſleep, then have ſuch waking thoughts? But to be awake in our beds with thoughts of Chriſt, is far more ſweet then the ſweeteſt ſleep. And in the day, could we make more vacations from the world, we ſhould have more buſineſs in heaven. Moſt men are mudding in the earth all day, and if they wake in the night, earthly care keeps them awake. There are many thouſands whom love unto the world keeps awake; but how few are there, whom love to Chriſt keeps awake?

O ſancta anima ſola eſto, ut ſoli omnium ſerves teipſam, quem ex omnibus tibi elegiſti. An neſcis te verecundum habere ſponſum? &c. Bern.

It was an harſh, and (in one ſence) an ignorant ſpeech of a wiſe man amongſt the Heathen, who ſaid, There is no man who may not more holily be in company, then with himſelf alone; and yet there is a truth in it: for if a man be by himſelf alone, and deal only with his own heart, probably, he might be as profitably with any company, as with himſelf; one mans heart in it ſelf, is as bad as anothers, and uſually it is worſt, when it is by it ſelf: Some, like Nebuchadnezzar, being ſecluded from men, converſe only with beaſts, theſe moſt beaſtly beaſts, luſts in their own boſoms. But to be alone from men, to converſe with God; to be alone from men, to converſe with Chriſt, is infinitely better then the ſociety of men. The reaſon why many receive but little of Chriſt, little of heaven, is, becauſe they are ſo much in the crowd of the world, ſo long upon the wrack of earthly care, they ſeldom let their hearts ſettle. The ballances muſt ſtand at an even poize, before you can weigh aright. If you deſire to know which bears moſt weight in your Nemo eſt cui non ſanctius ſit cum quolibet eſſe quam ſecum. Sen.

Dan. 4. 3.

Pietas periclitatur in negotiis.

your hearts, Earth or Heaven, Chriſt or the Creature, let your hearts ſtand ſtill. That in the Pſalm 4. v. 4. reaches this ſence fully; Commune with your own hearts upon your bed, and be ſtill. Our hearts will not be ſpoken with, unleſs we be quiet. And as the Picture-drawer cannot take the features of the face, to the life; ſo neither can we of our hearts, or lives, unleſs we have the patience to ſit for it.

VERS. 14, 15, 16.

Fear came upon me, and trembling, which made all my bones to ſhake.

Then a Spirit paſſed before my face, the hair of my fleſh ſtood up.

It ſtood ſtill, but I could not diſcern the form thereof; an Image was before mine eyes, there was ſilence, and I heard a voice, ſaying.

WE have already given the Logical dependance of this whole Context, from Verſe 12. unto the end of the Chapter, and therein ſhewed how Eliphaz confirms the principal Propoſition (lying in Verſe 17.) by Divine Authority, A viſion received from Heaven. A thing (ſaith he) was ſecretly brought to me, and my ear received a little thereof, in thoughts from the viſions of the night, when deep ſleep falleth on men. Thus, the manner of the viſion is deſcribed in general. The effects of the viſion upon Eliphaz, and the particular manner how the viſion appeared, are now further deſcribed and ſet forth. This Verſe 14. contains one eminent effect of the viſion, with the conſequents of it; as ſoon (ſaith he) as I was in that heavenly rapture and extaſie, Fear came upon me, and trembling, which made all my bones to ſhake.

It was very uſual, for Prophets and holy men, to be ſurprized with fear, at the appearance of Jehovah in his meſſages by Angels, or other Viſions. It is natural unto man to fear at the ſight of an Angel: and it is a received opinion among the Jews, that whether God or an Angel did appear, it was preſent death; which they collect from divers Scriptures (Exod. 33.20.) When Moſes deſired to ſee the face of God, the Lord anſwered, there is no man can ſee my face and live. Thoſe words of Gideon import as much (Judges 6.22.) When Gideon perceived that he was an Angel of the Lord, he ſaid, Alas, O Lord God, for becauſe I have ſeen an Angel of the Lord, face to face; as if he had ſaid, alas, wo is me, I ſhall certainly dye: and Judges 13. 21. Manoah concludes it, we ſhall ſurely dye, becauſe we have ſeen God, when an Angel appeared to them. Hence alſo Jacob (Gen. 32. 30.) after his wraſtling with the Angel (which was Chriſt) called the name of the place Penuel, which is, The face of God, for ſaith he, I have ſeen God face to face, and my life is preſerved; as noting, that it was a wonderful priviledge not to dye at ſuch a ſight; the very appearance of God, is death to the creature. And that which Hagar ſpake (Gen. 16. 13.) may well be interpreted to this ſence; when flying from her Miſtris, God came to her in the wilderneſs, ſhe called the name of the Lord that ſpake unto her, Thou God ſeeſt me; the reaſon is added, by way of admiration, for ſhe ſaid, have I alſo here looked after him that ſeeth me? Which words may be well tranſlated thus, Do I live after him (ſc. God) that ſeeth me? for here one act of life is put for the whole, looking or ſeeing, for living; Have I ſeen, or have I beheld the light, after God hath ſeen me? that is, am I alive after God hath ſeen me? How wonderful!

Ex Hebræo ita reddi poteſt. Etiamne jã video ſeu lucem hanc aſpicio & vivo, poſt videntẽ me. Pareus.

The effect of this viſion upon Eliphaz, was not death, but fear, yet no ordinary fear, but fear which looked almoſt as pale as death; it was fear joyned with trembling, and no ordinary trembling, but ſuch a fit of trembling as ſhook his very bones. We have often ſpoken of fear, both in this and in the former Chapters; but ſuch a fear as met Eliphaz, we have not met with before.

That before was the grace of fear, ſpiritual fear, but this is the paſſion of fear, natural fear. And it is natural to man (as ſome of the Ancients have obſerved) to fear thus at the appearance of God by Angels. Fear is cauſed by the apprehenſion of ſome evil imminent or at hand; that's the definition of natural fear. Now when God manifeſts himſelf, though the greateſt good be at hand, yet the ſoul hath ſome miſgivings and apprehenſions of evil; and hence comes fear: the foundation of this fear is laid in guilt, ſin is in the ſoul, and guilt may be upon the ſoul; thence natural fear works, when God, who is all holy, manifeſts himſelf. And in ſpecial, there is much unbelief remaining in the heart, this fear is ſtrengthened by unbelief, Wherefore do ye fear, ſaith Chriſt, O ye of little faith? Where there is little faith, there is much fear; and as unbelief prevails, ſo fear prevails too. Thirdly, this fear ariſes from the ſuddenneſs and unexpectedneſs of the thing. God (as you may obſerve in all thoſe revelations of himſelf) comes ſuddenly: that which comes before we ſee it, cauſeth fear when we ſee it: ſudden motions without us, work ſtrange commotions within. And fourthly, the over-powering Majeſty and ſuper-excelling Excellency of God, in any ſuch revelation, cauſeth aſtoniſhment of ſpirit: a little appearance of God, makes the creature diſappear. One drop of the Divine Ocean, ſwallows up all man; and one ray of the Eternal Light, dazles him. From any or all theſe conſiderations, it may be, that fear and trembling took hold upon Eliphaz like an armed man, as ſoon as the viſion appeared, fear met him (ſaith the Original) or (as the Septuagint) fear came out and (as it were) ſtood in the way to ſurprize and apprehend him.

Eſt homini naturale conſpecto angelo etiam bono timere. Bold. ex Beda, Origin, & Chryſoſtõ.

קראני μοῖ συνήντησε Sept. Occurrit, obviam factus eſt mihi.

Neither was this bare fear, but fear heightened, fear accompanyed with trembling. Trembling of the body is a ſymptom or ſign of great fear; when fear works outwardly, manifeſting it ſelf by ſad effects upon the body, then fear is in its reign and greatneſs. There are four ſpecial effects which fear works upon the body, and we have three of them here in this Text. The firſt is, The quaking or the ſhaking of the members of the body; the ſecond is, The ſhaking of the bones; the third is, The ſtanding up of the hair; and the fourth is, the paleneſs and wanneſs of the countenance. All except the laſt appeared upon Eliphaz, at the appearance of this viſion.

Firſt, He trembled in this Verſe 14. Fear came upon me and trembling: theſe two go often together in Scripture; you ſhall find trembling coupled with godly fear, as well as with natural fear, Pſal. 2. 11. Serve the Lord with fear (with reverential, filial fear) and rejoyce before him with trembling; that is, let your fear be an exceeding great fear, even ſuch, as fills you with an awful trembling at the preſence of the Lord. The Apoſtle Paul (Phil. 2. 12.) puts them together again; work out your ſalvation with fear and trembling.

The ſecond effect is ſhaking of the bones, It made all my bones to ſhake; as if he had ſaid, this fear ſtayed not in my fleſh, but deſcended, and entred into my bones, I was deeply affected with it. We tranſlate, Which made all my bones to ſhake; the word in the Hebrew is, it made the multitude of my bones, or, my bones, how many ſoever they are, to ſhake. The Hebrews have this rule, that the major part is uſually taken for the whole, therefore the multitude of his bones, or many of his bones, is well tranſlated, all his bones. And the Verb which we render ſhake, is of the ſame root with fear, fear came upon me; ſo that according to the letter we may read it thus, Fear came upon me, and trembling, which made all my bones to fear. A bone is in it ſelf ſenſeleſs, and therefore fearleſs; but to ſhew how extream and deep this fear was, he ſaith, it made fear enter into that which is without fear, and hath of it ſelf no feeling; it made my very bones to fear, as well as my heart to fear, or my fleſh to tremble. Habakkuk in the third of his Propheſie, being before God in his prayer-viſions, deſcribes the rapture of his ſpirit, by this and other ſymptoms upon his body, When I heard, my belly trembled, my lips quivered at the voice, rottenneſs entred into my bones, v. 16.

Quaſi dicat tremor non fuit ſuperficialis, ſed vehemens & intimus, qui etiam oſſa concuterit. Aquin. Geliduſq; per ima cucurrit Oſſa tremor. Virg. 2. Æneid.

The third effect follows; Then a ſpirit paſs'd before my face, and the hair of my head ſtood up. A Spirit ruſh'd upon me, ſo the Seventy. Some tranſlate it, a wind paſs'd before me; a gale or breath of wind, as (1 Kings 19. 11.) when God appeared to Elijah, it is ſaid, firſt there came a mighty wind, which rent the mountains, and brake the rocks; and ſome conceive that a wind paſſed before Eliphaz; but the context will not bear it; thoſe words which follow, are not compatible with a wind; v. 16. it ſtood before me, it ſtood ſtill; this cannot be underſtood of the wind, for wind is alwayes in motion: and then it is ſaid, I had an Image before my face; now there is no form or image of the wind; the wind hath no ſhape or likeneſs, therefore it was a Spirit or Angel, not an Aerial wind. And if you ſay, how hath a Spirit a form or an image, or how can that be ſeen? I anſwer, it was not a Spirit abſtracted and naked in it ſelf, but a Spirit joyned with a form and ſhape, as is generally agreed: ſo Angels or Spirits did uſually appear to the Ancients, taking a body or ſome form upon them: and thoſe apparitions, when a body was aſſumed, were called Spirits (Luke 24. 37.) it is ſaid, that the Diſciples were afraid at the appearing of Chriſt, thinking they had ſeen a ſpirit: the Apoſtles were not ſo abſurd, as to believe, that a Spirit in it ſelf, a Spirit abſtracted, could be ſeen; but they call'd it a Spirit, becauſe they thought it only the repreſentation of Chriſts body, and not the true body: and therefore though an outward ſhape appeared, they call'd it a Spirit. So here, a ſpirit paſs'd before me, which yet might have ſome outward ſhape, in which it was clothed to the eye.

חלפ Non ſignificat proprie metum progreſſivum, qualis eſt animalium, ſed motum levem & fluxum, qualis eſt cœlorum vel venti vel creſcentis arboris. Numina venientia ad nos in homines &c. ſe transformant; Ex oculus autem notari poſſunt, cum continuo obnutu intueantur & palpebras nunquam concludant. Et magis ex inceſſu, qui non ex dimotione pedum neq; tranſpoſitione exiſtit. Sed quodam impetu aerio & vi expedita, ſindentium magis auras quam tranſeuntium. Quamobrem ſtatuas quoque Deorum Egyptii ponunt, conjungentes illis pedes & quaſi unientes. Heliodor. in Æthiopicis, l. 3. Pedes veſtis defluxit ad imos. Et vera inceſſu palluit Dea. Virg. l. 1. Æneiad. de Venere.

A ſpirit paſs'd before me] forward, backward, up and down, which is oppoſed to the words in the 16 Verſe, it ſtood ſtill: here it was tranſient or in motion. The word uſed for paſſing, ſignifies rather ſuch a motion as is of the Heavens, or of the winds, then that which is properly progreſſive, or the motion of the living creatures. And thence ſome obſerve, that the motion of Spirits clothed with bodies in their apparitions, is not like the motion of men, who move, lifting up their feet one after another; but it is a paſſing as a ſhip moveth with a gale of wind, rather a gliding, then a going: Among the Heathen, this was made the chief difference, to diſtinguiſh a Numen, or Spirit coming in any ſhape, from a natural body: The ſteadineſs of their eyes was one, the not tranſpoſing their feet was another, and a clearer evidence.

This Spirit paſſing thus before him, produces the third effect;

The hair of my head ſtood up.] Shaking of the bones went before, and now ſtanding up of the hair. A ſpirit paſs'd before me, and the hair of my head ſtood up. The Original is, the hair of my fleſh, or the hair of my body; fleſh is put for the body, as in Gen. 2. 24. They two ſhall be one fleſh, that is (as it were) one body, ſpeaking of man and wife. And Pſal. 119. 120. My fleſh trembleth for fear of thee, ſaith David, it is the ſame word. As if Eliphaz had ſaid, I am ſo much affected with thoughts of God, that the very hair of my fleſh (as in extraordinary fear it uſeth to do) ſtood up. The natural reaſon, why the hair ſtands up in time of fear, is this; when ſudden fear falleth upon us, the blood goes, or haſtens rather to the heart, and ſo the outward members wax cold: and the skin, in which the hair is rooted, is preſt more together, which cauſeth the hair to ſtand up, though of it ſelf it be a weak and unſtable excrement.

So we ſee the general effect of the viſion, which was fear, and thoſe three concomitants or ſymptoms of fear, The trembling of his fleſh, The ſhaking of his bones, And the ſtanding up of the hair of his fleſh. From all, take theſe Obſervations.

Firſt, Foraſmuch as Eliphaz falleth into ſuch a fit of fear and amazement, at this manifeſtation of God to him; we learn,

> That, man is not able to bear the preſence of God.

Weak and frail man falls before the greatneſs, power and majeſty of God: Duſt and aſhes crumbleth away, if the glory of the great God do but ſhine forth, even in thoſe leſſer manifeſtations of himſelf. Hence it was, that Job ſeems to capitulate with God, that he would ſpeak with him, upon two Articles or conditions granted, Chap. 13. 21, 22. Firſt, Withdraw thy hand far from me: Secondly, Let not thy dread make me afraid: Then call thou, and I will anſwer; or let me ſpeak, and anſwer thou me. As if he had ſaid, ſo dreadful is thy preſence, that unleſs thou be pleaſed to ſweeten it to me, fear will preſently ſeize upon me, and diſable me to ſpeak. Moſes who was a favorite of Heaven, and one who ſhortly after had communion with God, above all that ever lived: yet when Jehovah appeared in that flaming Buſh, the Text ſaith, Exod. 3. 6. That Moſes hid his face, for he was afraid to look upon God; holy Moſes could not bear that glory. Daniel a man greatly beloved of God, and honoured with glorious viſions, was yet greatly aſtoniſhed at thoſe viſions, Chap. 10. 8. There remained no ſtrength in me, for my comelineſs was turned into corruption, and I retained no ſtrength: and verſ. 16. O my Lord, by the viſion my ſorrows are turned upon me, and I have retained no ſtrength: Verſ. 17. Neither is there any breath left in me, I am ready to dye, I am not able to bear thy majeſty, in theſe myſteries of thy will, made known to me. How doth Habakkuk cry out in the place afore-quoted, of his trembling belly, quivering lips, and of rottenneſs entring into his bones: We find in the New Teſtament, the Saints ſwallowed up with the like amazements. Zechariah, of whom the Holy Ghoſt had given ſuch an excellent teſtimony a little before, for a man that had walked blameleſs in all the ordinances of God; yet as ſoon as the Angel appeared, the Text ſaith, he was troubled, and fear fell upon him, Luke 1. 12. Yea the bleſſed Virgin (ver. 29. of that Chap.) when ſhe ſaw him (that is the Angel) ſhe was troubled in her mind. Laſtly, John the beloved Diſciple, ſeeing Chriſt walking in the midſt of the ſeven golden Candleſticks, &c. Fell at his feet as dead, Rev. 1. 17.

How ſhould this humble and abaſe us in our ſelves! we that are not able to ſtand before the gracious manifeſtations of God, when he comes to reveal himſelf to us in mercy; how ſhall we be able to ſtand before the wrathful manifeſtations of God? The Apoſtle tells us, (1 Cor. 15. 50.) Fleſh and blood cannot enter into the Kingdom of Heaven; by fleſh and blood, we are not to underſtand, the ſinful nature of man (as fleſh and blood often ſignifie in Scripture, being oppoſed to ſpirit) but the conſtitution of nature, or that eſtate wherein we ſtand, as men; this fleſh and blood is not able to enter into the Kingdom of Heaven, that is, it cannot bear the majeſty, glory and excellency of Heaven, where God clearly manifeſts himſelf unto his Saints; and where we ſhall ſee God face to face; and therefore the Apoſtle argueth all along, as by divers other arguments, ſo by this; to prove the neceſſity of a reſurrection, a raiſing and a new-moulding of the body into a ſpiritual condition: Why? becauſe our natural bodies are not able to ſtand under ſuch a weight of glory, as is prepared for the Saints in that Kingdom: Corruption (nature ſubject to corruption) cannot inherit incorruption; hence it was, that when but a little of God broke forth, the holieſt and beſt of men in the world, fell a ſhaking and trembling, as not being able to bear that tranſcendent Majeſty ſhining out in thoſe weaker refracted beams of glory.

Secondly, Seeing God coming at this time to inſtruct Eliphaz, and reveal a great truth to him, was pleaſed to deal thus with him, to make him ſhake and tremble; we may Note,

> That, God uſually humbles a man, and layes him very low, before he exalts him in the manifeſtations of his truth or power. Humiliations prepare and poſture the heart for revelation.

The reaſon is, becauſe God delights to have a man humbled, before he be inſtructed. Paul (though as humble a ſoul as lived (was in danger to be exalted above meaſure, through the aboundance of revelation, (2 Cor. 12.) even divine knowledge (through our corruption) is apt to puff up, and therefore we had need to have the bladder prickt, and our ſpirits laid flat, for the receiving of knowledge: Only humble ones are fit to be Gods Schollars; he will teach none elſe, he reſiſteth a proud man, then ſurely he will never teach a proud man; The meek he will teach his way; He breaks our will, before he truſts us with the ſecrets of his will: When the ſpirits of men lie in the duſt, when they tremble and ſhake, when all their bones are afraid, and rottenneſs enters into them, then they are prepared veſſels, to receive and take in the dew and influences of divine revelation. When God made that moſt memorable manifeſtation of himſelf, to the ancient Church, in giving the Law, we read how he terrified them, how he humbled and abaſed them: How dreadful was the preparation to the giving of the Law? The Apoſtle deſcribes it, (Heb. 12. 18, 20, 21.) by blackneſs, and darkneſs, and tempeſt, ſo that they could not endure that which was commanded; and ſo terrible was the ſight, that Moſes ſaid, I exceeedingly fear and quake. I confeſs the Law in it ſelf, was a terrible, a killing letter, and that which might well make the world ſhake, and men to tremble: If (as Luther ſaith) but one precept or ſentence of

Pſal. 25. 9.

of the Law ſhould be left in its full power and ſtrength (mans ſin) it would deſtroy mankind, and make all the world (becauſe guilty) tremble and fall before it: yet it was not barely the matter of the Law revealed, which cauſed this trembling; that was written in the heart of man before, and was publiſhed to the Jews, with gracious, with Goſpel-intentions; but it was the manner and circumſtances wherein the Law was revealed, which were ſo terrible. And this terror had this great uſe, even the humbling of their ſouls to a willing ſubjection and obedience to the will of God. When God revealed the Goſpel to Paul (as well as when he revealed the Law to Moſes) he made Paul tremble (Acts 9.) Paul was ſmitten down to the ground; God laid him along, unhors'd him, when he came to manifeſt his Chriſt to, or (as himſelf ſpeaks, Gal. 1. 16.) to reveal his Son in him. And this was to abaſe him, to break his heart, that he might be made up a choſen veſſel, to carry the Name of God unto the Gentiles. And howſoever ſuch humiliations are not of abſolute neceſſity, yet they have been very uſual, and are very uſeful. When the Lord hath laid the will and wiſdom of man in the duſt, when he hath made the ſtrongeſt and ſtouteſt to become as a child or a babe, to quake before him; then he takes him into his School of Inſtruction, and ſhews him ſuch things, as none of the wiſe men, or Princes of this world ever knew; even ſuch things as eye hath not ſeen, ear hath not heard, neither have they entred into the heart of man. This made our Lord Jeſus break out into that mixt rapture of gratulation and admiration, *Mat.*11.25. I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, becauſe thou haſt hid theſe things from the wiſe and prudent, and haſt revealed them to babes. Be as babes before God, and he will give you the wiſdom of men; yea, of Angels. They who are high-built, and pinacl'd in their own conceits, ſeldom have the foundation or firſt principles of ſaving knowledge laid in them ſavingly.

Acts 9. 15.

Thirdly, From this effect of the viſion, obſerve,

That, Fear is a ſtrong and powerful paſſion.

Fear comes upon a man like a Giant: Fear (ſaith Eliphaz) came upon me, it came upon me violently. A man were as good meet a Bear robb'd of her whelps, as this Fear: The ſtrongeſt man in the world cannot ſhake your bones as fear alone will, if that take hold of you. Some of the Greeks had ſuch amazing thoughts of fear, it was ſo terrible to them, that to appeaſe it, they worſhipped it for a god; as ſome worſhipped Sorrow among the Romans for a Goddeſs, under the name of Dea Angerona. The true God is called Fear in Scripture. And Fear was made an Idol-god among the Heathens: And if we conſider theſe effects in the Text, trembling of the fleſh, ſhaking of the bones, ſtanding up of the hair, all which this ſudden ſurprize of fear wrought upon Eliphaz, we muſt needs acknowledge and conclude it to be a very potent paſſion. In Prov. 1. the Lord threatens thoſe who would not fear him, thus; I will laugh when your fear cometh: Then he ſhews how ſuch fear cometh, when your fear cometh as deſolation, Prov. 1. 27. We cannot well take fear in this place, for the object of fear, for that is deſolation it ſelf, and therefore cannot be ſaid to come as deſolation. Then, taking it properly, for the paſſion of fear, we ſee, that the fear of trouble is like the trouble we fear. Fear is even as bad as deſolation: Fear pulls all down within, and makes a man like a deſolate place, before his place is made deſolate. And therefore in times of trouble, we had need take care that we add not ſtrength to our fear. We ſhould pray much that the power of natural fear may be ſubdued; eſpecially, that our natural fear may be turned into godly fear: godly fear is the proper cure of natural fear. Sanctifie the Lord God in your hearts, and make him your fear, or elſe the fear of man will quickly Lord it over your hearts. Such a fear is more dangerous then all our dangers. Trembling joynts, and ſhaking bones, will make ſmall reſiſtance; and while natural fear is ſtrong, natural ſtrength is but weak or uſeleſs. When from the onſet or aſſault of this fear, a mans hair ſtands, himſelf will run.

Aug. de Civ. Dei. l.4. c.8.

Fourthly, Conſider this by way of conſequence, That if a time when God cometh to reveal his will to man, be ſo dreadful, what will that time be (and that time is coming) when God cometh to reckon with man for the diſobeying of that will? Here a truth was but ſhewed Eliphaz in an extraordinary manner, and behold him ſhaking, fearing and trembling: Now when God ſhall come to require an account of man, for reſiſting or impriſoning the truth; when he ſhall come (2 Theſ. 1. 8.) to take vengeance on all thoſe that have not obeyed the Goſpel of truth, what terror, fear and trembling will fall upon the ſtouteſt of ſinful men! There muſt be an appearing of all, but there can be no ſtanding for ſuch before the dreadful Throne of Chriſt. The ungodly (of what ſort or ſize ſoever) ſhall not ſtand in judgment, Pſal. 1. 5. Impenitent unbelievers ſhall not be able to hold up their heads in that day. Captains and mighty men, who have often convers'd with dangers, and knew not what it was to be afraid; men who (like the horſe, deſcribed, Job 39. 72.) uſed to mock at fear, and would not turn back for drawn ſwords, or the glittering of ſhield or ſpear, ſhall at that day ſhake with fear, and hide themſelves like little children. So much for the effects of the viſion. Now follows a further deſcription of the viſion.

Verſe 16. It ſtood ſtill, but I could not diſcern the form thereof, an Image was before mine eyes, there was ſilence, and I heard a voyce, ſaying.

This verſe containeth a ſecond geſture of this Spirits appearing in the Viſion to Eliphaz. The Spirit was paſſing before, here ſtanding, as if he would preſent himſelf more fully to his view and obſervation. It ſtood ſtill, an Image was before mine eyes; but though the Spirit gave Eliphaz this fair advantage, yet he made little uſe of it; for he ſaith, I could not diſcern the form of it, that is, I could make nothing of it diſtinctly; but when his eye gave him no help, his ear did; though he could not diſcern or diſtinguiſh the form of the Spirit appearing, yet he could diſtinguiſh the voyce of the Spirit ſpeaking; there was ſilence, and I heard a voyce, ſaying.

It ſtood ſtill.] To ſtand, in Scripture, imports, not alwayes a ſetled poſture of the body; but it is taken ſometime in a larger ſence, to note our preſence in any place, whether it be ſitting, ſtanding, or walking; as, Mat. 16. 26. Chriſt ſaith, There be ſome ſtanding here which ſhall not taſte of death, till they ſee the Son of man coming in his Kingdom. Yet here the poſture is conceived to be, an erect, ſetled, fixed poſture; to the intent Eliphaz might have his eye more ſetled and fixed upon it, and likewiſe that his heart might be better prepared and fitted for the receiving of that meſſage, which ſhould be delivered unto him by it. When a man ſpeaks, he uſually makes a ſtand: An ambulatory ſpeech, a ſpeech in motion, is not ſo audible, nor ſo comly. In apparitions, this poſture is frequently mentioned. When our Lord appeared to the Diſciples after the Reſurrection, Luke ſaith, he ſtood amongſt them, chap. 24. 36. Zachary ſaw the Angel ſtanding on the right ſide of the Altar, Luke 1. 11. And while the Apoſtles were looking up ſtedfaſtly to heaven, at the Aſcenſion of Chriſt, Behold two men ſtood by them in white apparel, which alſo ſaid, &c. Acts 1. 10. Therefore alſo this Spirit being to ſpeak, ſtood ſtill.

I could not diſcern the form of it.] The face of it, ſo ſome read; the countenance or aſpect of it, ſo others. They who riſe from the dead, are not eaſily known by them that knew them living. When Chriſt aroſe (John 20.) it is ſaid, that Mary, who was very well acquainted with him in his life, (though he ſtood by her) knew not that it was Jeſus, but thought it had been the Gardner. When Chriſt walked with the Diſciples to Emmaus, they knew him not; and there is a reaſon given, their eyes were held that they ſhould not know him; a ſpecial act of Gods providence ſuſpended their eye-ſight, and took away (though not the power of ſeeing, yet) the power of diſcerning. God hath every ſenſe ſo exactly in his own hand, that he can let it out, or call it back in any degree, as himſelf pleaſeth; he can give a man ſo much power, as to ſee another, and not ſo much power as to diſcern him; which, by the way, is an argument of the wonderful exactneſs of Gods providence over us; he holds our ſenſes in his hand, as well as our reaſon or our wills; and ſaith, thus far you ſhall ſee or hear, and no further; therefore it is ſaid, ver. 31. that their eyes were opened; they were opened before to ſee him, but now they were opened to know him. And at other times when Chriſt appeared after his reſurrection, his Diſciples were at a ſtand whether it was he or no: Thomas, though he ſaw מַרְאֵהוּ τὴν ὄψιν vel τὸ εἶδος αὐτοῦ.

Chriſt before him, yet he would not believe it was he, until he had put his finger into the hole which the Spear made in his ſide; until he had aſſurance from another ſenſe, he would not believe his eyes. If then a body ariſing from the grave, though it be ſeen, yet can hardly be diſtinguiſhed by mortal eyes; how much leſs is the eye of man able to diſcern Angels and Spirits, clothed in humane forms? The impreſſions of glory and immortality, which appear upon bodies aſſumed by Spirits, eſpecially in ſudden apparitions, do exceedingly maſter, if not aſtoniſh ſenſe. The Heathens thought it abſurd to ſay, that their gods could be known by face: for though they were ſo groſs, as to ſatisfie themſelves with bodily gods, yet they believed thoſe bodies were ſo refined, had ſuch a kind of Majeſtick Divinity ſtampt upon them, that a meer mortal could not comprehend them. Their doctrine ſhines a little into this text. A Spirit paſſed before Eliphaz, he had a ſight of it, for it ſtood ſtill, yet he could not make out what it was, or who it was; he could not diſcern the form thereof.

Ethnicis ſemper abſurdũ fuit, ut faciem deorum agnoſcerent homines quam Deorum ἀορασίαν; poſteriores poetæ ab Homero, Homerus ab Ægyptiis, vel potius ex ſacris ſancti Moyſis libris ſumpſit. Bold.

An Image was before mine eyes.] The word Themounah, which we tranſlate Image, is taken either for a viſible or intellectual Image. Sometime it is taken for the form of a thing, which is apprehended viſibly by the eye; ſo in Deut. 4. 15, 16. Take ye therefore good heed to your ſelves (for ye ſaw no manner of ſimilitude, in the day that the Lord ſpake unto you in Horeb, out of the midſt of the fire) leſt ye corrupt your ſelves, and make the ſimilitude of any figure, that is, leſt you make a viſible image of the inviſible God.

תמונה Significat ſpeciem vel ſenſibilem, vel mentalē.

Secondly, The ſame word ſignifies an image in the mind. Thus God himſelf, who ſaid in Deuteronomie, that they ſaw no ſimilitude, and thereupon bade them take heed of making any ſimilitude, ſaith of Moſes, that the ſimilitude of the Lord he ſhall behold, Numb. 21. 8. The word ſimilitude in Numbers, is the ſame for Image in the text, an intellectual Image, a repreſentation to the underſtanding. Moſes had this priviledge, the ſimilitude of God revealed to his underſtanding; but when he ſaith in Deut. ye had no ſimilitude, the meaning is, no corporal, no viſible ſimilitude, no object of ſenſe. This Image in the text, was not intellectual, for it was before his eyes: Nor was it the image of a Spirit groſs'd into a body; but it was a Spirit in or with the imaginary form of a body.

Spectrum & viſum vocant Latini quicquid corporea apparet forma licet corpus non ſit.

There was ſilence, and I heard a voice, ſaying,] That is the laſt thing which the Text holds forth about this Viſion.

There was ſilence.] The Hebrew thus, Silence, and I heard a voyce; we ſupply, there was. The readings are various, yet the ſence one. I heard the voyce, as it were, of a gentle gale; I heard a gale, and a voyce, I heard a ſilent murmur. Our Tranſlators put in the margin, I heard a ſtill voyce; which comes near to that, I heard a ſilent voyce (by a uſual figure) ſilence and a voyce, for a voyce of ſilence. If any ſhould ſay, theſe two are ſo oppoſite, that they cannot be predicated or affirmed one of another. Silence is the direct contrary to a voyce, therefore to ſay there was a ſilent voyce, ſeemeth to be a contradiction in the adjunct: I anſwer, it is frequent to affirm contraries one of another, in an inferiour and remiſs degree. Though we cannot ſay light is dark, yet we may ſay, this is a dark light; that is, a glimmering, imperfect, obſcure light (Zech. 14. 6.) The day ſhall be neither clear nor dark; it ſhall be, as it were, a dark light. So a low voyce may well be called a ſilent voyce; I heard a ſilent voyce, that is, I heard a low or a ſtill voyce ſpeaking to me. Thus it ſuits well with what he ſaid at ver. 12. Now a thing was ſecretly brought unto me. And we may further clear it by that, 1 Kings 19. 12. where the expreſſion is of the ſame importance; here we have ſilence and a voyce; there, after the noiſe of a great wind, and an earthquake, it is ſaid, that Elijah heard (as ſome render it) the voyce of a ſubtil, fine, ſlender, attenuated ſilence; or as we tranſlate, a ſtill ſmall voyce, a ſweet raviſhing whiſper, a voyce without a ſound. Hence we have a kind of muſick, which in our common language we call ſtill muſick.

דממה וקול Silentium & vocem per hyppalagen, vocem ſilentii, i. e. vocem tacitam & ſubmiſſam audiebam. Merc. Et vocem quaſi auræ levis audivi. Vulg. Αὔραν ϗ φωνὴν ἤκουον. Sept. Silens murmur. Ar. Mont.

קול דממה דקה Vox ſubtilis ſilentii, dulce ſuſurrum, vox ſine ſono.

A twofold reaſon may be given why the Lord ſpake (as it were) in ſilence. Firſt, That the ſecret manner of ſpeaking might be an argument, that the matter ſpoken was a ſecret, a myſtery, not common or ordinary. Secondly, To diſpoſe the hearer to receive it with more care, reverence, and attention. A man muſt ſet himſelf to hear with diligence, while another ſpeaks with ſilence. A loud voyce finds us out, comes to us; but we muſt come to a low voyce, and find that out. When the Speaker takes leaſt pains with his tongue, the Hearer muſt take moſt pains with his ear.

And this manner of ſpeaking was uſed by the ancient heathen in their myſterious Oracles and Revelations. As when God revealed a ſecret, he ſpake ſecretly, and as it were, whiſpered thoſe truths in the ear (whiſpering is ſpeaking within one degree of ſilence;) ſo the Devil (who imitates God in what he can, that he may draw credit unto his own deceivings) is deſcribed in his inſtruments, to ſpeak thus, Iſa. 8. 19. When they ſhall ſay unto you, ſeek unto them that have familiar ſpirits, and unto Wizards that peep, and that mutter: They ſpeak, as it were ſilently, they only whiſper their diabolical incantations, and lying impoſtures. And, Iſa. 29. Thou ſhalt be brought down, and ſhalt ſpeak out of the ground, and thy ſpeech ſhall be low out of the duſt, and thy voyce ſhall be as of one that hath a familiar ſpirit, out of the ground, and thy ſpeech ſhall whiſper out of the duſt. The Prophet in this alludes to the manner of Witches and Enchanters, who had familiar ſpirits; which he here applies in a threat unto the people: The time ſhall come, that you ſhall be brought down by your enemies, that you ſhall ſpeak out of the ground, you ſhall lie at their feet like poor captives, that cry ſubmiſſively and pitifully for quarter, Oh mercy mercy, ſpare my life: That is the the thing aimed at by the Prophet, that God would abaſe them ſo before their enemies, that they ſhould whiſper out of the ground to their enemies for pity, as a Witch whiſpers from the ground to her miſerable Clients who come for counſel. Tertullian in his Apologetick, deſcribes the heathen Magicians thus, they ſpeak belching and gaſping, humming and hawing, rather then ſpeaking. The old Poet calls this Poppyſm; by which word he ſhews how their Idol-Prophets anſwered the deluded people, their miſerable Clients, when they came for counſel. To which the Hebrew word Tſiphtſaph, uſed by Iſaiah, chap. 8. before-cited, is very like, both in ſound and ſence.

—Sortes ducent, frõtemque, manumque. Præbebit vati crebrũ poppyſma petenti. Juvenal.

• Auruſpices de circo ex oris preſſi ſono, quod Poppyſma dicitur, futura colligebant. צפצף

There is yet another interpretation of theſe words, more proper and anſwerable to our tranſlation. There was ſilence, and I heard a voyce, ſaying,] This refers the ſilence to Eliphaz, as a preparation to his hearing the voyce; there was ſilence, that is, I ſtood ſtill, and ſpake never a word, but waited to hear what ſhould be ſpoken; I was ſilent, and all things about me were huſht and ſilent too: Then I heard a voyce; & ſo Junius gloſſes, becauſe (ſaith he) compos'd and ſtrengthened a little, after my former fear, I attended ſilently to the Spirit, that I might hear what ſhould be ſpoken unto me.

Me continebam tacitus expectans revelationē.

We read, Rev. 8. 1. that there was ſilence in heaven for half an hour; and ver. 5. we read of voyces and thundrings; before thoſe great voyces, there was great ſilence: Uſually before great ſpeaking, there is great ſilence; I was ſilent, and all were huſht; then I heard a voyce: ſilence prepares for audience. In Congregations, before the Preacher begins, all hold their peace: In Courts of Juſtice, when the Judge is to ſpeak, the Crier calls for ſilence. It was an uſual word amongſt the Rites of the Heathen, Favour your tongues, or Spare your ſpeech, when the myſteries of their ſuperſtitions were revealed: We may take the preſent Text in this ſence; that Eliphaz ſet himſelf in a ſilent poſture, to attend the meſſage which was to be revealed unto him: There was ſilence, and I heard a voyce, ſaying.

Favete linguis.

If we take the former interpretation, then, foraſmuch as Eliphaz after thoſe terrors and tremblings, the ſhaking of his bones, and ſtanding up of his hair, the confuſed form of a Spirit, and an amazing image before his eyes; foraſmuch (I ſay) as after all theſe, he hears a ſtill ſilent voyce, we may obſerve,

That, God, after terrors, uſually ſends in comforts and refreſhings.

God, having terrified Elijah, by a mighty ruſhing wind, (in the viſion before-noted) by an earthquake which brake the Rocks, and by a fire; then comes (as here in the text) a ſtill ſmall voyce, a voyce of ſilence, and God was in that voyce. It is put as a principal diſtinction amongſt the Ancients, clients, to know, whether a revelation were from a good Angel, or from a bad Angel. When a revelation was made by a good Angel, though he fill'd the heart with fear, at the beginning of his ſpeech, yet he gave comfort in the end, and cloſed with conſolation. We may obſerve in thoſe revelations, ſuch heartning, cheering language as this, Be not afraid, be of good cheer; ſo to Daniel, ſo to John, ſo to Zachariah, ſo to Mary, ſo to Gideon. But when a revelation was made by an evil Angel, or by a Witch, as it filled the hearers with fear, ſo it left them full of fear; it wounded them with terrors, and it applied no cure, no plaiſter, nothing medicinable to heal thoſe terrors. We find indeed (1 Sam. 28.) that when Saul conſulted the Witch of Endor, as ſoon as the Spirit appeared, it is ſaid, that the Witch her ſelf was afraid, and there is no mention made of Saul's being afraid at the firſt; ſo that Saul falls a comforting the Witch, and ſaid to her, Be not afraid: She was afraid, not of the Spirit that appeared, but of Saul, becauſe he had made a Law againſt Witches; and hence Saul comforts her, in aſſurance of impunity, notwithſtanding that ſin, both againſt the Law of God, and his own. But you ſhall find in how ſad a condition Saul himſelf was, before the Devil had done with him; for, as ſoon as Saul heard the tidings delivered by that perſonated Samuel, he fell into a ſhaking fit, and was as one aſtoniſhed and dead; hanging upon the rack of theſe torments, the Devil left him; there was no word of comfort, no ſweet ſtill muſical voyce to revive and fetch him again, but away packs the wicked Spirit, and leaves him overwhelmed with ſorrow. And then (in ſtead of a better, ſurely he could not have a worſe) the poor Witch comes to comfort and counſel him. They who refuſe counſel from the Prophets of God, may at laſt be forced to receive all their comfort from a Witch, a Prophet or Propheteſs of the Devil. But to the point in hand; we ſee, when the Devil and wicked Angels ſpeak terror, they leave terror; whereas, if God, by good Angels, ſpeaks terror, or affrights his people with the tokens of his preſence, he with a ſweet and ſtill voice refreſhes and comforts them before he departs.

And we may in that general apply it to our ſelves: That when God aſtoniſhes and terrifies us, when he makes our bones to ſhake, and rottenneſs to enter into them, we may expect comfort and refreſhing are at hand; and we may build upon it, that the more we tremble, the more we ſhall be refreſhed: Habakkuk in the place before-cited, is expreſs in this faith, I trembled, that I might have reſt in the day of trouble: to which he adds, when he cometh up to the people (he will invade or cut them in pieces) with his troops. As intimating, that they who will not tremble, ſhall be made to tremble; but when we actively labour to make our hearts tremble, or when God makes us tremble in ſuch a way as this, we may build upon it, that we ſhall reſt in the day of trouble, at leaſt we ſhall reſt in the end of that day: God never leaves his people under a cloud; he takes off trouble, and brings in a ſucceſſion of comfort, or conquers the trouble by mingling a prevailing portion of comfort with it.

If we take the Text in the latter ſence, we may note,

That, Silence becomes man, when God ſpeaks.

Speak Lord (ſaith Samuel) for thy ſervant heareth. Hear, O ſervant, for thy Lord ſpeaketh.

Silence prepares the heart to learn: Pythagoras commanded his Scholars to keep ſilence five years. And the Papiſts impoſe ſilence, as a part of Diſcipline, upon their Novices. Let Superſtition be avoided, and then ſilence is fitteſt for learners, unleſs their voyce be an enquiry after learning. That which the Apoſtle ſpeaks, reſpecting women in the Church, is true of all in the ſence I now ſpeak of, 1 Tim. 2. 12. Let the woman learn in ſilence; ſo let the man learn in ſilence. Silence is good as a preparative to learning, but wo to that which is an hinderance to inſtructing.

VERS. 17.

Shall mortal man be more juſt then God? ſhall a man be more pure then his maker?

IN this Verſe we have the Argument it ſelf, of the matter revealed in the former Viſion: There was ſilence, and I heard a voyce, ſaying: What that voice ſaid, we have in theſe words, Shall mortal man be more juſt then God? This is the Theme or Subject, upon which Eliphaz argued; and it is the main Propoſition of the whole Context. The proof of this Propoſition was given from divine authority, in the foregoing words; and we have a proof from reaſon, in the following part of this Chapter.

Shall mortal man be more juſt then God? Or, Shall man be juſtified in compariſon of God? Or, Shall man be juſt before God? The Chaldee Paraphraſe is yet more quick; the Spirit cried out, and ſaid, Can it poſſibly be, that man ſhould be more pure then God?

Numquid homo Dei comparatione juſtificabitur? Vulg.

μὴ καθαρὸς ἔσται βροτὸς ἐναντίον κυρίου? Sept. Clamabat & dicebat, fierin poteſt ut homo quam Deus purior ſit? Chald.

The words are propounded by way of queſtion; we may reſolve them into this negative propoſition, Mortal man is not more juſt then God, man is not more pure then his Maker.

We tranſlate Mortal man, the Hebrew is but one word; yet in the propriety of that Language, it contains both, noting man with an addition (ſuch as it is) of weakneſs & frailty, the meaneſt & loweſt eſtate of man; Enoſh, a poor, ſick, weak, dying creature, a creature of ſo little hope, that ſome derive this name, in the Hebrew, from deſperation; a creature ſo unworthy to be remembred by God, or ſo ready to forget God, that others derive it from a word which ſignifies forgetfulneſs, or to forget.

אנוש Miſer ærumnis & peccatis obnoxius.

אנוש quaſi נאוש in quo ſenſus deſperandi Euſebius à נשה deducit, quod oblivisci ſignificat, & ἐπιλησμὸν interpretatur, quaſi animal obliviosum dicas. Druſ.

Shall man, this mortal man, this weak creature, be more juſt, or, be juſtified rather then God? Such a ſence the words carry. When man and God are compared together, ſhall God be eſteemed leſs juſt, or leſs pure then man? (Luke 68. 18.) it is ſaid of the Publican, that he went down juſtified rather then the other; put the Phariſee and the Publican in the ballance together, and the Publican was the weightier in righteouſneſs, or the more juſt of the two. That in Luke, is an Hebraiſm, and it is the ſame with this. Put weak man and the mighty God (the word Eloah) which is here uſed for God, noteth the ſtrong God, or the mighty God) put him in the ballance of conſideration with weak man, will he not be infinitely more weighty in juſtice, more ſhining in purity, more glorious in holineſs.

Min eſt comparandi particula; comparatio exprimitur per præpoſitionem ultimi caſus, juſtificatus ab illo, i. e. præ illo. Luk. 18.14.

גבר Vir, quaſi validus, ut & Latinè à viribus dictus.

Yea, not only if you take man in his obſcureſt notion, or in this term of extenuation, Enoſh, for a weak man, a poor cripled creeping creature; but take him in his beſt eſtate, as he is (Geber) a ſtrong man, a powerful man, a holy man; yet as it follows in the Text, Shall man be more pure then his Maker? that is, ſhall ſuch a mighty man, a wiſe man, a learned man, a gracious man, a man accompliſhed in all natural, in all acquired endowments, the chiefeſt and choiceſt, the cream and flower of all the men upon the face of the earth, a Worthy of the firſt three, the firſt of all the Worthies, a man of the firſt magnitude, of the higheſt elevation, both in parts, gifts and graces, ſhall he be more pure then his Maker? Chriſt (as incarnate or made man) is called the Mighty God (Iſa 9. 6.) God made a mighty man, or man becoming the mighty God. The Chaldee calls all Giants, Gibbaraja; and Nimrod, the firſt of the Giants, was called by this name, a mighty hunter before the Lord, Gen. 10. 8. So then, let man be never ſo excellent, his excellency is baſeneſs; let him be never ſo ſtrong, ſo wiſe, ſo holy, he is but weak, fooliſh, filthy, compared with him who made him. Leave your Enoſh, your weakling, your poor ſick creatures; bring forth your Gebers, your beſt, they are as nothing, yea, leſs then nothing before the Lord. Shall mortal man be more juſt then God? Shall man (the beſt of men) be more pure then his Maker?

We are to mark the double oppoſition of the Text. Here is, firſt, mortal, weak, ſick man, ſet in oppoſition to the ſtrong, the mighty, the all-powerful God. And then in the ſecond place, the oppoſition is between the ſtrongeſt, the beſt, the holieſt, the wiſeſt of men, and the maker of all men. Shall mortal man, or ſhall the beſt of men be more juſt, more pure then God their Maker? There is a threefold ſence, which we may give of the words joyntly.

Firſt, They are a denial of all compariſon between God and man. No man may compare himſelf with God. Shall mortal man? that is, mortal man ought not to be ſo bold and daring as to venture upon ſuch a thing as this, to ſtand upon terms of equality with the mighty, the great, the glorious God, the Maker of all, as the Apoſtle reſolves in his own caſe, (1 Cor. 4.4.) Though I know nothing by my ſelf, yet am I not hereby juſtified at all; much leſs, though a man know nothing by himſelf, will this juſtifie him in this compariſon, that he is juſt, as God is juſt.

But ſecondly, Shall mortal man be more juſt then God? It is as if he had ſaid, God who is infinite in juſtice, would never do that which a juſt man will not do; God who is infinite in power, would never do that which a weak man would not do, ſhall weak man be more juſt then God? And ſo we may form the Argument, thus:

No man, no Judge is more juſt or incorrupt then God, who is the ſupream and Lord chief Juſtice of all men. But there is no juſt Judge amongſt men who will puniſh an innocent man; therefore God doth not puniſh any one that is innocent. The conſequence or inference is plain and clear, for God himſelf ſhould either be unjuſt, or he ſhould be leſs juſt then man is, if he ſhould do that which a juſt man upon true grounds would refuſe to do. Therefore in Gen. 18. Abraham pleads with God under that title of a juſt Judge, Shall not the Judge of all the world do right? As if he ſhould ſay, faithful Judges upon the earth will do right, therefore ſurely he that is the Judge of all the earth will do right. So Eliphaz here to Job, never complain as if God had done thee wrong, for certainly the juſt God will not do that which a juſt man would not do: The word, whereby God is expreſt (Eloah) doth well comply with, and anſwer this ſence, it being properly attributed to God as a judge, the great Arbitrator and Determiner of all the cauſes and caſes of all men in the world. Shall mortal man be more juſt then God?

a

Eloah denotat judicem, & æquiſſimum rerum arbitrum.

Thirdly, The ſence may be taken thus, If any man ſhould come to implead God, or to plead with God, if any ſhould dare to tax the Juſtice of God, or be ſo hardy to put in a bill of complaint againſt him; ſhall this man, this weak man be found more juſt in his complaining, then God hath been in ſentencing? Shall his bill of complaint be better grounded then the Lords award of Judgment? It is an alluſion to thoſe, who ſuppoſing they have wrong, complain againſt the Judge, and ſay, that he hath erred in, or perverted judgment; That word (Juſtified) here uſed, ſhall man be juſtified before God? Is a Judiciary word, a Court or Law term; The ſame word, which the Holy Ghoſt uſes, in that great work of Free Grace, the juſtification of a ſinner before God; and that imports the declaring and ſetting forth of a man to be righteous, and his cauſe good in Jeſus Chriſt, whereupon he is cleared and acquitted. When Satan accuſes or pleads againſt us, laying ſuch and ſuch ſins to our charge; thus and thus this man hath offended: then God is ſaid to juſtifie a man, that is, to declare him to be juſt, his ſins being covered, and himſelf accepted in Jeſus Chriſt. Hence that divine challenge to all accuſers, Who ſhall lay any thing to the charge of Gods elect, it is God that juſtifieth, Rom. 8.33.

צרק Verbū forenſe ſpectans ad innocentis abſolutionem.

So now, if man ſhould accuſe and complain againſt God, he hath done thus and thus in the world, afflicted a Job, troubled a righteous perſon; ſhall mortal man be more juſt then God? Shall this man in his complaint be juſtified? Shall not God rather be juſtified, againſt whom he complains? Certainly he ſhall. God ſhall be declared juſt, yea, he ſhall be declared juſt by man. A man un-ingaged and rightly principled, Such a man ſhall ſay, verily there is a God that judgeth the earth. In the judgment of man, that judgment ſhall ſpeak a God; and all ſhall be forced to Daniels mourning acknowledgment, O Lord, righteouſneſs belongeth unto thee, but unto us confuſion of face, Dan. 9.7, 9. We may enlighten it further by that of David, (Pſal. 51. 4.) where he profeſſes thus, I will confeſs my ſins, &c. that thou mayeſt be juſtified when thou ſpeakeſt, and be clear when thou judgeſt: As if he ſhould ſay, if hereafter thou ſhalt afflict me, and lay thy rod upon me, I know many will be ready to complain, and ſay, why doth God thus, why doth he afflict David, David a holy man; a man after his own heart; a man of whom he hath given ſuch a large teſtimony, of whom he hath ſaid, I have found a man after my own heart? Now to the intent all theſe may be caſt in their ſuits, and anſwered in their complainings, I here acknowledge before all the world, that I have ſinned greatly; and therefore, though thou haſt pardoned my ſin, and ſo wilt never charge it upon me to condemnation, nor puniſh me for it in a way of ſatisfaction; yet hereafter thou mayſt in thy fatherly wiſdom, ſee it needful to chaſtiſe me, to prevent and purge out ſin, or to help me againſt the weakneſs of my nature, and the ſtrength of temptation for the time to come. So here in the Text, Shall man be juſtified before God? If Job, or any of his friends for him, ſhould complain againſt God, why he being one commended and approved from the mouth of God, for a man perfect and upright, ſhould be thus afflicted; what? Shall weak Job be juſtified before God? Yea, though Job be conſidered in his greateſt flouriſhings of grace, and higheſt pitch of his proſperity, as he was Geber indeed, the greateſt, the mightieſt man in the Eaſtern world, yet ſhall he be more pure then his Maker? No, ceaſe your complainings, God is juſt, and his honour muſt be vindicated, in what he doth, or in what he ſhall do againſt the weakeſt, or againſt the mightieſt, againſt the meaneſt or againſt the beſt of men. God will be found juſt, and man a lyar.

Either of theſe three ſences are fair from the conſtruction of the Text, and may be profitable for us; I ſhall therefore draw them down into five or ſix concluſions, which will be at leaſt a portion of that marrow and fatneſs, which this Scripture yields us to feed upon.

First, We may Obſerve, That, man naturally preferreth himſelf not only above other men, but even before God himſelf.

A principle of pride dwels in our hearts by nature, which at ſome times, and in ſome caſes, breeds better thoughts in us of our ſelves, then of God himſelf. And it is this height of ſpirit, which the heavenly viſion here would level to the ground. We know it was the firſt ſin of man, that man deſired to be like God, Gen. 3. The firſt temptation was baited with a parity to Divine powers, Ye ſhall be as Gods knowing good and evil. This alſo was the language of Lucifers heart; Thou haſt ſaid in thy heart, I will aſcend into Heaven, I will exalt my throne above the Stars of God, I will aſcend above the heights of the Clouds, I will be like the moſt high, Iſa. 14. 13, 14. And the practiſe of the man of ſin, is thus propheſied, That he ſhall exalt himſelf above all that is called God, 2 Theſ. 2.4. But the heart of man is yet more mad, and hath out-grown thoſe ſinful principles. For in troubles and temptations, when things go not according to his mind, he ſometimes hath thoughts, not only that he is like God, but that he is more juſt then God; and if he had the ordering of things, he would order them better then God: he ſometime thinks himſelf juſter then God, and if he had the puniſhing of offenders, juſtice ſhould proceed more freely and impartially then it doth: which is upon the matter, not only to exalt himſelf (as the Man of Sin doth) above Nuncupative Gods, or all that is called God, but to exalt himſelf above him who is God by nature, above the only one-moſt God: Even to ſpeak in this Dialect of higheſt blaſphemy, that he is more juſt then God, more pure then his Maker.

Secondly, Take this Concluſion, That, it is a moſt high preſumption, not only for low weak man, but for the beſt, the higheſt of men, to compare themſelves with God, or to have any thoughts concerning his wayes, as if they could mend them.

When God calls us to amend our wayes, for us to preſume we could amend Gods wayes, is the very top branch, the higheſt tower, yea, the moſt towring Pinnacle of preſumption. We ſay amongſt men, that compariſons are odious; but this is the moſt odious compariſon of all, for a man to compare himſelf with God, his thoughts with Gods thoughts, what he hath done or would do, with what God doth.

If you conſider the terms of oppoſition that are in the Text, this concluſion will be more clear unto you. Conſider how Enoſh, weak mortal man is oppoſite to Eloah, the mighty, the ſtrong God: it is preſumption for a weak man to compare with a ſtrong man; what preſumption is it then, for a weak man to compare with the mighty God? For a Reed to compare in ſtrength with a Rock? For darkneſs to compare with light? For a Cloud to compare with the Sun ? For death to compare with life ? For folly to compare with wiſdom ? For uncleanneſs to compare with holineſs ? For nothing to compare with all, how preſumptuous ? Will ye provoke the Lord ? (ſaith the Apoſtle, 1 Cor. 10.) are ye ſtronger then he ? It implies, that ſome ſuch thoughts lodge in man, as if he could make his party good with God, or might be ſtronger then he. And it is equal folly in us, and provocation againſt the Lord, to think our ſelves juſter, as to think our ſelves ſtronger then he,

And then mark the other terms of oppoſition ; Man and his Maker : Shall the great man, compare with, or be more pure then his Maker ? As if he ſhould ſay, How great and excellent ſoever this man is, he was made, and made by God, with whom he thus compares, then whom he thinks himſelf more pure. And ſhall the thing formed ſtand upon terms with him that formed it ? Shall the potſheard or the pot contend with the Potter ? What though it be an excellent veſſel, a veſſel determined for the moſt excellent ends and uſes ? Yet whatſoever it is, it was made to be, and made to be by God, both in its conſtitution and uſes : Shall it then boaſt it ſelf againſt its maker ? The Lord made Geber as well as Enoſh, the ſtrong man, as well as the weak the wiſe and learned man as well as the fooliſh and ignorant, the Noble as well as the baſe, the holy and righteous, as well as the wicked and prophane : In a word, the veſſels of honour are as much, yea more of his making then the veſſels of diſhonour ; ſhall they then be more pure then their maker ? Hath the Lord given more to others then he hath in himſelf ? Hath he made a creature his Superiour, or his Peer ? Hath his bounty impaired his own ſtock, or hath he made man more then God ? That God hath made the beſt out of the duſt, is enough to lay all our pride and boaſting as low as the duſt. That, what we are, we are from another, ſhould ever keep us humble in our ſelves.

Thirdly, Take this Concluſion, That, God in himſelf is moſt juſt and pure.

Shall mortal man be more juſt then God ? The queſtion hath this poſition in it, that God is infinitely juſt, infinitely pure, therefore he is perfectly pure, perfectly juſt. God is eſſential Juſtice, eſſential purity ; Juſtice and purity are not qualities in God, but they are his very nature : A man may be a man, and yet be unjuſt ; but God cannot be God and be unjuſt : A man may be a man, and yet impure ; but God cannot be God, and be impure ; ſo that Juſtice and purity are not qualities or accidents in God, but his very eſſence and being ; deſtroy or deny the purity and juſtice of God, and you put God out of the world, as much as in you lies : for he cannot be God, unleſs he be both juſt to others, and pure in himſelf.

Fourthly, Take this Concluſion, The beſt men compared with God are evil, and the holieſt are impure.

Not only is it preſumption, but a lie, for men to compare with God ; ſhall mortal man be more juſt then God ? It is as if he ſhould ſay, man hath no juſtice at all compared with God, ſhall man be more pure then his Maker ? Man compared with his Maker, hath no purity at all, not ſo much as a name or a ſhadow of juſtice and purity, compared with God : though it be ſomewhat in it ſelf, yet it is nothing before him : In thy ſight, or before thee, ſhall no fleſh living be juſtified, or be juſt. All that righteouſneſs and purity which God hath put into the creature, is but as the light of a candle, to the light of the Sun : the candle hath no light in it, compared to the Sun ; the candle enlightens the night, but a thouſand candles cannot a day, or make the day lighter then it is ; Sun-light overcomes and ſwallows up candle-light : The Stars help us to ſee in the dark, but in the bright day time the Stars themſelves cannot be ſeen : ſo all creature purity diſappears and vaniſheth, when once we look upon the purity of God, who is light, and in whom there is no darkneſs at all. The Apoſtle Paul hath a parallel expreſſion (2 Cor. 3. 10.) ſpeaking of the adminiſtration of the Jewiſh, ceremonial, earthly ſhadows, and the adminiſtration of light in Goſpel heavenly ordinances ; Even that which was made glorious, had no glory in this reſpect, by reaſon of the glory that excelleth : I do not deny (ſaith he) but there was great glory in the Jewiſh Church ; Gods inſtitution ſtampt excellency upon the worſhip of the Jewes ; their Ceremonies were made glorious ; but if you will compare Jewiſh worſhip to Chriſtian worſhip, it hath no glory in it all ; that which was made glorious, had no glory, by reaſon of the glory that excelleth, this is Goſpel glory. So we may ſay, man who was made glorious, man who was made gracious and juſt, hath no grace, no juſtice, no glory in him, in compariſon of that glory which doth excel ; namely that juſtice and purity which is in God. God is ſo true, that all men are liars, Rom. 3. 4. So righteous, that all mens righteouſneſs are a filthy rag, Iſa. 64. 6. Man, who is juſt by participation from God, is not juſt in compariſon of God.

Humana juſtitia divinæ comparata injuſtitia eſt ; quia & lucerna in tenebris fulgere cernitur, ſed in ſolis radio poſita tenebratur. Greg.

Cujus participatione juſti ſunt, ejus comparatione nec juſti ſunt. Aug. lib. ad Oroſium. c. 10.

The fifth Concluſion is this, and it is the principal point, which we are to receive and attend from this Text.

God is ſo juſt, ſo pure in himſelf, that he neither doth nor can do wrong to any creature.

In this truth, Eliphaz aimes to inſtruct Job chiefly ; for he ſuppoſed, that Job had complained of God, as if he had done him wrong, wherefore he ſpeaks reprovingly and chidingly, ſhall mortal man be more juſt then God ? as if he ſhould ſay, art thou ſo groſs as to charge God with doing thee an injury ? It is impoſſible that God ſhould do any man wrong ; (de Facto) he doth no man wrong, and (de Poſſe) he cannot wrong any man. The power of God is ſeen moſt in this, that he cannot do any evil ; This impotency (if we may ſo call it) is the ſtrength of God ; yea the omnipotency of God conſiſts in this, that he can do no wrong. We have a Maxime of State amongſt us, (and it is the glory of the Kings of this Nation) we ſay, The King can do no wrong ; but it is not to be underſtood as this, God can do no wrong ; we know Kings are men, and that's enough to prove they may do wrong : As to ſay, the Lord is God, is enough to prove, that he cannot. Princes have a natural power to do evil ; but which is his glory, God hath not. The meaning then is, the King hath not any civil power to do wrong ; the Law hath ſo bounded, ordered, and directed him ; the conſtitution of the Kingdom hath given him the advice of Parliaments and Counſellours, the aſſiſtance of Judges and Officers, he acts all by others : ſo that the failings of his Miniſters do the Subject wrong, the regal power doth it not. But when we ſpeak thus of God, we mean it of his natural power, which being eſſentially and infinitely juſt and good, as well as ſoveraign and ſupreme ; there is not the leaſt imaginable ſeed in him, which would be procreative of the leaſt injuſtice : Therefore the Scripture deſcribes the Lord, juſt and holy, not only in his nature, but in all his works and wayes, Pſal. 145. 17. The Lord is righteous in all his wayes, and holy in all his workes. And this implies, not only that all the wayes wherein the Lord walks, are righteous, and the works he doth, holy : but that he can go in no way but a righteous way, nor do any work in the creature, but a work of holineſs. Not only is that juſt and holy, which the Lord doth, but let the Lord do what he will, that will be juſt and holy.

And here give me leave, ſomewhat to enlarge this, and plead for God againſt ſome objections, which are made by the men of the world, and ſome temptations which Satan will urge ſtrongly upon the hearts of thoſe, who fear God ; by which (poſſibly) they may be ſo entangled and gravel'd, that they know not how to extricate themſelves, or make out the Juſtice of God in his adminiſtrations towards men.

For firſt it will be objected, Is God ſo juſt, that he neither doth nor can do injuſtice to the creature ? How comes it to paſs, that both the righteous and the wicked fall under the ſame judgment : if the judgment be right upon a wicked man, ſurely it cannot be right upon the righteous man : Is God righteous and juſt, when they who differ as much as Heaven and Hell, as light and darkneſs, do yet meet (as it were) under the ſame act of God, and are wrapt together in the ſame ſentence ? If it be Juſtice upon the wicked, if it be their portion, how can it be the portion of the righteous, or an award of Juſtice upon them ? As Abraham pleaded with God (Gen. 18. 25.) Shall the righteous be ſlain or periſh, with the wicked ? that be far from thee to do in this manner ; ſhall not the Judge of all the earth do right ? as if he ſhould ſay, if thou doeſt involve a juſt man and a wicked man in one and the ſame judgment, this is not to do as a righteous Judge, far be it from thee to do ſuch a thing. Yet we ſee in frequent experiences, that the ſame judgment falleth upon the righteous and the wicked; By Sword, Famine, Peſtilence, by Storms at Sea, and Enemies at Land, both are overtaken and fall together. Is this unerring Juſtice?

Juſtitia eſt ſuum cuique tribuere.

Juſtice is to give every one his portion, his due: And God hath given this exact diſtribution in charge to the Prophet, he muſt ſay ſo, and will not the Lord do ſo? (Iſa. 3. 10, 11.) Say ye to the righteous, it ſhall be well with them, for they ſhall eat the fruit of their doings; woe unto the wicked, it ſhall be ill with him, for the reward of his hands ſhall be given him: But how do the diſpenſations of God anſwer this direction to man, when his providence ſeems to huddle up all together, to make the ſame portion ſerve, both to the righteous and the wicked?

I Anſwer it firſt in the general, and then in ſome particulars. In the general, the troubles of the righteous are good for them, and therefore they have that which is promiſed; God ſaith, ſay to the righteous it ſhall be well with him: when a righteous man is troubled, it is well with him; therefore he hath that which God promiſed him: and when a wicked man proſpereth, it is ill with him; therefore he hath that which God threatneth againſt him. Outward mercy is judgment to wicked men, and their proſperity is their undoing: therefore, do not think that God varies a tittle from the tenour of his word, when he ſaith, it ſhall be ill with wicked men, and yet you ſee them proſper; for it is never worſe with them, then when they proſper, then when they think it is beſt, and when the world thinks ſo too; the proſperity of fools ſhall deſtroy them; and what proſperity is there in deſtruction? The meat in their mouthes is as a ſword in their bowels. If you ſaw the Lord formally ſending a Sword to devour wicked men, you would think it juſtice: the proſperity of wicked men is as ſharp as a Sword; that can but deſtroy, and ſo doth this; It is their judgment that they are without judgments, and not to be ſmitten, is their ſcourge.

Prov. 1.

Now more particularly to anſwer this objection about the juſtice of God; and it will be but needful, conſidering the times we live in, threaten us with a common deluge, or an overflowing ſcourge, which may ſweep away both good and bad together.

Firſt, In reference to the godly. Are they in a ſad eſtate outwardly? are they in great afflictions? I anſwer, though they are afflicted, yet they proſper. When they are impoveriſhed, they are enriched; when they are as having nothing, they poſſeſs all things. What is there? what can there be, even in their ſaddeſt eſtate, which doth not conduce to their good, which will not be a benefit unto them?

For firſt, Their troubles are but trials; now is there any hurt in a trial, or perturbation in a probation? Troubles try their graces, and their corruptions too. Trouble tries grace that it may be honour'd, and corruption that it may be mortified; there is no hurt in all this, rather it is a moſt happy condition, which makes grace conſpicuous, whereby a mans beſt ſide, his inſide (wherein his glory lies, The Kings Daughter is all glorious within) is turned outward. That Scripture (Dan. 11. 33, 34, 35.) is very pregnant to the point in hand; where the Prophet foretelling troubleſome times, ſaith, They that underſtand amongſt the people, ſhall inſtruct many; yet they ſhall fall by the ſword, and by flame, and captivity, and by ſpoil many dayes: They that underſtand, that is, godly men, ſhall fall by theſe judgments, ſome of them by the ſword, they ſhall utterly be cut off; ſome by flame, they ſhall be burnt to aſhes: others by captivity and by ſpoil, their eſtates ſhall be plundred, their perſons impriſoned. How doth this anſwer the Juſtice of God (will carnal reaſon object) that it ſhall be thus ill with the righteous, to whom the Lord promiſeth it ſhall be well? Yes, well enough. For it followeth, Now when they ſhall fall, they ſhall be holpen with a little help, and ſome of them of underſtanding ſhall fall (that is by captivity, and by ſpoil) to try them, and to purge them, and to make them white. Here are two remarkable ends, why they of underſtanding fall into theſe evils. Firſt for probation, to try them. Secondly, for cleanſing and purgation, to purge them and make them white. Gold is never wrong'd by being tryed. A ſpotted garment, a diſtemper'd body are not damnified by waſhing or by purging. To be freed from filth without, and bad humours within the body, is more then a common favour. How high an act of favour then is it, to have ill humours and filthy ſpots waſhed, purged out of the ſoul? Such baſe humours a good man may have, as call for theſe ſtrong working pils, Spoiling and Captivity, to caſt them out. Now thoſe men of underſtanding have no more hurt intended them by God, when they fall into ſpoilers hands, then when a diſeaſed body falls into a Phyſitians hand, or when a defiled garment fals into a Fullers hand; ſc. to purge and make them white. Affliction is a cleanſer. Chriſt is the only Lavatory, and his blood the only Fountain to waſh away the guilt of ſin; yet God hath other Fountains and Lavatories, to waſh away the pollution of ſin: That blood cleanſes in this ſence alſo, principally; and all the waters or fires of affliction have no efficacy at all, to refine or cleanſe, but in vertue of that blood. A Croſs without a Chriſt, never made any man better: But with Chriſt, all are made better by the Croſs. We may then ſay at leaſt, that it is well with the righteous in affliction, foraſmuch as (through the bleſſing of God) they are bettered by affliction. When you ſee a godly man caſt out into the open air, and having the waters of ſorrow powred continually upon him, know that he is only laid out a whitening, and will appear ſhortly more reſplendent then ever.

Secondly, Afflictions are ſent to humble. Pride is ſuch a weed, as often grows in the beſt ſoyle: Now that which humbleth us, cannot hurt us; we loſe nothing by the abatements of our Pride: no, the more pride loſes, the more we gain. And we ſeldom or never loſe any thing, but by pride. Now ſaith God, Deut. 8. 1. If you would have an account, why I brought my people about in the wilderneſs, through ſo many difficulties, know, this was my deſign, it was to humble them. God reſiſts pride whereſoever he finds it; (they in whom pride totally prevails, are Gods enemies, and he reſiſts them) they in whom pride hath ſome, yea great prevalency, may be Gods friends, and God will reſiſt pride in them: the difference is obſervable between reſiſting of pride, and reſiſting the proud; the reſiſting of the perſon, and the reſiſting of the ſin. The great reſiſtance which God makes againſt the pride of mans heart, is by the rods of affliction; he whips them into humility, and by taking away carnal comforts, takes them off from carnal confidence. And O bleſſed affliction which makes us leſs to our ſelves, and all creatures leſs to us. We are never ſo much in Gods eye, as when we are leaſt in our own: nor have we ever ſo much of God, as when we expect little, or leaſt from man; ſay therefore it is well with the righteous, when they are in the deeps of affliction; for it is but to bring them off their Mountains of pride, that they may be exalted in the ſtrength and love of God, even upon the Mountain of his Holineſs, and their glory for ever.

Thirdly, Afflictions bring the Saints nearer to God. Troubles abroad cauſe the ſoul to look inwards and homewards. Is there any hurt in being brought nearer to God? It is good for me to draw near unto God, ſays David; and it is good for us to be drawn near unto God, if we will not come of our ſelves: It is a deſirable violence, which compels us heaven-ward. Heaven is but our neareſt being unto God; and by how much we are nearer God on earth, ſo much the more we have of Heaven, upon earth. Afflictions (as in the prodigals example) put us upon thoughts of returning to God; and the more we return, the nearer we are unto him; returning thoughts will not reſt, but under our fathers roof: yea, returning thoughts will not reſt, till we are got into our fathers armes, or under the ſhadow of his wing, and this is a happy condition indeed; as it was with Noahs Dove (Gen. 8. 9.) when ſhe was ſent forth of the Ark, ſhe could find no place for the ſoal of her foot to reſt on; ſhe knew not whither to go, for the waters were on the face of the whole earth; therefore ſhe returneth back, and comes hovering about the Ark, as deſiring to be taken in: but after the waters were aſſwaged, he ſent out a Dove, which returned to him no more. So when it is fair weather in the world, calm and ſerene, even Doves keep off from God; and though they go not quite away from him, yet they are not ſo deſirous of coming to him; but when we find a deluge in the world, ſuch ſtorms and tempeſts of trouble, that we know not where to fix our ſouls for a day, then we come as the Dove fluttering about the Ark, and cry to our Eternal Noah, that we may be near him, yea, within, with him. Wicked men (like the Raven, which Noah ſent out firſt, ver. 7. and returned not again) care not for the Ark of Gods preſence in the greateſt troubles; to be near God, is more troubleſom to them, then all their troubles. But Believers, like the Dove, will look home (at leaſt) in foul weather: God is their chief friend at all times, and their only friend in ſad times. Is there any harm in this? Chriſt ſends a ſtorm, but to draw his back to the Ark, that, at the laſt, where he is, there they may be alſo.

Laſtly, We may ſay it is well with the righteous in their worſt condition of outward trouble, becauſe God is with them: It can never be ill with that man, with whom God is, It is infinitely more to ſay, I will be with thee, then to ſay, peace is with thee, health is with thee, credit is with thee, honour is with thee. To ſay, God is with thee, is all theſe, and infinitely more: for in theſe you have but a particular good, in God you have all good. When God ſayes I wlll be with you, you may make what you will out of it; ſit down and imagine with your ſelves whatſoever good you can deſire, and it is all comprehended in this one word, I will be with thee. Now God who is with the righteous at all times, is moſt with them in worſt times; then he faith in a ſpecial ſeuce, I will be with thee. When thou paſſeſt through the waters, I will be with thee; when thou walkeſt through the fire, thou ſhalt not be burnt, &c. Iſa. 43. 2. When a mighty wind paſſed before Eliah, it is ſaid, that God was not in the wind; and when the Earthquake ſhook the hills, and a conſuming fire appeared, it is ſaid, God was not in the earthquake, nor in the fire. God joynes not with outward troubles for the terror of his people, but he joynes with outward troubles for the comfort of his people. So he is in the fire, and in the wind and in the Earthquake, and his preſence makes the fire but as a warm Sun; the ſtormy wind, a refreſhing gale, and the earthquake, but a pleaſant dance.

So much for the removing of this objection, and clearing up the juſtice of God, reſpecting the afflictions of the righteous.

If any ſhall look on the other hand, upon wicked men, as if God came not home in his juſtice, while he ſuffers them to proſper.

Firſt, I anſwer, Their proſperity ſerves the providence of God, and therefore it doth not croſs his juſtice. That was Nebuchadnezzar's caſe (Iſa. 10. 6.) I will ſend him (ſaith God) againſt an hypocritical nation: ſo then he muſt proſper, while he goes upon Gods errand; but mark what follows (ver. 12.) It ſhall come to paſs, that when the Lord hath performed his whole work upon Mount Zion, ſc. by Nebuchadnezzar's power, (who was but doing the juſt work of God, while he thought ambitiouſly of doing his own) now it is no injuſtice for God, to give an inſtrument power to do his work (and when his bloody luſt hath performed the holy work of God, you ſhall ſee the Lord will take an order with him ſpeedily; for) then, ſaith the Lord, I will puniſh the fruit of the ſtout heart of the King of Aſſyria, and the glory of his high looks. God let him alone to do the work he had ſet him about; and it was a righteous work of God upon his people, though Nebuchadnezzar went about it with a proud and malicious ſpirit againſt his people.

Secondly, The proſperity of wicked men ſerveth them, to ſhew how wicked and vile they are, to act and publiſh the ſeven abominations of their own hearts. Now as it is one of the greateſt mercies under heaven, for a man to have his luſts quite mortified, ſo it is a very great mercy, for a man to have his luſts but reſtrained. It is a mercy, for a man to have that fewel taken away from his corruptions, upon which they feed; therefore it muſt needs be wrath and judgment upon wicked men, when God, in ſtead of reſtraining their luſts, giveth them opportunity to enlarge their luſts, and layes the reins on their neck, to run whither and which way they pleaſe, without ſtop or control. This is wrath, and high wrath, a ſore judgment, the soreſt judgment that can fall upon them: Wherefore when we think they are in a moſt proſperous condition, they are in the moſt dreadful condition; they are but filling themſelves with ſin, and fitting themſelves for deſtruction. Many Many a mans luſts are altogether unmortified, which yet are chill'd and over-awed by judgments. And there is more judgment in having liberty to commit one ſin, then in being ſhut up under the iron bars and adamantine neceſſities of a thouſand judgments. He that is Satans treaſury for ſin, ſhall be Gods treaſury for wrath.

Thirdly, Their proſperity is the judiciary hardning of their hearts: and a hard heart is the greateſt judgment on this ſide hell: As there is a naturally inbred, and ſinfully acquired hard heart, ſo there is a judicially hardened, or a divinely inflicted hard heart. When to a natural hard heart, and an acquired hard heart, which men get by many repeated acts of ſin, the Lord adds a judicially hardened, or inflicted hard heart, then wrath is heated to the hotteſt, and judgment is within one ſtep of hell. Eſpecially if we conſider, that every hour of ſuch proſperous impenitence, and hardneſs of heart increaſes puniſhment, and adds to the treaſury of that wrath, which is ſtored up againſt the day of wrath, and the revelation of the righteous judgment of God. Who thinks that man happy, who is let alone only to gather a mighty pile of wood, and other fewel of flames, to burn himſelf? While ungodly men ſeem to the world to be gathering riches, honour and pleaſure, they are but gathering a heap of wrath, and a pile of fire; which, at the laſt, will flame ſo bright, that it will make a revelation, of the (formerly ſecret, but) ever righteous judgment of God.

Laſtly, To ſhew that God is juſt in all his dealings, both the righteous and the wicked learn from the end of both. That we may fully diſcover the juſtice of God, we muſt look upon all his works together; while we look only upon ſome particular piece of Gods dealings with a godly man, he may ſeem to deal very hardly with him: or if we look but upon ſome particular piece of his dealings with wicked man, God may ſeem very gentle and kind towerd him; but take all together, and the reſult is exact juſtice. It was a good ſpeeck of a modern Writer, We muſt not iudge of the works of God before the fifth Act, that is, the laſt Act or Concluſion of all. This, and that part may ſeem diſſonant and confuſed; but lay them all together, and they are moſt harmonious and methodical: Hence David (Pſal. 37.) after he had a great diſpute with himſelf, about the troubles of the righteous, and the proſperity of the wicked, and was put hard to it, how to make out the juſtice of God, reſolves all in the cloſe with this advice (ver. 37.) Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace. Though a righteous man die in war, yet, his end is peace, whereas though a wicked man die in peace, yet his end is war. It is ſaid (Deut. 8. 16.) that all which God did to his people in the wilderneſs, was, that he might do them good at the latter end. Come to the end therefore, and there you ſhall find juſtice viſible. We often loſe the ſight of juſtice; in our travels and paſſage through the world, mountains and hils interpoſe, which we cannot ſee over or through; but when we come home, and arrive at the end of our travels, Juſtice will appear in all her ſtate and glory, rendring to every man according to his deeds; to them who by patient continuance in well-doing, ſeek for glory, honour and immortality, eternal life; but unto them that are contentious, and do not obey the truth, but obey unrighteouſneſs, indignation and wrath.

Joſhua concludes the ſtory of the people of Iſrael, in their paſſage to Canaan, with the higheſt teſtimonies of Gods juſtice and faithfulneſs; though God dealt with them ſo variouſly in the wilderneſs, that they often murmured in their tents, as if he had done them wrong; yet in the cloſe, you ſhall find, how exact and punctual the Lord was with them (Joſh. 21. 45.) There failed not ought of any good thing which the Lord had ſpoken to the houſe of Iſrael, all came to paſs: And in that other Text, Joſh. 23. 14. Behold, this day I am going the way of all the earth, & you know in all your hearts & in all your ſouls, that not one thing hath faild of all the good things which the Lord your God ſpake concerning you, all are come to paſs unto you, and not one thing hath failed thereof. How admirably juſt was God in his word? If a man promiſe many things, we take it well, if he perform ſome of the chief, and them in the chief, though ſomewhat may fail. God promiſed many things, and performed all; and which is more, all of every one of thoſe many things promiſed. The texts compared, make this out; the one ſaying, That not one thing failed of all the good things which God ſpake concerning them, and the other, That not ought of any good thing failed. So then, they had every good thing in kind, with each particular part and degree of every good thing: And for the truth of all this, Joſhua makes his appeal to themſelves, and to that in themſelves, which was beſt able to determine

termine it, all their hearts, and all their ſouls; which words do not only refer to every perſon, as if the meaning were, the hearts and ſouls of you all; but rather to all that is in every perſon, all their hearts and all their ſouls, that is, underſtandings, memories, conſciences, affections; yea, ſenſes, their eyes and ears, their hands and mouths, could bring in witneſs from their ſeveral operations, to this great truth. And ſurely God in the end, will deal as well with every Iſraelite, as he did with all Iſrael: A time will come, it will come ſhortly, when every Saint ſhall ſay, in all their hearts and in all their ſouls, that not one thing, nor ought of any good thing, which the Lord hath ſaid concerning them, hath failed. I ſhut up this in the words of Chriſt to his Diſciples, when they were amuſed about that act of his, the waſhing of their feet (John 13. 7.) What I do, ye know not now, but ye ſhall know hereafter. Stay but a while, and all thoſe myſteries and riddles of providence ſhall be unfolded. Though clouds and darkneſs are round about him, yet judgment and juſtice are the habitation of his Throne, Pſal. 97. Mortal man never had, and at laſt ſhall ſee he had no reaſon to complain of God; mortal man ſhall not be more juſt then God, nor ſhall man be more pure then his Maker. And ſo much for the fifth Concluſion, That God neither doth, nor can do any injuſtice to the creature, he is juſt in nature, juſt and holy in all his wayes.

Juſtior ſit oportet qui immerito affligitur, quã qui immerito affligit.

Quiſquis de perſecutione murmurat, quid aliud quam judicium ferientis accuſat, puriorem ergo ſe vir factore ſuo exiſtimat, ſi contra flagellum querelam parat, cumque ſibi proculdubio poſtponit, cujus judiciũ de ſua afflictione redarguit. Greg.

The ſixth or laſt Concluſion is this, That to complain of Gods dealing with us, is to make our ſelves more juſt and pure then God; or, when any perſon or people complain of Gods diſpenſations toward them, they (though not formally, yet by way of interpretation) make themſelves more juſt and pure then God. This was the point wherein Eliphaz labours much, to convince Job, ſuppoſing that he had thus exalted himſelf againſt God, by theſe grievous complainings of his preſent ſtate, in the foregoing Chapter: There is a truth in the Propoſition, though not in the Application, as hath often been hinted. Job's complaints were bitter, from the ſence of his pains, not from any prejudice in his underſtanding: He ever preſerved high and holy thoughts of God. The leaſt ſuſpition of whoſe righteous dealings, is to make our ſelves, by ſo much more righteous then he. The reaſon is clear; for, he that complains thus, thinks ſome wrong is done him; Now he that complains of wrong, would be thought more juſt, then he of whoſe wronging him he complains. Whoſoever murmurs or repines at what God doth, ſecretly ſaith (this voyce is in it) that he could do better, or that God ought: He that ſpeaks againſt the rod, ſpeaks againſt him that ſmites with the rod; He that ſwears by heaven, ſwears by the Throne of God, and by him that ſitteth thereon, ſaith Chriſt; and ſo he that accuſes the rod of God, accuſes the work God, and God that wrought it: He thinks himſelf more pure then his Maker, who is diſpleaſed with God as a corrector. To diſapprove any thing which God doth, is to approve our ſelves before God. It is ſeaſonable for us to look to our hearts in ſuch a time as this; it is a time of temptation, let us not by our murmurings, make it a time of provocation. Poſſibly we may often ſee cauſe to complain of men, but we can never have cauſe to complain of God. There is but little good got by complaining of creatures; but how much guilt and miſery gets he, who complains of his Creator? For a man to complain to man, is in ſome caſes neceſſary; but it is beſt in all caſes, to complain to God, and the worſt of any caſe, to complain (though ſilently) of God. So then, complain of man to God, rather then of man, to men; complain often to God, but never of God; complain before God, and tell him, that ſuch have dealt negligently. ſuch falſly, ſuch unjuſtly, ſuch cruelly: But alwayes ſay, Lord, thou haſt done juſtly, even by thoſe who are unjuſt; Lord, thou haſt done graciouſly, even by thoſe who are wicked; Lord, thou haſt done holily, even by the hand of thoſe who are unholy; and thou haſt dealt faithfully, though theſe have been treacherous. Thus let us complain to God, but not of God. Every complaint of God will be interpreted, a ſecret juſtification of our ſelves, and a condemnation of the righteous God. Man is then worſe then a Devil, when he would make himſelf better then God: Nothing pollutes man ſo much as his thought, that there is unrighteouſneſs in God: Nothing debaſes the creature, ſo much as that thought, deſire or act, wherein he prefers and exalts himſelf above the Creator.

Thus we have opened the general Propoſition: The probation of it, from the vaſt difference between men and Angels, is proſecuted at large in the latter part of the Chapter.

VERS. 18.

Behold he put no truſt in his ſervants, and his Angels he charged with folly.

ELiphaz having laid the dignity of man (comparing with God) in the duſt, by thoſe humbling queſtions, in the former verſe; What is man that he ſhould be juſt? and ſhall man be more pure then his Maker? He now ſtrengthens it further, that there is no compariſon between God and mortal man, by a direct aſſertion, that there is no compariſon between God and immortal Angels. Behold he put no truſt in his ſervants, and his Angels he charged with folly. As if he had ſaid, If Angels are not able to ſtand before God, and juſtifie themſelves upon his enquirie; then certainly man, the beſt of men, who dwell but in houſes of clay, cannot: But Angels cannot juſtifie themſelves before God, therefore much leſs can the beſt of men. That Angels are not able to juſtifie themſelves before God, he proves in theſe words; Behold he put no truſt in his ſervants, and his Angels he charged with folly: They that cannot be truſted by God, cannot be juſtified by God; and they that are chargeable with folly, are not able to ſtand in judgment before the moſt wiſe, the only wiſe and holy God. Angels are excellent creatures, yet becauſe creatures, they are in and of themſelves, frail and weak: they have no ſtrength to ſtand longer then upheld; no ſtedfaſtneſs to obey, longer then confirmed; no faithfulneſs to be loyal, longer then over-ruled; no wiſdom to diſcern, further then they are enlightned; what then will become of man, if he ſtand alone, or ſtand in competition with God his Maker? This is the ſum and general ſence of the words, as they are an argument. We will now conſider them as they lie here in order.

Behold he put no truſt in his ſervants.

The Particle [Behold] in the Original, as it often notes wonder in other texts, ſo it may much more in this; Behold a wonder! Angels are fooliſh, Angels are not to be truſted Yet in this place, Behold, is put by way of affirmation, rather then of admiration. Behold he put no truſt in his ſervants, is as much as verily and indeed, certainly and without controverſie, he put no truſt in his ſervants: So (Deut. 13. 14.) Thou ſhalt enquire and ſearch, and ask diligently, and behold if it be true; in the Hebrew thus, and behold true, or behold truth; that is, if upon enquiry it appear, that ſuch and ſuch things are certainly ſo, then they muſt proceed according to the Law provided in that caſe. Again, (Deut. 19. 8.) The Judges ſhall make diligent inquiſition, and behold, if the witneſs be a falſe witneſs, ſo we tranſlate; but the Letter is, Behold the witneſs, a falſe witneſs, that is, if it be affirmed, and do appear that it is a falſe witneſs or teſtimony which is brought, then the Judges ſhall proceed ſo and ſo, &c. Thus here, Behold he put no truſt in his ſervants, is a vehement affirmation, that God ſearching into thoſe his ſervants, finds them ſuch as are not to be truſted.

But who are theſe untruſty ſervants? Firſt, The Chaldee Paraphraſt underſtands by ſervants, the holy Prophets. Prophets (I grant) ſometimes have, and ofter would have proved unfaithful; ſome of them diſcovered much, and others would have diſcovered more unfaithfulneſs, if God had not mightily ſupported them. Secondly, One of the Rabbins underſtands it in general of any, or of all the faithful; Behold he put no truſt in his ſervants, that is, not in any of the holieſt and faithfulleſt of the children of men.

But the connexion of the Text carries it clearly, that by ſervants, we are to underſtand the Angels, who are called miniſtring ſpirits, Heb. 1. 14. Are they not all miniſtring ſpirits (or ſervants) ſent out for the good of thoſe that are the heirs of ſalvation? And ſo the words in the cloſe of this verſe, are exegetical, expounding who are intended by thoſe ſervants; Behold he put no truſt in his ſervants, and his Angels he charged with folly; that is, he truſted not thoſe ſervants, the Angels, but charged them with folly. But there is a further reaſon, more fully evidencing, that it muſt be underſtood of Angels, in ver. 19. where the perſons ſtanding in equal oppoſition to theſe ſervants and Angels, are men; How much leſs (ſaith he) on them that dwell in houſes of clay? Now a dwelling in a houſe of clay, is a Periphraſis, or deſcription of mankind in general, good or bad, one or other, high or low; all mankind dwells in a houſe of clay. Seeing then the term of oppoſition is mankind in general, we muſt take ſomewhat, which being a rational creature, is not man, for the other term, which cannot be any except Angels; we cannot ſet any ſort of men in oppoſition to others upon this ground, becauſe they dwell in houſes of clay; for the Saints on earth, dwell in houſes of clay, as well as men of the earth: therefore to make the oppoſition clear, it neceſſarily follows, that by Servants, in the firſt clauſe of the verſe, Angels are implied, as well as in the latter, where Angels are expreſt.

אמן

Nutrivit, in Hiphil, credidit, fiſus eſt, à fide quæ in nutriendo requiritur.

אמן

nutritius dictus eſt cujus fidei puer eſt cõmiſſus, quaſi fidum aut fidelem dicas, ſæpe etiam accommodatur ad œconomum & diſpenſatorem propter fidelitatem eorum.

But if theſe ſervants be Angels, how is it, that he put no truſt in, or that (as we may render it word for word out of the Hebrew) he did not believe in theſe his ſervants? I ſhall anſwer that, when I have a little opened the word here tranſlated to put truſt. We find it uſed two wayes in Scripture; ſometime paſſively, and ſometime actively. It is taken paſſively to be faithful, truſty and true, in word or promiſe. From this Root the Hebrew takes the name of a Guardian, or Foſter-father, or Steward, becauſe ſuch, to whoſe care children or families are committed, ought to be moſt faithful in the diſcharge of ſo great a truſt.

The Apoſtle (1 Cor. 4. 1, 2.) ſpeaking of that heavenly Stewardſhip, the Miniſtry of the Goſpel, expreſſeth it thus, Let a man ſo account of us as of the Miniſters of Chriſt, and Stewards of the myſteries of God; moreover (ſaith he) it is required in a Steward, that a man may be found faithful. And (Num. 12. 7.) where Moſes is ſpoken of as a ſervant, he is thus deſcribed, My ſervant Moſes is not ſo, who is faithful in all my houſe; he is a man whom I may truſt or give credit to; for he is truſty and faithful, (Heb. 3. 2, 5.) The Apoſtle comparing Chriſt and Moſes, ſaith of Chriſt, That he was faithful to him that appointed him, as Moſes was faithful in all his houſe. So that here is an elegant Antitheſis; his ſervants, who according to their duty and office, ought to be conſtant, faithful, truſty; he found unconſtant, unfaithful, not to be truſted.

לא יאמין בעבדיו

A verbi proprietate non recedamus, qua ſignificat cum ב credere & fidere alicui Merc.

Verbum de verbo, in ſervos ſuos credidit.

Yet the word being in Hyphil, is of an active ſignification, and when it is conſtruction with Beth (as Grammarians obſerve) it imports to give credit unto, or confide in a perſon; and ſo here, he put no truſt, that is, he did not credit or confide in thoſe ſervants, or he did not believe on them. He ſaw ſomewhat in them, which might betray them to diſloyalty, if himſelf, withdrawing his aſſiſtance, ſhould make an experiment, or try what was in their hearts. And this ſence is moſt ſuitable to the ſtate and office of a ſervant: truſting, or not truſting, faithfulneſs, or unfaithfulneſs, are acts proper to that relation, Lord and Servant. So then, the Lord put no truſt, that is, he could not confide in his ſervants, they being ſuch, as he found not perfectly ſure and loyal unto him. We ſay commonly of a man whom we cannot truſt, We will not give our word for him, and we will not take his. Our Lord Chriſt is therefore called a faithful High Prieſt, becauſe his Father truſted him with the whole buſineſs of our ſalvation, without the leaſt miſgiving thought of his faithfulneſs, or the miſcarriage of the work. Thus Solomon deſcribes a faithful wife, and a confiding husband, Prov. 31. 10, 11. A rare couple indeed, and as rarely found: Therefore he makes proclamation for ſuch a woman; Who can find a virtuous woman? for her price is far above Rubies, the heart of her Husband doth ſafely truſt in her, ſo that he ſhall have no need of ſpoil; there's confidence to the height; the heart of her husband doth ſafely truſt in her. A husband that hath ſuch a Jewel to his wife, knows, ſhe will order the family with diſcretion at home, when he is abroad; he knows ſhe is faithful to him body and goods: Her chaſtity or her frugality never came in queſtion before his thoughts; therefore (ſaith he) I ſhall have no need of ſpoil; which ſome interpret thus; her care and wiſdom in providing for the family, will make it like an Army which hath overcome the enemy in the field, or won a wealthy City, where the Soldiers have ſpoil and pillage enough, they need no ſpoil. Or as others, He ſhall have no need of ſpoil, that is, he ſhall have no need to ſpoil or oppreſs others, to help his family. All things ſhall be ſo ordered by his wives prudence, that he ſhall not need to take any unjuſt way, to provide for, or ſupply his houſhold. Thus the heart of her husband doth ſafely truſt in her. Such truſt the heart of God could not put in thoſe ſervants, his Angels, he knew they might come ſhort in their accounts. Such truſt Chriſt could not give ſome, who ſeemed to truſt or believe on him (John 2. 23.) Many, ſeeing Chriſts miracles, believed on him, yet Chriſt would not believe on them; we tranſlate, he would dot commit himſelf to them: the Grek is, he did not believe or truſt himſelf unto them; Chriſt believes in, or may truſt them all the world over, who truly believe in him; but theſe believed ſo falſly upon him, that he could not believe fully upon them; and the Text gives the reaſon, for he himſelf knew all men; he knew, they were not metal of a due temper, and therefore not to be truſted. So God knew all Angels, the uttermoſt perfection, power and virtue that was in Angels, therefore he would not commit all to them, he would not believe upon them. We find the word belief thus uſed (Exod. 14. 31.) When the Children of Iſrael ſaw the great work that the Lord had done in deſtroying the Egyptians, it is ſaid, The people feared the Lord, and believed the Lord, and his ſervant Moſes; he puts God and Moſes as the joynt object of their faith, as they had formerly been of their unbelief. Except the ſervants of the Lord be believed, the Lord himſelf is not: And when they are believed, the Lord is. Believe in the Lord your God, believe his Prophets, ſaith good Jehoſhaphat to his people, 2 Chron. 20. 20. Moſes had told them enough of the power of God before he had undertaken they ſhould be delivered; but they would not truſt Moſes upon his word, nor would they truſt the word of God; yet now when they ſaw this great deliverance, preſent ſight wrought faith for the time to come: they perceived by this miracle, that the Lord and Moſes were to be credited, and they doubted not to credit them another time. Though that faith which comes in at the eyes only, ſeldom goes down ſo low as the heart, or ſees further and longer then the eye. Thus we may underſtand the firſt part of the Verſe, He put no truſt, no belief in his ſervants; he gave no credit to them, as knowing perfectly what their nature and power was, what both could do; that if left by God, they would quickly leave God, and prove unfaithful.

Tam circumfluit bonis omnibus familia ejus quam milites ſpoliis expugnata urbe aut hoſte ſuperato.

ὐκ ἐπίστευεν ἑαυτὸν αὐτοῖς.

I ſhall obſerve one Point, before I come to the latter part of the Verſe (for there the ſuſpition of diſloyalty upon the Angels, comes more fully to be conſidered) from the title here given to the Angels, his ſervants; he put no truſt in his ſervants.

Angels are the ſervants of God.

They are his ſervants, as being altogether at his command; and they are his ſervants, as being fully conformable to his commands. Theſe great and glorious Spirits come under the ſame denomination with men, who dwell in houſes of clay, ſervants of God. To ſerve God, is not only the duty, but it is the honour of the higheſt creatures. It is more honour to ſerve God, then to rule the world. The ſtile of the good Angels, is, Miniſtring Spirits, Heb. 1. But the ſtile and title of the evil Angel, is, Prince of the power of the air, God of this world; you would think theſe were weighty titles, Prince of the air, God of the world; but the additions diminiſh their weight; yea, make them lighter then vanity, or rather, heavy only with miſery: There is more glory in being a ſervant to God, then in being a god of the world, or a Prince of the power of the air.

I might here enlarge my enquiry into the ſervices of Angels, in what they are ſervants, and what their offices and duties are; but I ſhall only touch. Their ſervice may be conſidered, either in reſpect of the Church, or the enemies of the Church. Reſpecting the Church and people of God, they have ſuch ſervices as theſe:

1. They are as meſſengers to carry and reveal the mind of God; they are as Tutors and Inſtructors of the Churches, Dan. 8. 9. God ſent his Angel to teach Daniel the myſtery of thoſe viſions. And, Rev. 1. 11. an Angel was ſent to inſtruct John, chap. 22. 16. I Jeſus have ſent mine Angel to teſtifie theſe things in the Churches.

Secondly, They are ſent as Guardians and Protectors of the people of God, to take their part, and to be on their ſide, Pſal. 34. 7. The Angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him. Pſal. 91. 11. He giveth his An- gels a charge over them, leſt at any time they ſhould daſh their feet againſt a ſtone. Gen. 32.2. When Jacob journeyed, it is ſaid, the Angels of God met him; an army of Angels was his convoy, Gods Hoſt coming out for his protection and ſafeguard, and therefore he called the name of that place Mahanaim, that is, two Hoſts or Camps; either becauſe the Angels appeared in two bands, and ſo made, as it were, a guard for Jacob to paſs between them; or becauſe the great Angelical Royal Army quartered and marched with Jacob's little army; and ſo two confederate Armies appeared in the field together. Angels are called Chariots, Pſal. 68.17. The Chariots of God are twenty thouſand, even thouſands of Angels: that is, God uſeth Angels for defence of his people, as Chariots in war. The ancient Prophets were called the Chariots of Iſrael (2 Kings 3.13.) And the Angels are the Chariots of God. Our ſtrongeſt Militia is of Spirits, or of men ſpiritualized.

Thirdly, Angels ſuggeſt good things, holy thoughts to us. If the Devil, who is an evil Angel, a wicked Spirit, can ſuggeſt evil, ſinful, filthy thoughts, and help on the heart in wickedneſs; then doubtleſs a good Angel can help on the heart in holineſs, in heavenly thoughts and meditations. Chriſt ſpeaks of Judas, that Satan had put it into his heart to betray him, John 13. and Peter to Ananias (Acts 5.) Why hath Satan filled thine heart to lie to the Holy Ghoſt? The nature of a good Angel is as fit, his power given as great, to deal with our ſpirits, as either the nature or the power of an evil Angel. That of the Apoſtle (2 Cor. 11. 14.) gives a hint, if not a proof of it, where he tells the Corinthians, That deceitful workers transform themſelves into the Apoſtles of Chriſt; and no marvel, for Satan himſelf is transformed into an Angel of light; and when is Satan in this change, from an Angel of darkneſs to an Angel of light? Even when he ſuggeſts good, for evil ends, or evil, for good ends. And if he is called an Angel of light for this reaſon, then Angels of light, good Angels, ſuggeſt good, for good ends; otherwiſe, Satan could not be ſaid to imitate them, in ſuggeſting good for ill ends, and under ſpecious pretences of bringing glory to God, tempting to tranſgreſs the will of God.

Fourthly, Good Angels comfort, ſtrengthen and ſupport in times of diſtreſs, anguiſh and trouble. An Angel comforted Hagar Gen. 21. And (Mat. 4.10.) after Chriſt had finiſhed his terrible combat with that wicked Angel, the good Angels came and miniſtred unto him. Again, when he was in that moſt bitter Agony in the garden (Luke 22. 43.) an Angel appeared to him from heaven, ſtrengthening him. That which they do to Chriſt the Head, they do to his members in their proportion.

Their fifth ſervice is to convey and carry the ſouls of departed Saints to heaven; they are Heavenly Porters (Luk. 16.22.) Lazarus died, and was carried by the Angels into Abraham's boſom.

Laſtly, They ſhall convocate and gather all the elect together at the laſt day, Mat. 24.21. Their ſervices againſt the wicked, and all enemies of the Church, have been many and great. Angels aſſiſt Saints, and oppoſe the oppoſers of Sion. Two Angels were ſent upon a meſſage of deſtruction to Sodom; an Angel defeated the hoſt of Senacherib; an Angel ſmote bloody perſecuting Herod; Angels (by name, if not by nature) poure out the ſeven vials of Gods wrath in the Revelation. And at the laſt day Angels ſhall hurry the wicked to Chriſts Tribunal; they are heavenly Purſivants, and they ſhall bundle the Tares up together, as fewel to be thrown into everlaſting burnings, Mat. 13.41,42.

And it may be a great comfort to us, that God hath ſuch ſervants. When viſible dangers are round about us, we ſhould remember, God hath inviſible ſervants round about us. There are more with us, then againſt us, as Eliſha told his fearful ſervant, 2 Kings 6. And in that low eſtate of the Church, Zech. 1.8. the Prophet is ſhewed Chriſt in a viſion, ſtanding among the Myrtle trees in the bottom (the Myrtle trees in the bottom, noted the Church in a low eſtate) and behind him, there were red horſes, ſpeckled and white, that is, horſemen ſpeckled and white. Theſe diverſe-coloured horſes were Angels appointed for ſeveral offices, as the learned Junius (with others) interprets it: the red horſes being appointed for judgment, the white for mercy, and the ſpeckled (as he conjectures) for mixt actions, being ſent out, at once, to protect and help the people of God, and to execute wrath and judgment upon the Adverſary. Thus we ſee the ſervices of the Angels; they are ſervants, yet ſuch as the moſt wiſe God put no truſt in; therefore we have an Angel better then Angels, even the Angel of the Covenant, the Lord Jeſus, into whoſe hands our ſafety is committed, to whoſe care the Church is left, in whom God puts the whole truſt, knowing that this great Angel is, and for ever will be faithful in and over his houſe, to his higheſt delight, and the Churches compleateſt welfare.

And his Angels he charged with folly.

There are very different readings of this part of the Verſe. Some (as Mr. Beza) read it thus, He truſted not his ſervants, though he had put light into thoſe his meſſengers. Others read it with a negation in both parts, He put no truſt in his ſervants, neither hath he put light in his Angels. Another thus, Neither hath he put perfect light in his Angels. Mr. Broughton differs from all theſe; Behold, he holdeth not perfection to be in his own ſervants, and in his Angels he judged no clear light to be. Another ſort read it to theſe ſences, He charged or put madneſs in or upon his Angels, he put or charged vain boaſting in or upon his Angels, he found vanity in or amongſt his Angels, he obſerved ſome evil amongſt his Angels.

Nec in Angelis ſuis ponet lumen. Pagn.
Nec in Angels ſuis poſuit lucem exactiſſimã. Vatabl.
Angelis ſuis poſuit veſaniam. Tyg.
In Angelis ſuis ponet gloriationẽ. Bibl. Reg.
In Angelis ſuis reperit vanitatem. Sym.
κατὰ τῶν Ἀγγέλων αὐτοῦ σκολιόν τι ἐπενόησεν. Sept.

Now that which hath given occaſion to this variety of tranſlations, is, the different ſences which the Original yields us. The Hebrew word is very fruitful of ſignifications, and hath (as the Oracle told Rebekah concerning two contrary Nations) two contrary meanings in the womb of it, and that makes the ſtrugling amongſt interpreters. The word in its proper ſence, ſignifies to ſhine forth with a reſplendent brightneſs: ſo, chap. 29.3. Job wiſheth, O that I were as in moneths paſt, when the Candle of God ſhined upon my head: It is a Verb, of which the word Folly in this text of Job is a derivative. And (Iſa. 14.12.) Hielel ſignifies the Morning-ſtar, whoſe ſhining brightneſs hath obtained the name Lucifer, Light-bringer, or Light-bearer. How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer, ſon of the morning? How art thou fallen from Heaven, Hielel, thou ſhining day-ſtar? Thus the word properly ſignifies ſhining or brightneſs, or to ſhine and be bright; and hence by a Metaphor, to be famous or renowned, or to make one renowned or famous, or to paint out a man with praiſes; becauſe a man is (as it were) decked with light, and hath rayes of brightneſs caſt upon him, when he is honoured and adorned with praiſes. Due commendations are to a man as a robe or veſture of light, which makes him ſhine to all about him. And hence the word Halelujah is derived, praiſe ye Jah, or the Lord; uſed frequently both in the beginning and end of the Pſalms: in the beginning of the Pſalms, by way of exhortation; and in the end, by way of acclamation, crying up the honour and glory of God. And (to note that in paſſage) it is well obſerved, that this word Halelujah is firſt uſed in the Old Teſtament, Pſal. 104.35. where the utter conſumption of ſinners is mentioned; and in the New Teſtament it is firſt uſed, Rev. 19.3,6. where the utter conſumption of Antichriſt is propheſied. Judgment on the wicked, is matter of high praiſe to God. Thirdly, The word ſignifies (by the figure Antiphraſis, or contrary ſpeaking) to boaſt and brag vainly, fooliſhly, or vain fooliſh boaſting. To commend or extol our ſelves, is pride running mad, and arrogance diſtracted. It is the higheſt dotage to be in love with our own wiſdom, and folly to publiſh our own works. There may be wiſdom (though oftentimes there is a great deal of folly) in commending others; but in commending our ſelves, there can be nothing but folly; therefore the very ſame word which ſignifies to boaſt and commend our ſelves, ſignifies both the concrete, to be mad, vain, or fooliſh; and the abſtract, madneſs and folly: thus, in Eccleſ. 2.2,12. the word is uſed, I ſaid of laughter, thou art mad. I turned my ſelf to behold wiſdom, and folly, and madneſs. And. Pſal. 75.4. I ſaid unto the fools, deal not fooliſhly, or to the mad-men, do not play the mad-men, that is, do not exalt your ſelves; for ſo he clears his meaning in the fifth verſe, Lift not up your horns on high, ſpeak not with a ſtiff neck, that is, a neck ſtiffened with pride, and a horn lifted up with vain-glory or ſelf-confidence.

תהלה à radice הלל Splenduit, luxit, claruit, Metaphoricè in Piel, ſplendidum, illuſtrẽ, clarum reddidit, laudavit, prædicavit. Per Antiphraſin, inglorius, inſanus, furore actus fuit, inſanivit.

From this variety of ſignifications, the variety of tranſlations before-toucht, ariſeth. First, They who read it, He put light into thoſe his meſſengers; Take the words in a proper ſtrict ſence, making out the meaning thus; That God, having put the light of excellent knowledge into the Angels, could not yet truſt them: all their ſpeculative knowledge, and high-raiſed illuminations, were not enough to make them ſteadily and ſtedfaſtly holy: That is the intent of Maſter Beza's interpretation, He truſted not to his ſervants, though he had put light into thoſe his meſſengers. For thoſe who retained the word, Light, tranſlate negatively, neither hath he put light in his Angels, or, neither hath he put perfect light into his Angels; Or as Maſter Broughton, In his Angels he judgeth no clear light to be, putting a negative particle in both branches of the Verſe, whereas in the Hebrew there is no expreſs negation in the latter. Theſe, I ſay, are led by this reaſon or rule. It is frequent in Scripture, when there is a negative in the former clauſe of a Verſe, then to underſtand a negative alſo in the latter clauſe, though none be expreſt. For inſtance (Pſalm 9. 18.) The needy ſhall not alway be forgotten, the expectation of the poor ſhall not periſh for ever; ſo we read: but in the Hebrew the latter clauſe is, the expectation of the poor ſhall periſh for ever: There is no Negative in the Original; but our Tranſlators, and not only they, but all that I have ſeen upon the place, render it ſo, ſupplying the negative particle of the former in the latter clauſe of that ſentence. And without that negative, the ſentence is not only imperfect, but untrue. Thus, The needy ſhall not alwayes be forgotten, the expectation of the poor ſhall periſh for ever, this were a contradiction: but reading it, the expectation of the poor ſhall not periſh for ever, makes the whole a truth, and congruous in it ſelf. Again (Prov. 17. 26.) To puniſh the juſt is not good, to ſtrike Princes for equity, ſo the letter of the Hebrew; but we read it thus, To puniſh the juſt is not good, nor to ſtrike Princes for equity. I might give you other examples, but a taſte may ſuffice. Thus in the Text before us, when it is ſaid in the firſt clauſe, he put no truſt in his ſervants, we take up the negative, and ſay in the ſecond, Neither hath he put light into his Angels, or he did not put light in his Angels, or he put no perfect light in his Angels, or he judged not clear light to be in his Angels.

Secondly, They, who (according to our Tranſlation) render it madneſs or folly, vain boaſting or vanity, theſe take the Original in that figurative ſence before given. When a man from a reflection upon his own worth, boaſts out his own praiſes, which, becauſe it is a point of extream vanity and folly, therefore the word is elegantly applied to ſignifie folly, &c. He charged his Angels with folly, He put or laid folly upon, or to his Angels; He put, for ſo the Hebrew word bears. Not, that the vanity which is in Angels is of Gods putting; but the folly that is in them, he puts to them, or chargeth it upon them, or layeth it to their charge. As we ſay, Such a one put it home upon him; that is, he charged him ſoundly, or fully, with ſuch a crime or offence. To charge, is a judicial or Law-term, implying, that the Lord ſitting in judgment to examine the eſtate of Angels, charged them by way of accuſation, and upon trial found them (in a ſence) guilty of that, which, though they had not formed into any one ſin, yet might be formed and ſhap'd into any ſin, Folly, or vain-glory.

ישים מתהלה

Having given ſome account of thoſe terms, Charging and Folly, He charged his Angels with folly, it grows to a great doubt what Angels we are here to underſtand: what Angels did God thus charge with folly? The quere or doubt lies, whether we ſhall lay this charge at the door of the good Angels, or of the bad, or of both?

Many of the ancients reſtrain it to the evil Angels, to the Apoſtate Angels; God put no truſt in them, he ſaw folly in them; taking it for confeſſed, that the Angels which ſtood, the good Angels, are truſty ſervants, diſcreet and wiſe, far from either unfaithfulneſs or folly; ſuch as God hath put truſt in, and they never deceiv'd his truſt; ſuch whoſe obedience is made the pattern of ours, by Chriſt himſelf in his pattern of prayer, Thy will be done on Earth as it is in Heaven. And would the Lord regulate us by them who are themſelves irregular? or make them our copy in doing his will, whoſe folly renders them unfit to be truſted with the doing of his will? Therefore (ſay theſe) ſuch a charge ſuits not the ſtate and condition of the good Angels.

Others caſt it upon the good Angels, that God put no truſt, no, not in them. I conceive; from either, there may be a good ſence, though I incline to the latter. For in the Apoſtate Angels (take it in the broadeſt ſence) God ſaw no light, no goodneſs, no faithfulneſs at all; they have plainly diſcovered themſelves, and ſhewed, not only weakneſs and unfaithfulneſs, but wickedneſs and utmoſt folly. But to confine it to the evil Angels, or to underſtand it chiefly of them, is too narrow for the Text; eſpecially, ſeeing this is but a light, a too eaſie charge for thoſe Apoſtate Spirits, to ſay only thus, that God found unfaithfulneſs in them, and charged them with folly: for in them rebellion was found, and they ſtand charged to this day with High Treaſon againſt the Crown and dignity of the King of Heaven: and are therefore committed to priſon, and reſerved in chains of darkneſs to the judgment of the great day. As for the good Angels, God may be ſaid to charge them with folly without any wrong, either to the holineſs of their nature, or the ſtedfaſtneſs of their obedience. For upon examination (or intimation rather) he finds they have no wiſdom or ſtability, but by divine bounty and eſtabliſhment. As the Apoſtate Angels were poſitively full of folly and unfaithfulneſs; ſo the good Angels might be charged with folly, negatively, namely, that they had no faithfulneſs, but as aſſiſted and propt up.

Angeli boni ex ſe nihil; habent niſi inſaniam negativè, i. e. nullā ex ſe ſapientiam, nullam veritatem, bonitatem nullam.

But we may take the Angels in a third or middle conſideration, neither for the fallen or Apoſtate Angels, nor for the good and confirmed Angels as diſtinct, or ſince this diſtinction: But by Angels we may underſtand the Angelical nature. The whole complex nature of Angels in their creation and conſtitution was ſuch, as God could not truſt fully unto, ſuch as he ſaw folly in. We may demonſtrate this plainly, becauſe a great part of the Angels (and it is queſtioned whether or no the greater part, but it is clear, that a great part of the Angels) a whole Regiment at leaſt, proved diſloyal, and fell together: therefore the Angelical nature (in that abſtracted notion) is ſubject to folly and unfaithfulneſs, as well as man, although they are of a more excellent make and conſtitution then man. God looking upon Angels in general, ſaw they were not to be truſted; the event alſo ſhewing many of them (who were as good by nature as they who ſtand) falling from him, diſcovering their folly and nakedneſs to all the world.

But it may be queſtioned yet, how there could be folly in the Angelical nature; for as much as God viewing and reviewing all the works which he had made, ſaw every thing which he had made, and behold it was very good?

I anſwer, firſt, God charged them with folly comparatively, reſpecting himſelf. As (1 Tim. 6. 16.) the Apoſtle ſaith of God, that he only hath immortality; that ſpeech is excluſive, ſhutting out all other creatures from a participation of Gods immortality. Yet we know Angels are immortal, Angels dye not, therefore alſo they are oppoſed to men (in the next Verſe to the Text) Who live in houſes of clay, whoſe foundations are in the duſt, and are cruſhed before the moth. Angels are not cruſhed, they dye not, yet God only is immortal; becauſe the immortality of Angels compared with the immortality of God, is but mortality. And the Reaſon is this, becauſe Angels are not immortal in themſelves, or of themſelves, they have not original or abſolute immortality, their immortality is dependant and derivative; God only is independently and originally immortal, and hence he only is ſaid to have immortality. As it is in the point of life, ſo alſo of righteouſneſs, wiſdom and faithfulneſs. God only is faithful, he only is wiſe, that's the Apoſtles phraſe, To God only wiſe: Men, yea Angels are unfaithful, unwiſe, fooliſh, compared with God. He is wiſe of himſelf, and in himſelf, in his own compaſs: creatures have only what they borrow or receive from him. To this ſence one of the Ancients ſpeaks fully, In compariſon of the Juſtice of God, if the holy Angels in Heaven be called unjuſt, I ſee no hurt in the aſſertion, not becauſe they have faln from juſtice, but becauſe they are creatures, and not God. All is reſolved into this, they are creatures, that's enough to prove their folly and unfaithfulneſs. And if a man that hath not only ſome ſmattering of learning and knowledge, but is a profeſſed Scholar, be looked upon as ignorant, compared with the Beu-clerks and great Scholars of the world; is it any wonder that Angels ſhould be called fools, in reference to the infinite wiſdom of God? The fooliſhneſs of God is wiſer then men, and the weakneſs of God is is ſtronger then men. And it is as true of Angels, the fooliſhneſs of God is wiſer then Angels, and the weakneſs of God is ſtronger then Angels. Angels are called Principalities and Powers, but yet it is only becauſe they act in the Power of God, and go forth in his ſtrength; that's the firſt Anſwer. The whole nature of Angels is unfaithful and fooliſh, weighed with God.

In comparatione juſtitiæ Dei, ſi nec ſancti in cœlis Angeli juſti eſſe dicantur, non mihi videtur importuna ſententia, non quia ut hoc eſſent à juſtitia lapſi ſunt, ſed quia facti ſunt & Deus non ſunt. Auguſt. cont. Priſc.

Secondly, I anſwer, although in the Angels there is no actual unfaithfulneſs or folly, yet there is poſſible folly and unfaithfulneſs in Angels; and this potentiality is the thing here meant or aimed at. The Holy Angels that now ſtand are wiſe and faithful altogether, yet conſidered in themſelves (not as confirmed by Chriſt) they may fall; their condition is altered, but their conſtitution is the ſame. It is otherwiſe with man, (which makes a wide difference between Angels and men.) Man not only hath a potentiality to be fooliſh and unfaithful, but man is actually fooliſh and unfaithful; yea man in himſelf is nothing elſe but a bundle of folly and unfaithfulneſs. Whereas Angels in themſelves, or conſidered in their natural conſtitution, have no folly actually in them at all. The nature of man is nothing but ſin, and Angels have no ſin at all in their nature; they only have a potentiality, a poſſibility in their nature to ſin. So then we muſt underſtand this charge of folly with two cautions concerning Angels. Firſt, There was not any folly concreated with them, their nature is purely pure. Secondly, They have not contracted any folly into their nature. The folly of the good Angels is but like the folly of man in the ſtate of innocency, when he had only a power to ſin: which poſſibility of Angels to ſin is by the mediation of Chriſt (wherein theſe Angels have a ſhare, though not to redeem or raiſe them from their Fall (as man) yet to confirm and keep them from falling) I ſay, by the mediation of Chriſt that poſſibility is removed. Chriſt hath changed their poſſiblity to ſin, into an impoſſibility of ſinning. This is a glorious priviledge indeed, and that which all the Saints ſhall have in glory. Redemption hath not only bettered the condition of man, but the condition of Angels. Now they all excel in ſtrength, doing the Commandments of God, and hearkning to the voice of his word for ever, Pſalm 103.20.

Cuicunq; creaturæ hoc convenit, ut peccare non poſſit, hoc habet ex dono gratiæ, non ex conditione naturæ. Aqui. p. 1. quæſt. 63. art. 1.

We may hence learn, Firſt, What the ſin of Angels was.

God charged his Angels with folly; The poſſible ſin, which God ſaw and ſtill ſees in the nature of Angels, was the actual ſin of Angels. Pride and ſelf confidence were the ſins of Angels, and theſe are the moſt proper ſins of Angels; Angels cannot fall into every ſin. The Schoolman queſtions, Whether the firſt ſin of Angels was pride? He argues and concludes, that howſoever in regard of guilt, the Devils, or fallen Angels, have all ſins upon them, becauſe they tempt man to every ſin, (For he that tempts another to a ſin which himſelf commits not, or is incapable to commit, is as guilty as if he had committed it,) yet in regard of the act it ſelf, evil Angels can only commit thoſe ſins which are ſutable to a ſpiritual nature.

Aquin. par. 1. *q.*93.art. 2.

Now a ſpiritual nature is not affected with thoſe ſins which belong to a corporal or ſenſitive nature: Devils are not adulterers, they are not drunkards; theirs are ſpiritual ſins, and their chief ſpiritual ſin was pride: Their firſt ſin conſiſted in not ſubmitting themſelves to that condition wherein God placed them, and whereunto they were appointed. All agree it was pride, though there be different opinions about what this pride ſhewed it ſelf; whether in affecting a higher degree then God created them in, refuſing the work and office God ſet them about, (which ſome conceive, was the miniſtration to, or the guardianſhip of man, which truſt they deſerted or ſcorned) or whether it were in affecting a further condition upon their own ſtrength, not looking to the ſtrength and grace of God; whatſoever the particular was, the general is plain, They abode not in the truth, they kept not their ſtation: Pride and ambition ſwel'd them, till they brake and fell.

Secondly, Obſerve, Angels (as creatures) are mutable creatures.

Though they are the beſt of creatures, yet they are changeable creatures; though they are the moſt perfect creatures, yet there is ſomewhat in them of imperfection. Look upon Angels in their creation, they were created bleſſed; Bleſſed (as the Schools determine) with a natural bleſſedneſs, not with a ſupernatural, which conſiſts in the viſion of God; for, if they had been created in a ſupernatural bleſſedneſs, then they had never fallen; they were created only in a natural bleſſedneſs, and from that they might fall, and did. Now, indeed, the good Angels have obtained by Chriſt a ſupernatural bleſſedneſs, from which they cannot fall; and ſo by grace are become immutable, which by creation they were not. Though Chriſt be not a Redeemer (as was toucht before) yet he is a confirmer, a ſupporter of the holy Angels. In reference whereunto, Chriſt is called the Head of all things (Epheſ. 1.22.) And of him the whole family in Heaven and in earth is named, Epheſ. 3.15. And by him (Col. 1.20.) God hath reconciled all things unto himſelf; by him, I ſay, whether they be things in earth, or things in Heaven. Some underſtand that place in the Coloſſians of men only, becauſe of the word reconciling; yet we may well take in Angels alſo, becauſe that place takes in all things, both in Heaven and earth. And howſoever Angels needed not ſuch a reconciliation as ſuppoſes a breach of peace, or a falling out before: Yet they needed ſuch a reconciliation as conſiſts in the continuance and ſtrengthning of that peace which was before.

Angeli fuerunt à Deo creati beati, beatitudine naturali, non autem beatitudine ſupernaturali, quæ in viſione divinæ eſſentiæ conſiſtit. Aquin. par. 1. *q.*62. ant 1.

Further, We learn by way of Corollary, from the former point,

That, there is no ſtability in any eſtate out of Chriſt.

The Angels themſelves could not be truſted out of Chriſt; folly is in them not conſidered in Chriſt, how much more in man? When Adam fell, if God ſhould have repair'd him again, and ſet him up (in ſtatu quo) in the ſame condition wherein he was, yea, in a better (if a better could be had) without a Mediator; and ſo have tried his obedience once more; or ſhould every particular man have ſtood for himſelf, and not one for all; certainly, as we fell at firſt in a lump all together, ſo we ſhould have all fallen ſingle (as it were) by retail, one after another: There is no aſſurance in any eſtate on this ſide Chriſt: Nor man, nor Angel can hold out without a Surety: Chriſt is called the Surety of the Covenant, Heb. 7.22. becauſe he undertakes for us that we ſhall do our parts, that we ſhall be faithful and believing, that we ſhall be holy and humble, that we ſhall do what God expects from thoſe whom free grace ſhall ſave. Chriſt undertakes for all the grace, and holineſs, and faithfulneſs, which is required in believers; He gives no command but what himſelf helps us to fulfil, nor calls he for any duty but what himſelf works in us, and for us.

Fourthly Obſerve, That, God ſees imperfection in creatures, whoſe natures are moſt perfect.

Man looking upon the Angelical nature, or upon mans nature in innocency, could ſee no fault or folly in either; but God ſaw both poſſibly faulty, though not actually faulty. And, as it is with the nature of men and Angels, ſo with their works: when we can ſee nothing amiſs in a work, God can: As the Apoſtle acknowledges (1 Cor. 4.4.) I know nothing by my ſelf: I profeſs, when I look into the courſe of my miniſtery (for he ſpeaks to that particular) when I look how I have diſcharged my Apoſtleſhip, my conſcience bears me witneſs, I know of no unfaithfulneſs or neglect, but yet, though I know nothing by my ſelf, I am not hereby juſtified, but he that judgeth me is the Lord: as if he ſhould ſay, when God comes to look over my work, he may find faults, many faults in it; there is no ſtanding for creatures before God in any creature-purity: Angelical perfection is imperfect in his ſight. Angels have not the leaſt ſpot or tincture of ſin in their nature, ye the nature of Angels is potentially ſinful. The beſt creature (in regard of pure naturals) may be wrought to evil, only God cannot. And the reaſon is, becauſe every one may err, who hath not the rule of righteouſneſs within him: and therefore it is impoſſible God ſhould err, becauſe his own will is the rule of his own actions: He is every way a law unto himſelf. The Apoſtle ſpeaking of the Gentiles (Rom. 2.14.) ſaith, Theſe having not the Law, are a law to themſelves. Not, that their nature is a law,

(which is the tranſcendent priviledge of God) but that they have the law of Nature, or the law printed in their nature, though not publiſhed to their ear; They have the Law written in their hearts: but the heart of God is his Law, both written and unwritten. Creatures how perfect ſoever in their nature, have the will of God for their rule and law: which though it be within them, yet it is not Them, and ſo they may act beſide it. The hand of the Artificer often fails in cutting or faſhioning the work he is about, becauſe his hand is not the rule by which he works: his hand works by a rule or line, his hand is not that rule or line: Therefore he ſometimes ſtrikes right, and ſometimes he ſtrikes wrong; but if the hand of a man were the rule by which he works, then it were impoſſible that ever he ſhould work amiſs. Thus it is with God, the very will of God which acts, is the rule by which he acts, hence it is impoſſible for God to fail; Angels and men act by a rule preſcribed, their will is one thing, and the rule is another; the power by which they work is one thing, and the direction by which they work is another; and therefore (to ſhut up this point) the moſt perfect creature may poſſibly ſwerve and err in acting; Only he cannot err in any thing he doth, whoſe will is the perfect rule of all he doth.

Solum illum actu à rectitudine declinare non contingit, cujus regula eſt ipſa virtus agentis. Aquin. par. 1.q.63. art. 1.

Fifthly, Foraſmuch as God beholding Angels, ſees folly in them; Learn,

That, God hath no need of any creature, no not of Angels.

The Reaſon is clearly this, becauſe Angels themſelves in themſelves are unfaithful, Angels themſelves in themſelves are fooliſh, therefore what need hath God of ſuch as theſe? As King Achiſh ſaid (1 Sam. 21. 15.) when David changed his behaviour before him, (ſtudiouſly acting the fool and madman) ſcrabling on the doors of the gate, and letting his ſpittle fall down upon his beard: What, ſaith Achiſh unto his ſervants, Have I need of mad-men, that you have brought this fellow to play the mad-man in my preſence? So God may ſay when he looks upon the beſt of creatures, Angels or men, have I any need of mad-men, any need of fools or of their folly? Foraſmuch then as there is nothing in any creature, barely as a creature, but what may be reduced to folly and unfaithfulneſs, and would certainly end there, therefore God hath no need at all of any creature. Men will ſay, we need not the help of diſloyal or untruſty men, we need not the help of fools to counſel us, or of unfaithful ones to act for us.

Beſides, Creatures are no help to God: For the truth is, God and the creature are no more then God alone; I ſay, God and the utmoſt perfection of all creatures put together are no more then God alone: The Reaſon of it is, becauſe, if there be any perfection in creatures, it is but what God himſelf hath put into them. What a man gives to another is no addition to himſelf; much leſs is that which God gives man or Angel, any addition to God. God is infinite, and no addition can be made to infinite: When the creature doth moſt for us, the creature (of it ſelf) doth nothing for us, God doth all in all and by all. The creature doth you no more good at one time then at another; all the good that is done at any time, God doth it: So then, every way God hath no need of creatures. And it is our comfort, I am ſure it ought to be, that he hath not. He ſaith to wiſe men, I have no need of your counſels; to rich men, I have no need of your purſes; and to great men, I have no need of your power; he ſees all is vanity.

Laſtly, If God truſt not Angels, let not us truſt in man; If he charges his Angels with folly, let not us adore the wiſdom of man. This diſcovery of imperfection in Angels ſhould lay all creatures low before us, and take us off from confidence or boaſting in any arm of fleſh. To this ſence Eliphaz proſecutes the Argument in the following words to the end of the Chapter. If Angels, the chiefeſt and choiceſt of creatures, be thus weak, what then is man, who dwels in a houſe of clay, whoſe foundation is in the duſt, and who is cruſhed before the moth?

VERS. 19, 20, 21.

How much leſs on them that dwell in houſes of clay, whoſe foundation is in the duſt, which are cruſhed before the moth?

They are deſtroyed from morning to evening, they periſh for ever without any regarding it.

Doth not their excellency, which is in them, go away? they dye, even without wiſdom.

THeſe three verſes contain a deſcription of man in oppoſition to the Angels. The form of the Argument was given before to this effect; That if Angels, thoſe excellent creatures, cannot ſtand before God, or be juſtified in his ſight; then much leſs man, a weak creature; Man who dwels in a houſe of clay, and whoſe foundation is in the duſt.

Two things this Context holds forth to us, concerning the weakneſs of man, in oppoſition to Angels.

Firſt, It ſhews that man is a material ſubſtance, ſo are not Angels, Angels are ſpirits, ſpiritual ſubſtances.

Secondly, It ſhews that man is a mortal ſubſtance, ſo are not Angels, ſpirits dye not.

That man is a material ſubſtance, is proved in the beginning of the 19. verſe, from thoſe words, He dwels in a houſe of clay, whoſe foundation is in the duſt.

That man is a mortal ſubſtance, is implied in the former; That which is made of clay and duſt muſt needs be brittle ware. But beſide that his mortality is implied in thoſe words, it is proved expreſly, and in terms, in the words following to the end of the Chapter. And this mortality of man is ſet forth by divers adjuncts or circumſtances.

Firſt, By a ſimilitude, ſhadowing the quickneſs or the ſuddenneſs of mans death, They are cruſhed before the moth.

Secondly, By the ſhortneſs of life; They are deſtroyed from morning to evening.

Thirdly, By the everlaſting power which death hath upon us (reſpecting this world;) They periſh for ever.

Fourthly, By the common and general inſenſibleneſs and inconſideration of this frail life, of this long-laſting death; Man (ſaith he) is deſtroyed from morning to evening, he dyeth quickly, periſheth for ever; he lies, as long as the world laſts, in his grave: yet ſuch is the ſtupidity of man that none regardeth all this, he dyes without any regarding.

Fifthly, And leaſt any ſhould ſay, ſurely, man is not ſuch a pitiful creature, as this ſad deſcription repreſents him; man was the moſt excellent part of the inferiour Creation; God planted many noble endowments upon man: and is there no more to be ſaid of him but this? He is cruſh'd like a moth, and dyes, no man regarding? That objection is taken away in the laſt verſe; as if the Holy Ghoſt had ſaid, I grant that man, beſides duſt and clay (which are his materials) hath many heavenly, yea divine endowments, he hath the impreſſions of Gods Image in reaſon and underſtanding ſtamped upon him; but, though he be thus qualified, yet all his excellency (all which may be accounted the choiceſt and the beſt in him) will not keep him ſweet, or protect him from death and rottenneſs: Doth not (ſaith he) their excellency which is in them go away? As if he had ſaid, If you alledge, that man is more then duſt and clay, then weakneſs and corruption; 'tis granted: But what then? Doth not their excellency that is in them go away? Doth it not vaniſh, and where is it? and where is he? All natural perfections (whatſoever man hath under the notion of a reaſonable creature) be they never ſo high and raiſed, quickly paſs, wither and decay: They have no abiding excellency in them, Doth not their excellency that is in them go away? They have wiſdom, but they dye without wiſdom, even as bruit beaſts; either their wiſdom decayes while they live, or it is not able to keep them alive: wiſdom, parts and learning ſtand them in no ſtead to prevent death. Now if their excellency go away, they muſt go too; if wiſdom cannot keep them alive, dye they muſt; as we ſhall ſee further in opening the ſeveral parts, having thus given the ſence in general.

Theſe things conſidered, we may ſee the ſtrength of the Argument in Verſe 19. How much leſs on them who dwell in houſes of clay, &c. As if he ſhould ſay, Foraſmuch as Angels cannot ſtand in competition with God, or approve themſelves in his ſight, certainly much leſs can man, how great thoughts ſoever he hath of himſelf; much leſs can man be juſtified in his ſight, who comes ſo many degrees ſhort of Angelical perfections; for his ſoul which is within him, though it be a noble and a ſpiritual ſubſtance, and that wherein he is moſt like to Angels, yet this ſoul of his ſojourns, dwells and acts in a body compoſed of corruptible clay, and hath no better a foundation (in a natural capacity, then the very duſt: And ſo ſubject is this man to mortality, thus compoſed of duſt and clay, as, what through the inward diſtempers of his body, what through outward accidents and caſualties, he is as tranſitory, and as ſubject to death, as the meaneſt worm, as the pooreſt creature in the world; he is cruſhed before the moth.

How much leſs on them that dwell in houſes of clay?

The Hebrew bears a double rendring; either, how much leſs (as we) or, how much more: If it be rendred how much leſs; then it refers to the firſt clauſe of the former verſe; thus, if he puts no truſt in his Angels, then much leſs doth he put truſt in men, who dwell in houſes of clay. If it be rendred, how much more, then it refers to the latter clauſe of that verſe; thus, If he charged his Angels with folly, then how much more may he charge them with folly who dwell in houſes of clay? Which words are a deſcription of man, either in his civil condition, or in his natural conſtitution. Some take theſe words in the very letter, the houſe, for that which we ordinarily call a houſe, the houſe wherein man ordinarily inhabits; as if Eliphaz had thus ſaid, Angels dwell in heaven, they have everlaſting manſions; but man dwells in a houſe of clay: the beſt and goodlieſt houſes are but clay and duſt, a little refined and ſublimated by art or nature; brick and ſtone, all theſe materials are but dirt concocted by the heat of fire and Sun: So that, if the alluſion were to the very houſes in which mankind dwells, in oppoſition to the habitation of Angels, theſe ſet them far inferiour to, and below the Angels. As theſe take it for the houſe wherein man lives, ſo ſome underſtand it, of the houſe where man lies, being dead, namely, the Grave. The Chaldee is expreſs, paraphraſing thus, How much more the wicked, who dwell in a Sepulcher of clay? That the grave is called a houſe, the Prophet helps us, Iſa. 14. 18, 19. All the Kings of the Nations, even all of them, lie in glory, every one in his own houſe, that is, in the grave, as the next words prove; But thou art caſt out of thy grave, &c. But I rather take it (as was before intimated) to be an expreſſion of mans natural conſtitution; He dwells in a houſe of clay, whoſe foundation is in the duſt: And ſo the Apoſtle is expreſs (2 Cor. 5. 1.) If our earthly houſe of this Tabernacle were diſſolved; the earthly houſe is the body; and (2 Cor. 4. 7.) the body is called an earthen veſſel, we have this treaſure (namely the precious promiſes and truths of God in the diſpenſation of the Goſpel) in earthen veſſels. We, dying men, preach eternal life; we have death in our faces, while the word of life is in our mouths. The word here uſed, ſignifies clay, either wrought or unwrought, either natural ſlimie dirt, or dirt made up for uſe by art: So, Gen. 11. 3. When they attempted the building of that Tower, it is ſaid, they had ſlime for morter; it is the word of the Text, which is uſed for both ſlime and morter; they had ſlime (which is natural) for morter, that is (by art & induſtry) they made morter of ſlime: The body of man is a houſe of clay, but not of rude natural clay; the power, and (if I may ſo ſpeak) the art of God hath wrought it beyond it ſelf, and refined it for this goodly building, the body of man.

Particula אפכ pro quo eſt ſimpliciter אף hoc loco utrumq; deſignat, ſc. vel quanto minus vel quanto magis. Druſ.

חמר Turbidus, lutulentus, mixtus, ut cum aqua turbantur, & in eis lutum ita commovetur, ut confundantur & invicem miſceantur, ut in cementum degenerent.

The body of man is called a houſe, or a building, in two reſpects. Firſt, Becauſe of the comely fabrick; it is ſet up by line or by rule; there is admirable architecture, admirable skill in building and raiſing up the body of man, ſtory after ſtory, room after room, and contrivance after contrivance, in all ſo compact and ſet together, that the moſt curious piles in the world are but rude heaps compared to it; ſo then in reſpect of the frame and ſtructure, it is fitly called a houſe.

Secondly, The frame of the body is called a houſe, in reſpect of the ſoul; the ſoul dwells in or inhabits the body, as the whole man inhabits or dwells in a houſe; the ſoul guides and orders the body, as the inhabitant orders the affairs of the houſe; or, as the Mariner and Pilot ſteer and direct the motions of the Ship: Not that the ſoul is in the body accidently (we muſt not ſtrain the ſimilitude ſo far) as a man is in a houſe, or a Mariner is in the Ship: there is a formal union between the body and the ſoul; only the ſoul is ſaid to dwell in the body, and the body or the matter is after called a foundation, becauſe there is the beginning. Man was begun at his body, as the houſe is at the foundation. Firſt, God formed man (that is, the body) out of the duſt of the earth, and then he breathed into him the breath of life, and man became a living ſoul.

Hoc corpus luteum domus animæ dicitur, quia anima humana quantum ad aliquid eſt in corpore, ſicut homo in domo, vel ſicut nauta in navi, In quantum ſcilicet eſt motor corporis; anima autem non unitur corpori accidentaliter ſed formaliter, ut forma materiæ, dicitur enim materia fundamentum formæ, eo quod eſt prima pars in generatione, ſicut fundamentum in conſtitutione domus. Aquin.

Thus the body is a houſe, and it is a houſe of clay, or a houſe of earth, ſo called, chiefly in two reſpects.

Firſt, Becauſe of the matter of it; it is made of earth. Though all Elements (as Naturaliſts teach) meet in mixt bodies, yet earth is predominant in groſs or heavy bodies.

Secondly, Becauſe of the continuance of it, or the means by which it is ſupported; for as it was at the firſt framed out of the earth, ſo it is ſtill ſupported and maintained by earth; earthly creatures, meat and drink, with ſuch like accommodations, continue and repair this houſe from day to day, until at laſt, it be laid down in the duſt, and return to earth again. So then, it is called an earthly houſe, not only from the matter of which it is made, but alſo from the means by which it is kept in repair, earth and earthy all.

Corpus humanum lutũ dicitur, quod ex terra & aqua gravioribus elementis abundantius conſtat. Aq.

Whoſe foundation is in the duſt.

Theſe words aggravate the weakneſs of mans condition. Suppoſe man were formed out the duſt, and were but clay, yet, had he a ſtrong foundation, that would ſupport and ſtrengthen him. The ſtrength of a building is in the foundation, and that building whoſe walls are but weak, may ſtand long, being firmly founded. The Church of Chriſt is weak of it ſelf; but becauſe the Church hath ſuch a mighty foundation, Chriſt the Rock, a living and unmoveable Rock; (that confeſſion of Peter, Thou art Chriſt the Son of the living God, is the Churches foundation-rock) therefore the gates of hell ſhall not prevail againſt it. But when the building is weak, and the foundation weak too, in how tottering a condition is ſuch a building? Mans foundation is but ſand or duſt; and the word ſignifies flying, light, unſtable, moveable duſt, ſuch as lies on the ſurface of the earth, and is plaid about with every puff of wind, though ſome (I confeſs) take the word not ſtrictly, for this flying duſt, but for ſlimie duſt, or duſt moiſtened, which is ſlime. This was the matter out of which God created man (Gen. 2. 7.) duſt out of the earth, or out of the duſt of the earth. That duſt which can hardly be collected or kept together, to make a ſubſiſtence, that is laid together as the foundation of man; His foundation is in the duſt.

עפר Pulvis propriè rarior & tenuior, qualis in ſuperficie terræ. Merc. in Gen. Significat non ſimpliciter pulverem, ſed pulverem cœnoſum & limoſum. Fag. in Gen. 2. 7. Pulvis leviſſimus, ex quo nihil firmum aut diuturnum compingi poteſt.

Hence we may obſerve firſt, what the pedigree and original of man is; what treaſure ſoever he carries about him, yet he is an earthen veſſel; or as the Apoſtle ſpeaks of the firſt man, 1 Cor. 15. 47. He is of the earth earthy. Earth is the original of man, and man himſelf is no better, earthy; yea the earth is called his earth; as if he had propriety in nothing but earth, Pſal. 146. 4. ſpeaking of the greateſt Princes, Truſt ye not in Princes, nor in the Son of man, his breath goeth forth, and he returneth to his earth. Our bodies can challenge no alliance with, or propriety in any thing but earth; it is our earth. The Wiſe man (Eccleſ. 12. 7. calls the body only an Allie to the duſt, or a-kin to duſt, but plain duſt; Then (ſpeaking of Death) ſhall the duſt return to the earth as it was; it came from the earth, and in death it returns to the ſame point from whence it ſet out.

A ſecond thing we may take notice of from mans Original, which exceedingly advances the infinite wiſdom, and the almighty power of God;

That, Duſt and Earth are the matter out of which we are formed.

But doth the countenance of man repreſent duſt and earth? Could any one ſay, who had nothing to judge by, but the eye, that man was made of ſuch mean materials? what characters of Beauty and Majeſty ſit in his viſage? how unlike is he to his own parent the Earth? Man hath received from God, not only an excellent fabrick or compoſure ſure of body; but if you conſider it, the very matter of which the body is compoſed, is far more excellent then earth or duſt. Take a piece of earth, or a handful of duſt, and compare them with the fleſh of man, that fleſh is earth indeed, but that fleſh is far better then meer earth. This ſhews the power of the Creator, infinitely exceeding the power of a creature. A Goldſmith can make you a goodly Jewel, but then you muſt give him Gold and precious Stones, of which to make it; he can put the matter into a better form, but he cannot make the matter better. The Engraver can make a curious Statue, exactly limb'd and proportion'd to the life, out of a rough piece, but the matter muſt be the ſame you put into his hands; if you give him Marble, it will be a Marble Statue; but he cannot mend the matter. Mans work often exceeds his matter, but mans work cannot make the matter exceed it ſelf. Now God took up a rude lump of earth, or ſubtil duſt, and he did not only put that into an excellent form, but he mended the matter alſo. Man is earth, but he is earth ſublimated and refined: Not only doth the form exceed the matter, but the matter formed exceeds the matter unformed.

Materiam ſuperabat opus.

Thirdly, As this lifts up the wiſdom and power of God, ſo it ſhould humble and lay man low.

Eliphaz improves this principle as an argument to take down the ſpirit of Job from his ſuppoſed heights and ſelf-conceits. Surely thou art great in thy own thoughts, when thou preſumeſt to enter a conteſt with God: but, look to thy Original; ſuch towring, lofty, and aſcending thoughts would quickly be abated, if thou wouldſt remember that thou art but a clod of earth, a little refined clay, moving ſlime, enlivened duſt, breathing aſhes; did we ſpiritually look upon the matter of our bodies, it would take down the ſwelling of our ſpirits; when our ſpirits are like Jordan, in the time of harveſt, overflowing all the banks of humility and moderation, this thought ſpiritualized, will bring us into our channels again, and recall us to our own bounds and banks. Some Naturaliſts obſerve of the Bees, that when they are up and angry, do but throw a little duſt upon them, they are quiet, and hive again. Certainly, when our imaginations are buzzing and humming in the air, when they are flying and mounting up to heaven, not in holy aſpirings to God (which we ever ought) but in bold aſpirings againſt God, which we ſhould never dare, in ſuch a diſtemper of our ſpirits, if we could but caſt this duſt upon them, it would quiet and bring them in again.

Hath not man cauſe to lie as low in his thoughts, as that from whence he was extracted? ſhould not he be humbled to the duſt, who is the duſt? Eſpecially this earth ſhould be abaſed in all addreſſes to heaven, in all our approaches unto God; as Abraham, Gen. 18. 27. I have taken upon me to ſpeak unto the Lord, who am but duſt and aſhes. We ſhould never be ſo low in our own thoughts, as when we make uſe of our higheſt priviledges. And the nearer we are admitted to come to heaven, the more ſhould we (for the magnifying of free Grace, which makes this admiſſion) remember that we are but earth.

Fourthly, If the Body be but clay, and hath but a foundation of duſt; then,

Do not beſtow too much care and coſt upon your clay, upon your duſt.

How many are there who beſtow much pains to trim up a vile body, and neglect a precious ſoul? Moſt uſually they who beſtow moſt pains upon this mortal houſe of clay, beſtow leaſt about that immortal inhabitant. In an over-cared-for body, there ever dwells a neglected ſoul. You ſhall have a body cleanly waſhed, and a ſoul all filth; a body neatly cloathed and dreſt, with a ſoul all naked and unready; a body fed, and a ſoul ſtarved; a body full of the creature, and a ſoul empty of Chriſt; theſe are poor ſouls indeed. That complaint of the Moraliſt againſt Heathens, may be renewed againſt ſome Chriſtians; they are buſied moſt betweem the Comb and the Glaſs, and troubled more at a diſorder in their hair, then at a diſorder in the Commonwealth, (he ſaid, I ſay) then at a diſorder in the Church, or in their own hearts. It is a ſad thing that any who bear the name of a Chriſtian, ſhould ſpend much time between the Comb and the Glaſs, and but little between Ordinance and Ordinance, between the Bible and the Pulpit, between reading and hearing, between both, and holy meditation; the body is but a houſe of clay, it is but duſt, therefore be not ſo induſtrious for it. We uſually laugh at children, when they are making houſes of clay, and Pies of dirt. They whoſe care is thus over-active for the body, , are but children of a greater ſtature, and ſhew, they have ſo much more folly in their hearts, then they, by how much they have more years over their heads; and are fooliſh about more ſerious matters then they. There is no Child to the old Child.

Fifthly, Seeing this houſe of clay is founded alſo in the duſt, obſerve,

That, Man is a very frail, an unſteady, and an unſtable creature; every puff muſt needs ſubject him to ruine.

Look upon his foundation, it is nothing but duſt. When Chriſt (Mat. 7. ult.) had finiſhed his Sermon upon the Mount, he compares his hearers to ſuch as build either upon the Rock, or upon the Sand; They that hear and do not, are like a houſe built upon the ſand: and what becomes of that houſe? when the rain deſcended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, that houſe fell, and the fall thereof was great. A foundation of duſt or ſand cannot ſtand out one ſtorm. The houſe of a mans body is walled and roofed with clay, and bottomed upon no better then duſt; the ſtrength of the Church (as was touch'd before) is deſcribed by the matter of its foundation, a Rock, Mat. 19. And the new Jeruſalem (which, as it is conceived, to be the moſt pure ſtate of the Church here on earth, ſo it muſt be the ſtrongeſt) is ſet forth having twelve fonndations, and they all of ſtone, and all thoſe ſtones moſt precious, and therefore moſt durable, Rev. 21. 19. The ſtrength and ſtability of that eſtate which the Saints ſhall inherit, when theſe houſes of earth are by death levelled to the earth (the ſtability (I ſay) of that eſtate) is deſcribed under the notion of a City which hath foundations (Heb. 11. 10.) He, namely, Abraham) looked for a City which hath foundations, whoſe builder and maker is God. When the holy Ghoſt ſaith foundations, who can tell how many they may be? we can eaſily tell the feweſt they can be; two is the loweſt number; ſo that at leaſt this City hath a foundation upon a foundation. The foundation of Chriſts perfect righteouſneſs is laid upon the foundation of Gods eternal free love; here is foundation upon foundation. The City above hath theſe foundations, and therefore we receive a City that cannot be ſhaken. I note theſe things, to ſhew by conſent of Scripture, that the ſtability of any condition, in alluſion to a building, is expreſt by the ſtrength of its foundation. Now all our outward glory and excellency, our life, and all the pomp of it, hath ſcarce ſo much as deſerves to be called a foundation: a foundation of duſt hath only the name of a foundation. That Image in Daniel, which typed out all the deſcents of worldly greatneſs, had a head of Gold, the breaſt and arms of Silver, the thighs of Braſs, and the legs of Iron, but the feet were part of Iron and part of Clay. The feet are the foundation, and the feet of this Image ſpeak thus much to all the world, that all worldly pomp and greatneſs, all worldly power and Majeſty muſt fall; for the Image ſtands upon clay; and though it have a mixture of iron in the feet, which is ſtrong, yet it ſhall not ſtand by the iron which is ſtrong, but fall and be broken by the clay, which is weak. As it was in thoſe great Monarchies, into which the outward power of Nations and Kingdoms was contracted; ſo if you look upon any particular man, though you may conceive him to have a head of gold, arms and breaſt of ſilver, thighs of braſs, and legs of iron, yet when you come to the feet, the foundation of the whole body, it is but duſt, which a ſmall ſtorm will diſſipate and blow away. The body of man hath ſo weak a foundation, that it is ſome time compared to that which hath no foundation, a Tabernacle (1 Cor. 5.) If the earthly houſe of this Tabernacle were diſſolved, ſaith the Apoſtle) Now a Tabernacle hath a roof or a covering, but no foundation: The Tabernacle of the body hath a covering, but hardly any foundation, only a foundation in the duſt.

Tectum habet, fundamentum non habet.

Laſtly, Conſider the form of ſpeaking in this Scripture; How much leſs on them that dwell in houſes of clay? He ſpeaks of the whole man, as dwelling in a houſe of clay: Now we know that a body cannot properly be ſaid to dwell in a body, the houſe doth not dwell in a houſe; yet he ſpeaks, as of a compleat perſon dwelling in a houſe of clay, which yet is to be underſtood of one part of the perſon, The ſoul; that dwels in a houſe of clay, that is, it acts and officiates in a body compoſed of clay. Hence obſerve, ſeeing the whole man cometh under the notion of the ſoul,

That, the ſoul of man is the man.

The ſoul goes away with the name of the whole perſon: The ſoul is not the man in a natural conſideration, (as ſome have Philoſophiz'd, aſſerting that man is nothing but a ſoul cloathed with a body) for, man is man by the union of ſoul and body; and the perfection of man as man, conſiſts in that union; but the ſoul is the man in a moral conſideration, becauſe it is the more noble and excellent part of man: and it is uſual to denominate the whole from that part which is more excellent. The body is but as the Cabinet, the ſoul is the Jewel; the body is but as the ſheath or the ſcabbard, the ſoul is as the knife or the ſword: You know when a man buyeth a ſword, he buyeth a ſcabbard too; or when he buyeth a knife, he buyeth the ſheath too; yet he ſaith, this knife coſt me ſo much, or I gave ſo much for this ſword; he makes no mention of the ſcabbard or of the ſheath: now the body is the ſheath or ſcabbard of the ſoul, (Dan. 7. 15.) you have it expreſt ſo, I was grieved (ſaith the Prophet) in my ſpirit in the midſt of my body, ſo we tranſlate it, but the Chaldee is (and ſo we have in ſome Margents) in the midſt of my ſheath; The ſoul is the blade, a blade of admirable metal and temper; the body how beautiful ſoever by nature, or gay by art, is but a velvet, or an emboſſed ſheath and ſcabbard: Therefore at firſt, when God formed man out of the duſt of the earth, and had breathed into him the breath of life, the reſult of all is, and man became a living ſoul; it is not ſaid man became a living body, though life was breathed into the body, and the body ſtood up and lived; yet the beſt part is named for all, the duſt and the clay are (as it were) quite forgotten in the ſtory, man became a living ſoul. And that may be a reaſon, why the fear of God and keeping his Commandments (Eccleſ. 12. ult.) is called all man, becauſe the things chiefly concern that part of man, which (upon the matter) is all man. The fear of God and keeping his Commandments, are ſoul work, and tend to the eternal welfare of the ſoul; and though the body ſhares in all the bleſſings, and aſſiſts in moſt labours of the ſoul; yet the ſoul labours moſt for, and is the chiefeſt ſeat of bleſſedneſs. How ſtrangely have ſome departed from this point of truth, which the Scripture every where writes as with a Sun-beam? who inſtead of making the ſoul to be the chief part of man, deny that man hath any ſuch part. And whereas ſome (toucht at before) err'd on the right hand, ſaying that man was nothing but a ſoul; theſe go aſtray more, and more dangerouſly on the left hand, ſaying, that man hath no ſoul at all: An opinion, howſoever lately dreſt in ſome fineneſs of wit and ſubtilties of Philoſophy; yet in it ſelf, ſo groſs, ſo diſhonourable to man, ſo contrary to this Text and the whole tenor of the word of God, that I hope it is very mortal, and will ſhortly find a grave in every heart, but theirs, who have more reaſon to wiſh it, then to maintain it. I intend no diſpute about it, beyond the Argument before me; which if it be not demonſtrative (as many others from Scripture are) yet it carries (at leaſt) a fair probability aud an ingenuous ground: For how can man be ſaid to dwell in a houſe of clay, if he himſelf be nothing elſe but a houſe of clay? or how can the inhabitant and the houſe be in all, but one, and the ſame?

Non quod anima ſit homo, ut quidam poſuerant, dicentes hominem nihil aliud eſſe quam animam indutam corpore; ſed quia anima eſt principalior pars hominis, unumquodq; autẽ conſuevit appellari id quod eſt in eo principalius. Aquin. in loc.

כל־ האדם

But I ſhall dwell too long upon theſe houſes of clay, in which man cannot dwell long, for it followes;

Which are cruſhed before the moth.

What ſtrength is there in houſes which are cruſhed before the moth? or as others read it, which ſhall be conſumed after the manner of a moth? Mr. Broughton thus, Beaten to powder as a moth be they; that is, they are cruſhed as ſoon, or as ſpeedily as a moth. Another, They are conſumed as it were with a moth. A fifth tranſlates differently from all theſe, which are cruſhed and conſumed before Arcturus. Arcturus is a conſtellation in Heaven about the North Pole; we read in the 9. Chapter of Job, ver. 9. Which makes Arcturus, Orion and the Pleiades, &c. The ſame word here, ſignifies a moth, and ſometimes a conſtellation, a knot or company of Stars: The ſence of this reading is made out thus; they are cruſhed before the face of Arcturus, that is, they are cruſhed as long, or whileſt Arcturus doth continue; in plain Engliſh, as long as there is a Star in Heaven, man will be a mortal man; or man will never change this condition of mortality, while the world ſtands. We may thus expound it, by that (Pſal. 72. 17.) where the Prophet deſcribing the Kingdom of Chriſt in the extent both of place and time, ſaith, His name ſhall be continued as long as the Sun; the Hebrew is His name ſhall continue before the face of the Sun; to continue before the face of the Sun, is to run in a line of equal continuance with the Sun; ſo here, they are cruſhed before the face of thoſe Stars, that is, they ſhall be in ſuch a cruſhing, periſhing condition, as long as thoſe Stars continue, which is, as long as the courſe of this world continues. Our own tranſlation, which comes clear to the letter of the Original, is further to be looked into. They are cruſhed before the moth. It may have a three-fold interpretation. Firſt, Before the moth, that is, before in time, or ſooner then the moth. How quickly is a moth cruſhed? man may be cruſhed before it, ſooner then it is cruſht. Secondly, Before the moth, may be as much as, in preſence of the moth; as if he ſhould ſay, man thinks he is able to ſtand it out againſt a potent Adverſary, yea, againſt God himſelf; but, alas poor creature, he is not able to ſtand before a moth, or contend with a fly, if God arm any of them againſt him. Thirdly, They are cruſhed before the moth, that is, man is cruſht and torn, vext and worn out by a thouſand miſeries and troubles which attend his life, before ever the moth hath to do with him, before ever he lyes down in the bed of death, before the moth, that is, for the moth to fret on, or as a companion for the worms.

לפני עש

Ad facies tineæ, σητὸς τρόπον, in modũ tineæ, Sept.

Velut à tinea, Vulg. Pagnin.

לפני שמש

Ad facies ſolis.

All theſe rendrings, though they differ in words, come near and meet in the ſame general ſence, namely, An illuſtration of mans frailty. Take them firſt by way of ſimilitude, Man is cruſhed, as it were, with a moth; it notes thus much to us, That death conſumes us without noiſe, ſecretly and ſilently: To do a thing as a moth, is to do it ſilently and without noiſe, Hoſea 5. 12. God himſelf ſaith, That he will be as a moth unto Ephraim, and as a Lion, verſ. 14. When he ſaith, he will be as a Lion, it implieth open judgments, which come violently and viſibly, which come in like thunder, roaring as a Lion upon them: But when he ſaith, I will be as a moth to Ephraim, the meaning is, I will ſend ſilent and ſecret judgments upon you, which ſhall eat out your ſtrength, corrode your power, and blemiſh the beauty of your garments, and you ſhall not perceive it: Ye ſhall be undone, conſumed, and (as we ſpeak Proverbially) ye ſhall never know who hurt you. The open enemies of the Church are threatned with ſecret judgments, under this notion of a moth, Iſa. 50. 9. Lo they ſhall wax old as doth a garment, the moth ſhall conſume them. Again, Chap. 51. 6, 7. Fear ye not the reproach of men, neither be ye afraid of their reviling. For the moth ſhall eat them up like a garment, and the worm ſhall eat them like wool: that is, whereas your enemies have made a great noiſe and clamour with their revilings againſt you; I will come againſt them without noiſe, they ſhall periſh with as little clamour as a garment doth, that is eaten with moths. And thus the life of man is ordinarily conſumed (as it were) by a moth; ſickneſſes and diſeaſes enter ſecretly, into his houſe of clay, they lye in the frame, and between the rafters of this houſe, ſucking up the ſpirits, and waſting the ſtrength, ſpending the heat, and drinking up the natural moiſture of the body; we know not how we conſume, but we conſume; we know not how we decline, but we decline; we dye, we know not how, but we dye: Is it not then as with a moth, creeping upon us, yea, feeding upon us without noiſe?

Again, Take it by way of ſimilitude, not as before, actively, or inſtrumentally, they are cruſhed as by a moth, or as a moth cruſhes; but paſſively or ſubjectively, They are cruſhed as a moth, that is, they are cruſhed as a moth is cruſhed, alluding to the eaſineſs of cruſhing a moth: A moth is duſt as ſoon as you cruſh it, the leaſt touch kills it: Man in his houſe of clay is ſo weak, that if God do but touch him, he dies and falls to duſt; the Lord needs not bring his great

Artillery, and make batteries againſt the body of man; the body of man is no ſuch ſtrong Fort or Bulwark to ſtand out a long ſiege, or endure much aſſaulting and oppoſition; he is cruſhed as a moth between your fingers: Hence David moſt humbly deprecates the ſtroak of God, which he ſaw coming, or felt as come, becauſe he was not able to bear it, Pſal. 39. 10. Remove thy ſtroak away from me, I am conſumed by the blow of thine hand, (Lord if thou ſtrike me thus, I ſhall quickly conſume.) And leſt you ſhould think that Davids fleſh (he being a King) was tender and delicate, and ſo leſs able to bear any hardſhip, therefore in the following words, he puts the caſe in general concerning man or man-kind. Take the man whoſe ſtrength is as the ſtrength of ſtones, and his fleſh as braſs; yet this man breaks and vaniſhes under the hand of God, ſo he affirms, ver. 11. under this paſſive conſideration of a Moth, When thou with rebuke doth correct man for iniquity, thou makeſt his beauty to conſume away like a Moth; (And then cloſes with that common axiome of mans mortality) ſurely every man is vanity, Selah.

Further, Man may well be ſaid to be cruſhed, or dye even as a moth, for as the garment breeds the moth, and then the moth eats the garment; ſo (beſides that power of God, or the out-ward ſtroak of his hand, of which David ſpake) mans own diſtempered body breeds ill humours, they diſeaſes, and theſe breed death: As it was with Jonas gourd, ſo it is with us, we give life and ſuck to a worm in our own roots, which ſucks out our life, cauſing our leaves to fall, and our goodly branches ſuddenly to wither.

Thirdly, From that ſence, he is cruſhed before Arcturus, or as long as the Stars continue, Obſerve;

> That, as mans ſtate is frail and weak, ſo it will be, the for ever of this world.

Do not look that ever there ſhall riſe up a generation of men, that ſhall have better houſes then houſes of clay, or houſes ſtronger built then our preſent buildings. As we are riſen up in our fathers ſtead, a generation of ſinful men; ſo we are riſen up in our fathers ſtead, a generation of weak mortal men: and our children will ariſe in the ſtead of us their fathers, a generation of men, as mortal as we their fathers. Till the whole compages and courſe of nature be changed, man ſhall not exchange the infirmity of his nature, He ſhall never be without cruſhing ſickneſſes, till he is above them.

The ſad ſtory of man holds on ſtill, and grows yet more ſad; before it was cruſhing, now it is deſtroying.

Verſe 20. They are deſtroyed from morning to evening' they periſh for ever without any regarding it.

We may underſtand the former verſe of natural death, and this of caſual and violent death. Deſtruction and periſhing, import violence; though I conceive natural death be here alſo intended. They are deſtroyed from morning to evening, they periſh for ever without any regarding it; or as Mr. Broughton reads it, between a merning and evening, they are waſted without any regarding, or without any thinking upon it.

They are deſtroyed.] That is, they are ſubject or liable to deſtruction: That phraſe from morning to evening, notes the whole day: it is as much as to ſay, they are deſtroyed continually, or all the day long, as the Apoſtle ſpeaks out of the Pſalm, Rom. 8. 36. For thy ſake are we killed all the day long: the morning and the evening are the parts of a natural day, Gen. 1. 5. or the two terms of a civil day, and theſe include and take in the full compaſs of the day.

A mane ad veſperam, i. e. per totum diem, quippe mane & veſpera ſunt partes diei. Druſ.

> This ſence teacheth us, That, man is deſtroyable every moment.

He waſtes in one ſence, while he grows; and dyes, from the morning of his birth, and coming into the world, to the evening of his return, and going out of the world: And not only ſo, but he is obnoxious to the violent aſſaults of death every day, and all hours of every day: From the morning when he riſes, to the evening when he goes to bed, he walks among armies of dangers, and within the Gun-ſhot of deſtruction. The Apoſtles Catalogue of perils is true to this day, 2 Cor. 11. 26. In perils of Waters, in perils of Robbers, in perils of mine own Country-men, in perils by the Heathen, in perils in the City, in perils in the Wilderneſs, in perils in the Sea, in perils among falſe Brethren: Every place is a peril, and every perſon a peril. Where can we go, with whom can we meet, and not go among or meet with perils? And do not all theſe perils ſpeak deſtruction from morning to evening? Pauls experiences, both in regard of a natural, but eſpecially of violent death, brought forth theſe concluſions, which come full up to the point, I dye dayly, (1 Cor. 15. 31.) in deaths often (2 Cor. 11. 23.) we are killed all the day long (Rom. 8. 36.)

Secondly, Take the words as a proverbial ſpeech, by which the ſhorteſt time is ſignified. As (Iſa. 38. 12.) Hezekiah complaining, ſets forth his mortal ſickneſs, threatning preſent death and cutting off, thus, Mine age is departed and removed from me as a ſhepherds Tent; I have cut off like a Weaver my life, he will cut me off with pining ſickneſs, from day even to night wilt thou make an end of me; that is, either continually or ſuddenly: from day even to night wilt thou make an end of me, I am waſting perpetually: or before night, within the compaſs of this day thou wilt deſtroy and make an end of me: theſe were the thoughts of my heart, when I was in the hands of that acute diſpatching diſeaſe. The Pſalmiſt (Pſal. 90. 5, 6.) deſcribes man as graſs, In the morning it flouriſheth and groweth up, in the evening it is cut down and withereth; that is, man continueth but a very ſhort time: His life is but a ſpan long, or but as a day long. Jonahs Gourd came up in a night, and periſhed in a night; and man cometh up in the morning, and periſheth in the evening. The Naturaliſts ſpeak of a Fly, they call Ephemeron, a creature of one day, which comes forth in the morning, is very active about noon, but when the Sun declineth, it declines too, and ſets with the ſetting of the Sun. Man is an Ephemeron, a creature of one day; for howſoever his life conſiſteth of many days, and is often lengthened out to many years; yet between morning and evening, or from morning to evening, he is deſtroyed. The firſt ſtep he ſets upon the ſtage of the world, is a going out of the world; his aſcending to the height of his natural perfection, hath in it a deſcent. One part of his life compared with another, is an increaſe; but the whole, in reference to his end, is a decreaſe: his life is but a breathing death, life ſhortning as faſt as it lengthens; his life is death haſtning upon him continually. A hand breadth is quickly meaſured; Behold (ſaith David, Pſal. 39. 5.) thou haſt made my dayes a hand breadth; nothing needs no time to paſs it in: mans age, in it ſelf, is but little, and comparatively it is nothing; it falls under no calculation before the face of Eternity. Mine age is nothing before thee.

But though the life of man be thus ſhort, and himſelf be deſtroyed between a morning and an evening; yet death laſts long, they periſh for ever without any regarding.

They periſh for ever.] Death it ſeems is everlaſting. They periſh; the word is often uſed in this book for the diſſolution of ſoul and body, not for the annihilation of either, as periſhing properly imports: to periſh, is here but to dye, for thus even the righteous periſh, and no man lays it to heart, Iſa. 57. 1.

But doth man periſh thus, dyes he for ever? Shall there not be a return, a reſurrection, ſhall not ſoul and body be re-united? How is it ſaid then, they periſh or dye for ever?

εἰς χρόνον πολύν.

For ever,] is ſometime put for an infinite time, and ſometime for an indefinite time, 1 Chron. 23. 25. The Lord God of Iſrael hath given reſt unto his people, that they may dwell in Jeruſalem for ever. And yet the Jews are now ſo far from dwelling in Jeruſalem, that they have ſcarce reſt or dwelling among any people. The like ſence of for ever, read 1 Kings 2. 33. Pſal. 132. 12, 14. Yet further, for ever is put for the finite time of one mans life, 1 Sam. 27. 12. He ſhall be my ſervant for ever, that is, as long as he lives; Pſal. 23. 6. I will dwell in the houſe of the Lord for ever; that is, as long as I live. In the Text before us, for ever, is as long as this world laſts; it notes the utmoſt term of time, not (which is without term) eternity. They periſh for ever, that is, they ſhall not live in this world any more; as (Job 14. 14.) If a man dye, ſhall he live again? As if he had ſaid, man can dye but once; he cannot live again, that is, in this world; ſhall he any more return to his houſe, to his wife and children, to his riches or honours, and ſhall he here again enjoy ſuch an eſtate as he had before? That (Pſal. 103. 16.) explains it ſo, As for man, his days are as graſs, as a flower of the field ſo he flouriſheth; for the wind paſſeth over it, and it is gone, and the place thereof ſhall know it no more; that is, he ſhall never return to that local place, or civil place in which he lived; he ſhall not return to that place of Magiſtracy or Miniſtry, to that place of merchandizing or trading, of husbandry or handicraft, where he converſ'd before. Thus his place will know him no more. Man dyes but once, and therefore when he dyes, he is ſaid to dye for ever. There is a ſecond death, but it is only a ſecond condition of life. Some ſhall ſo live for ever, that they ſhall be dying for ever. The miſery of all men here, is, that they are dying while they live; the miſery of the damned hereafter, will be, that they are living while they dye. We ſee then, that as life is a continual going out of the world; ſo from death there is no returning to the world, they periſh for ever; when once you dye, you are dead for good and all (as we ſay;) there's an end, in reſpect of any work proper to this world, whether Natural, Civil, or Spiritual. A dying man periſhes for ever from eating and drinking, from any outward content or pleaſure. When Barzillai was (as it were but) upon the borders of death, and confines of the grave, (2 *Sam.*19.25.) he beſpeaks David thus, who had invited him to Court, Can I taſte what I eat and drink? (and it follows) Can I any more hear the voice of Singing-men and Singing-women? Can I any more? As if he had ſaid, I am now nigh unto death, theſe delights are gone, they are periſhed for ever, I can hardly taſte any thing I eat or drink; the pleaſant Voice or muſical Inſtrument, can I any more hear? Much more then in death it ſelf are all theſe outward comforts periſhed, and will periſh for ever.

to

Again, In reſpect of civil works, he that dyes periſheth for ever; no more buying, or ſelling, or trading, or dealing, all theſe things are paſt, and paſt for ever. Yea, death puts an end to all ſpiritual works, ſuch as were the Saints exerciſe and duty upon the earth; at the grave, there's an end of them alſo; a dying man periſhes for ever, in reſpect of repenting or believing, in reſpect of praying or hearing the word. Theſe are heavenly works, but the time for theſe is, while you are upon the earth, none of theſe labours are in Heaven or Hell, no, nor in the grave whither thou goeſt, as the Preacher concludes (Eccleſ. 9. 10.) Therefore (Iſa. 38. 18.) Hezekiah in his ſickneſs, makes it one part of his ſuit to God, that he might be ſpared, For (ſaith he) the grave cannot praiſe thee, they that go down into the pit cannot hope for thy truth; the living, the living, he ſhall praiſe thee, as I do this day. To praiſe God ſhall be the work of Saints for ever; and yet the Saints dying are truly ſaid to periſh for ever, from praiſing God. All that praiſe ſhall ceaſe in death, which belongs to the ways of grace; and then ſuch praiſe begins as ſuits with glory, which is our end. That Hezekiah means it of ſuch praiſe, and not of all praiſe, is clear from his own words, Verſe 20. We will ſing my ſongs to the ſtringed Inſtruments, all the days of our life, in the houſe of the Lord; that is, in the ordinances of thy publick worſhip. They that are in the houſe of the grave, cannot praiſe the Lord in his houſe. And though the praiſes of the Lord in Heaven are tranſcendent, and more perfect then thoſe in his houſe on Earth; yet it is a higher act of grace to deſire to live to praiſe God, then to be willing to dye that we may praiſe him, becauſe in this we deny our ſelves moſt: Praiſing God on earth is a work as well as a reward; but praiſing God in Heaven is a reward rather then a work. And we put forth the moſt ſpiritual acts of grace, when we cheerfully go on with a work which we know ſtands between us and the beſt part of our reward. But I return to the Text.

They periſh for ever without any regarding,] or without any laying it to heart. The word heart is not in the mouth, but it is in the heart of this Scripture. For the ſence is parallel with that, Iſa. 57. The righteous periſh, and no man lays it to heart. The Chaldee gives a ſtrange gloſs, They periſh or dye becauſe no man giveth them medicine; as if he had ſaid, there is no Phyſitian can give an Antidote againſt death, or by any medicines prolong mans life. It is a truth, that the decayes and ruines of Nature, will at laſt exceed the repairs of Art: but this gloſs hath little regard to the Text, which we tranſlate well, They periſh without any regarding it, that is, none or very few regarding it. The negative is not abſolutely univerſal, excluding all, as if there were none in the world who take notice of the ſhortneſs and frailty of mans life, or of his for ever periſhing condition. So in that place of Iſaiah, The righteous periſh, and no man layes it to heart; that is, there are very few, ſcarce any to be found who lay to heart (in compariſon of the number which neglect) the death of righteous men.

מִבְּלִי מֵשִׂים Abſq; apponente. Pereunt eo quod nemo apponat eis medicinam.

Obſerve hence, Few of the living regard how ſuddenly others do, or themſelves may dye.

Till we ſee a friend gaſping and dying, till we ſee him bedewed with cold ſweats, and rackt with Convulſions, till our eye thus affects our hearts, our hearts are ſeldom affected with the ſenſe of our mortality. It is one Reaſon why Solomon adviſes to go to the houſe of mourning, Eccleſ. 7. It is better to go to the houſe of mourning, then to the houſe of mirth; for (ſaith he) that is the way of all men (all muſt dye) and the living will lay it to heart, or the living will regard it. As if he had ſaid, the living ſeldom lay death to heart, till they come to the houſe of death: he ſeems to promiſe for the living, that then they will: yet his undertaking is not ſo ſtrict, as if every man that goes to the houſe of mourning, did certainly lay it to heart: but he ſpeaks probably, that if living man will at any time lay death to heart, then ſurely he will when he goes to the houſe of mourning. When will a man think of death, if not when he ſees death? And looks into that dark chamber of the grave? There are many who lay it to heart only then: for a fit at a Funeral, they have a paſſion of the heart about mortality. And very many have gone ſo often to the houſe of mourning, that they are grown familiar with Death, and the frequency of thoſe meetings take off all impreſſions of mortality from their hearts. As we ſay of thoſe Birds that build and rooſt in ſteeples, being uſed to the continual ringing of the bells, the ſound diſquiets them not: or as thoſe that dwell near the fall of the River Nylus, the noiſe of the water deafens them ſo, that they mind it not. Many have been ſo often at the grave, that now the grave is worn out of their hearts; they look upon it as a matter of cuſtom and formality, for men to dye and be buried; and when the ſolemnity of death is over, the thoughts of death are over: as ſoon as the grave is out of their ſight, preparations for the grave are out of mind. It is ſtoried, (2 Sam. 20. 12.) that when Amaſa was ſlain by Joab, and lay wallowing in his blood, in the midſt of the high way, every one that came by him ſtood ſtill; but anon Amaſa is removed out of the high way into the field, and a cloth caſt upon him, and then (the Text ſaith) all the people went on after Joab. It is ſo ſtill, we make a ſtop at one that lies gaſping and groaning, at one that lies bleeding and dying; but let a cloth be thrown over him, and he drawn aſide, put into the grave, and covered with earth; then we go to our buſineſs, to trading and dealing, yea to coveting and ſinning, as if the laſt man (that ever ſhould be) were buried. Thus men periſh for ever, without any regarding. If this kind of periſhing were more regarded, or regarded by more, fewer would periſh. Thoughts of death ſpiritualiz'd have life in them: thoughts of death laid to the heart, are a good medicine for an evil heart. It follows, Verſe 21. Doth not their excellency which is in them go away? They dye, even without wiſdom.

This Verſe (as I noted in the beginning) prevents an objection which might be made, as if man had wrong done him: and that it were too great a diminution to his honour, whom God made the chief creature in the inferior world, and but little inferior to Angels themſelves, that he ſhould be looked upon only as a heap of duſt, or a lump of clay, as a mortal momentany periſhing creature, therefore he grants that man hath an excellency; but all the excellency that he hath, whether natural or artificial, bred in him, or acquired by him, as a man, when he goes, goes too; Doth not their excellency which is in them go away? Or journieth not their excellency with them? As Mr. Broughton tranſlates, alluding to our paſſing out of the world, as in a journey; when a man dyes he takes a journey out of the world, he goes out for ever; and (ſaith he) doth not his excellency journey along with him? Yes, the queſtion affirms it; when man goes, his excellency goes too. The word (Jether) which we tranſlate excellency, ſignifies primarily, a reſidue, or a remain, and that two wayes. Firſt, a reſidue of perſons, Judges 7. 6. But all the reſt of the people bowed down on their knees to drink water. So the Vulgar underſtands it here. They who are left after them, ſhall be taken away from them; namely, their heirs or poſterity.

Secondly, It ſignifies a reſidue of things, Pſal. 17. 14. Where deſcribing worldly men, who have their portion in this life, he ſaith, Their bellies are filled with hid treaſure, they are alſo full of children, and leave the reſt of their ſubſtance to their babes. Thus others take it here, Doth not the wealth and riches which men leave when they die, die alſo, and go away? as their perſons are mortal, ſo are their eſtates; there is a Moth will eat them both. And as the word ſignifies a quantitative remainder, or overplus, both of perſons and things; ſo alſo a qualitative exceſs or remainder, or that which exceeds in quality; any exceſs in the goodneſs of a quality, is called excellency. Thus Jacob calls Reuben, in regard of his primogeniture, the excellency of dignity, and the excellency of power; yet blots him in the next verſe, becauſe of his ſin; thou ſhalt not excel, Gen. 49. 3, 4. This ſenſe of the word ſuits well with the ſcope of the Text in hand. His excellency, that is, whatſoever doth excel, or is beſt in him. But what is that? Some by his Excellency underſtand the Soul; as if he had ſaid, that beſt part of man, the Soul, which may be oppoſed to clay and duſt before ſpoken of, that noble gueſt, that royal inhabitant of this houſe of clay, goeth out when Death enters. Death diſſolves the union between ſoul and body.

Jather, quod eſt ſupereſſe, non ſolum exceſſum quantitatis ſignificat, ſed etiā qualitatis dignitatis, ſicut verbum Latinum ſupero, non ſolum ſupereſſe, ſed etiā vincere, & excellere. Pined.

חבם בם

Or rather, we may take excellency for any ſpecial endowment; firſt of the body, as beauty or ſtrength. Secondly, of the mind, as wit and knowledge, learning or skill. Thirdly, We may take it for thoſe worldly excellencies of riches, honour or authority; when a man goeth out, all theſe excellencies which are in him, or which are about him, go out too. This excellency is the ſame which is called the goodlineſs of man, by the Prophet (Iſa. 40. 6.) The voyce ſaid cry; what ſhall I cry? All fleſh is graſs, and all the goodlineſs thereof is as the flower of the field; not only is the fleſh, but the goodlineſs thereof fading alſo. So here, not only the houſe of clay, and the foundation of duſt, but the excellency of it, all the adorning and poliſhing, the guilding and painting, the rich hanging and precious furniture of this houſe go away.

Taking excellency here for the ſoul, then we ſee wherein our excellency conſiſts.

> As man was the principal part of the Creation, ſo the Soul is the principal part of man.

> The conſtitution of the Soul is mans natural excellency, and the converſion of the Soul is mans ſpiritual excellency.

> Secondly, Obſerve, Death is the going away, or the departure of the ſoul from the body.

Death is called ſometime a departure of body and ſoul out of the world. Now letteſt thou thy ſervant depart in peace (ſaith old Simeon, Luke 2.) Man goes to his long home, Eccleſ. 12. 5. I go the way of all fleſh, ſaith Moſes; and, I go away, ſaith our Lord Chriſt of his death. Death is alſo called a departure of the ſoul from the body. The death of Rachel is thus deſcribed, Gen. 35. 18. And it came to paſs, that as her ſoul was in departing (for ſhe died.

From the other interpretation, which I rather inſiſt upon; obſerve,

> That, In death all a mans natural and outward excellency whatſoever, leaves him, and departs from him.

Pſal. 49. 16. Be not thou afraid when one is made rich, when the glory of his houſe increaſes; why, For when he dieth, he ſhall carry nothing away with him; his glory ſhall not deſcend after him. Though a man have an excellent outſide, a great ſtock of riches, beauty and honour, though he hath excellent linings of wiſdom and knowledge, yet all ends, as to him, when he ends; and therefore David concludes (Pſal. 39.) Man at his beſt ſtate, or, in his beſt eſtate, is altogether vanity. The excellencies that are in him go away, in that day all his thoughts periſh; his counſels and his projects periſh with him. One of the Ancients ſtanding by Caſar's Tomb (who was one of the moſt accompliſh'd men in the world, for natural, civil and moral excellencies, learned, valiant, noble, rich and powerful) he (I ſay) ſtanding by Caſar's Tomb, wept, and cried out, Where is now the flouriſhing beauty of Cæſar? what is become of his magnificence? where are the Armies now? where the honour of Cæſar? where are now the victories, the Triumphs and Trophies of Cæſar? All's gone, all's departed, the goodlineſs of them is as the flower of the field; his excellency which was in him, is gone away. And thus it will be ſaid of all thoſe, (who without grace) are moſt excellent in any thing below. Though your clay be curiouſly wrought, and ſtampt with ſuch beauty, as renders you almoſt Angelical to the eye of others; though your bodies are ſtrongly joynted, and bleſſed with ſuch health as renders your lives moſt active and comfortable to your ſelves; though your minds are ſtored with variety of learning, and you know as much as is knowable in the whole circle of nature, or of times; yet when Death comes, all theſe excellencies go away. Nothing will ſtay by us then; and go (not from us, but) with us, but the excellency of the knowledge of Chriſt Jeſus our Lord, for whom (Paul did, and) we ought to ſuffer the loſs of all things, and count them but dung, that we may win Chriſt (Phil. 3. 8.) For notwithſtanding all other knowledge and wiſdom, we ſhall die, and conclude (as this Chapter concludes of man) without wiſdom. They die even without wiſdom, or word for word They die not, and in wiſdom. We may underſtand it two wayes. Firſt, (as if he had ſaid) though men are excellent in wiſdom, yet they die, their wiſdom is to them in death, as if they had no wiſdom; they have no more priviledge or defence againſt the ſtroke of death, by all their wiſdom, learning and knowledg, then fools or brute beaſts, who have no wiſdom, no knowledge at all. They die even without wiſdom, or, even as if they had no wiſdom. Died Abner as a fool dieth? ſaid mourning David, 2 Sam. 3. 33. yea, Abner died as a fool dieth. And ſo, in one ſence, do the wiſeſt of men. He was the wiſeſt of all the children of men, and he ſpake it by the wiſdom of God, who asking this queſtion, How dieth the wiſe man? anſwers, as the fool, Eccleſ. 2. 16. Let not any man pride himſelf in the excellency of his wiſdom; for that he dwells in a houſe of clay, whoſe foundation is in the duſt: his frailty is not curable by his excellency, nor his mortality conquerable by his wiſdom; he ſhall die as if he had no wiſdom. And ſome who have moſt worldly wiſdom, die with leaſt; yea, they die with the greateſt folly. Not in wiſdom, may be an extenuation, or a more gentle, eaſie expreſſion, for, in abundance of folly. I remember, it is obſerved concerning Paracelſus (a great Phyſitian, a man exceedingly vers'd in Chymical experiments) that he bragg'd and boaſted, he had attained to ſuch wiſdom, in diſcerning the conſtitutions of men, and ſtudying remedies, that whoſoever did follow his rules, and keep to his directions, ſhould never die by any diſeaſe; caſually he might, and of age he muſt; but he would undertake to ſecure his health againſt diſeaſes: a bold undertaking! But he who by his art promiſed to protect others to extream old age, from the arreſt of death, could not, by all his art or power, make himſelf a protection in the prime of his youth, but died even as one without wiſdom, before, or when he had ſeen but thirty. Secondly, They die without wiſdom, that is, they cannot carry their wiſdom away with them; as not their worldly riches and pomp, ſo nor their worldly wiſdom and knowledge, chap. 36. 12.

Ubi nunc pulchritudo Cæſaris? quo abiit magnificentia tua?

ולא בחכמה

Nulla eſt ſapientia qua mortem effugiant. Mer.

Non in ſapientia, extenuatio eſt, i. e. in magna ſtultitia. Pined.

Thirdly, They die even without wiſdom, that is, they prepare not wiſely for death. This is the condition of moſt men, their excellency goes away with them, and they die without wiſdom; they have had wiſdom, but they die as if they had none, that is, they apply not their wiſdom while they live, to fit themſelves for death; they die before they underſtand what it is to live, or why they live. This wiſdom is wanting in moſt men; and of all ſuch the Pſalmiſt concludes to this ſence of the place, Man being in honour, and underſtandeth not, is like the beaſts that periſh, Pſal. 49. 20. That is, he periſhes fooliſhly, and without wiſdom, like a beaſt, though in his life a man of honour and excellency. He that dies unpreparedly, dies fooliſhly. It is the wiſdom of man to live in the world, in the Moriuntur inſipientes vel inſipienter. Druſ.

medi-

Prius moriuntur quam quicquam intellexerint de divina ſapientia. Merc.

meditation of, and preparation for his departure out of this world. And it is ſuch a wiſdom as is above man; therefore David prayes, Pſal. 39. 4. Lord, make me to know mine end, and the meaſure of my dayes, what it is; that I may know how frail I am: As if he had ſaid, Lord, I have been conſidering this and that thing (haply David's thoughts were in the duſt, and he had been handling the clay out of which he was made) yet ſaith he, by all thoſe conſiderations of my natural conſtitution, I cannot bring my heart to be ſo ſenſible of my frailty, as I ought to be; therefore he turns himſelf to God, Lord make me to know this thing. Here is our wiſdom, when we ſeek to God to ſpiritualize natural conſiderations, and make them effectual for the attaining of this wiſdom, the knowing of our end, and the meaſure of our dayes.

But is it not ſome ignorance of our duty to petition for the knowledge of our end? May we deſire to know what God hath no where promiſed to reveal? To petition for the literal knowledg of our end, that is, what year or day our lives ſhall end, is a ſinful curioſity, and a preſumptuous intruſion into the ſecret will of God: but to petition for a ſpiritual knowledge of our end, that is, how we may end well any day of the year, or any hour of the day, in an holy duty, and an humble ſubmiſſion of our ſelves to the revealed will of God; thus to know our end, how ſoon ceaſing (as one tranſlates) ſhort-liv'd and brittle ware we be; thus to know, how defective we are (as the Greek renders it) or what we lack, namely, to the end of our dayes, is above the inſtruction of any creature. We may preach, and you hear of death, as long as you and we live, and yet not know the frailty of our lives, till God makes us know it; therefore (ſaith he) Lord, make me to know how frail I am; none could teach him this Leſſon, but God himſelf. The ſame holy deſires are breathed out, Pſal. 90. 12. So teach us to number our dayes, that we may apply our hearts unto wiſdom; as if Moſes had ſaid, Lord, I have been numbring my dayes my ſelf, and telling over my life; I can tell no further then three or four ſcore, and yet, though I can tell no further, I cannot apply my heart unto wiſdom; we need but little Arithmetick to number our dayes, but we need a great deal of Grace to number them. And a child may be wiſe enough to number the dayes of an old man; and yet that old man a child, in numbring his own dayes, that is, not able to number his own dayes ſo, as to apply his heart to wiſdom. To number them ſo, is a very ſpecial point of wiſdom; the true Chriſtian Philoſophy; perfectly to meditate on death, is the perfection of life. And it is therefore our wiſdom to die well, becauſe we can die but once: A man had need do to that wiſely, which he can do no more. An error in death, is like an errour in war, you cannot commit it twice. We have moſt reaſon to look to it, not to err at all, where it is not poſſible to err again. Actually to err twice, is more ſinful; but not to have a poſſibility of erring twice, is moſt dangerous. We tranſgreſs the Laws of living, over and over a thouſand thouſand times; but as for the Laws of dying, no man ever tranſgreſſed them a ſecond time. That we ſo often tranſgreſs the law of living, is an aggravation of ſin upon all men. And that we can tranſgreſs the law of dying but once, is the ſeal of miſery upon moſt men. Let us then cry unto God, to be taught this great wiſdom, how to die, and not without wiſdom.

Meditatio mortis vita eſt perfecta. Greg. Mor. 13.

Summa Philoſophia.

CHAP. V. Verſ. 1, 2.

Call now, if there be any that will anſwer thee; and to which of the Saints wilt thou turn?

For wrath killeth the fooliſh, and envy ſlayeth the ſilly one.

THe five firſt verſes of this Chapter, contain the fourth Argument, by which Eliphaz goes on to convince Job of ſinful hypocriſie. And the conviction is made two wayes, from a twofold compariſon. Firſt, He compares Job to the Saints, and finds him unlike to them. Secondly, He compares Job to the wicked, and finds him like to them; if ſo, then Job muſt needs be a hypocrite, who had carried it fair all the while in the world, for a great Profeſſor, and yet, when he comes to the trial, was unlike all the Saints, and moſt like the wicked of the world. The firſt Argument may be thus framed;

> He is not a juſt or a holy man, who in his affliction is altogether unlike holy and juſt men.
>
> But Job, thou in thy affliction, art altogether unlike holy and juſt men:
>
> Therefore thou art not a holy or a juſt man.

The Propoſition is implied: the Minor or the Aſſumption is in the firſt verſe; Call now, if there be any that will anſwer thee; and to which of the Saints wilt thou turn? As if he ſhould ſay, Enquire as much as thou wilt, thou ſhalt find none among the Saints like thy ſelf; they who have been ſomewhat like thee (of whom thou ſhalt find but few) in the troubles which thou haſt born, even thoſe thou wilt find altogether unlike thee, in bearing thoſe troubles. Scarce any of the godly ever ſuffered ſuch things as thou haſt done, but none of the godly ever did ſuch things in their ſufferings.

As he argues him, in the firſt verſe, of hypocriſie, by his unlikeneſs to the Saints; ſo in the next words, he argues him of hypocriſie, by his likeneſs to the wicked: His firſt Argument for this, lies in the ſecond verſe; and in the three following verſes, there lies a ſecond Argument to confirm the ſame point: He attempts to prove Job like a fool or a wicked man, two wayes.

First, In his manner of ſuffering.

Secondly, In the matter of his ſufferings.

Firſt, (ſaith he) Thou art like a fool, or like a fooliſh man, like the worſt of men, in the manner of thy carriage under ſufferings: The Argument may be framed thus;

> He that behaveth himſelf like a fool, or like a wicked man while he is in trouble, is a man either openly wicked, or groſly hypocritical.
>
> But Job, thou behaveſt thy ſelf like a fooliſh or wicked man in thy troubles:
>
> Therefore thou art wicked, &c.

The Aſſumption or Minor Propoſition is in the ſecond verſe; Wrath killeth the fooliſh, and envy ſlayeth the ſilly one. As if he ſhould ſay, Thou pineſt, rageſt, and vexeſt thy ſelf under thy ſufferings, after the rate of fooliſh and ſilly ones, that is, ſinful and wicked ones.

Secondly, He would prove Job to be a hypocrite, becauſe his ſufferings, for the matter of them, were like the judgments which God uſes to pour forth upon wicked and ungodly men; and that Argument may be thus framed:

> Wicked men flouriſh a while, and then ſudden deſtruction cometh upon them; they and their children, and their whole eſtates are ſwallowed up in a moment.
>
> But Job, thou having flouriſhed a little while, waſt ſuddenly ſurprized and ſwallowed up by judgments; thou, thy eſtate, thy children, all devoured and conſumed:
>
> Therefore thou art a wicked man, a very hypocrite; God hath dealt with thee as he uſes to deal with his enemies, and therefore thou art not his friend.

This is the Logick of the Context, or the Reaſons couched in them, whereby Eliphaz would convince Job of ſin: By this a general light is let into the whole Context.

Now we will conſider the words, and open their ſence diſtinctly.

Call now, if there be any that will anſwer thee; and to which of the Saints wilt thou turn?

Interpreters varie much about the meaning of theſe words.

Firſt, Some of the Jewiſh Writers look upon theſe words as proceeding from height and pride of ſpirit in Eliphaz; as if he diſdained to talk with Job any longer about the buſineſs; as if he looked upon Job as no match for him, in point of argument; bids him look out an Angel or a Saint to grapple with him in theſe diſputes, and ſee if he could find any one of thoſe, who would undertake for him as an Advocate, or be his Second, foraſmuch as himſelf was ſo unable to defend his cauſe, or juſtifie what he had done; Call now, if there be any that will anſwer thee, that is, anſwer for thee; or, to which of the Saints wilt thou turn for help, to patronize or plead thy cauſe? but I ſhall paſs that.

Nemo tibi pravè corruptéque de his rebus judicanti patronus aderet? nemo qui tibi reſpondeat, tibi accinat, tuam ſententiam tueatur.

Secondly, Others of the Jewiſh Writers make the ſence out thus, as if Eliphaz had ſaid with Paul, in the point of the Lords Supper (1 Cor. 11.24.) That which I have delivered unto you, I have received of the Lord; ſo, that which I have delivered unto thee, in my former argument, I received from the Lord in a viſion; it was revealed unto me from heaven: Now, do thou try whether thou canſt learn any thing from heaven, or from the Saints upon the earth, (who are inſtructed to and for the Kingdom of heaven) which may anſwer my arguments, or confute the reaſons which I have brought againſt thee. I had a viſion from heaven, now call thou to heaven, and ſee if thou canſt have any anſwer from thence; turn alſo to the Saints, to any Saint upon the earth, and ſee what they will anſwer thee; I believe thou wilt not find one amongſt them all, differing in judgment from me, or from that Oracle with which I have now acquainted thee. They will all agree with me in theſe great Principles, about the providence, power and juſtice of God, about the ſufferings, ſinfulneſs and weakneſs of man. That's a ſecond ſence.

Thirdly, Others take the words as an Ironie, as a deriſion or ſcorn put upon Job by Eliphaz; as if Eliphaz had mocked him thus; Thou haſt handled the matter well, thou haſt carried thy ſelf ſo, in the dayes of thy peace and proſperity, that now, when thou art in trouble, thou maiſt call long enough, and cry till thy throat akes, and thy ſpirits be ſpent, and yet have none to anſwer thee, none to ſpeak a word to thee, or to do thee any good; though thou cry to all the Saints, and ſend to all thy friends round about thee, yet in this day, none will hear or regard thee: Thou wilt find thy ſelf forſaken of all, no man will give thee any aſſiſtance, or take any care of thy condition. Juſt as Elijah brake forth in holy ſcorn againſt the Prophets of Baal (1 Kin. 18.27.) when they were crying out to their Idol for help, and a ſign by fire; Cry aloud (ſaith he) cry aloud; he bad them cry aloud, yet he knew the Idol was deaf and dumb, and could neither hear their cry, nor give them Anſwer: So Eliphaz ſeems to ſpeak to Job; Cry aloud now, to this, to that Saint, with whom thou art acquainted here on earth, or cry to Heaven, cry to God himſelf; call this way, call that, if any will anſwer thee, either God above, or Saint below; thou ſhalt not find here or there any to aſſiſt, any to relieve thee. And ſo he ſeems to allude to that juſt retaliation of God, who uſually turns his ear from their cry in a day of trouble, who have turned their ears from his counſels, in the dayes of comfort; as (Prov. 1.) Wiſdom threatens, They ſhall call, but I will not anſwer; they ſhall cry, but I will not hear. Why? Becauſe they have refuſed inſtruction, and have not choſen the fear of the Lord.

Vox in tribulatione eum non invenit quem mens in trãquilitate contempſit. Gre. in loc.

In the fourth place, Moſt of the Popiſh Writers buſie themſelves much, to ground invocation of Saints, and the interceſſion of Saints for us, upon this Text: As if Eliphaz had directed Job to cry to the Saints departed; Call now, if there be any that will anſwer? and to which of the Saints wilt thou turn? What Saint wilt thou chuſe for thy Patron or helper in this ſad condition? So they teach and practiſe, having appointed a particular Saint in the Kalendar of the year, to the help of every particular affliction in their lives, and to theſe they turn themſelves in every diſtreſs: They have a Saint for the Sea, and a Saint for the Land, a Saint for the fire, and a Saint for the water, a Saint for each diſeaſe of the body, and for each diſaſter in the family: To ſome of theſe they ſuppoſe Job was adviſed to have recourſe for ſuccour and comfort in his troubles. And yet they are divided in opinion, and give a double ſence about it, Firſt, As if Eliphaz had thus beſpoken him; If thou doſt not give credit unto me, nor believe what I have ſpoken, was revealed from God, then call thou thy ſelf upon God, and try whether he will not give thee ſome anſwer, and reſolve thy doubt: Or if by reaſon of thine own unworthineſs, thou canſt not obtain an immediate anſwer at the hand of God, then turn thee to ſome of the Saints, that by their mediation thou maiſt receive light from God, to aſſure thee about my viſion, whether it were ſent from heaven or no. Secondly, Others interpret it more largely, as if Eliphaz perceiving Job to be brought to ſome ſight and acknowledgment of his ſins, and now to thirſt after the pardon of them; he, in theſe words, exhorts him to call upon, and cry unto God for pardon, if perhaps he himſelf would vouchſafe to anſwer; but in caſe ſhame did ſo cover his face, aud guilt ſo ſtop his mouth, that he could not ſpeak unto God immediately, then he adviſeth him to pray in aid from ſome of the Saints departed, who might manage this ſuit, and intercede for him at the throne of Grace. The groſneſs of this interpretation, is ſuch, as carries a ſelf-reputation with it, and therefore I ſhall not need to ſtay long about the refuting of it, Neither will I ſtay to argue againſt that groundleſs, uſeleſs doctrine in general, The invocation of Saints departed; which finds no letter of command or direction, no letter of promiſe or acceptation, no letter of example or practice for our imitation, in the whole Book of God: but it is a reproach to the Saints, and a diſhonour to God, whoſe Name and incommunicable Title is, The God hearing prayers, and therefore to him ſhall the deſires of all fleſh come; and if all to him, then who to Saints or Angels? Only He can be the object of our prayer, who is the object of our prayer, Rom. 10. How ſhall they call on him on whom then have not believed? To whom we pray, upon him we muſt believe. Saints departed are not to be believed upon, how then ſhall they be called on?

Aqu. in loc.

But to leave the queſtion, I ſhall only touch two things, to ſhew how wide they are in this expoſition.

Firſt, The confeſſed Doctrine of Popery tells us, that before Chriſt coming in the fleſh, and his reſurrection from grave, all the Saints departed were in Limbus, a place, which they have framed and built up in their own fancies, as the common receptacle of all thoſe who died in the Faith of Chriſt, before Chriſt died; therefore they tell us (to eek out the ſtory) that as Chriſt went down into Hell, the place of the damned, to ſtrike terror into the Devils, ſo he went into this Limbus, thence to deliver the Fathers from that priſon, and carry them up, with himſelf into glory. Now this being their Tenet, how ſenceleſs is it for them to ground their opinion of invocation of Saints, upon any Scripture of the Old Teſtament? And therefore it is ſo, to ground it upon this.

Secondly, If we conſider theſe words, we may as well ſeek for fire in the bottom of the Sea, as for the invocation of Saints in this Text, for here is no ſuch thing ſpoken of; and if any thing ſounds that way, it is rather to condemn praying to Saints, then any confirmation of it; for call now, if there be any that will anſwer thee; carries this ſence rather; call now, for there is none to anſwer thee, and to which of the Saints wilt thou turn? that is, none among all the Saints (if thou turneſt to them) can give thee any help: As Mercer, a moderate Papiſt, gives the meaning of this Scripture, againſt the current of their interpreters.

Voca ſi quis eſt qui tibi reſpondeat, q. d. nemo tibi reſpondebit. Merc. Quod quidam noſtrorum hunc locum ad ſanctorum mortuorum invocationem, quam veteres ne agnoverunt quidem, referunt, merum delirium eſt, Idem paulo poſt. Nihil hic de ſanctorum mortuorum invocatione. Tho. Aquin. & Lyranus eo quidem referunt, ſed æquè ineptè, ne dicam impiè. Idem in loc.

And this will appear more fully in opening the Grammatical ſence of a word or two, which alſo will give the clear meaning of the whole paſſage. Eliphaz (as was hinted in drawing out his Arguments) calls upon Job to call to remembrance former times, to ſearch the records of Antiquity, and ſee whether he could find an example of any one among all the Saints, who either had ſuch troubles as his, or in his troubles ſpake and behaved himſelf as he had done; he bids him name one, if he could.

Call now.] or, Call I pray thee. What we tranſlate, for his departure out of this om as is above man; there-

. Lord, make me to know mine eyes, what it is; that I may had ſaid, Lord, I have been g (haply David's thoughts en handling the clay out of he, by all thoſe conſiderati-
I cannot bring my heart to
I ought to be; therefore he ke me to know this thing. Here to God to ſpiritualize natu-hem effectual for the attain-ng of our end, and the mea-of our duty to petition for lay we deſire to know what d to reveal? To petition for d, that is, what year or day uriosity, and a preſumptuous

God: but to petition for a nd, that is, how we may end ny hour of the day, in an ho-iſſion of our ſelves to the re-
o know our end, how ſoon rt-liv'd and brittle ware we ective we are (as the Greek
, namely, to the end of our n of any creature. We may
, as long as you and we live, our lives, till God makes us know it; therefore (ſaith he) Lord, make me to know how frail I am; none could teach him this Leſſon, but God himſelf. The ſame holy deſires are breathed out, Pſal. 90. 12. So teach us to number our dayes, that we may apply our hearts unto wiſdom; as if Moſes had ſaid, Lord, I have been numbring my dayes my ſelf, and telling over my life; I can tell no further then three or four ſcore, and yet, though I can tell no further, I cannot apply my heart unto wiſdom; we need but little Arithmetick to number our dayes, but we need a great deal of Grace to number them. And a child may be wiſe enough to number the dayes of an old man; and yet that old man a child, in numbring his own dayes, that is, not able to number his own dayes ſo, as to apply his heart to wiſdom. To number them ſo, is a very ſpecial point of wiſdom; the true Chriſtian Philoſophy; perfectly to meditate on death, is the perfection of life. And it is therefore our wiſdom to die well, becauſe we can die but once: A man had need do to that wiſely, which he can do no more. An error in death, is like an errour in war, you cannot commit it twice. We have moſt reaſon to look to it, not to err at all, where it is not poſſible to err again. Actually to err twice, is more ſinful; but not to have a poſſibility of erring twice, is moſt dangerous. We tranſgreſs the Laws of living, over and over a thouſand thouſand times; but as for the Laws of dying, no man ever tranſgreſſed them a ſecond time. That we ſo often tranſgreſs the law of living, is an aggravation of ſin upon all men. And that we can tranſgreſs the law of dying but once, is the ſeal of miſery upon moſt men. Let us then cry unto God, to be taught this great wiſdom, how to die, and not without wiſdom.

Meditatio mortis vita eſt perfecta. Greg. Mor. 13. Summa Philoſophia.

CHAP. V. Verſ. 1, 2.

be any that will anſwer thee; and to which of the Saints wilt thou turn?
he fooliſh, and envy ſlayeth the ſilly one.

verſes of this Chapter con-urth Argument, by which Eli- on to convince Job of ſinful
. And the conviction is made s, from a twofold compari-t, He compares Job to the nd finds him unlike to them. to the wicked, and finds him
b muſt needs be a hypocrite, while in the world, for a great comes to the trial, was unlike the wicked of the world. The amed;
u, who in his affliction is altoge-men. tion, art altogether unlike holy ly or a juſt man.

: the Minor or the Aſſumpti-ow, if there be any that will ane Saints wilt thou turn? As if much as thou wilt, thou ſhalt like thy ſelf; they who have f whom thou ſhalt find but few) haſt born, even thoſe thou wilt e, in bearing thoſe troubles.
er ſuffered ſuch things as thou godly ever did ſuch things in firſt verſe, of hypocriſie by his in the next words, he argues ikeneſs to the wicked: His firſt e ſecond verſe; and in the three a ſecond Argument to confirm ts to prove Job like a fool or a

Firſt, In his manner of ſuffering.

Secondly, In the matter of his ſufferings.

Firſt, (ſaith he) Thou art like a fool, or like a fooliſh man, like the worſt of men, in the manner of thy carriage under ſufferings: The Argument may be framed thus;

> He that behaveth himſelf like a fool, or like a wicked man while he is in trouble, is a man either openly wicked, or groſly hypocritical.
>
> But Job, thou behaveſt thy ſelf like a fooliſh or wicked man in thy troubles:
>
> Therefore thou art wicked, &c.

The Aſſumption or Minor Propoſition is in the ſecond verſe; Wrath killeth the fooliſh, and envy ſlayeth the ſilly one. As if he ſhould ſay, Thou pineſt, rageſt, and vexeſt thy ſelf under thy ſufferings, after the rate of fooliſh and ſilly ones, that is, ſinful and wicked ones.

Secondly, He would prove Job to be a hypocrite, becauſe his ſufferings, for the matter of them, were like the judgments which God uſes to pour forth upon wicked and ungodly men; and that Argument may be thus framed:

> Wicked men flouriſh a while, and then ſudden deſtruction cometh upon them; they and their children, and their whole eſtates are ſwallowed up in a moment.
>
> But Job, thou having flouriſhed a little while, waſt ſuddenly ſurprized and ſwallowed up by judgments; thou, thy eſtate, thy children, all devoured and conſumed:
>
> Therefore thou art a wicked man, a very hypocrite; God hath dealt with thee as he uſes to deal with his enemies, and therefore thou art not his friend.

This is the Logick of the Context, or the Reaſons couched in them, whereby Eliphaz would convince Job of ſin: By this a general light is let into the whole Context.

Now we will conſider the words, and open their ſence diſtinctly.

Call now, if there be any that will anſwer thee; and to which of the Saints wilt thou turn?

Interpreters varie much about the meaning of theſe words.

Firſt, Some of the Jewiſh Writers look upon theſe words as proceeding from height and pride of ſpirit in Eliphaz; as if he diſdained to talk with Job any longer about the buſineſs; as if he looked upon Job as no match for him, in point of argument; bids him look out an Angel or a Saint to grapple with him in theſe diſputes, and ſee if he could find any one of thoſe, who would undertake for him as an Advocate, or be his Second, foraſmuch as himſelf was ſo unable to defend his cauſe, or juſtifie what he had done; Call now, if there be any that will anſwer thee, that is, anſwer for thee; or, to which of the Saints wilt thou turn for help, to patronize or plead thy cauſe? but I ſhall paſs that.

Secondly, Others of the Jewiſh Writers make the ſence out thus, as if Eliphaz had ſaid with Paul, in the point of the Lords Supper (1 Cor. 11. 24.) That which I have delivered unto you, I have received of the Lord; ſo, that which I have delivered unto thee, in my former argument, I received from the Lord in a viſion; it was revealed unto me from heaven: Now, do thou try whether thou canſt learn any thing from heaven, or from the Saints upon the earth, (who are inſtructed to and for the Kingdom of heaven) which may anſwer my arguments, or confute the reaſons which I have brought againſt thee. I had a viſion from heaven, now call thou to heaven, and ſee if thou canſt have any anſwer from thence; turn alſo to the Saints, to any Saint upon the earth, and ſee what they will anſwer thee; I believe thou wilt not find one amongſt them all, differing in judgment from me, or from that Oracle with which I have now acquainted thee. They will all agree with me in theſe great Principles, about the providence, power and juſtice of God, about the ſufferings, ſinfulneſs and weakneſs of man. That's a ſecond ſence.

Thirdly, Others take the words as an Ironie, as a deriſion or ſcorn put upon Job by Eliphaz; as if Eliphaz had mocked him thus; Thou haſt handled the matter well, thou haſt carried thy ſelf ſo, in the dayes of thy peace and proſperity, that now, when thou art in trouble, thou maiſt call long enough, and cry till thy throat akes, and thy ſpirits be ſpent, and yet have none to anſwer thee, none to ſpeak a word to thee, or to do thee any good; though thou cry to all the Saints, and ſend to all thy friends round about thee, yet in this day, none will hear or regard thee: Thou wilt find thy ſelf forſaken of all, no man will give thee any aſſiſtance, or take any care of thy condition. Juſt as Elijah brake forth in holy ſcorn againſt the Prophets of Baal (1 Kin. 18. 27.) when they were crying out to their Idol for help, and a ſign by fire; Cry aloud (ſaith he) cry aloud; he bad them cry aloud, yet he knew the Idol was deaf and dumb, and could neither hear their cry, nor give them Anſwer: So Eliphaz ſeems to ſpeak to Job; Cry aloud now, to this, to that Saint, with whom thou art acquainted here on earth, or cry to Heaven, cry to God himſelf; call this way, call that, if any will anſwer thee, either God above, or Saint below; thou ſhalt not find here or there any to aſſiſt, any to relieve thee. And ſo he ſeems to allude to that juſt retaliation of God, who uſually turns his ear from their cry in a day of trouble, who have turned their ears from his counſels, in the dayes of comfort; as (Prov. 1.) Wiſdom threatens, They ſhall call, but I will not anſwer; they ſhall cry, but I will not hear. Why? Becauſe they have refuſed inſtruction, and have not choſen the fear of the Lord.

In the fourth place, Moſt of the Popiſh Writers buſie themſelves much, to ground invocation of Saints, and the interceſſion of Saints for us, upon this Text: As if Eliphaz had directed Job to cry to the Saints departed; Call now, if there be any that will anſwer? and to which of the Saints wilt thou turn? What Saint wilt thou chuſe for thy Patron or helper in this ſad condition? So they teach and practiſe, having appointed a particular Saint in the Kalendar of the year, to the help of every particular affliction in their lives, and to theſe they turn themſelves in every diſtreſs: They have a Saint for the Sea, and a Saint for the Land, a Saint for the fire, and a Saint for the water, a Saint for each diſeaſe of the body, and for each diſaſter in the family: To ſome of theſe they ſuppoſe Job was adviſed to have recourſe for ſuccour and comfort in his troubles. And yet they are divided in opinion, and give a double ſence about it, Firſt, As if Eliphaz had thus beſpoken him; If thou doſt not give credit unto me, nor believe what I have ſpoken, was revealed from God, then call thou thy ſelf upon God, and try whether he will not give thee ſome anſwer, and reſolve thy doubt: Or if by reaſon of thine own unworthineſs, thou canſt not obtain an immediate anſwer at the hand of God, then turn thee to ſome of the Saints, that by their mediation thou maiſt receive light from God, to aſſure thee about my viſion, whether it were ſent from heaven or no. Secondly, Others interpret it more largely, as if Eliphaz perceiving Job to be brought to ſome ſight and acknowledgment of his ſins, and now to thirſt after the pardon of them; he, in theſe words, exhorts him to call upon, and cry unto God for pardon, if perhaps he himſelf would vouchſafe to anſwer; but in caſe ſhame did ſo cover his face, and guilt ſo ſtop his mouth, that he could not ſpeak unto God immediately, then he adviſeth him to pray in aid from ſome of the Saints departed, who might manage this ſuit, and intercede for him at the throne of Grace. The groſneſs of this interpretation, is ſuch, as carries a ſelf-reputation with it, and therefore I ſhall not need to ſtay long about the refuting of it, Neither will I ſtay to argue againſt that groundleſs, uſeleſs doctrine in general, The invocation of Saints departed; which finds no letter of command or direction, no letter of promiſe or acceptation, no letter of example or practice for our imitation, in the whole Book of God: but it is a reproach to the Saints, and a diſhonour to God, whoſe Name and incommunicable Title is, The God hearing prayers, and therefore to him ſhall the deſires of all fleſh come; and if all to him, then who to Saints or Angels? Only He can be the object of our prayer, who is the object of our prayer, Rom. 10. How ſhall they call on him on whom then have not believed? To whom we pray, upon him we muſt believe. Saints departed are not to be believed upon, how then ſhall they be called on?

Aqu. in loc.

But to leave the queſtion, I ſhall only touch two things, to ſhew how wide they are in this expoſition.

Firſt, The confeſſed Doctrine of Popery tells us, that before Chriſt coming in the fleſh, and his reſurrection from grave, all the Saints departed were in Limbus, a place, which they have framed and built up in their own fancies, as the common receptacle of all thoſe who died in the Faith of Chriſt, before Chriſt died; therefore they tell us (to eek out the ſtory) that as Chriſt went down into Hell, the place of the damned, to ſtrike terror into the Devils, ſo he went into this Limbus, thence to deliver the Fathers from that priſon, and carry them up, with himſelf into glory. Now this being their Tenet, how ſenceleſs is it for them to ground their opinion of invocation of Saints, upon any Scripture of the Old Teſtament? And therefore it is ſo, to ground it upon this.

Secondly, If we conſider theſe words, we may as well ſeek for fire in the bottom of the Sea, as for the invocation of Saints in this Text, for here is no ſuch thing ſpoken of; and if any thing ſounds that way, it is rather to condemn praying to Saints, then any confirmation of it; for call now, if there be any that will anſwer thee; carries this ſence rather; call now, for there is none to anſwer thee, and to which of the Saints wilt thou turn? that is, none among all the Saints (if thou turneſt to them) can give thee any help: As Mercer, a moderate Papiſt, gives the meaning of this Scripture, againſt the current of their interpreters.

Voca ſi quis eſt qui tibi reſpondeat, q. d. nemo tibi reſpondebit. Merc. Quod quidam noſtrorum hunc locum ad ſanctorum mortuorum invocationem, quam veteres ne agnoverunt quidem, referunt, merum delirium eſt, Idem paulo poſt. Nihil hic de ſanctorum mortuorum invocatione. Tho. Aquin. & Lyranus eo quidem referunt, ſed æquè ineptè, ne dicam impiè. Idem in loc.

And this will appear more fully in opening the Grammatical ſence of a word or two, which alſo will give the clear meaning of the whole paſſage. Eliphaz (as was hinted in drawing out his Arguments) calls upon Job to call to remembrance former times, to ſearch the records of Antiquity, and ſee whether he could find an example of any one among all the Saints, who either had ſuch troubles as his, or in his troubles ſpake and behaved himſelf as he had done; he bids him name one, if he could.

Call now.] or, Call I pray thee. What we tranſlate, now, is ſometime a particle of inſulting, but moſt uſually of perſwading or intreating. We render it as an Adverb of time, but it rather imports a requeſt. So, Gen. 12. 13. Abraham intreats Sarah; Say I pray thee, thou art my Siſter.

The word (Kara) which we tranſlate call, ſignifies firſt to cry aloud by way of preaching or proclamation, Iſa. 58. 1, Cry aloud, lift up thy voyce like a Trumpet: Secondly, By way of prayer or invocation, as, Pſal. 50. 15. Call upon me in the day of trouble; but it rather ſignifies, and that more properly, to call by appellation, or by way of nomination, as, Ruth 1. 20. Call me not Naomi, but call me Marah. So here, Call now, that is, look over the names, or call over the names of all the Saints, as we uſe to ſay, when many ſhould meet together, and we would know whether they are all met; or as Stewards, when they pay many hired ſervants their wages, take the Bill, and call over their names, and ſo pay them one by one, Mat. 20. 8. In the evening, the Lord of the Vineyard ſaith unto his Steward, call the Labourers, that is, call them by their ſeveral names, and give them their hire. Thus we may underſtand the phraſe in this place, read the Catalogue of the Saints; call every one by his name, and put the queſtion to them, ask them whether ever they had ſuch afflictions as thou haſt? or ask them whether they behaved themſelves under their afflictions as thou haſt done? I believe thou wilt find none to anſwer thee. To this ſence Mr. Broughton tranſlates, Call now if there be any that will defend thee, that is, be thy Patron or Advocate, in word, or in example of their lives.

קרא נא Na, licet inſultantis aliquando ſit, ut plurimū tamen ſuadentis & exhortantis eſt, ut ſodes amabo Latinis.

If there be any that will anſwer thee.] For, the word which we render anſwer, ſignifies not only, anſwering unto a queſtion, but an anſwering to a condition, or a correſpondency in practice. There is an anſwering by likeneſs of works, as well as by fitneſs of words. A real anſwer, and a verbal anſwer. Take it ſo, and then, Call now to the Saints, call them all by their names, intends only thus much, ſee if there be any that are like thee, or ſute either thy ſpirit or thy condition, if there be any to whom thou mayeſt parallel thy ſelf, either in the matter or manner of thy ſufferings. Thou art more like a Heathen, who knows not God, then any of the Saints, in theſe complainings. And ſeeing, out of the abundance of the heart, the mouth ſpeaks, theſe words ſpeak thy heart abounding in ſin, but empty of grace. Face anſwers face in the water; but neither thy face nor heart, will anſwer either heart or face of any of the Saints, in theſe waters of affliction. We find this word ſignifying ſimilitude or compariſon, or the equivalence of one thing to another, in that inſtance, Eccleſ. 10. 19. Money anſwers all things; the meaning of it is, that money in a proportion or value, ſuits, parallels and fits all things: There is nothing in the world, but you may ſuit it with a proportion of money, money will anſwer it; money anſwers, or is like all things, by an equivalency, though not in the formality.

Verbum reſpondere, in hoc loco ſignificat potius ſimilitudinem vel comparationem quam reſponſionem. Bold.

And to which of the Saints wilt thou turn?

ἢ εἴ τινα ἀγγέλων ἁγίων ὄψῃ.

The Septuagint read it, To which of the Angels wilt thou look? And the learned Mercer adheres to that tranſlation, as thinking, that by Saints, are meant Angels; though he be ſo far from laying any bottom in the words for the Popiſh opinion of the mediation of Angels, that he expreſly condemns it: but he gives the ſence thus, as if Eliphaz had reproved Job of pride, for conteſting with God, whenas, if he did turn himſelf to Angels, he ſhould find himſelf far below, and much over-matcht by them: What! Thou duſt and aſhes, more righteous and juſt then God? Though he charged his Angels with folly, yet, even they are too wiſe and holy for thee to deal with. If thou wert put into the ballance with Angels, how light wouldſt thou be? then, how much lighter then vanity art thou, being weighed with God? But the Hebrew is better tranſlated, Saints. The word ſignifies a thing or perſon, ſeparated and ſet apart from common, and dedicated to a ſpecial, eſpecially, a holy uſe. Holineſs (in the general nature of it) is nothing elſe but a ſeparation from common, and dedication to a divine ſervice, ſuch are the Saints, perſons ſeparated from the world, and ſet apart unto God: The Church in general (which is a company of Saints) is taken out of, and ſevered from the world: The Church is a fountain ſealed, and a garden incloſed; ſo alſo, every particular Saint is a perſon ſevered and encloſed from the common throng and multitude of the world: Come out from among them, and be ye ſeparate, ſaith the Lord; and touch no unclean thing, and I will receive you, 2 Cor. 6. 17.

Turn thee.] It is both a witty and judicious conceit that Eliphaz, in theſe words, alludes to Painters and Picture-drawers, who when they are drawing the picture of a man, or of any other thing, frequently turn their eyes upon the Proto-type, upon that which they are to draw by. When a man ſits (as they ſpeak) to have his picture taken, the Artiſt turns his eye often upon him; ſo here, to which of the Saints wilt thou turn thee to ſee thy picture, or to ſee any one like thee? where wilt thou look now, and by looking, obſerve a Saint of thy complexion, a holy man like thy ſelf? If the Pictures of all the Saints were loſt, none of them could be found in, or copied out from thee. The word which we tranſlate turn, doth not ſignifie ſimply to look about or turn the eye, but to turn the eye about with much intention, or curioſity of obſervation, to make a diſcovery, and find out ſomewhat. Sometime it ſignifies to look in compaſſion, Pſal. 25. 16. Turn thee unto me (ſaith David) and have mercy upon me, for I am very low. To look in compaſſion, notes a ſtrictneſs of obſervation, to find out what charity or mercy ſhould ſupply: ſuch a look or view of his eſtate, David deſired, that God would turn his eye upon him; to what end? that he might conſider and find out all his neceſſities, and in mercy ſuccour him.

Alludere videtur ad pictores, qui frequenter ad prototypum & exemplar, quod imitari conantur, oculos dirigunt & ad illud convertuntur.

Verbum פנה non ſimpliciter reſpicere ſignificat, aut aliquid intueri, ſed cum quadam animi intētione & ad aliquem finem.

So then, To which of the Saints wilt thou turn? ſounds thus much; upon what Saint wilt thou fix thine eye, to find thine own likeneſs, a repreſentation of the ſufferings thou beareſt, or of thy bearing theſe ſufferings? Take the ſum and ſenſe of the whole verſe thus, Call over the Roll or Catalogue of all the Saints, which either ever were, or at this day are upon the face of the earth. See if there be any whoſe condition or actions will anſwer in proportion unto thine; turn thine eye upon all the holy ones, ſee if thou canſt obſerve any like thy ſelf, in the matter or manner of thy afflictions, in the dealings of God with thee, or in thy complainings againſt God. Job, thou ſtandeſt alone for all the Saints; go to the fools of the earth, and to the prophaner Infidels; among them thou maiſt haply meet thy pattern, and among their records read the ſtory of thine own impatience and miſcarriage: For (as it follows) wrath killeth the fooliſh, and envy ſlayeth the ſilly one. How like a fool and ſilly one art thou, who haſt thus almoſt vext thy ſelf to death at thy own troubles, and pineſt with envy at the proſperity of others? Such ſeems to be the connexion and dependence of the ſecond verſe, with, and upon the firſt, which I ſhall preſently deſcend to open, when I have added an Obſervation or two from the former already opened.

It was good advice which Eliphaz gave Job in that condition, namely, to take view of the Saints, and to compare himſelf with them. Thence obſerve,

> It is profitable for us to look to the example of the Saints, either thoſe departed, or thoſe alive, and by them to examine, both what we do, and how we ſuffer.

God hath given us, not only his Word for a rule, but he hath given us examples as a rule, to walk by. He hath given us his own example, that we, looking unto him, ſhould be holy, as he is holy, in all manner of converſation; Be ye holy as I am holy: God, who is the holy one, is the higheſt pattern of holineſs. And he hath given us his Son, who is the expreſs image of his perſon, and the brightneſs of his glory, to be our example. The life of Chriſt is a fair copy indeed, a copy without any blot, or uneven letter in it: for he alſo is the holy one. Chriſt is not only the Principle of holineſs, but alſo the Pattern of holineſs to his people, they that ſay they abide in him, muſt walk even as he walked. His works (excepting thoſe that were miraculous, and works of mediation between God and us) are our rule, as well as his word, Heb. 12. 2. Looking unto Jeſus the author and finiſher of our faith, who for the joy that was ſet before him, &c. words of near importance with thoſe in the Text, To which of the Saints wilt thou turn thee? Look to Jeſus; when you are in ſufferings, and have a race of patience to run, let your eye alwayes be upon Chriſt, and draw the lines of your carriage, both in your ſpirits and outward actions, according to what you ſee in him. Look to him: And, ver. 3. Conſider him that endured ſuch contradiction diction of ſinners. Which the Apoſtle Peter (1 *Pet.*2.21.) give us in plain termes, For even hereunto were ye called, becauſe Chriſt alſo ſuffered for us, leaving an example that we ſhould follow his ſteps: We muſt follow his ſteps both in the matter and in the manner of our ſufferings: Therefore Chriſt ſaith, Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me, Matth. 11.29. Chriſt calls it his yoke (it is a yoke of affliction, as well as a yoke of inſtruction.) And he calls it his yoke, not only becauſe, he, as a Lord layes it upon the necks of others, but becauſe, he, as a ſervant bore that yoke himſelf; therefore he ſaith, Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; that is, not only take my yoke upon you for the matter, but learn of me for the manner, how to bear that yoke. Beſides theſe grand leading, unerring examples of God and Chriſt, the examples of the Saints are alſo commended to our imitation, both in doing and in ſuffering. Whatſoever things were written (and examples were written) aforetime, were written for our inſtruction. Why hath the Holy Ghoſt ſet ſo many pens a work, to write the lives of the Saints? Why hath he kept a record of them in his own book, but for direction to his people in after-times? The Lord hath not regiſtred any one act of the Saints, but is uſeful for us. The acts of Noah, Abraham, Iſaac, Jacob, Samuel, David, are full of practical Divinity. The ſufferings and troubles of theſe, and many others, are full (if I may ſo ſpeak) of pathetical Divinity. As the Apoſtle James his counſel doth more then intimate (James 5. 10.) Take, my brethren, the Prophets, who have ſpoken in the Name of the Lord, for an example of ſuffering affliction and of patience: Hence thoſe ancient Saints and believers (Heb. 12. 1.) are called a cloud of witneſſes; A cloud, becauſe there is a directive or a leading vertue in them. As there was a cloud that went before the children of Iſrael in the day to lead them, ſo this cloud of witneſſes, leads us up and down the wilderneſs of our ſorrows, and in the dark night of our ſufferings. Turn you to the Saints, to that cloud of witneſſes, eye them, and ſee what becomes you in ſad times. They have ſuffered joyfully the ſpoiling of their goods; ſuffer you likewiſe, if you come into the hands of ſpoilers. They lived by faith in the midſt of a thouſand deaths; live you likewiſe by faith in death, when ever you come into the hand of that King of terrors. And when at any time your own hearts, or the wayes of others are out of courſe, check and chide them for and from thoſe diſorders, by ſending them to the practiſe of the Saints. Look to the Saints: from which of the Saints have you learned to be proud and high minded? From which of the Saints have you learned to be earthly and covetous? From which of the Saints have you learned to ſeek and ſet up your ſelves, or to be impatient under the hand of God? That man hath reaſon to ſuſpect he hath done ill, who doth that, which a good man never did, or ever repented the doing of it.

Obſerve further, When God forſakes a man, all the Saints on earth forſake him too.

Eliphaz looks upon Job, as a man forſaken of God, and then he bids him get help, if he could, among the Saints. He that oppoſes God, ſhall be oppoſed by all who are God's. There is the ſame mind in the ſervants of Chriſt, which is in Chriſt their Maſter. They love where and whom he loves, they hate whom he hates, they are aſhamed of thoſe of whom Chriſt is aſhamed; If God reject a man, the Saints will not undertake or anſwer for him. So much of the firſt Argument, ranking Job with the wicked, becauſe (as Eliphaz thought) he could not find any in the rank of Saints like himſelf.

The ſecond Argument riſes to a like conviction, becauſe (in the ſame mans opinion) he might eaſily ſee himſelf ſo like the wicked.

For wrath killeth the fooliſh man, and envy ſlayeth the ſilly one.

Here are two ſinful paſſions, wrath and envy; and here are two ſorts of ſinful perſons, The fooliſh man, and The ſilly one, producing two ſad effects, (which yet in effect are but one) the one kills, and the other ſlayes, both are deadly and deſtructive; Wrath killeth the fooliſh man, and envy ſlayeth the ſilly one. There are ſeveral ſins and luſts which accompany, as the ſeveral ages and degrees, ſo the ſeveral tempers of men. Raſhneſs and intemperance hurry and inflame young men, ambition blows up riper years, and covetouſneſs often tyrannizeth over old age: Wrath takes hold of fools, and envy ſeizeth the ſilly one. Theſe worms ſtrike the root of ſuch men, and make them wither. As there is a ſpecial worm killing ſpecial trees, and conſuming their fruits; ſo there are ſpecial luſts, which like worms eat out, and deſtroy the life of man; wrath killeth the fooliſh man.

Omne pomū, omne granū, omne frumentum, omne lignū habet vermē ſuum, & alius [illegible] vermis mali, alius pyri, alius Tritici. Auguſt.

The fooliſh men.] He is A fool, who hath not wiſdom to direct himſelf; but The fool, is he, who will not follow the counſel and direction of the wiſe, The word ſignifies, not ſo much a fool, who hath no knowledge; as a fool, who makes no uſe of the knowledge which he hath: ſuch a one is a fooliſh man indeed. Or it notes a man haſty, bold, inconſiderate, ruſhing on, hand over head, without fear or wit: A man, who either is maſter but of little knowledge, or that which he hath (be it little or much) maſters him. It agrees fully in ſence, and is the ſame to a letter in ſound, with our Engliſh word Evil; Such the Prophet (Zech. 11. 15.) deſcribes: Take (ſaith he) the inſtruments of a fooliſh ſhepherd, he doth not mean, the inſtruments of a rude and merely ignorant ſhepherd, a man that hath no knowledge or learning; but of a raſh and imprudent ſhepherd, or of a lazy and idle ſhepherd, who, though he hath knowledge, yet knows not how (or hath no heart) to improve his knowledge for the good of his flock. The Prophet Ezekiel gives us the character of ſuch, Chap. 34. 4. The diſeaſed have ye not ſtrengthened, nor have ye healed that which was ſick, nor bound up that which was broken, &c. But (will ye know what work they made?) with fury and with cruelty have ye ruled them: ye have been moved with fury, not with pitty, and acted by paſſion, not by reaſon, much leſs by grace: So in this place, the fooliſh man, whom envy ſlayes, is not a mere ignorant, one that hath no brains, but one hare-brain'd and uncompos'd. Eliphaz hints at Job ſecretly in this word, whom he knew reported for a man of great knowledge and learning, according to the learning of thoſe times, yet he numbers him with fools; becauſe he conceived him wrathful, raſh, intemperate, not having any true government of himſelf. Anger reſteth in the boſom of fools, Eccleſ. 7. 9. A fool is not able to judge of the nature of things, or times, or occaſions, and therefore he is angry with every thing that hits not his nature or his humour. He will be angry with the Sun, if it ſhine hotter then he would have it; and with the winds, if they blow harder then he would have them; and with the clouds, if they rain longer then ſerves his turn. They that are emptieſt of underſtanding, are fulleſt of will, and uſually ſo full of will, that we call them wil-ful. Hence, unleſs every thing be ready to ſerve their wills, they are ready to dye by the hand or judgment of their paſſions.

אויל Temerarius, audax, imprudens, percitus iræ

Non his ſolū, ſed calamo iraſcimur in ſcribendo, eumque collidimus & frangimus, & pictores penecillo & alcatores teſſeris, & cuicunque inſtrumento quilibet, ex quo difficultatem ſe pati arbitratur. Auguſt. Ira ſtultitiæ comes.

Wrath kills the fooliſh man.] Wrath may be taken here two wayes, either for the wrath of God, or for the wrath of man. In the former ſence, the meaning is, That the wrath of God kills fooliſh men; which is an undoubted truth: but I rather adhere to the latter, which gives the meaning thus, That the wrath of a fooliſh man, kills himſelf; his own wrath is as a knife at his throat, and as a ſword in his own bowels. The word which we tranſlate wrath, ſignifies indignation, anger, teaſtineſs, or touchineſs: Properly wrath is anger inveterate; anger is a ſhort fury, and wrath is a long anger; when man is ſet upon it, when his ſpirit is ſteeped and ſoaked in anger, then it is wrath. Eſau raked up the burning coals of his anger in the aſhes, till his Fathers Funeral; The time of mourning for my Father will ſhortly come, then will I ſlay my brother. But our word rather notes, a fervent heat and diſtemper of ſpirit preſently breaking forth, or an extream vexation fretting and diſquieting us within: As Pſal. 112. 10. The wicked ſhall ſee it, and be grieved; (that is, he ſhall have ſecret indignation in himſelf to ſee matters go ſo.) He ſhall gnaſh with his teeth, and melt away. Gnaſhing of the teeth is cauſen by vexing of the heart: and therefore it follows, he melts away; which notes (melting is from heat) an extream heat within. This ſence is very ſutable to this of Eliphaz, wrath ſlayeth the fooliſh, or wrath makes him melt away; it melts his greaſe with chaſing, as we ſay of a man furiouſly vext: Hence that deplorable condition of the damned, who are caſt out of the preſence of God for ever, is deſcribed by weeping, and wailing, and gnaſhing of teeth; which imports not only pain, but extream vexing at, or in themſelves. Thoſe fools ſhall be ſlain for ever with their own wrath, as well as with the wrath of God.

כע

Wrath killeth, &c.] But how doth wrath kill a fooliſh man? His wrath ſometimes draws his ſword and kills others: but is his wrath as a ſword to kill himſelf? Many like Simeon and Levi, in their anger have ſlain a man; but that the anger of a man ſhould ſlay himſelf, may ſeem ſtrange. The paſſion of wrath is ſuch an engine, as recoyles upon him that uſes or diſcharges it. As the deſire of the ſloathful killeth him, Prov. 21. 25. So, the wrath of a fooliſh man kills him: that place enlightens this; how comes deſire to ſlay the ſlothful? Thus; A man ſlothful in action is full of deſires, and quick in his affections after many good things; he would fain have them, he longs for them: but the man is ſo extream lazy, that he will not ſtir hand or foot to get the things which he deſires; and ſo he pines away with wiſhing and woulding, and dies with grief, becauſe deſire is not ſatisfied. So, in like manner, wrath is ſaid to ſlay a man; firſt, becauſe it thruſts him head-long upon ſuch things as are his death; he runs wilfully upon his own death, ſometimes by the dangerouſneſs of the action, whence caſual ſudden death ſurpriſes him; ſometime by the unlawfulneſs of the action, which brings him to a legal or judiciary death. Secondly, his wrath is ſaid to kill him, becauſe his wrath is ſo vexatious to him, that it makes his life a continual death to him, and at laſt ſo wearieth him out and waſtes his ſpirits, that he dyes for very grief: and ſo at once commits a threefold murder; Firſt, He murders him, intentionally, againſt whom he is wroth: Secondly, He, really, murders his own body: And thirdly, He, meritoriouſly, murders his ſoul for ever, except the Lord be more merciful then he hath been wrathful, and the death of Chriſt heal thoſe wounds, by which he would have procured the death of others, and hath (as much as in him lies) procured his own.

And envy ſlayeth the ſilly one.] Theſe two expreſſions meet near upon a ſence. Envy is the trouble which a man conceives in himſelf, at the good which another receives. This diſeaſe gets in at the eyes and ears, or is occaſioned by ſeeing or hearing of our neighbours bleſſings. In the 1 John 2. All the luſts in the world are reduced to three heads, The luſt of the eyes, the luſt of the fleſh, and the pride of life; Envy is the chiefeſt luſt of the eyes, and it is properly called the luſt of the eye; becauſe a man ſeldom envieth another, untill he ſees ſome good he hath above himſelf. This paſſion is a murderer alſo, it begins at the eyes, but it roots down into the bones.

פתה Suaſus, perſuaſus, deceptus, ſeductus fuit, hinc πείθω ſuadeo, apud Græcos.

Envy ſlayeth the ſilly one.] There is not much difference between the nature of theſe two, the fooliſh man, and the ſilly one; But the Original words by which they are expreſſed, are very different. The root ſignifies to perſwade, to intice or allure: And it is taken ſometime in a good ſence (as in Gen. 9. 27.) where the Holy Ghoſt ſpeaks with admirable elegancy, God will perſwade the perſwaſible, we tranſlate it, God will perſwade Japhet. Japhet had his name from being perſwaded or perſwadable; God ſhall intice or perſwade Japhet: which was a propheſie of the calling of the Gentiles, who are deſcendants from Japhet, as the Jews are from Shem. So, that word is applied to Gods drawing, or alluring men by the ſweet promiſes and winning enticements of the Goſpel. God doth (let it be taken in holy reverence) tole men on by promiſes, and deceive them graciouſly into the Goſpel (Hoſea 2. 14.) I will allure her, and bring her into the wilderneſs. And becauſe by perſwaſions men are often deceived and ſeduced to evil, therefore the word ſignifies alſo to deceive and beguile, as well as to perſwade; and in the paſſive, to be beguiled and deceived; Hence the word in the Text is derived, which we tranſlate a ſimple one, or a man that will eaſily be perſwaded and led by another, a ſequacious or eaſie man, whom you may carry with a mouth full of good words, and fair promiſes, whither you will. Yet, we find this word (Pſal. 116. 6.) uſed in a good ſence, for a man without ſinful guile and craft, a ſimple, honeſt, plain-hearted man, The Lord preſerveth the ſimple. But here, and often elſe where, it is taken in an ill ſence, for a man without ſence and reaſon, without heart and ſpirit; a man that cannot in any competency judge of things, or make out his way, but is merely led, and lives upon the opinion and judgment of another: To ſuch wiſdom cryeth without, and uttereth her voice in the ſtreets; how long ye ſimple ones, will ye love ſimplicity? Prov. 1. 20, 22. This ſilly one envy ſlayeth, He is out of his wits already, and a little matter will put him out of his life: Envy ſlayeth him, that is a ſimple man looking upon the proſperity and bleſſing of God upon his neighbour, will needs afflict himſelf: he looks upon himſelf, as having loſt all, if that man gain: he falls, if his brother ſtands; and can with more eaſe die miſerably, then ſee another live happily. In this ſence it is, That envy kills the ſilly one.

יפת ליפת Japheh le Japheth.

Exiguo animo & abjecto ſpiritu.

Now the reaſon why Eliphaz ſpeaks of theſe two, the fooliſh and the ſimple one, and characters them, as dying by the hand of theſe two luſts, Wrath and Envy; is becauſe he conceived all Jobs troubled and (as he thought) muddy complaints in the third Chapter, aroſe from theſe two impure and filthy ſprings, Wrath and Envy; from proud Wrath, and impotent Envy: he looked upon him, as angry and diſpleaſed, yea, as enraged, becauſe God had dealt ſo ill with him; and he ſuppoſed he ſaw him pale and wan, eaten up and pined with envy, becauſe others were ſo well, becauſe his friends enjoyed health, and lived in proſperity round about him. As if he had ſaid, Thou art wroth at thy own poverty, ſickneſs and ſores; and thou art envious at our plenty, health and eaſe. And may not folly and ſimplicity, challenge that man for Theirs, whoſe ſpirit thus reſents, either his own evils, or his neighbours good?

> Obſerve hence, Firſt, Every wicked man is a fooliſh, a ſilly man. Sin is pure folly.

In the Proverbs all along, wickedneſs is the Interpretation of fooliſhneſs. It is folly to take braſs Counters for gold, and to be pleaſed with Bugles more then with Diamonds. When an heir is impleaded for an Ideot, the Judge commands an apple, or a counter, with a piece of gold, to be ſet before him, to try which he will take; if he takes the apple or the counter, and leaves the gold, he is then caſt for a fool, and unable to mannage his eſtate, for he knows not the value of things, or how to make a true election. Wicked men are thus fooliſh, and more, for when Bugles and Diamonds, Counters and Gold are before them, they leave the Diamonds and the Gold, and pleaſe themſelves with thoſe toyes and bables; when (which is infinitely more ſottiſh) Heaven and Hell, life and death are ſet before them, they chuſe Hell rather then Heaven, and death rather then life; they take the mean, tranſitory, trifling things of the world, before the favour of God, the pardon of ſin, a part in Jeſus Chriſt, and an inheritance among the Saints in light. All the wiſdom of wicked men, is wiſdom in their own conceits. And Solomon aſſures us, that there is more hope of a fool then of ſuch; that is, of thoſe who are ſenſible of their own failings, and are willing (as the Apoſtle directs) to become fools that they may be wiſe, 1 Cor. 3. 18. Opinion in it ſelf is weak, but ſelf-opinion is very ſtrong; even the ſtrongeſt of thoſe ſtrong-holds, and the higheſt of thoſe high Towers, which the ſpiritual war, by thoſe weapons which are mighty through God, is to oppoſe and caſt down: which, till they are caſt down, theſe fools are impregnable, and will not be led captive unto Chriſt.

> Secondly, Obſerve, That, to vex and to be angry at the troubles that fall upon us, or at the hand which ſends them, is a high point of folly and of ignorance.

Wrath and diſcontent ſlay the fooliſh; ſuch are at once twice ſlain, ſlain with the wrath of God, and with their own.

To die thus, is to die like a fool indeed. For firſt, this wrath of man ſprings from his ignorance of God: Man would not be angry at what the Lord doth, if he knew he were the Lord, and may do what himſelf pleaſes, The ground of anger is a ſuppoſition of wrong.

Secondly, This wrath of man ſprings from ignorance of himſelf. He cannot be angry with any croſs, who rightly knows himſelf.

Firſt, to be a creature.

This notion of our ſelves teacheth us that leſſon of humility, to be ſubject to the will of our Creator. The law of our creation calls us to all paſſive obedience, as well as unto active, as much and as quietly to ſuffer, as to do the will of God; but eſpecially, if a man did fully know himſelf to be a ſinful creature, he would not be angry; yea, he would lay a charge upon his mouth, not to utter a word, and a charge upon his heart, not to utter a thought againſt what the Lord doth with him. I will bear the indignation of the Lord, becauſe I have ſinned againſt him, ſaith the Church, Micah 7. 9. As if ſhe had ſaid, the remembrance of my ſin takes away all pleading, much more all quarrelling, in how angry a poſture ſoever the Lord ſets himſelf to afflict me: And therefore my ſpirit is reſolved, that becauſe my fleſh hath ſinned, my fleſh ſhall bear the indignation of the Lord. He that knows what it is to ſin, knows that all ſufferings leſs then hell, are leſs then ſin. If a man were convinced of this, that, what he bears is leſs then his ſin deſerves, he would bear it, with thanks, not with complaints. Yea he would ſay, that, as he hath deſerved all theſe and more then all theſe ſtrokes, ſo he hath need of them. The bundle of folly in his heart, calls for a bundle of rods upon his back, and he ſees want of correction might have been his undoing. Therefore to be angry with affliction, argues a man ignorant of himſelf as a creature, much more as a ſinful creature. Once more, the fooliſhneſs of ſuch wrath appears to the eye of nature and common reaſon, becauſe this wrath brings no eaſe or remedy at all to thoſe wounds, but rather makes them more painful, if not remedileſs. It is an argument of folly to do a thing, whereby we cannot help our ſelves; but it is folly and madneſs to do that which hurts, which makes our wound feſter and our diſeaſe grow deſperate. Did any man ever eaſe himſelf by fretting or raging under the croſs? How many have made their croſs more heavy upon them, by raging at it? A mans own wrath is heavier to him then his croſs. A ſtone is heavy, and ſand weighty, but a fools wrath is heavier then them both, Prov. 27. 3. A fools wrath is very heavy to others, but it is heavieſt to himſelf. The Text is expreſs for it, which may be a third Obſervation.

Iraſcitur, quia omnia ſibi deberi putat.

To be angry and diſcontent at Gods judgments, is more deſtructive then the judgments themſelves.

The wrath and judgments of God afflict only, but your own wrath deſtroyes; wrath ſlayes the fooliſh. Probably God came only to correct you, but wrath kills you. The wrath of man is a paſſion, but it is very active upon man, and eats up the ſpirit which nurſes and brings it forth: Frowardneſs and anger are at once our ſin and our torment. He that is angry when God ſtrikes, ſtrikes himſelf, whereas humble ſubmiſſion to the blow turns it into a kiſs or an embraces and they that ſit down quietly and believingly under any evil, bear it at preſent with more eaſe, and in the end, find it in the inventory of their goods. David, It is good for me that I have been afflicted.

Fourthly, Note, That, to envy another mans good or proſperity, is an argument of the worſt ſimplicity.

Envy ſlayeth the ſilly one.] Envy is a common theam, I will not ſtay upon it; but ſhall only give you two reaſons to demonſtrate the ſilly ſimplicity of an envious perſon.

Firſt, The good of another is not thy hurt; thou haſt not the leſs, becauſe another hath more. Leah's fruitfulneſs was no cauſe of Rachels barrenneſs. Thy portion is not impaired by thy brothers increaſe; thou haſt thy ſhare, and he hath but his; how ſilly a thing then is it to envy him that hath much, when as, his having much is not the cauſe why thou haſt little? Again, this troubling thy ſelf that others have more, will not get thee any more; Envy never brought in earnings or increaſe.

Secondly, A man of wiſdom will make all the good of another his good. Take away envy, and that which is mine, is thine; and if I take away envy, that which is thine is mine. To have a heart to bleſs God for his bleſſings upon another, is it ſelf a great bleſſing, and gives thee likewiſe a part in thoſe bleſſings. Thus we may enjoy all the joys and comforts, the favours and deliverauces, the health and peace, the riches and plenty, the gifts, yea, and the very graces of all thoſe, in whoſe graces and gifts, plenty and riches, peace and health, &c. we can really and cordially rejoyce. Whereas an envious man ever ſtandeth in his own light, and cannot rejoyce in his own mercies, for grieving at his Brothers.

Tolle invidiã, & quod meũ eſt, tuũ eſt; & ſi ego tollam invidiam, quod tuũ eſt meũ eſt.

So far of the ſecond part of the argument, whereby Eliphaz would convince Job of wickedneſs, his likeneſs to the wicked in bearing of, or rather fretting againſt his troubles.

VERS. 3, 4, 5.

I have ſeen the fooliſh taking root, but ſuddenly I curſed his habitation.
His children are far from ſafety, and they are cruſhed in the gate, neither is there any to deliver them.
Whoſe harveſt the hungry eateth up, and taketh it even out of the thornes, and the robber ſwalloweth up their ſubſtance.

TWO parts of the fourth argument were cleared in the two former Verſes. In theſe three Eliphaz argues further, to the ſame effect. His argument is grounded upon his own experience, which had ſhewed many examples of fooliſh men, like Job (as he ſuppoſed) both in his riſing and in his falling, in his good dayes and in his evil. I have ſeen the fooliſh taking root, and ſuddenly I curſed his habitation, &c. The Argument may be thus framed, Fooliſh men flouriſh a while, and then come to certain and ſudden deſtruction; they, and their children, and their eſtates, are all cruſhed and ſwallowed up.

But thou didſt flouriſh a while, and grow up like ſome goodly tree, yet ſudden deſtruction came upon thy children and upon thy eſtate, the robbers have conſumed and ſwallowed all up.

Therefore thou alſo art fooliſh, &c. I have ſeen the fooliſh taking root, but ſuddenly I curſed his habitation: I have ſeen thee taking root, and I obſerve thy habitation curſed; Thy outward condition is ſo parallel with theirs, that I know not how to diſtinguiſh thee, from them, in thy inward and ſpiritual condition.

I have ſeen the fooliſh taking root.

Eliphaz urgeth experience. He urged experience in Chap. 4. verſ. 8. Even as I have ſeen, they that plough iniquity and ſow wickedneſs, reap the ſame, &c. He urgeth experience here again, and this ſuperadded experience ſeems to anſwer an objection which might be made againſt that former experience: For ſome might ſay, many wicked men plow iniquity enough, and ſow wickedneſs abundantly, yet they reap comforts and the contentments of this world; they have what their hearts deſire, a full harveſt of riches, pleaſures and honours.

It is true (ſaith Eliphaz) I grant it, I have obſerved the like alſo, I have ſeen the fooliſh taking root; yea, but I can anſwer quickly and remove this objection: it doth not at all weaken my former aſſertion, grounded upon that experience; for as I have ſeen him take root, ſo, ſuddenly I curſed his habitation, his children are far from ſafety, &c. He flouriſheth, but he withers quickly; he takes root, but he is ſoon pull'd up by the roots.

I have ſeen.] Experience is the miſtreſs of truth. Truth is called the daughter of time, becauſe experience bringeth forth many truths; and the word of God is made viſible in the works of God. I have ſeen, (ſaith he) This truth hath run into my eye. In experiences the promiſes of God ſtand forth, and in experiences the threatnings of God ſtand forth, and ſhew themſelves: all the experiences that we have in the world, are only ſo many exemplifications of the truths contained in the promiſes or threatnings of the word.

The fooliſh.] I ſhall not ſtay to open that term; for we met with it in the former verſe, wrath ſlayeth the fooliſh one. Only in a word, this fooliſh man is one, who acts without counſel, and whoſe will is too hard for his underſtanding. He hath no reaſon for what he doth, but becauſe he hath a mind to do it. A fooliſh man is a wicked man; and here the fooliſh man is a wicked man at eaſe, a wicked man in his fulneſs and abundance of outward comforts: A fool is ever worſt, when he is at eaſe. And as he more abounds in comforts, ſo, he abounds more in ſin. All mercies are to him but fuel to his folly, and meat and drink for his madneſs. That rich man who pleaſed himſelf ſo in his worldly ſucceſſes is call'd a fool, Thou fool, this night ſhall thy ſoul be taken from thee, and then whoſe ſhall all theſe things be which thou poſſeſſeſt ? (Luke 12. 10.) All wicked men are fooliſh, and wicked rich men have ever the greateſt ſtock of folly. And they are therefore more fooliſh then others, becauſe they think themſelves wiſer then all. If a man can get riches, if his root be well ſettled in the earth, and his branches ſpread fairly out, he accounteth himſelf very wiſe, and ſo do many others account him too. A thriving ſinner is a fooliſh and an unproſperous man ; but he that plots how to thrive by ſin, is the moſt fooliſh man in the world, and therefore in all his proſperity moſt unproſperous. As the fooliſh take root, ſo, that by which they take root is oftentimes their folly.

אויל Levẽ hominem notat, qui ſine conſilio agit, vult & facit, nullamq; facti rationem habet, niſi quia ita venit in mẽtem. Cocc.

Taking root.] Wicked men under the outward curſe are compared to trees not taking root, Iſa. 40. 24. He bringeth the Princes to nothing, yea they ſhall not be planted, yea they ſhall not be ſown, yea their ſtock ſhall not take root in the earth. And Pſalm 129. 6. Let them be as graſs upon the houſe (having no earth to take root in) which withereth afore it groweth up, whereof the mower filleth not his hand, nor he that bindeth up the ſheaves his boſom. Wicked men proſpering, are compared to a tree well rooted. I have ſeen the fooliſh taking root ; that is, confirmed and ſetled in their outward proſperity. A root is to the tree as a foundation is to the houſe, the eſtabliſhment of it ; when a tree is well rooted, it takes in the moiſture of the earth freely, then the body or trunk grows big, the branches ſpread forth, the leaves are green, and it abounds with fruit. So that with the well-rooting, we muſt take in all that concerns the flouriſhing of a tree. Hence, other Scriptures expreſs the men of the world by trees, not only ſecretly taking root in the earth, but putting themſelves forth and appearing in their viſible beauty and vertue. (Pſal. 37. 35.) David produceth his experience, I have ſeen the wicked in great power (how ? taking root, yea) ſpreading himſelf like a green bay-tree. They are deſcribed by their boughs, branches and leaves. And in Iſa. 2. 11. The day of the Lord ſhall be upon the Cedars of Lebanon, that are high and lifted up ; not only upon the Cedars of Lebanon that are deeply rooted, but upon the Cedars of Lebanon that are high and lifted up, and upon all the Oakes of Baſon. In Hoſea 14. v. 5. The proſperous eſtate of the Church (under the dew and influence of heavenly bleſſings) is held forth to us under the notion of a tree taking root. I will be as the dew to Iſrael, he ſhall grow as the Lilly, and caſt his roots as Lebanon (that is, as the trees in Lebanon) his branches ſhall ſpread, and his beauty ſhall be as the Olive-tree, and his ſmell as Lebanon.

In the fourth of Daniel, the ſtate, glory, and magnificence of the Kingdoms of this world are ſhadowed by a tree. Nebuchadnezzar in a viſion hath a tree preſented before him, he knew not what to make of it, and thereore calls for the wiſe men to expound the viſion, which he thus relates, ver. 4. I ſaw, and behold a tree in the midſt of the earth, the heighth thereof was great ; and the tree grew, and was ſtrong, and the heigth thereof reached unto heaven, and the ſight thereof to the ends of the earth, and the leaves thereof were fair. When Daniel comes to interpret it, (ver. 22.) he ſayes to the King, Thou art this tree, &c. Nebuchadnezzar in all his worldly pomp, is ſet forth by a goodly tree. In the 53. of Iſa. v. 2. Where the birth of Chriſt is propheſied, it is ſaid, That he ſhall grow up before him, as a tender plant, and as a root out of a dry ground. As a very flouriſhing eſtate, whether in ſpirituals or temporals, is expreſt by a tree planted by the water ſide ; So a mean, low eſtate, is ſignified by a tree in a dry ground. Our Lord Jeſus, in regard of any outward glory, was like a tree in a dry ground, as the words following expound it, He hath no form nor comelineſs ; and when we ſhall ſee him, there is no beauty that we ſhould deſire him. His Kingdom was not like the Kingdom of thoſe great Monarchs, ſtrong, and high, and beautiful with any created luſtre.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, That wicked men may flouriſh in great outward proſperity.

I have ſeen the wicked taking root. The Prophet Jeremiah, in the twelfth of his Propheſie (a Scripture touched before, chap. 4. 7. to this purpoſe) being ſomewhat ſcandalized at the proſperity of treacherous dealers, deſcribes them thus, ver. 2. Thou haſt planted them, yea, they have taken root ; they grow, yea, they bring forth fruit. Here are four degrees : Firſt, They are planted ; there is many a tree planted that takes not root : but (ſaith he) thou haſt planted them, yea, they have taken root. There are ſome trees, which are both planted and have taken root, yet they do not grow ; eſpecially not to any height or greatneſs : though they live, yet they do not thrive. Theſe are planted, and they take root, and they grow ; but there are many trees planted, rooted and growing, which yet are fruitleſs ; theſe have all, they are planted, they take root, they grow, and they bring forth fruit : And who are theſe ? Surely, the worſt of men, as the very next words evidence ; God is near in their mouths, but far from their reins. God is near in the mouth of ſuch, that is, they may ſpeak of him ſometimes, but he is far from their reins ; there is nothing of God in their hearts : and ſurely, they that have nothing of God in their hearts, have nothing of goodneſs in their hearts, or in their lives.

This preſent glory and proſperity of wicked men lifts up the glory of Gods patience. How is the glory of the patience of God exalted, in letting them have eaſe, who are a burden unto himſelf? in letting them proſper, who are (as God can be pained) a pain unto himſelf ; in ſuffering them to flouriſh, who vex his people ? in ſuffering them to laugh, who make his people mourn ?

Further, He gives them leave to take root and flouriſh, (whom he could blaſt and root up every moment) that all may ſee what is in their hearts. If God did not permit them to take root, yea, and ſometime to grow up and flouriſh, we ſhould never ſee what fruit they would bring forth ; we ſhould never ſee thoſe grapes of gall, thoſe bitter cluſters, if theſe vines of Sodom, and fields of Gomorrah, were not water'd with the dew, and warm'd with the Sun of ſome outward proſperity.

Laſtly, The proſperity of wicked men, is a great trial of good men ; The flouriſhing of the ungodly is as ſtrong an exerciſe of their Graces, as their own witherings.

Secondly Obſerve, That, Wicked men may not only flouriſh and grow, but they may flouriſh and grow a great while.

משריש

I ground it upon this ; the Text ſaith that they take root, I have ſeen the fooliſh take root ; and the word notes a deep rooting. In the Parable of the Sower (Mat. 13. 21.) it is ſaid, that the ſeed which fell into ſtonie ground, withered, becauſe it had no root ; noting, that the cauſe of a ſudden decay, or withering in any plant, is the want of rooting ; whereas a Tree well rooted, will endure many a blaſt, and ſtand out a ſtorm. Some wicked men ſtand out many ſtorms, like old Oaks, like trees deeply rooted, they ſtand many a blaſt, yea, many a blow. Spectators are ready to ſay, ſuch and ſuch ſtorms will certainly overthrow them, and yet ſtill they ſtand ; but though they ſtand ſo long, that all wonder, yet they ſhall fall, that many may rejoyce, and take up this proverb againſt them (as of old againſt the King of Babylon) How hath the oppreſſor ceaſed? The Lord hath broken the ſtaff of the wicked, and the ſcepter of the Rulers : He who ſmote the people in wrath, with a continued ſtroke, he that ruled in the Nation with anger, is perſecuted, and none hindreth. Therefore many ſhall break forth into ſinging, yea, the fir-trees ſhall rejoyce at him, and the Cedars of Lebanon, ſaying , ſince thou art laid down, no feller is come up amongſt us, Iſa. 14.

Thirdly, Obſerve, Outward good things are not good in themſelves.

The fooliſh take root. The worſt of men may enjoy the beſt of outward comforts. Outward things are unto us, as we are. If the man be good, then they are good. And though the Preacher tells us, Eccleſ. 9. That all things come alike unto all, yet all things are not alike unto all. There is a great difference between the flouriſhing of a wiſe man, and the flouriſhing of a fool ; all his flouriſhing and faſtning in the earth, is no good to him, becauſe himſelf is not good. Spiritual good things are ſo good, that though they find us not good, yet they will make us good; we cannot have them indeed, and be unlike them: But worldly good things find ſome really good, and make them worſe; others who had but a ſhew of goodneſs, they are occaſions of making ſtark naught: Rooting in the earth never helpt any to grow heaven-wards. Many deeply rooted in the earth, have grown down, and gone down to the depths of Hell.

Fourthly, obſerve, as a conſequence from the former;

> That, The enjoyment of outward good things, is no evidence, can be made no argument that a man is good.

I have ſeen the fooliſh taking root. And yet how many ſtick upon this evidence, bleſſing themſelves, becauſe they are outwardly bleſſed? Yea, though they meet with a diſcovery of their ſins, and ſinful boſomes, in the word, though they find thoſe ſins threatned, yea curſed with a grievous curſe in the word, yet they bleſs themſelves, and ſay, we are rich and flouriſh, we have a good eſtate and credit, we take root and ſtand; but they forget that all this may be the portion of a fool. I have ſeen the fooliſh taking root.

And ſuddenly I curſed his habitation.

ואקוב deducitur vel à נקב vel à קבב ſedit, perfodit, terebravit, & per metaphoram, maledixit, execratus eſt, eſt metaphora tranſlata ab his qui gladio aut pugione aliquem transverberant, tanquam ſi aliquis Dei aut hominis maledictione trajiceretur, Cartw. in Prov. 11. 26.

The word here uſed, to curſe, ſprings indifferently from two roots, which yet meet, and are one in ſignification; namely, to ſtrike through or pierce, as a man that is ſtruck through with a ſtaff, or ſword, or ſtabb'd with a dagger; thus, Hab. 3. 14. Thou didſt ſtrike through with his ſtaves the head of the villages. And, Iſa. 36. 6. The piercing of a reed into the hand of him that leans upon it, is expreſt by this word. So then it carries a metaphorical alluſion to the effect of a curſe; the curſe of God alwayes, and the curſe of man upon due grounds, is as a ſword or a dagger, piercing a man through and through; through both ſoul and body. I have curſed his habitation, that is, I have ſmitten his habitation quite through with a curſe.

I curſed his habitation.] Some read, I abhorred, or I abominated his habitation. I was ſo far from envying this flouriſhing, ſpreading tree, or from being in love with his goodly ſeat and brave habitation, that I loathed, and could not abide it. The cottage of an honeſt man was more delightful to me, then the tents or palaces of wickedneſs.

Pium non decent dira.

But the word bears rather to curſe; which is firſt to wiſh evil unto another: And ſecondly, to foretel, to pronounce, or denounce evil againſt another. Often in the Pſalms, David's curſes upon his enemies, are predictions from the ſpirit of God, not maledictions or ill wiſhes from his own ſpirit; good men know not how to wiſh evill; their curſings are propheſies, not prayers; they foretel or foreſee evils, but they deſire them not. I have not deſired the woful day, Lord, thou knoweſt, ſaid that Prophet, who had denounced many woful dayes, Jer. 17. 16.

Id fieri ab aliquo dicitur in Scriptura quod faciendum denunciatur.

In Scripture, many are ſaid to do that which they declare to be, or foretel that it ſhall be; as (to give an inſtance or two) Lev. 13. in the caſe of the Leper, the Text ſaith, that when the Prieſt makes up his judgment concerning the Leper (having found the tokens of Leproſie upon him) he ſhall defile him (v. 3, & 8.) or make him unclean; ſo the Original gives it; which we tranſlate, The Prieſt ſhall pronounce him unclean. In that ſenſe, the Miniſters of the Goſpel (whoſe buſineſs it is to cleanſe) defile many; yea, one way to cleanſe men, is thus to defile, and pronounce them Lepers. So Iſa. 6. 8. The Lord ſends the Prophet againſt the people, and ſaith to him, Make the heart of this people fat, and make their ears heavy, and ſhut their eyes: Now, the Prophet did not act this himſelf, he did not deafen their ears, or blind their eyes; but only fore-told or denounced that this judgment ſhould fall upon them: becauſe they had ſo long ſtopped their ears, at laſt their ears ſhould be ſtopt and made heavy enough: and becauſe they had ſo long winked and ſhut their eyes, at laſt they ſhould be blind, and their eyes ſhut faſt enough: How faſt are thoſe eyes and ears lockt up, which are thus double lockt? Once more, Jer. 1. 10. The Lord gives the Prophet a ſtrange commiſſion, See (ſaith he) I have this day ſet thee over the Nations and over Kingdoms, to root out, and to pull down, and to deſtroy, and to throw down, and to build, and to plant. One would think this commiſſion, more fitting for a Cæſar or an Alexander, for great Commanders attended with numerous Armies, then for an unarmed Prophet; what could he do? could he root out Kingdoms, and deſtroy Nations? Yes, by denouncing the deſtroying judgments, and conſuming wrath of God, due unto them for their rebellions and provocations: Thus a poor weak Prophet can overturn a whole Kingdom, and root up the ſtrongeſt Nations. And the truth is, that, never was any Nation or Kingdom rooted up by the ſword, but it was firſt rooted up by the word; firſt, God hewed them to pieces, and ſlew them by his Prophets, and then let in Armies of cruel enemies to do it.

Prædic excæcandos oculos, & aures aggravandas.

Non per invidiam & iram dira imprecarer, ſed animus præſagiret, male ipſi fore. Cocc.

So here in the Text, I have ſeen the fooliſh taking root, but ſuddenly I curſed his habitation; The clear meaning is, I foretold a curſe, I knew what would ſhortly become of his habitation. It was not anger againſt his perſon, or envy at his eſtate, that moved me to curſe him; but it was an eye of faith which ſhewed me him markt with a curſe in the juſt threatnings of God: I ſaw a curſe hanging over his family and dwelling, over his riches and honours: And though he then flouriſhed, that, yet he ſhould quickly wither and be deſtroyed root and branch. The curſe of the Lord is in the houſe of the wicked, Prov. 3. 33. Man doth but ſee it there, the Lord ſent it there.

נוה

The word is conſiderable which we tranſlate Habitation; It ſignifies a quiet, a ſetled, a peaceable, a beautiful habitation: And ſo carries an aggravation of the judgment upon the fooliſh man; his judgment is worſe upon him, becauſe he thought himſelf ſo well, ſo well ſeated, ſo well ſetled, ſo ſecured and accommodated, that he ſhould never be removed: They are moſt troubled with removings, who thought themſelves ſetled; troubles afflict them deepeſt, who ſuppoſed themſelves beyond trouble. When David thought God had made his mountain ſo ſtrong that it could not be moved, how was he troubled, as ſoon as God hid his face? Pſal. 30. 6, 7. And if they are ſo troubled with ſhakings, who look upon their eſtates as ſettled by the favour of God, how will they be troubled to meet with totterings and ſhakings, much more with ruinings and deſtructions, whoſe eſtates at beſt, are bottomed only upon their pollicies, often, upon their ſins?

> Obſerve hence, Firſt, the eſtate of ſome wicked men, is out of the prayers of Gods people.

When they go by their dwellings, they cannot ſay, The bleſſing of the Lord be upon you, we bleſs you in the name of the Lord, Pſal. 126. 8. It is a great mercy to ſtand under the influences of prayer, and for a man to have his eſtate, land, dwellings, watered with ſhowers of bleſſings and hearty good wiſhes from the mouthes of Saints. Their bleſſings or their curſings, are next to the bleſſings and curſins of Chriſt, nay, they are his: It is an argument that Chriſt hath bleſſed or curſed a man, when the ſpirits of his people generally are carried to either. It is one of the ſaddeſt preſages in the world, for a man to be caſt out of the prayers of the Saints, or to be caſt by their prayers; that is, when their prayers are againſt him, and he preſented naked to the diſpleaſure of Chriſt: It ſhewes that the ſin of a man is a ſin unto death, when the faithful ceaſe praying for him, 1 Joh. 5. 16. What can it prognoſticate then, but approaching ruine and deſtruction, when they bend the ſtrength of prayer againſt him? There was never any habitation of wickedneſs, ſo firmly founded or ſtrongly fortified, but that Great and Holy Ordinance hath or may ſhake, and batter it to the duſt. The fair Towers and Walls of Babylon, the ſeat and ſtate of Antichriſt, have long been under this curſe: All the Saints, whoſe eyes God hath unſcaled and brought out from Egyptian darkneſs, have ſeen That fooliſh man taking root, and have curſed his habitation.

> Obſerve, Secondly, A wicked man in proſperity is under the curſe of God.

He is often under the curſe of man, but ever under the curſe of God. Eſau have I hated (ſaith God, Rom. 9. 13.) yet even at that time the fatneſs of the earth was his dwelling, and of the dew of Heaven from above, Gen. 27. 39. While the meat was in the mouths of the murmuring Iſraelites, the wrath of God was upon them. They did at once eat their luſt and their death, wrath was mingled with their meat; and while he gave them their requeſt, he ſent leanneſs into their ſouls, (Pſalm 106. 15.)

15.) This is the moſt dreadful curſe of all, To have a fat eſtate, a well fed body, with a lean ſtarven ſoul.

Thirdly, Obſerve, A vaſt difference between godly and wicked men, between the fooliſh and the wiſe.

When a godly man withers in his outward eſtate, and is pluckt up by the roots, yet God loves him; when a godly man is poor, God loves him; when he is ſick, God loves him; when he is in priſon, God loves him; when he is in diſgrace, God loves him; and when the world hates him moſt, then God uſually ſhews, that he loves him moſt: The world cannot caſt a godly man into any condition, but he meets with the love of God in it: his eſtate may vary and vary, change and change a thouſand times, but the love of God towards him is unchangeable. On the other ſide, we ſee in the Text, when a wicked man takes root, and the branches of his outward eſtate bear fruit abundantly, God curſeth him; when he is at eaſe, God is angry with him. That place is very obſervable (Zech. 1. 15.) I am very ſore diſpleaſed with the Heathen, that are at eaſe; the Heathen were at eaſe, yet God was extremely diſpleaſed with them. When a wicked man is in health, God curſeth him; when he is rich, God curſeth him; when all men honour, admire and flatter him, God abhorreth, hates and deteſts him; he can be in no condition, but he is ſure to meet with the curſe of God. As a fooliſh man, a wicked man, gives God many things, but he never gives God his love, or his affection: A wicked man may give God prayers, but he doth not give him his love; he may give him praiſes, but he never gives him any love; he may give God his purſe, but he gives not his love or his heart; whether ſuch a fool praiſeth God, or prayeth to God, or giveth unto God, he hateth God. So likewiſe, whatſoever God gives to a wicked man, he hates him; whatſoever he beſtows on him, he curſeth him: This ſhould awake men rooted in the earth, to conſider whether they are under the influences of Gods eternal love, as well as under the influence of temporal bleſſings. This is the ground of Davids concluſion, Pſalm 37. 16. A little that the righteous hath, is better then the riches of many wicked: the reaſon is this, becauſe many ungodly ones, ſwimming in a full Sea of riches, have not ſo much as one drop of the love of God, nor one beam or ray of the light of his countenance ſhining upon them; but a godly man, if he have but a ſmall eſtate, he hath much love mixed with it; if he have but a little purſe, he hath a large portion of the favour of God in it, and this makes it ſo out-worth and out-value a wicked mans eſtate, this puts the price and ſtamps an excellency upon his little. The love of God doth ſo far exceed the fatneſs of the earth, in the eſteem of Saints, that they in rating their eſtates, reckon not upon earthly things at all, they ſee nothing to value themſelves by, but their intereſts in the love of God. As when God gives his people their portion, he looks upon outward things, as mere additionals, or as an overplus given in by way of vantage. All other things ſhall be added (Matth. 6. 33.) When a man caſts in a handful of wheat after the buſhel is full, or gives a fingers breadth after the due meaſure of the cloth; ſo it is in the caſe of all temporals beſtowed upon the Saints.

Then fourthly Note, Outward good things, are no argument of the favour of God.

As we ſhewed before, that, they are no evidences of the goodneſs of a perſon, ſo neither are they any evidences of the grace and favour of God unto a perſon. A man cannot find an evidence of Gods love in his purſe, in his land, in his honour, in his credit: Yea, a man may flouriſh in better things then theſe I ſpeak of, and yet have no evidences of Gods love to him; a man may flouriſh in knowledge, be deeply rooted in learning, may have extraordinary branches of parts, and wonderful fruits of gifts; yet notwithſtanding all this while, his habitation and his perſon too under a curſe. And therefore, be ſure that you look for your evidences of the love of God in the right box, do not look for evidences of the love of God in your cheſts, or in your purſes; but look into your hearts, and ſee what Chriſt hath done there; look into your lives, and ſee what light ſhines there from the Spirit of Chriſt: Look whether grace flows from the Spirit of Chriſt, and is rooted in your ſpirits. If grace be rooted in thee there, if it ſpring up and bring forth fruit in thy life, this is an evidence indeed. They that are thus rooted, God never curſeth: Grace and holineſs were never under any curſe.

Obſerve one thing further, As theſe words hold forth the judgment or opinion of a godly man, concerning the wicked in proſperity. I have ſeen the fooliſh taking root, and preſently I curſed his habitation.

A godly man ſees the wicked of the world to be miſerable in their beſt and moſt flouriſhing condition.

When thouſands ſtand about the great ones of the earth, admiring, applauding, making little gods of them, envying their happineſs, and thinking none happy but they, or ſuch as they are; then a godly man pitties them, mourns over them, ſees them, and all ſuch as they are, miſerable: He looks through all their outward glory and beauty, riches and honours, and ſees them curſt through all, hated of God through all: He ſees nakedneſs through their cloathing, emptineſs and want through all their plenty and abundance: neither is this unhappineſs confined to their own perſons, but derived to all, to whom they derive life, or ſtand related. So it follows,

His Children are far from ſafety, and they are cruſhed in the gate, neither is there any to deliver them, &c.

Theſe words contain a further effect of this curſe. I curſed his habitation? and what then? was it an ineffectual curſe? was it but wind and words, returning and doing nothing? or did it ſpend all its ſtrength upon this fooliſh man, in his own perſon? No, His children are far from ſafety, they are cruſhed in the gate, &c. One of the Rabbins conceives that theſe words and the verſe following, are the form wherein the curſe was pronounced upon the habitation of the fooliſh man; as if Eliphaz had ſaid, I curſed his habitation, thus, Let his Children be far from ſafety, and let them be cruſhed in the gate, neither let there be any to deliver; as for his harveſt, let the hungry eat it up, and let the robbers ſwallow up their ſubſtance. And we find ſuch a form, Pſa. 109. David pronounces the curſe upon thoſe wicked enemies, in language very ſutable to this (verſ. 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11.) Set thou a wicked man over him, and let Satan (an adverſary) ſtand at his right hand. When he ſhall be judged, let him be condemned: and let his prayer become ſin. Let his Children be fatherleſs, and his Wife a widow; let his Children be continually vagabonds and beg, let them ſeek their bread alſo out of deſolate places, let the extortioner catch all that he hath; and let the ſtranger ſpoyle his labour.

Secundum genus calamitatis quod Deus improbis immittit, poſteritatis exitium deploratum, & quidem acclamante publico conſenſu.

Rabbi Solomon, formam maledictionis eſſe vult.

But we may rather take it, as the matter, then as the form of a curſe. I curſed his habitation, and the curſe brake forth upon his Children, and upon his eſtate, upon the branches, and the fruit of that goodly tree: much like that in the viſion, Dan. 4. 13, 14. I ſaw in the viſions of my head upon my bed, and behold a watcher, and a holy One came down from Heaven. He cried aloud and ſaid thus; Hew down the tree, and cut off his branches, ſhake off his leaves, and ſcatter his fruit, &c. This Allegory may be rendred in the plain words of Eliphaz, I curſed his habitation, his Children are far from ſafety. The Maſter of the Family is the tree, his Children are either fruit or branches, his leaves are riches and honour, the beauty and pleaſantneſs of his habitation.

Some things in the letter of the Text are to be opened, but I ſhall firſt obſerve one thing in the general, from the connection of this fourth verſe with the third, I ſuddenly curſed his habitation (verſe 3.) Then follows, his children are far from ſafety.

Obſerve from it, That, Creatures cannot ſtand before the curſe of God.

How ſtrongly ſoever they are rooted, the blaſt of the breath of Gods diſpleaſure, will either blow them down, or wither them ſtanding. The curſe comes powerfully, ſuddenly and ſecretly, it is often an inviſible ſtroak. When we ſee neither ax nor ſpade at the root, nor ſtorm at the top, yet down it comes, or ſtands without leaf or fruit. When Chriſt in the Goſpel curſt the fruitleſs fig-tree, his Diſciples paſſing by that way, wondred ſaying, how quickly is this fig-tree withered! it was but onely a word from Chriſt, Never bear fruit more, and the fig-tree which had no fruit, loſt its life. Some are ſuch tall Cedars, ſuch mighty Oaks, that men conclude there is no ſtirring of them, no Ax can fell them, or blaſt looſen them; yet a word from the Lord will turn them upſide down: or if he do but ſay to them, _never*fruit grow_ upon your actions, or out of your counſels, preſently they wither. The curſe cauſeleſs ſhall not come; but when there is a cauſe, and God ſpeaks the word, the curſe will come: Neither power nor policies, neither threatnings nor entreaties can hinder or block it up. It is ſaid of the water of jealouſie in the book of Numbers, that when the woman drank that water, if there were cauſe of her husbands ſuſpition, preſently her belly ſwell'd, and her thighs did rot, the effect was inevitable. So, if God bid judgment take hold of a man, family or Nation, it will obey. A word made the world, and a word is able to deſtroy it. There is no armour of proof againſt the ſhot or ſtroak of a curſe.

Suddenly I curſed his habitation, and the next news is, His Children are far from ſafety. If God ſpeak the word, it is done as ſoon as ſpoken; as that myſterious Letter ſaid of the Gunpowder plot, As ſoon as the paper is burnt, the thing is done. Surely God can cauſe his judgments to paſs upon his implacable enemies, ſuch horrid conſpirators againſt Churches and Common-wealths, truth and peace, with as much ſpeed, as a paper burns; with a blaze and a blaſt they are conſumed. That, in the general from the connexion of theſe two verſes: As ſoon as he was curſed, his Children and his eſtate, all that he had went to Wrack, and ruine. I ſhall now open the words diſtinctly.

His Children are far from ſafety.] Some read, Were far from ſafety, (and ſo the whole paſſage in the time paſt) becauſe he ſpeaks of a particular example, which he himſelf had obſerved in thoſe dayes, as is clear, v. 2.

Having ſhewed the curſe upon the root, he now ſhewes the withering of the branches.

Some of the Rabbins underſtand, by Children, the Followers or Imitators of wicked men, ſuch as aſſiſted them, or ſuch as were like them; theſe are moral children. But take it rather in the letter, for natural children, ſuch as were born to them, or adopted by them, theſe come under their Fathers unhappineſs: They are far from ſafety.

The Hebrew word is commonly rendred, ſalvation. His Children are far from ſalvation. But then we muſt underſtand it for temporal ſalvation, which our tranſlation expreſſes clearly by ſafety. His children are far from ſafety. It is poſſible that the children of a wicked man, may be near unto eternal ſalvation; Though godly Parents have a promiſe for their ſeed, yet grace doth not run in a blood, neither is the love of God tied or entail'd upon any lineage of men. Election ſometimes croſſes the line, and ſteps into the family of a reprobate Father. Therefore, it is not ſaid, His Children are far from ſalvation, in a ſtrict, but in a large ſence. We find the word ſalvation, frequently uſed for ſafety (2 Kings 13. 17.) when Eliſha bad Joaſh the King of Iſrael ſhoot the arrow, he called it the arrow of the Lords Salvation, which we render, the arrow of the Lords deliverance. So Moſes beſpeaks the trembling Iſraelites at the Red Sea, Stand ſtill, and behold the ſalvation of the Lord; that is, behold what ſafety the Lord will give you from all theſe dangers, what deliverance from the hand of Pharaoh. The Prophet repreſents the Jews thus bemoaning their outward judgments*; We roar all like Bears, and mourn ſore like Doves; we look for judgment, but there is none, for ſalvation, but it is far off, Iſa. 59. 11.

They are far from ſafety.] To be far from ſafety, is a phraſe importing extream danger; As when a man is ſaid to be far from light, he is in extream darkneſs; and when a man is ſaid to be far from health, he is in extream ſickneſs; and when a man is ſaid to be far from riches, he is in extream poverty: So here, His Children are far from ſafety; that is, they are in extream danger and peril, they walk (as it were) in the regions of trouble, in the valley of the ſhadow of death continually. That phraſe is uſed alſo, reſpecting the ſpiritual eſtate of unbelievers, They are far off from God, far off from the Covenant, Iſa 57. 19. Epheſ. 12. 13. that is, they have no benefit by the covenant, no intereſt in, no favour at all or mercy from the Lord. To be far off from mercy is to be near wrath, and to be far from ſafety is to dwell upon the borders of danger.

And they are cruſhed in the gate.] In Chap. 4. Eliphaz deſcribes man, as cruſhed before the Moth, to ſhew how ſuddenly, how eaſily man is deſtroyed. This mans Children are cruſhed in the gate, as a man would cruſh a flie or a moth between his fingers.

They are cruſhed in the gate.] That notes two things.

Firſt, The publickneſs of their deſtruction, they ſhall be deſtroyed in the ſight of all men; for the gate was a publick place (Prov. 31. 31.) Her works praiſe her in the gates; that is, ſhe is publickly known by her good works. To do a thing in the gate is oppoſed to the doing of a thing ſecretly. To ſuffer in the gate is to ſuffer publickly.

Secondly, To be cruſhed in the gate, is to be cruſhed or caſt in judgment; for The gate was the place of old, where juſtice was adminiſtred and judgment given; and for a man to be cruſhed in the gate, is as much as for a man to be overthrown in his ſute, when he hath any controverſie or tryal before a Judge, whether for his eſtate or for his life. So this phraſe, They are cruſhed in the gate, implies that all buſineſs ſhall go againſt them; if they have any controverſie in law, or if they be charged with any crime, they ſhall certainly be condemned.

In portis judicia exercebantur; Merc.

I need not ſtay to prove that judgment was given in the gate; only take a few Texts. Firſt, In this book (Chap. 29. 7.) Job deſcribes his own proſperity thus, When I went out to the gate, that is, to ſit in judgment; And Chap. 31. v. 21. the word is uſed in the like ſenſe; So Gen. 23. 17. Chap. 34. 20. Ruth 4. 1. Iſa. 29. 11. Thoſe words of the curſe, Pſalm 109. 7. When he is judged, let him be condemned, are the full Expoſition of this, They are cruſhed in the gate.

And the reaſon given by one of the Ancients, why juſtice was uſually adminiſtred in the gate, is the accommodation and convenience both of ſtrangers and Citizens: For ſtrangers, who lived far off in the Countrey, that they might have juſtice, before they entred into the City, whoſe pomp and throngs of people might poſſibly occaſion either ſome terror or diverſion in the minds of poor Countrey men. And then likewiſe, that the Inhabitants of the City, might not be either charged or tired with long journies into the Countrey; to which we may add, that judgment was therefore adminiſtred in the gate, becauſe gates are places through which all paſs in and out, and therefore the declaring of judgment there, was the making of it more publick, that all might take notice of what paſſed, in ſuch and ſuch caſes, as the ſentence and reſolution of the Judges.

Ne agricola litis cauſa veniens, civitatis frequentia & nova terreretur conſpectu; nec urbis habitator, longè ab urbe properaret & ſubvectionē quæreret jumentorum. Jeron. in Amos c. 5. v. 10.

Neither is there any to deliver them.

This is the third degree of evil falling upon the fooliſh mans Children. Though a man be brought to and caſt in judgment, yet he may have a friend to help and deliver him; but theſe ſhall have no help, none to ſpeak a good word for them, none to mediate either for reprieve or pardon. Some give the ſence thus, His Children ſhall neither find a judge to give a favourable ſentence, nor an Advocate to plead for them, and make the beſt of their cauſe. This alſo anſwers another part of another curſe, Pſal. 109. 12. Let there be none to extend mercy to him, neither let there be any to favour his fatherleſs Children; None ſhall be found either able or willing to reſcue or pluck them out of the hand of danger.

In ſummis malis neminem habebūt aſſertorem. Ut injuſti confundebuntur & contundebuntur in judicio publicè coram tribunalibus

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, That, a wicked man and his Children are often wrapt up in the ſame deſtruction.

I curſed his habitation, and his Children are far from ſafety, they are cruſhed in the gate. A godly man is a defence for his Children; it is a great bleſſing to be born of holy parents, and it is a curſe to be born of oppreſſing wicked parents. As the bleſſing of God deſcends from the Father, upon the Children; ſo, the curſe of God many times deſcends from the Father, upon the Children, and they inherit their judgments, as well as their Lands. Though the juſtice and goodneſs of God, will make that Proverb ceaſe in all the families of the world for ever, which was once taken up by the Jewes, Ezek. 18. 2. The Fathers have eaten ſowre grapes, and the Childrens teeth are ſet on edge. The Naturaliſts obſerve, and experience teacheth, that when a man eats very ſowre grapes (and ſo makes a ſowre face) another ſtanding by is affected with a ſympathy,

Liberi parentum pœnis ſæpe implicantur.

and

Ὀδυναλγία dicitur à Philoſophis. Ariſtot. §. 5.prop.queſt. 7.

and his teeth are ſet on edge or pained with the very ſight or grating of anothers teeth, though himſelf taſte not the grape. The preſent Jews thought themſelves but bare lookers on upon their Fathers ſin, and yet they ſuffered. But the Lord found the ſowre grapes in their mouths alſo, or them riſen up in their Fathers ſtead, an encreaſe of ſinful men to fill up the fierce wrath of the Lord againſt them. Now (I ſay) though the Lord will make that proverb ceaſe, in their ſence: For no child is puniſhed merely in contemplation of his Fathers ſin. Yet when a ſon is wicked, the wickedneſs of a father, whether immediate or further off, may come in remembrance againſt him, and at once aggravate his ſin, and encreaſe his ſorrow.

Secondly, Note, Whom God will deſtroy, no creature ſhall be found able to deliver out of his hands.

God can take away the help, and ſtop up the pitty of all creatures, None ſhall deliver them. And though themſelves ſhould endeavour to eſcape, they ſhall not eſcape, (Amos 9. 1.) They that fly ſhall not fly away, and they that eſcape ſhall not be delivered; that is, by endeavouring to eſcape, they ſhall not be delivered, they ſhall attempt it in vain. If God will not deliver, none can. If a Lot be taken priſoner, He bids Abraham arm and reſcue him. If a Paul be in the mouth of a Lion, the Lord will deliver him. It needs not trouble us, who is our enemy, if God will be our deliverer: nor can it avail what friends ſo ever we have, if God ſaith, ye ſhall not be delivered. A wicked man (when the Lord appears againſt him) either hath none to deliver him, or none ſhall. Salvation is far from the wicked, for they keep not thy ſtatutes, Pſal. 119. 155.

From the Children, judgment proceeds to the eſtate of this wicked man.

Verſe 5. Whoſe harveſt the hungry eateth up, and fetcheth it even out of the thornes, and the robber ſpoileth all his ſubſtance.

Meſſis nomine parata bona omnia intelliguntur condenda & reponenda in annos plurimos.

Whoſe harveſt the hungry eateth up.] By his Harveſt, we are to underſtand not only the return of that which he hath ſown, as corn and other fruits of the earth; but all the goods or proviſions, which he hath gathered or laid up for his ſupport and accommodation. A mans harveſt is the improvement of his whole eſtate. And this mans harveſt is all he hath gotten, by right or wrong; by induſtry or by injury; by ſweat or by deceit; by ſecret practiſes or open violences. To eat up a harveſt, is as much as to devour a houſe, with which Chriſt charges the hungry Scribes and Phariſees (Matth. 23. 14.) who made Beggars as faſt as they made prayers; Ye devour widdows houſes and under pretence make long prayers.

The greatneſs of his affliction is ſet forth by the loſs of thoſe things, which coſt much pains to get. A harveſt is not had with idleneſs: The earth muſt be broken, plowed and ſowed, before we reap. The Law of Nations (I am ſure of this Nation) is very tender in this point, providing, that they who till and ſow the Land, ſhall alſo enjoy the crop. But this wicked man ſhall not reap what he ſowed: The labour ſhall be his, and the benefit another mans. The hungry ſhall come and eat up his harveſt.

Whence Obſerve in general, It is a great evil when we cannot enjoy the thing we labour for.

Impius hæc tam culta novalia miles habebit? Barbarus has ſegetes? en queis conſevimus agros? Virg. Egl. 1.

What greater diſappointment to the husband-man, then to deprive him of his harveſt? Poets have ſung this in mournful verſe. And we find this threatned in the law, as the very ſting of thoſe evils, which ſhould come upon a diſobedient people, Deut. 28. 33. The fruit of thy land and all thy labours, ſhall a Nation which thou knoweſt not, eat up: All thy labours, that is, The fruits for which thou haſt laboured, ſhall be eaten up by ſtrangers. And (Levit. 26. 16.) Ye ſhall ſow your ſeed in vain, for your Enemies ſhall eat it. The ſloathful man roaſteth not that which he took in hunting, ſo we tranſlate, Prov. 12. 26. But it ſeems not ſo proper to the ſence of this proverb: A ſloathful man is not uſually a hunter, That ſport requires an active ſpirit. And uſually men that are ſlow at work, are quick at meat, and will not loſe their Veniſon for the roaſting. Therefore more properly (I conceive with others) to the original, and fully to the point in hand, it may be tranſlated thus, Deceit or the deceitful man ſhall not roaſt his hunting, or that which he hath taken in hunting: That is, he ſhall not take pleaſure in that, which he hath got by extream pains (as all hunters do) or by craft and ſtealth, as ſome hunters do. Somewhat comes between his mouth and his morſel, his cup and lip; either he cannot get his meat to the table, or he riſes hungry from it. Therefore Solomon puts a great bleſſing in this, when a man enjoyeth his labour, Eccleſ. 2. 10. My heart rejoyced in all my labour, and this was my portion of all my labour; namely, the fruit and benefit which God gave me by my labour; I enjoyed it, and this was my portion. Again, (Eccleſ. 3. 13.) And alſo that every man ſhould eat and drink and enjoy the good of all his labour, it is the gift of God: He puts the Emphaſis upon this, when a man hath taken pains to lay in proviſions for a comfortable ſubſiſtence, that then he may ſit down quietly and enjoy it, It is the gift of God. Therefore on the other hand, not to eat and drink, and enjoy the good of our labours, but to have all violently ſnatcht from our mouths, It is the judgment of God. This judgement the Prophet alſo threatens (Iſa. 1. 6.) Your land ſtrangers ſhall devour it, in your preſence; when you are looking on, ſtrangers ſhall devour it. Thou prepareſt a Table before me in the preſence of my enemies, ſaid David, Pſal. 23. 5. As it is one of the greateſt outward mercies, to eat at a Table, prepared in the preſence of an enemy; ſo, it is one of the greateſt afflictions, to have an enemy eat up what is prepared for our Table, in our preſence, (Mic. 6. 15.) Thou ſhalt ſow, but thou ſhalt not reap; thou ſhalt tread the Olives, but thou ſhalt not annoint thee with oyl; and ſweet wine, but ſhalt not drink wine. Obſerve how he puts in their labour to aggravate their ſorrow. If they had not ſown, it had not been ſo troubleſom not to reap; if they had not trod the Olives, it had not been ſo grievous to have had no oyle; but this was their calamity, they ſowed, but reaped not; they trod the Olives, but had no oyle to annoint themſelves. The miſery of that rich man (Luke 12.) is thus deſcribed, when he had made larger barns, and got in his harveſt; when he had made proviſion for many years, then the queſtion is, Whoſe ſhall all theſe things be that thou haſt provided? The rich man was not unprovided of an anſwer to the Query long before: Whoſe ſhall they be? My own I warrant you: I am not ſuch a fool to take pains for others. Little did he think his grave was a making while he was making his barns: Or, that all his providence and care ſhould redound to ſtrangers. How will it cut the heart to ſee all thoſe things taken away, in and about which, a man hath laid out his whole ſtrength, and laid up his whole heart? This Job imprecates as the extremity of all outward evils, in caſe he were an hypocrite, and dealt falſly with God (Chap. 31. 8.) If any blot hath cleaved to my hands; that is, if this blot of inſincerity (Job did not think himſelf to be without all blot of ſin, but, if ſuch a blot as I am charged with) cleave to my hands, then let me ſow, and let another eat. This judgment which Eliphaz hints at in another perſon, as already fallen on Job for his hypocriſie; Job, in his own perſon calls for, if he were an hypocrite. Let me ſow, and let another eat, yea let my off-ſpring be rooted out.

Non aduret fraudulentia (ſive vir doloſus) venationem ſuam. Aries Mont. Pag.

The hungry.] There is ſome difference in opinion, who are to be underſtood by the hungry. Some take this hungry one for the Devil; he is a hungry one indeed: but his hunger is not after our riches, but after our ſouls; 'tis them he goes about like (a hungry) roaring Lion, ſeeking to devour (2 Pet. 5. 8.) It is a truth alſo, that Satan goes about as a hungry one, to devour our Eſtates, ſo he did Jobs, His harveſt that hungry one did eat up; but, it was not becauſe he deſired Jobs harveſt, but becauſe he gaped for Job himſelf. He thought if God would but give him leave to rob Job of his riches, Job would quickly let his ſoul lapſe into his hands. A ſoul is the dainty morſel, which That hungry ſpirit waits for. The moſt delicate things in the world are meat too groſs for a ſpirit, though an unclean one.

Others, by the hungry one, underſtand the Heir of this rich worldling; his heir whom he had kept low, and bare, and ſhort, as long as he lived, now, when he is dead and gone, comes hungry to the eſtate, and quickly conſumes it; he eats it out, drinks it up, and laviſheth it away. It is often ſeen that the heirs of great, rich men, come very hungry gry to their inheritances, and as quickly ſwallow them down. They have been kept ſo ſhort, that like empty and ſharp ſet ſtomacks they waſte all, when they come where they may have their fill. That eſtate which is got by the oppreſſion, and kept by the baſe covetouſneſs of parents, is uſually ſpent out in riot and luxury. A hungry heir devours the harveſt.

Thirdly; The hungry may be taken for thoſe poor oppreſſed ones, whoſe eſtates thoſe Nimrods of the world had unjuſtly and cruelly raviſht from them. They, whom wicked men make hungry and lean by their exactions and cruel dealings, come at laſt (though unbidden and unwelcome gueſts) to eat the bread from their tables. And theſe poor hungry ones are conceived by ſome, to be Wiſdoms children, the people of God, whom thoſe wicked fools had ſtript of their eſtates, and would have eaten them too like bread, Pſal. 14. So the Septuagint renders it; The juſt or the godly ſhall eat up or devour the harveſt of this rich worldling. Put both theſe together, and this may be the ſence, The hungry eateth up his harveſt, that is, the godly poor, whom this man had unjuſtly oppreſt, and even put to ſtarving, God, by his juſt judgment ſhall ſend in, to take free Quarter, to eat their fill of his harveſt, and never reckon with their Hoſt. From that ſence take this Note.

Δίκαιοι ἔ-δονται. Sep.

That, God doth ſometimes give the riches of wicked men to poor godly men whom they have oppreſt.

Job himſelf, chap. 27. v. 16. gives us this truth in expreſs terms; where ſpeaking of a wicked man, he ſaith, Though he heap up ſilver as the duſt, and prepare raiment as the clay, he may prepare it (let him prepare it, let him ſcrape it together as faſt as he can) but the juſt ſhall put it on, and the innocent ſhall divide the ſilver, that is, thoſe juſt and innocent perſons whom he had wronged, ſhall by a divine retaliation enter upon his eſtate. The wicked grind the faces of the poors to make themſelves bread, but at laſt the poor ſhall make bread of their corn and griſt.

Fourthly, We may take the hungry yet more largely, for any that are low and poor, whom God ſtirs up and ſends in judgment, as his teeth, to conſume and eat up, to devour and deſtroy the portion of ſuch fat ones. Every ſpoiler is a hungry one; ſpoilers devour as if they had never eaten in their lives, they ſweep all away: The word which we tranſlate to eat up, ſignifies the moſt fierce kind of eating; when a man eats as if he could never have enough, And therefore it is applied to the eating of fire, which we know is the moſt hungry thing in the world; nothing will ſatisfie the appetite of that hungry Element; the more it eats, the more hungry and devouring it is. Hence that adjunct of fire (Iſa. 29. 6.) A flame of a devouring fire, or, the flame (it is the word of the Text) of an eating fire; a fire whoſe ſtomack is able to digeſt all the material creatures in the world. So (Job 1.) it is ſaid, that the fire of God, or a great fire did eat up the ſheep, the fire came hungry and conſumed them; ſuch is the force of the word here uſed: and ſecondly, it is applied in Scripture, to the eating of the ſword; which (alas!) we know is very hungry too, My ſword ſhall devour fleſh, Deut. 32. 42. Thirdly, it is applied to ſavage beaſts (Gen. 37. 33.) when Jacob bewaileth the loſs of his ſon Joſeph, he ſaith, an evil beaſt hath devoured him. Fourthly, The cruelty of perſecutors (in whom wild beaſts, and ſword and fire are all met, if not ſwallowed up) the cruelty, I ſay, of perſecutors is expreſſed by this word, They eat up my people like bread, Pſal. 14. 4. Wild beaſts, and ſword, and fire, and above all, the perſecuting ſpirits of men, are the moſt hungry and ſpeedy devourers, ſuch a devouring ſhall conſume the harveſt of thoſe fooliſh men; the hungry ſhall eat it up. Hence we may obſerve,

In communi quicunque raptor & deprædator famelicus appellatur. Pined.

אכל Eſt acrius quam noſtrũ comedere, ſignificat enim comedẽdo conſumere; ingẽtem aviditatem comedentis præ ſe fert, adeo ut de igne quæ omnia avidè depaſcit utatur.

That, They who conſume others, ſhall at laſt be conſumed themſelves.

Such as have raiſed themſelves upon the ruines of others, ſhall raiſe others by their own ruine: God will ſend devourers to eat up the eſtate of thoſe, who have devoured the eſtates of their brethren; eſpecially, if they have devoured the eſtates of his own people. The Apoſtle, Gal. 6. 7. gives this general law, whatſover a man ſoweth, that ſhall he alſo reap; he that ſows oppreſſion, or makes his ſeed-time to be the reaping of his neighbours harveſt, may find reapers which he hired not, in his field at harveſt. The Prophet Iſaiah denounceth a wo againſt thoſe that joyn houſe to houſe by oppreſſion; and what is the wo? their houſes ſhall be made deſolate: So, Zeph. 3. 19. I will undo all that afflict thee. And, Jer. 30. 16. They that devour thee, ſhall be devoured; and they that ſpoil thee, ſhall be a ſpoil; and all that prey upon thee, will I give for a prey: It is juſt with God (2 Theſ. 1. 6.) to recompenſe tribulation to them that trouble you. The rich man who hoards up that for himſelf and for his children, which he hath pulled out of the bellies of others, ſhall have his meat devoured from his table, and pull'd from between his teeth.

The hungry eat up his harveſt. But where doth he find it? [He takes it even out of the thorns.]

There is ſome difficulty in that expreſſion. Mr. Broughton reads it, The hungry ſhall eat up his harveſt which he had gotten thorough the thorns. And others thus; He ſhall fetch it out from among the arms or weapons. The Hebrew word which we tranſlate Thorns, gives occaſion of theſe various readings, which ſome derive from Tſinnah, which ſignifies a Shield, and ſo by a Trope, it notes any kind of arms or weapons.

צנינים Spinæ, alii qui deducunt à צנן unde צנה ſcutum, clypeus.

If we take the word in the firſt ſence, for thorns, a threefold interpretation may be given of this clauſe.

Firſt, As Mr. Broughton reads it, which he had gotten thorough the thorns. This refers to the manner how a worldling obtains his eſtate; he hath a great harveſt, and how came he by it? he got it through the thorns; that is, he got it through vexing pricking cares: for ſo (Mat. 13.) in the Parable of the Sower, when Chriſt expounds the meaning of the thornie ground, he ſhews, that the thorns are cares, the cares wherewith men are vexed in getting riches, or compaſſing the things of the world. Hence a man is ſaid to get riches through the thorns, when he gets them through overmuch care and vexation of ſpirit.

Secondly, As the word ſignifies thorns; ſome conceive, that Eliphaz cloſely deſcribes the perſons who ſhould take away his eſtate, as he did in the former branch; there he ſaid, the hungry eat up his harveſt: now he deſcribeth another ſort of men, that ſhall eat it up, namely, men of thorns, or, men coming out of the thorns; this rendring is not eaſily made out of the Original, though it hath learned abettors, and therefore I am not confident of it; yet it may yield ſome advantage to our meditation upon the words. The meaning is this; Mean or contemptible men ſhall take it away: As in our language, when we would expreſs a vulgar perſon, a man of low birth, we ſay, he was born under a buſh, or under a hedge, that is, he is a man of a low pedigree, none of the Gentry; and ſo it is, as if he ſhould ſay, this great, rich, mighty man, who hath ſo much honour and riches about him, and thinks himſelf ſafe, ſhall ſee a man coming out of the thorns, ſome obſcure perſon, and take all that he hath from him. This expoſition may yield us a profitable Obſervation.

Homo ex ſpinis exiens, ſc. abjectus & contemptus eum rapiet. Homo ignobilis qui de ſpinis naſcitur. Merc.

That, When God reckons with the greateſt of wicked men, he can humble and pull them down by the meaneſt and pooreſt of men.

A very ſhrub, a man that comes out of the thorns, may pull down the talleſt Cedar: It encreaſes affliction, to be overcome by a weak, deſpiſed, inconſiderable Enemy. It troubled Abimelech more to be ſlain by a woman, then to be ſlain; and therefore (upon the matter) he would have the pain to be twice killed, rather then the diſgrace to be kill'd by a woman; for having received his deaths wound by her hand, yet, he calls haſtily to the young man his Armour-bearer, and ſaid unto him, draw out thy ſword now, and ſlay me, that men ſay not of me, a woman ſlew him, Judg. 9. 54. The Lord threatens it, both as a juſt retaliation for the ſin, and an aggravation of the puniſhment of his people, I will move them to jealouſie with thoſe that are not a people, I will provoke them to anger with a fooliſh Nation, Deut. 32. 21. The Gentiles (as Paul expounds this place, Rom. 10. 19. & Peter, 1 Pet. 2. 10.) whom the Jews ſlighted as a fooliſh people, as no people, came in, and eat up the harveſt of the Goſpel, and were inveſted with greater priviledges then they. This made the Jews mad with anger, as you may read in that famous record of it, Acts 22. 21, 22. They could not bear it, that, Thoſe men of the thorns, ſhould partake of the fatneſs of the Olive; as Jotham ſpake in his Parable (Judges 9. 15.) when the queſtion was, which of the trees ſhould be

King, the Olive or the Vine? &c. at laſt it fell to the Brambles lot, or to the Thorn. That Parable gives ſome light to this expoſition; for thoſe ſeveral ſorts of trees ſhadowed out the ſeveral ſorts of men, and the Bramble ſhadowed out the meaneſt ſort of men, a man of thorns, or a man coming out of the Thorns. And he adds (which further anſwers this ſence) Let fire come out of the Bramble, and devour the Cedars of Lebanon; which in plain Engliſh is, let there come power from a powerleſs man, who is but as a bryer, or as a thorn, and conſume the greateſt and the mightieſt.

And it may ſupport us (while we ſee ſo many great Cedars and ſtrong Oaks, with whom we have to do) that God can ſend a man out of the thorns to ſubdue their pride; and can cauſe a Bramble to conſume Cedars, when himſelf pleaſeth. The Prophet Amos puts the queſtion, By whom ſhall Jacob riſe? for he is ſmall; the only anſwer is, Jacob hath a great God, a God that can do great things. If we ſhould queſtion, By whom ſhall the wicked fall, for they are very great? I anſwer, haply, they ſhall fall by him that is very ſmall. A man out of the buſhes, a man of thorns, ſome poor ſhrub, armed with the power of God, ſhall ſhake and overthrow them in the height of all their wickedneſs and worldly glory.

Thirdly, Take it according to our reading; He ſhall fetch it out of the thorns. Which ſome interpret, to be thorns growing naturally in or among the corn; according to that general curſe upon the earth, Gen. 3. 18. Thorns and thiſtles ſhall it bring forth to thee. But rather (if not alone) theſe are thorns platted together induſtriouſly, and wrought into a hedge, to ſave corn-fields, or corn-ſtacks from ſpoil. So the meaning is, that when the hungry man comes with a commiſſion from God, to eat the harveſt of the fooliſh, he will have his eſtate, whatever it coſt him, or what danger ſoever he incurs for it. For, as a man is ſaid to fetch a thing out of the fire, or out of the Lions mouth, when he gets it with much peril and hazard; ſo, what a man gets with much difficulty and labour, he is ſaid to get it out of the thorns: And the reaſon is this, becauſe men were wont, when they had gathered in their harveſt, (take it eſpecially about that, and in proportion about any thing elſe) they were wont (I ſay) to ſecure it with a thorn-hedge, or to lay buſhes about their ſtacks, to keep off cattel or any other annoyances. We read among the Laws given by Moſes, ſomewhat anſwerable to this practice, Ex. 22. 6. If fire break out, and catch in thorns, ſo that the ſtacks of corn, or ſtanding corn, or the field be conſumed therewith, he that kindled the fire, ſhall make reſtitution. This Law intimates it for an ancient cuſtom, to make fences of thorn about corn brought home or ſtackt up; and that fields while the corn was ſtanding, were hedged about with thorns. To either of which, the alluſion may be made by Eliphaz; ſo that, to fetch his harveſt out of the thorns, is to fetch it through the fences made to ſecure his harveſt, to fetch it, though it coſt (as we ſpeak proverbially) a ſcratch'd face, or ſcratch'd fingers. We ſay, hunger breaks through ſtone-walls; certainly then thoſe hungry ones will break through a thorn-hedge.

E ſpinis, hoc eſt, è magno periculo, ſicut nos dicimus ex ore leonum. Druſ. Quamvis inter ſpinas abdita ſit, & forſan ut tutior ſit. Merc.

When the Lord would keep his Church from wandring in ſinful paths, he reſolves thus, Hoſ. 2. 6. I will hedge up her way with thorns; there are pleaſures that ſhe would go fetch; but as men fence their ground and paſtures with thorns, ſo will I do with her; I will hedge up her way with thorns, ſhe ſhall pay dear, ſhe ſhall ſmart for pleaſures, ere ſhe come at them. And therefore, as it ſhews the extream intenſiveneſs and reſolvedneſs of a man to ſin, when a man will ſin, though God hath hedged up his way with thorns; that is, when a man will break through many dangers, and run hazards to ſatisfie his luſts; ſo here in this place, the hungry mans taking it out of the thorns, notes a reſolvedneſs and eagerneſs of ſpirit, to have the eſtate of this rich man, let him ſecure it by all the power and policies he can.

From this Expoſition, we may obſerve firſt, the practice of worldly wiſe men.

> When they have gotten riches, they do not leave them looſe and open to ſurprizal, they keep them among the thorns.

They will ſecure their eſtates as much as they can. As they get riches with thorns, ſo they will keep riches with thorns, that is, they will beſtow care to keep, as well as to get. A godly man takes great care to get more of Chriſt, more riches of Grace; he improves all means, and makes this his buſineſs night and day; theſe ſpiritual cares are his thorns, and when he finds his ſtock of holy things increaſing, his next care is to preſerve his ſtock, to maintain communion with Chriſt, and to keep up his graces to their height: The care of a godly man, is as much to preſerve grace and comforts from the power of that hungry one the Devil, as it was to fetch them in. And Satan is ſo hungry after our ſpiritual harveſt, that he would fetch it out of the thorns and fences of all our prayers and holy cares, were it not that Chriſt himſelf keeps it for us; his care over his peoples ſpiritual welfare is ſuch a thorn-hedge, as the Devil can never break through: We are kept by the power of God as with a Garriſon, 1 Pet. 1. 5.

Such alſo is the wiſdom of that generation, about worldly things, they fence in and fortifie their riches, ſo that if any man will have them, he muſt have them through the thorns, or come upon the Pikes.

Secondly, Though he lay up his eſtate within the thorns, yet the hungry man will fetch it out. Hence note,

> That, All the care of worldly men, all the thorn-hedges they make about their eſtates, ſhall never ſecure them from ſpoil and ruine.

The hungry will preſs and venture through the thorns to take them.

Further, As the word ſignifies a Buckler (or any kind of arms, whether offenſive or defenſive) as the text is by ſome tranſlated, He ſhall fetch it out of their Arms, or from among their weapons. And then the ſence may be thus conceived (which agrees fully with the former Obſervation.)

De armis tollet eam, ſc. meſſem.

Though this wicked man in his high eſtate, ſhould get many armed men together to defend it, yea, though he ſhould get an Army of men, with ſword and buckler, with pike and ſhot to defend it, yet none of them ſhall be able. The wrath of God, by the man out of the thorns, the meaneſt inſtrument of his wrath, ſhall break through all. And in alluſion to this, the Vulgar (more truly then as a Tranſlation) reads it,

The armed man ſhall take him away, that is, he ſhall carry him away priſoner, and ſpoil him of his harveſt: Which, though it doth not comply with the letter of the Original, yet it implies the fence of it; for when armed men come to take any thing away, it intimates, that the thing was, or was ſuppoſed to be protected with arms. The Chaldee Paraphraſe ſaith the ſame; Souldiers with weapons and warlike inſtruments ſhall carry them away. This word is in other places rendred an Army, in the Chaldee. So, Joſh. 23. 15. That which we tranſlate, They ſhall be thorns in your eyes, the Chaldee gloſſeth thus; They ſhall be an army beſieging or compaſſing you round about. And ſo much for the ſecond Branch of this Verſe, He taketh it even out of the thorns.

Et ipſum rapiet armatus Vulg.

Quod juxta textum Hebraicum extaret, de armis rapiet, vertit Vulgaris Biblia, rapiet armatus; non enim niſi armatus poſſit de medio armorum eam rapere. Bold. Milites armis ſive inſtrumentis bellicis abducent eos. Chald. Erunt exercitus vos cingentes. Chald.

There is a third branch; And the robber ſwalloweth up their ſubſtance.

It is the ſame in ſubſtance with the former; and we may ſay here, as Joſeph about the dreams of Pharaoh, The dreams are the ſame, and they are doubled, only to note the certainty of the thing: The matter here is the ſame, only the words are doubled (as the Holy Ghoſt often doth) to note the certainty of this thing, that the fooliſh mans eſtate ſhall be conſumed.

Yet there is ſomewhat very conſiderable in the phraſe here uſed; and therefore I ſhall open it a little: The robber ſwalloweth up his ſubſtance.

The robber.] Some tranſlate, The thirſty ſhall drink or ſwallow up their ſubſtance; Mr. Broughton, The thirſty ſhall ſwill up their wealth; and it ſuits fairly with the former words, there, the hungry ſhall eat up his harveſt; and here, the thirſty ſhall ſwill up their wealth; ſo you have both the hungry and the thirſty to make riddance of all; neither his corn, nor his wine, his bread, nor his drink, neither wet, nor dry, ſhall ſcape, where both hungry and thirſty come to conſume.

Bibent ſitientes divitias ejus, Vulg.

We render it, The robber ſwalloweth up their ſubſtance; The reaſon of this difference is from the original word, which which may have a double derivation; firſt, from a root, ſignifying to thirſt, or to be thirſty: Secondly, from a root which ſignifies the hair of the head, or the locks, or extraordinary Ruffian-like long hair and locks. And the reaſon why we tranſlate Robber, is given from both; from the firſt, becauſe robbers and ſpoilers are commonly toſs-pots and drunkards, men that love their liquor, a thirſty generation in that ſence: and they alwayes thirſt for a prey, they thirſt for the eſtates or lives of others: From the latter, becauſe robbers, plunderers and ſpoilers, uſually wore very long hair, either to diſguiſe or make themſelves the more terrible; ſo that a robber may be denominated, both from his unnaturally natural thirſt after the pot, and from his uncivil civil thirſt after a purſe, or from his long, ſhaggie, buſhie hair: To this latter ſence one of the Rabbins tranſlates, The hairy man, or the man with long hair, ſhall ſwallow up their eſtates. Hence ſome expreſs him by a Latine word, which ſignifies a man all over-grown with hair; this Ruffian or Robber ſhall ſwallow up his ſubſtance.

צמים vel à צמא ſitire, vel à צמם quod eſt capillus aut cæſaries. Prædo ſic dictus, quod more ferino capillos nutriit, ut mos eſt in terra Iſmael. Rab. Dav. Kimchi, in lib. Rad. Tſammim, prædo, quem ſic appellatum exiſtimant, à coma, quam alit, vel quod ſanguinem humanum ſitiat. Druſ. Abſorbeat pilosus divitias eorum, Rab. Mordoch. Horridus, Hiſpidus.

Swallow up.] The word notes an utter exhauſtion, he ſhall exhauſt his ſubſtance: As we ſay, when a ſpender or an unthrift is deſcribed, he hath exhauſted his eſtate, he hath, as it were, ſuckt it up, guzl'd or ſwallow'd it down his throat; the radical word may import, drawing or ſucking up with a pipe; properly it ſignifies to fetch wind, or draw breath; and by a Metaphor, to ſwallow down, to ſup or ſuck up; as alſo, with fervency and pleaſure to deſire; becauſe vehement deſires are often expreſt by quick breathings; yea, to breath after a thing, is to deſire it: or it notes a mind to ſwallow it up, either from the delight we have in it, or hatred of it. In which latter ſence David applies it to his enemies (Pſal. 56. 2.) Mine enemies would daily ſwallow me up. They breath after me to devour me. So then the meaning is, this robber, this hairy ſpoiler or thirſty one, will be ſo dry, that he will ſwallow all up, he will ſoop and drink up the fooliſh mans eſtate to the very bottom; he will draw it down to the very dregs or lees, and not leave a drop behind him.

שאף Propriè attraxit per nares aut os: per Metaphoram, inhiavit, ardenter cupiit; qui enim ardenter aliquid cupiunt, præ deſiderii magnitudine, ad os aërem frequentius trahunt ſeu reſpirant.

The robber ſwalloweth up their ſubſtance.] In the firſt Chapter we read Job deſcribed, A man of a very great ſubſtance; Job's ſubſtance in cattel was thus and thus: Here alſo it is ſaid, The robber ſhall ſwallow up his ſubſtance; but the word in the Hebrew, is very different from that in the firſt Chapter; there the word ſignifieth properly ſubſtance in cattel; but here it ſignifies ſubſtance in any kind of wealth and riches whatſoever: And it notes three things.

חיל Non magis ad corporis quam ad ingenii vires pertinet: & tres fere virtutes continet, fortitudinē, juſtitiam, prudentiam.

אנשי חיל

Firſt, and moſt properly, Strength; either ſtrength of body or of mind, namely, valour, activity and courage; alſo wiſdom and induſtry to get or defend our ſubſtance; ſo Gen. 47. 6. Pharaoh tells Joſeph, that if among his brethren, there were any men of activity, he ſhould make them Rulers over his cattel.

Secondly, It notes riches and wealth, or any worldly ſubſtance; becauſe much activity, wiſdom and ſtrength, is uſually employed in obtaining them; or becauſe wiſdom and ſtrength are requiſite for the keeping and retaining of them (Prov. 11. 16.) Strong men retain riches; as if he ſhould ſay, though a man have abundance of riches, yet if he have not ſtrength, he ſhall hardly hold them, they will be wreſted out of his hands. Once more, Riches are thus expreſt, becauſe men uſually account their riches to be their ſtrength; a man naturally puts confidence in his riches, Prov. 13. 15. The rich mans wealth is his ſtrong City: Riches are called ſtrength, from that corrupt opinion which the world hath of them, making them Idols, and truſting to them, as they ſhould unto God alone. Though yet, there is a truth in it, that riches have much ſtrength in them; a rich man, and a powerful man, are mutually put for each other.

Ariſtoteles divitias appellat vires rerum, quia per ipſas omnia poſſumus. l. 1. Pol. c. 8.

Thirdly, The word ſignifies an Army of men, Pſal. 33. 16. There is no King ſaved by the multitude of an hoſt. We may take it either way; this hungry man, this robber, ſhall come and ſwallow up his ſubſtance, his riches, his ſtrength; or, he ſhall come and ſwallow up his very Army, by which he thought to defend his ſubſtance: All ſhall be loſt, neither the eſtate, nor the means uſed to protect the eſtate, ſhall ſtand before this hungry, thirſty, hairy robber. In this deſcription of a total deſolation brought upon the eſtate and family of the fooliſh man, together with the character of the perſons, who ſhall make him deſolate, queſtionleſs Eliphaz would repreſent to Job, the deſolation brought upon his eſtate and children, by thoſe troops of hungry, hairy, thirſty robbers, the Caldeans and the Sabeans, who ſwallowed all his ſubſtance at one morſel, ſoopt up his eſtate at one draught. Whence obſerve,

> It is a great point of wiſdom, to ſhew a man his condition in anothers, and to ſeem only relating the Hiſtory of our foreign obſervation, when we mean the perſon to whom we ſpeak.

What is propoſed as ſeen in others, works the heart to ſee it ſelf; and doth at once mitigate the ſharpneſs of the reproof, and open the ſpirit to let it in. As we ſee in the inſtance of Nathan's Parable to David, 2 Sam. 12. Eliphaz ſaid only, I have ſeen the fooliſh taking root, &c. He doth not lay it boiſterouſly and directly upon Job, I ſaw thee taking root, &c.

Thus we have opened the context of theſe five verſes, wherein Eliphaz argues Job guilty of wickedneſs and inſincerity, becauſe God had dealt with him as he uſually doth with the wicked and inſincere, whoſe habitations are curſed, their children cruſhed, their ſubſtance ſwallowed up by thirſty, and eaten up by hungry robbers, who take it out from the very thorns of their own cares, in getting, or means in ſecuring what they have gotten.

VERS. 6, 7, 8.

Although affliction cometh not forth of the duſt, neither doth trouble ſpring out of the ground.

Yet man is born unto trouble as the ſparks flie upward.

I would ſeek unto God, and unto God would I commit my cauſe.

THus far Eliphaz had ſpent his diſcourſe in reproof and conviction; and you have had it out of the fourth Chapter, and the precedent part of this, four heads of reaſon, or arguments, by which Eliphaz labours to reprove Job for, and convince him of cloſe ſin, or of groſs hypocriſie. Now Eliphaz turns himſelf to another ſtile, and falls to counſel and exhortation, directing and adviſing Job what becomes him, what he ought to do in his condition. His exhortation conſiſts of two diſtinct branches.

The former whereof begins at the ſixth, and is continued to the ſeventeenth verſe of the Chapter. The ſum of this exhortation is, That, foraſmuch as he had found him ſo diſtempered in his ſpeech and carriage, he now earneſtly beſeeches and intreats him, that he would ſeek unto God, beg favour, and believingly commit himſelf and his cauſe unto God.

The ſecond branch of exhortation begins at v. 17. and is continued to the end of the Chapter: The ſcope whereof is, That Job would humbly and patiently ſubmit himſelf unto, and under the correcting hand of God, quietly waiting the time of his deliverance.

The matter of the former exhortation lies in the words of the eighth verſe, I would ſeek unto God, and unto God would I commit my cauſe.

He ſtrengtheneth his exhortation by two arguments; whereof,

The firſt is taken from the cauſe of his afflictions, and that either the efficient, or the meritorious cauſe of his afflictions; both which we find in the ſixth and ſeventh verſes.

The ſecond argument by which he ſtrengtheneth his firſt exhortation, is continued in the ninth, tenth, eleventh and twelfth verſes following; and it is grounded upon the power, wiſdom and goodneſs of God: As if he ſhould ſay, Who would not ſeek unto a God who is of infinite power, able to deliver? Who would not ſeek unto a God, and commit his cauſe unto him, who is gracious, and pitiful, merciful, and ready to deliver? Who would not ſeek unto a God, and commit his cauſe unto him, who is of infinite wiſdom to find out wayes and means for the contriving of deliverance, though mans condition (to the eye of ſenſe or humane reaſon) ſeem altogether deſperate and remedileſs?

Theſe three verſes contain the firſt exhortation, together with the firſt Argument: And we may form it thus, both reſpecting the efficient, and the meritorious cauſe of his afflictions.

Firſt, Reſpecting the efficient cauſe, the Argument ſeems to lie thus;

He is to be ſought unto in our afflictions, who is the principal efficient cauſe or ſender of our afflictions.
But, God is the principal efficient cauſe and ſender of our afflictions:
Therefore, he is to be ſought unto, and, to him our cauſe is to be committed.

The Major or firſt Propoſition is not expreſly in this text, but it is plainly ſuppoſed, and logically to be underſtood. The Minor, or the Aſſumption lies in the ſixth and ſeventh verſes, where he proves that God is the efficient cauſe or the ſender of afflictions; and his proof is grounded upon a denial, or a removal of all other efficient cauſes. As if he ſhould ſay, there muſt be ſome efficient cauſe of affliction, but no efficient cauſe can be aſſigned or named, except God: therefore God is the efficient cauſe, the ſender and orderer of afflictions. That no other efficient cauſe can be aſſigned, he proveth plainly in the ſixth verſe, thus; Affliction cometh not forth of the duſt, neither doth trouble ſpring out of the ground; yet man is born to trouble, &c. As if he ſhould ſay, our eyes teach us, we ſee plainly man is full of trouble; man is no ſooner born, but he is afflicted; theſe afflictions muſt have ſome efficient cauſe; ſome hand or other doth frame, form and faſhion them, they come not alone; and if they come not alone, then we muſt find out this cauſe either in earth or in heaven: we muſt find it, either in the Creator, or among the creatures; but from the earth or from creatures, they come not: Affliction cometh not forth of the duſt, neither doth trouble ſpring out of the ground, that is, it riſes not by or from the creatures in themſelves, and alone conſidered; and if ſo, it muſt needs come from heaven, from the hand of God, who dwelleth above, and diſpoſeth all things according to the pleaſure of his own will. It is ſuch a kind of ſpeech, as often falls from us, when a thing is loſt; we ſay, ſome body muſt have it; ſure it is not gone into the ground, you or you muſt have it, for there were none elſe in the place. So Eliphaz ſeems here to argue about the afflictions which he ſaw upon Job: here are heavy afflictions upon thee, theſe afflictions muſt come ſome way upon thee; They come not forth of the duſt, neither do they ſpring out of the ground, they come not up alone: Either then they muſt come from God or man; and from man they come not, they ſpring not out of the earth; therefore he leaves it, as a clear inference, that God is the efficient cauſe or ſender of affliction.

Again, if we conſider this Argument, as it ſtrengtheneth the exhortation from the meritorious cauſe of his afflictions; it may be formed thus.

If the ſin of man be from himſelf, and the ſufferings of man be for his ſin, then in his ſufferings for ſin, he ought to ſeek unto God, and commit his cauſe unto him.
But the ſin of man is from himſelf, and the ſufferings of man are for his ſin:
Therefore, he ought in ſuch a condition to ſeek unto God, and commit his cauſe unto him; for remedy is no where elſe to be had.

This ſecond Argument is grounded rather upon the expoſition, then the letter of the text, as ſhall be further cleared in purſuance of the words.

Concluſio enunciata in perſona Eliphazi, quod modeſtum cohortationis genus magnam vim habet, & eſt uſitatiſſimum. Merc.

Thus you ſee how the Minor or ſecond Propoſition is confirmed, both, as it reſpects the efficient cauſe, and the meritorious cauſe of mans affliction. The Concluſion lies in the eighth verſe, which Eliphaz pronounces in his own perſon; I would ſeek unto God: therefore ſeek thou unto God: he ſpeaks in his own perſon, thereby more freely to inſinuate his counſel, and make way for his exhortation. As if he had ſaid, Were I in thy caſe, I would do ſo; therefore do thou ſo likewiſe; Seek unto God, aud commit thy cauſe unto him.

So much of this context in the Logick of it, as it contains an exhortation, with an argument to ſtrengthen and back that exhortation. Now for the clearing of the words.

Although afflictions come not forth of the duſt.

כי

The Hebrew particle, which we tranſlate Although, may be taken three wayes, and ſo I find it rendred upon this place.

Firſt, (which is its moſt proper ſence) it is taken cauſally, and then the text is read, For, affliction cometh not forth of the duſt. So Mr. Broughton, for ſorrow iſſueth not from the duſt.

Secondly, It may be taken adverſatively, as we read it, Although affliction or ſorrow comes not forth of the duſt.

Thirdly, It may be taken affirmatively; according to which acception, the text is thus carried, Certainly, affliction cometh not out of the duſt, or, Surely, affliction cometh not out of the duſt.

Either of theſe wayes the ſence is good; yet to me our tranſlation by the Adverſative Although, doth a little obſcure the ſence: And to ſay, Surely, or certainly, affliction comes not forth of the duſt, ſeems to carry it more clearly.

Surely affliction cometh not out of the duſt.] It is conſiderable, that the word by which affliction is here expreſt, bears a double ſignification in Scripture, and I conceive it may alſo in this text; properly it ſignifies, ſin, iniquity, iniquity of all ſorts, but eſpecially, That ſin of Idolatry; as (Hoſ. 4. 14.) when the houſe of God (Bethel) was polluted with Idolatry, the name is changed, and it is called Bethaven, the houſe of an Idol, or, the houſe of iniquity; or of that ſpecial iniquity, namely, of Idolatry; Sin alters the nature of man; no marvel then, if it alter the names of things, Hoſ. 10. 15. and often in the old Teſtament we find this word added, to ſet out the worſt of men, the workers of iniquity, Pſal. 5. 5, &c. Iniquity comes not out of the duſt: the ſoil where it grows, or the ſhop where it is wrought and formed, is mans heart; Eliphaz would carry us to the well-head, our ſinful natures, or our birth-ſin.

און
Iniquitas, vanitas, moleſtia, labor, quia iniquitas laborem afflictionemq; parturit. Sept. vertunt per τὸν κόπον & κόπον. Schind.

פעלי און
Aſcendit Eliphaz *ad communem & naturalem ſortem hominis quod omnes in peccato & ad miſeriam naſcimur, damnati in A*damo. Cor.

Secondly, The word ſignifies affliction or ſorrow, calamity or miſery, becauſe ſin is the cauſe of affliction, the mother of ſorrow: and therefore by a Metonymie of the effect for the cauſe (which is frequent in Scripture) the ſame word notes both ſin and ſorrow; the mother and the daughter are called by the ſame name. We tranſlate by the effect, Surely, affliction cometh not out of the duſt; many by the cauſe, Surely, iniquity cometh not out of the duſt. And for the full underſtanding of the Text, we muſt take in both; where the effect only is mentioned, the cauſe is ſuppoſed, Affliction ſprings not out of the duſt, becauſe ſin ſprings not out of the duſt.

Now this form of ſpeaking (Iniquity or affliction ſprings or cometh not forth of the duſt) is proverbial; and no doubt was well known, and often uſed in thoſe times. When they would remove chance or fortune (as we ſay) or deny any event to be without a certain directive power, they ſpake in this language, This came not from the ground; thereupon the Vulgar tranſlates it ſo in terms, (a) There is nothing in the world without cauſe, alluding (it is probable) to the Proverb. Hence, a man obſcurely born, whoſe Parents and Original are unknown, is called (b) A Son of the earth: Which imports, that no man can tell whence he is, or how deſcended. They whoſe original cannot be aſſigned, are uſually aſſigned to the common Original, or (c) parent of us all, the earth. And as in regard of perſons, ſo of things, when no man can tell how or which way they come, they are ſaid to come out of the ground. We ſpeak alſo (in the other extream) affirmatively, Such a thing comes out of the clouds, that is (we know not, but) God knows how it comes. So then, here is a denial of chance or fortune; as if Eliphaz ſhould ſay, reaſon may be found and aſſigned for theſe things, they come not out of the duſt.

Proverbialis quædam ſententia eſt, qua tollat caſum, aſſeratq; divinam erga res humanas & impoſitum ſupplicium providentiam. Pined. Sanct.

(a) Nihil in terra ſine cauſa ſit. Vulg.

Quaſi diceret non caſu mala nobis accidunt. neq; ex terra germinant ut ſolent herbæ nullo jacto ſemine.

(b) Terræ filius.

(c) Magna parens terra eſt.

Further, For the clearing of this, The duſt and the ground ſtand in a twofold oppoſition. Firſt, Unto God; and ſecondly, unto our ſelves. Firſt, In oppoſition to God, thus, Affliction ſpringeth not from the ground, that is, it comes from the wiſdom, power, and diſpoſition of God, as the efficient cauſe. Secondly, In oppoſition to our ſelves, and then the ſence may be thus conceived, that, the material and meritorious cauſe of our affliction, is not without us, it is not in the ground, or in other creatures, but in our ſelves: Every man in himſelf hath the ground which bears, the ſource, or fountain, which bubbles out his ſorrows and his ſufferings. Man hath no reaſon to accuſe or charge heaven or earth, as the Authors of his ſorrow, he carries the reaſon about with him, The ſinfulneſs or ſink of his own polluted nature. And therefore (to allude to that of the Apoſtle in the point of Juſtification, Rom. 10. 6, 7. Say not in thy heart, who ſhall aſcend into heaven? that is, to bring thy troubles down from above? or, who ſhall deſcend into the deep? that is, to bring up thy troubles from below; for the cauſe is nigh thee, even in thy mouth and in thy heart, that is, the corruption of nature, which we preach.

Non exit è pulvere iniquitas. q. d. ab hominibus eſt, non è terra vel pulvere, nam terra non profert iniquitatem, ſed homines, ea eſt natura eorum corrupta proin & proclives ad eam feruntur. Druſ.

The latter branch of this verſe, Neither doth trouble ſpring out of the ground, is of the very ſame importance with the former, therefore I ſhall not need to ſtay upon it. The word which we tranſlate Trouble ſignifies properly, toylſom labour, or any laborious toyl accidental to man in this life, as a fruit of ſin. This doth not ſpring out of the ground. It is an alluſion to plants or herbs, which grow in the open field, without the work or care of man, and ſo are oppoſed to plants or herbs in a garden: As if he ſhould ſay, thy troubles are not like thoſe herbs, that grow wild, in the fields, without the labour and pains, the care or art of man. There is ſome hand or other, that both plants and waters them.

עפר Terrâ nata dicuntur illa, quibus nulla ab agricolis impenſa eſt opera, ut ſunt herbæ quas ultro terra fundit in pratis & locis incultis. Sanct.

We may ground ſome obſervations as the Text is read, Iniquity comes not forth of the duſt. And then as it is read, Affliction comes not forth of the duſt. And it is neceſſary to give it this latitude; the word equally bearing both ſences. As it is read, Iniquity comes not, &c.

We learn, Firſt, The material cauſe of ſin is in our ſelves.

We bring forth the fruit at our tongues or fingers ends, and the root is in our hearts. Our ſins ſpring not out of the duſt, but out of the dirt and filth of our own corruptions, Gen. 6. 5. Every thought of the imagination of mans heart it is evil, and only evil, and that continually; the Hebrew is every figment or every creature in the heart of man, whatſoever a man moulds and faſhions within himſelf, naturally, is evil, and nothing but evil, and it is alwayes ſo. The natural births of mans heart have all one common face and feature; they are all of one common conſtitution, Evil all.

Secondly, We may Obſerve, That, the meritorious cauſe of mans ſuffering is from his ſin.

Iniquity ſpringeth not from the ground, neither doth trouble come out of the duſt. As iniquity ſprings from our ſelves, ſo we may reſolve it, that miſery ſprings from our ſin. It is a truth (as hath been touched upon the ſecond Chapter) that, God, in many afflictions laid upon his dear children and ſervants, reſpects not their ſin, as the cauſe procuring and drawing on theſe afflictions. And very many are afflicted by the world, not for ſins ſake, but for righteouſneſs ſake. As Chriſt, ſo ſome Chriſtians may ſay in their ſphear, We have done many good works, for which of them do you ſtone me. Yet this is as clear a truth, that the ſin of any man is in it ſelf a ſufficient meritorious cauſe of any, yea, of all afflictions. A creature cannot bear a greater puniſhment, then the leaſt of his ſins deſerves. Man weaves a ſpiders web of ſin out of his own bowels, and then he is intangled in the ſame web; the troubles which inſnare, and wrap about him, are twiſted with his own fingers.

Thirdly Obſerve, Naturally every man ſeeks the reaſon of his ſorrows and afflictions out of himſelf.

When man is afflicted, he is not willing to own himſelf, as the cauſe of his afflictions, or acknowledge that they ſpring from his ſin; and, that may be the reaſon, why Eliphaz ſpeaks thus to Job, as if he had ſaid, thy thoughts are wandring abroad, thou little thinkſt that thy afflictions were bred in thy own boſom: Thou art faſtning the cauſe of them upon this, and t'other thing; thou art complaining of the day wherein thou waſt born; but thou ſhouldeſt rather complain of the ſin, wherein thou waſt born; Thy birth-day hath not hurt thee, but thy birth-ſin. Thy birth-ſin hath given conception, to all the ſorrows of thy life.

The Jews in the Prophet Iſaiah's time were in great diſtreſs, and could get no deliverance: The ports and paſſages of mercy were all obſtructed. Now, whither went their thoughts? And what did they look upon, as the reaſon of thoſe abiding lingring evils? we may read their thoughts in the refutation of them; we may ſee what the diſeaſe of their hearts was, by the medicine which the Prophet applies unto them: he labours to purge them from that conceit, as if either want of power, or want of love in the Lord, were the ſtop of their deliverance. The Lords hand is not ſhortned that he cannot ſave, neither his ear heavy, that he cannot hear, Iſa. 59. 1, 2. As if he had ſaid, I know what your apprehenſions are in theſe afflictions, you think the reaſon is in God, that either he cannot, or he will not ſave you: You think the hand of Gods power is ſhrunk up, or the ear of his mercy ſhut up; but, you reflect not upon your ſelves, nor conſider, that Your iniquities have ſeparated between you and your God: Your ſin does hurt you, and you touch not that with a little finger, but lay the weight of your charge upon God himſelf. So (Hoſ. 13. 9.) Thy deſtruction is from thy ſelf, in me is thy help; God is forced to tell them ſo, that their deſtruction was from themſelves, they would not believe it: they ſuppoſed it was from the cruelty or malice of the creature, from the wrath and rage of enemies, from ſome overſight or neglect of their friends; therefore the Lord ſpeaks out, in expreſs terms, Thy deſtruction is from thy ſelf. It ſprings not forth of the duſt, neither is thy deſtruction from me; In me is thy help: in both the heart of man fails equally: we are ready to ſay, that the good we have comes from our ſelves, that our help and comforts are from our own power and wiſdom, and ſo offer ſacrifice to our own nets, as if by them our portion were fat: but for evil and deſtruction we aſſign it wholly over, ſometime to men, and ſo are angry; ſometime to God, and ſo blaſpheme. We naturally decline what reflects ſhame upon our ſelves, or ſpeaks us guilty.

From our tranſlation, Although affliction, &c.

Obſerve, Firſt, Every affliction hath a cauſe.

The Proverb carries that ſence, in every common underſtanding. Our afflictions have a cauſe, a certain cauſe, they come not by hap hazzard, or by accident. Many things are caſual, but nothing is without a cauſe. Many things are not fore-ſeen by man, but all things are fore-ordained by God. The Prophet Amos (Chap. 3. 6.) ſets forth this by an elegant ſimilitude, Can a bird fall in a ſnare upon the earth, where no gin is for him? As if he ſhould ſay, is a bird taken in a ſnare by chance, where none have prepared, ſet, or induſtriouſly laid a ſnare or gin to take him? The bird ſaw not the ſnare, but the ſnare was ſet for the bird. Snares fall not on the ground at adventure, they grow not out of the earth of themſelves: but the Fowler, by his art and induſtry, invents and frames them on purpoſe to catch the bird: Thus the calamity and troubles in which men are caught and lime-twig'd, inſnared, and ſhackled in the world, come not out of the ground; They are not acts of chance, but of providence: The wiſe and holy God ſets ſuch ſnares, to take and hold fooliſh, unruly men, like ſilly birds, gaping after the baits of worldly pleaſures. Which meaning is clear from the ſcope and tendency of the whole Chapter; but the next queſtion reſolves it in the letter, Is there any evil in a City, and the Lord hath not done it? Thoſe words are both the concluſion and explication of the former ſimilitude.

Secondly Obſerve, Affliction is not from the power of any creature.

As it comes not by chance or without a cauſe, ſo not by the power of creatures, they are not the cauſe; duſt and the ground, are oppoſed to Heaven or to a divine power: Creatures in this ſence, can neither do good, nor do evil. The world would be as full of trouble, as it is of ſin, if ſinful men could make trouble: It is not in the compaſs of a creature, no not of all the creatures in Heaven or earth, to form or to make out one affliction, without the concurrence and allowance of God himſelf. Men alone, can neither make ſtaves of comfort, nor rods of affliction.

Whence thirdly, A conſectary from both may be, That,

Afflictions are from the Lord as from the efficient cauſe, the directer and orderer of them.

Theſe evils are from a creating, not from a created ſtrength. I (ſaith the Lord) form the light, and create darkneſs, Iſa. 45. 7. Natural darkneſs hath only a deficient cauſe, but pœnal darkneſs hath an efficient cauſe. Darkneſs is created. As in the firſt creation God ſaid, let there be light, ſo in providence (which is a continued creation) he ſaith, let there be darkneſs. If afflictions come not forth of the earth, then they come from Heaven. That wicked King preacht very good doctrine, when he ſaid of an extream devouring famine, This evil is from the Lord; though he failed utterly in the uſe or application, while he murmured out, Why ſhould we wait on the Lord any longer, 2 Kings 6. 33. For the reaſon holds ſtrong to the contrary, This evil is from the Lord, we will wait upon the Lord for ever.

Verſe 7. Yet man is born unto trouble, as the ſparks fly upward.

Yet man, or but man is born to trouble.] Some read, Man is born to ſin, that is, he is born with a nature ready and prone to ſin, becauſe he is born in ſin, Pſal. 51. 5. And ſo by conſequent he is born to trouble, which is cauſed by, and is the fruit of ſin. Theſe two, ſin and trouble, are ſo near in blood and kindred, that ſtill one word includes them both; the former word which ſignifies ſin properly, is tranſlated affliction; and this word which ſignifies affliction properly, may be tranſlated ſin. When it is ſaid, That Man is born to trouble or ſin; it notes two things.

Firſt, A right to them, a right to ſin, and a right to ſorrow. That which a man is born to, is duly his, it is his inheritance, or his birth-right; that is the common underſtanding of the phraſe: As ſome men are born to a great eſtate, to lands and honours, &c. ſo all men are born to trouble and ſin; they are ours by a lineal right, derived from our next, yea firſt parents, ſo they deſcend to us as land deſcends.

Secondly, It implies a readineſs, or a fitneſs to commit ſin, or to fall into trouble: When a man is ſaid to be born to a thing, it notes him exceeding apt and forward to take it: He needs little teaching and inſtructing, little cultivating or manuring. As when a man makes verſes readily, we ſay he was born to Poetry; or when a man gets wealth eaſily, we ſay, he was born to be rich. So in the preſent caſe; a mans underſtanding, will, and affections, need no manuring or dreſſing to bring forth ſin, or the fruit of it, ſorrow. He is born to ſin.

The latter clauſe of the verſe clears the ſence fully, Man is born unto trouble, or unto ſin, as the ſparks fly upward; the meaning is, as the ſparks have a principle in themſelves, by which they aſcend, they need no directing; when a ſpark comes out from the fire, no man bids it fly upward, or ſhews it the way, it will fly upward alone, it knows no other way, but upward; ſo, it is a natural courſe for man, as ſoon as he is born, to ſin and work his own ſorrow. This he can do, the firſt thing he doth, and before he can do any thing, well, he can do this, but, too well; He needs no Tutor for theſe, ſinning and ſorrowing, are not his art but his nature: Though he ſhould have neither rule nor example in the world, he would find out the myſteries of iniquity, and do enough quickly to make himſelf miſerable.

Vau.

The particle, As, is a copulative in the hebrew: So divers render it in this Text, Man is born unto trouble, And the ſparks fly upward; that is, mans trouble and ſparks flying upward, are alike natural. We, as in divers other places, tranſlate it by way of ſimilitude; Man is born unto trouble, as the ſparks fly upward: So Job 34. 3. The ear tryeth words, and the mouth taſteth meat; we tranſlate the copulative by a comparative; The ear tryeth words, as the mouth taſteth meat. Again, Mark 9. 49. Every one ſhall be ſalted with fire, and every ſacrifice ſhall be ſalted with ſalt: The ſence lies in the ſimilitude, Every one ſhall be ſalted with fire, as every ſacrifice is ſalted with ſalt; It is an alluſion to the old ſacrifices, wherein ſalt was continually uſed. So here, Man is born unto trouble, and the ſparks, that is, as the ſparks fly upward.

בנו רשף
Filii prunæ hoc eſt ſcintillæ, Metaphoricè ferris ſagittæ incaleſcens motu, & quicquid volat in aëre, ſive ſcintillæ, ſive ſagittæ, ſive aves.

As the ſparks.] The Hebrew is, The ſons of the coal; the ſons or children of the coal, are ſparks; blow a coal, and preſently a ſpark is begotten and born; therefore the Hebrew elegancy calls ſparkes, The ſons of the children of the coal. And it is obſervable, that by a metaphor this word ſignifies in the Hebrew, the Head of an arrow heated with motion, as alſo, a bird flying in the air; and the reaſon is, becauſe birds fly up in the air, they aſcend naturally, they fly about and flutter, like ſparkes of fire in the air. Hence the vulgar and ſome others tranſlate the words, Man is born unto trouble, as the birds fly upward; The Septuagint, as the young Vultures fly upward; others, as the young ones of the Eagle fly upwards: Aben Ezra a learned Rabbin, makes uſe of that ſence alſo, and gives the gloſs thus, As it is natural and innate for birds to fly, ſo it is natural for man to ſuffer trouble.

Νεοσσοὶ δὲ γυπὸς τὰ ὑψηλὰ πέτονται. Sept.
Νεοσσοὶ δὲ ἀετῶν. Complut.
Non ſecus ad ærumnas & miſerias hic perferendas natus eſt homo, quã innatũ eſt & naturale ſcintillis & volatilibus omnibus ut in ſublime attollantur. Merc.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, Sorrow and ſin are the portion and all the portion that man hath by nature.

He is born to theſe.

They who are aſcended to the greateſt heigths, and have got the greateſt ſtock, either of ſpiritual or outward comforts, were born to nothing, but a cup of ſorrow, to the bread of affliction, and to the waters of adverſity: And theſe we are inſtated in, yea poſſeſſed of, as ſoon as we are born; we need not wait the death of our parents for this inheritance, they divide it all to every child, and yet keep it all to themſelves: All our real comforts are from our ſecond birth, and have their pedigree from the bleſſing and love of God. Therefore the Apoſtle puts that general queſtion, What haſt thou, that thou haſt not received? that is, what good haſt thou? Thou haſt all thy evil from thy ſelf, but whatſoever good thou haſt, was received from above; all our good is founded in free Grace.

Secondly Obſerve, That, All ſins and ſorrows are contained virtually in the nature of man.

Though a man doth not formally commit or bring forth every ſin, though a man doth not formally bear evey affliction, or taſte every cup of ſorrow; yet virtually and radically a man hath every ſin in him, or it is poſſible for any ſin to be formed and ſhaped out of the nature of man: Radically alſo every man hath every affliction, all ſorrows in him; and the juſtice of God, may form the moſt dreadfully ſhap'd afflictions out of his ſins: And as the ſparks lie cloſely in the fire, or in the flint, till you ſmite or blow them up; ſo ſin lies ſecretly in our hearts, till ſome temptation or occaſion ſmites and brings it out.

Again we may Obſerve, That, Man can ſin without a teacher.

You need not inſtruct him, or teach him to do evil; he doth that by a natural inſtinct, ſince his nature was corrupted. He ſins as the ſparks fly upwards, or as a bird flyes in the air, whom no man directs how to uſe her wings, Nature is her rule. There needs much teaching againſt ſin, and it is the buſineſs of all the Ordinances, to bridle us from acting our corruptions: But man walks in the wayes of wickedneſs, without guide or precept.

It was the ancient error of the Pelagians, that the ſin of man came onely by imitation: they denied that man had a ſtock of corruption in his nature, or that his nature was corrupted; but, ſeeing others ſin, he ſinned; an opinion which carries its condemnation in its own face, as well as in our hearts. And though ſimilitudes are no proofs, yet, the reaſon of a ſimilitude is: mans ſinning is therefore compared to a ſparks flying, to ſhew how naturally he ſins. A ſpark flies upward without any to lead it the way; and a bird would fly, though ſhe ſhould never ſee another bird fly: And if a man could live ſo, as never to ſee any one example of ſin all his dayes; yet that man, out of his own heart, might bring forth every ſin, every day. Example quickens and encourages the principles of ſin within us, but we can ſin without any extrinſick motion or provocation, without pattern or preſident from without.

Laſtly Obſerve, To ſin, is no burden, or labour, to a natural man; For it is his nature.

It is no pains to the ſpark, to fly upwards: what we do naturally, we do eaſily. Holy duties are no burdens to a godly man, becauſe, through grace, he doth them naturally; he hath an inward principle, which dictates the law of holineſs to him, though he ſhould want outward teaching: He hath an unction from the Holy Ghoſt, and knoweth all things, 1 Joh. 2. 20. Not that a godly man becomes like God, Omniſcient, or knowing all, for at moſt we know, here, but in part: but he knows all things neceſſary, and ſo far as neceſſary, his new birth teacheth him: He lives not meerly upon the outward teaching, he hath both light and liberty in himſelf; and ſo hath a tendency to theſe things in his own ſpirit, as there is a tendency in fire to aſcend.

We ſhould wonder and rejoyce, to ſee how grace conquers the courſe of ſinful nature. The new man is born to mercy and holineſs, to grace and glory, as the ſparks fly upward. Hence it is ſaid, He that is born of God cannot commit ſin, for the ſeed of God remaineth in him: As, the ſpark cannot fly downward, becauſe the heat of fire remains in it. The Apoſtle affirms it, of himſelf and his Fellow-labourers in the Goſpel, We can do nothing againſt the truth, but for the truth, 2 Cor. 13. 8. The poſſibilities and impoſſibilities of a regenerate man, are directly oppoſite to thoſe of a natural man: The one cannot ſin, the other cannot but ſin; the one can do nothing againſt the truth, the other can do nothing for the truth: gracious acts become as natural, as ſinful, when nature is changed from ſin to grace. What a bleſſed change is this, that man ſhould do good as readily, as once he did evil; that, he who was born free to iniquity, ſhould be re-born free to righteouſneſs, as the ſparks fly upward. A godly man is an heavenly ſpark: He hath a fire in his nature, which carries him upward for ever.

Thus having opened theſe two verſes, being the grounds of the following exhortation; let us now examine the matter of the exhortation it ſelf, contained in the eighth Verſe.

Verſe 8. I would ſeek unto God, and unto God would I commit my cauſe.

אולם

Our Tranſlation omits one word in the beginning of this ſentence, which though it may be underſtood in our reading, yet the expreſſion of it betters the ſence. Surely, or truly I would ſeek, &c.

There are two opinions about the meaning of theſe words; ſome conceive, that Eliphaz ſpeaks in high contempt of Job: and I may give you their ſence, by that proud Schooling, which the Phariſee gave the poor Publican, Luke 18. As that Phariſee inſulted over the Publican, thus, I thank God, I am not ſuch a one as thou art, &c. but I faſt, and I pray, &c. So, they repreſent Eliphaz here inſulting over Job, I thank God, I am not ſuch an impatient perſon as thou art; no ſuch rude curſer of my day, or complainer of my trouble; I am not (I thank God) ſo diſtracted, and ſo diſtempered as thou art; and if I had been in thy caſe, I ſhould have ſhewed more wit, and grace too, then, to do, as thou haſt done; I ſhould never have been ſo vain and fooliſh, ſo forgetful of my own duty, or the Lords Soveraignty, as, to cry out againſt and accuſe his providence and dealings with me, to lay about me like a mad man, as thou haſt done; no, I would have ſought unto God, and committed my cauſe unto him, this ſhould have been my courſe, ſuch and ſuch the frame and temper of my ſpirit.

But I rather take theſe words in a good ſence, implying much ſweetneſs and meekneſs of ſpirit in Eliphaz. And ſo this verſe is as an application of the Doctrine, contained in the former two: As if Eliphaz had ſaid, Seeing matters ſtand thus in themſelves, and theſe are undoubted truths, that afflictions come from our ſelves, and that our ſins are our own: and ſeeing thy caſe ſtands thus, that now thou art under great afflictions and troubles; I do aſſure thee my loving friend Job, were I in thy condition (I will give thee faithful counſel, and tell thee my heart, what I would do) I would no longer ſtay complaining againſt my day, curſing creatures, diſtempering my head, and diſquieting my heart with theſe paſſions; but, I would even go and addreſs my ſelf unto God, I would apply my ſelf to Heaven, I would ſeek for remedy there, earth affords it not. I have ever found this the way to eaſe my heart, when burdened; to aſſwage my ſorrows, when encreaſed; to compoſe my ſpirit, when diſtracted; to ſtrengthen my reſolutions, when unſetled: I can give thee this rule with (a probatum eſt) an aſſurance from mine own experience, in the uſe of it, and with clearneſs of conſcience, that it is my purpoſe in ſuch caſes to uſe it ever.

דרש Significat quærere diligenter & cum cura, ſed interrogatione & verbis ut plurimum.

I would ſeek unto God.] The word ſignifies a very diligent ſearch; I would ſeek exactly and enquire laboriouſly unto God. It ſignifies to ſeek by asking queſtions or by interrogating: And it imports ſeeking with much wiſdom and skill; a curious or a critical enquiry; So Eccleſ. 1. 13. I gave my heart (ſaith Solomon) to ſeek and ſearch out by wiſdom. And this ſeeking implies four things.

First, A ſuppoſition and a ſenſe of our wants; no man ſeeks that which he hath already, or, but thinks he hath it. He that is full loaths a hony comb.

Secondly, A ſtrong deſire to find that which we want; it notes not a bare deſire only, or woulding, but a kind of unquietneſs or reſtleſneſs, till we find: ſuch a deſire took hold of David, Pſal. 132. 4. I will not give reſt to mine eyes, nor ſlumber to mine eye lids, untill I find out a place for the Lord, or, untill I find the Lord.

Thirdly, A care to be directed about the means which may facilitate the finding or recovery of what we want, and thus earneſtly deſire. A ſeeking ſpirit, is a careful ſpirit, after light and counſel.

Fourthly, A diligent and faithful endeavour, in or about the uſe of thoſe means, to which counſel directs us. Through deſire a man having ſeparated himſelf, ſeeketh and intermedleth with all wiſdom, Prov. [illegible]. 1. That is, he is very induſtrious in purſuing thoſe advices, which wiſdom ſhews him, or, which are ſhewed him, as the wayes of wiſdom. A lazy ſpirit is unfit to ſeek.

I would ſeek unto God, and unto God would I commit my cauſe.] In the former clauſe, the word for God, is El, and in the latter, Elohim; both names note the power of God. El, notes power or ſtrength to act and execute; Elohim, power or authority to judge and determine. I would ſeek unto El, The ſtrong God: I would commit my cauſe to Elohim, the mighty God: As if he had ſaid, Thou art in a weak and low condition, now therefore ſeek unto God, the ſtrong God, the mighty God, who is able to deliver thee: Thou wanteſt the help of ſuch a friend as he.

אשים דברתי

The Hebrew, word for word, is thus rendred, Unto God would I put my words, or turn my ſpeech; We reach the meaning fully, rendring, Unto God I would commit my cauſe, or put my caſe.

דבר Significat verbum vel negotium, res meas ei committere. Κύριον τῶν πάντων δεσπότην ἐπικαλέσομαι. Sept.

The term which we tranſlate, cauſe, ſignifies any buſineſs or cauſe, but moſt properly a word; Explicite prayer in the turning of our thoughts into words, or the putting of our caſe to God. It is a ſpeaking to, or a pleading with the Lord. The Septuagint is clear in this ſence, I would deprecate the Lord, I would call upon the Lord, the governour of all things.

Both theſe ſignifications of the word, are profitable for us, and congruous with the ſcope of the Text, I would turn my ſpeech and prayer, or I would commit my cauſe unto God.

The committing of our cauſe to God, notes a reſignation of our ſelves, and of our condition into the hands of God: It is as much as to ſay, Let God do what he will, or determine what he pleaſeth concerning me, I will not ſtrive or contend about, queſtion or diſpute his deciſion or judgment of my cauſe: I will lay my ſelf down at his feet, and tell him how the caſe ſtands with me; then, let him do with me, what ſeems good in his eyes: This is the committing of our cauſe and condition unto God. And the Original word here uſed for God, doth very well ſuit and correſpond with this ſence; I will commit my cauſe unto God, unto Elohim, the great and impartial Judge of Heaven and Earth; the God who loves Judgment, and the habitation of whoſe Throne is righteouſneſs: The God who knows how to diſcern exactly between cauſe and cauſe, perſon and perſon, and will undoubtedly give a righteous ſentence concerning every cauſe and perſon, that comes before him. Unto this Elohim would I commit my cauſe, and refer my ſelf to his arbitration.

Obſerve, firſt, in the general; Eliphaz having reproved Job, turns himſelf to counſel and exhortation: From which we may learn,

> That, As it is our duty to reprove a fault in our brother, ſo it is our duty to adviſe and counſel him how to amend, or come out of that fault, for which we reprove him.

It is not enough to eſpy an error, but we muſt labour to rectifie it; or, to tell another that he is out of the way, but we muſt endeavour to reduce him. Many can eſpy faults and failings in others, who either know not how, or care not to reform and help them out.

> Secondly Obſerve, That, It is a duty to exhort and excite our brethren to thoſe duties wherein we find them ſlack or negligent.

Eliphaz conceived, that Job was much behind in the duty of prayer and ſelf-reſignation unto God, and therefore he quickens him up to it. The Apoſtle calls us to this Chriſtian inſpection (Heb. 3. 13.) Exhort one another daily, leſt any of you be hardned through the deceitfulneſs of ſin; ſin growing and getting ſtrength, hardens the heart; it is beſt to oppoſe it betimes, and therefore he bids them do it at all times, Exhort one another daily. Though the Apoſtle Peter (2 Pet. 1. 12.) was perſwaded of the Saints eſtabliſhment in the preſent truth, yet (ſaith he) I will not ceaſe to put you alwayes in remembrance of theſe things. It is a dangerous error (which ſome hold) that the Saints in this life may out-grow counſel and exhortation; as if there were no need to bid a godly man pray, and ſeek unto God; no need to bid a godly man to repent, or humble himſelf, or believe: he cannot but do theſe things (ſay they) theſe are connatural to him: they are indeed to the new man, within him: but let them withal remember, that the neglect of all theſe duties, is as connatural to the old man, within him. While there are two men within us, we had need every man to look, not only to one, but to one another. It may go ill with the better part, the new man, if while he hath an enemy within to oppoſe him, he hath not a friend without to help him. On this ground (beſides the command of Chriſt) the holieſt man on earth, may be exhorted to look to his holineſs: none are in more danger then they, who think they are paſt danger. And, as it is a certain argument, that a man was never good, if he deſires not to be better; ſo, it is a great argument, that a man was never good, who fears not that he may be worſe. They who are truly aſſured they cannot fall from grace, are aſſured alſo that they may fall in grace, and fall into ſin: The foundation of God ſtands ſure, but the footing of man doth not; and therefore, Let him that ſtands, take heed leſt he fall: And let them who ſee their brethren heedleſly falling, lend them the right hand of exhortation to raiſe them up again: and when they are careleſs of, or wandring from the Lord, lead them by the hand of counſel, into wayes where he may be found. I would ſeek unto God.

Obſerve in the third place, That, We ought to manage our exhortations with meekneſs and tenderneſs.

This of Eliphaz is a mild and tender expreſſion; and to make it more eaſie, he puts the exhortation (as was noted before) in the firſt, not in the ſecond perſon; he doth not ſay, ſeeing afflictions come not from the ground, and that man is born unto trouble, therefore do thou ſeek unto God, and do thou commit thy cauſe unto God; but ſeeing thy caſe is thus, truly brother, I adviſe thee as I would adviſe mine own ſoul, Seek unto God. It moves ſtrongly and gains upon the affection of another, to tell him, we would do the thing our ſelves which we deſire he ſhould, and we wiſh him as we do our own ſouls.

Fourthly Obſerve, That, It is both our wiſdom and our duty in all our afflictions to ſeek unto God.

I would (ſaith Eliphaz) if I were in thy caſe, ſeek unto God. Unto whom ſhould we go, but unto God? He is our beſt friend, when it is beſt with us; and he is our only friend, when it is ill with us: all other friends will be Phyſitians of no value, as Job himſelf found them, therefore ſeek unto God. As the Diſciples ſaid unto Chriſt, when Chriſt asked them, Will ye alſo go away? Whither ſhall we go (ſay they) for thou haſt the words of eternal life? So ſaith the ſoul in afflictions, To whom ſhall I go? Unto this creature or that creature, unto this friend or that friend? No, I will ſeek unto God, That is the wiſeſt and ſhorteſt courſe: all other courſes are about, if not in vain. Other wayes may be uſed as helps, but this muſt; pitch mainly upon God.

When we are directed to ſeek unto God in afflictions, it ſpeaks four things.

Firſt, To ſeek unto God about the cauſe of our afflictions, deſire that God would inform us, what his mind is in ſending ſuch an affliction, or what it is he aims at, in ſending it. Afflictions are the Lords meſſengers, and we ſhould never be quiet, till we know their errand. This is it which Job complained of in Chap. 3. That his way was hid, which was expounded, that he knew not the cauſe of his afflictions, the cauſe was hidden; and ſo was the iſſue, he could neither tell how he came in, nor how he ſhould come out; If our way in afflictions be hid, we muſt ſeek unto God for the opening of it.

Secondly, To ſeek unto God for ſtrength and patience, to bear the affliction. As the affliction comes from God, ſo doth the ſtrength by which we ſtand under it, or, get victory over it.

Thirdly, To ſeek unto God for the ſanctifying of affliction to our profit, that we may be partakers of his holineſs. Afflictions are the good creatures of God, and they (as all other creatures) are ſanctified to us, by the word and prayer. We have as much reaſon to ſeek unto God for a bleſſing upon our daily Rod, as upon our daily Bread.

Fourthly, Seek unto God for cure and eaſe, for the removing or mitigating of them. In their affliction they will ſeek me early, ſaith the Lord, Hoſ. 5. 15. But, for what will they ſeek? even, for medicine and healing. Come and let us return unto the Lord: for he hath torn, and he will heal us; he hath ſmitten, and he will bind us up, Hoſ. 6. 1.

Obſerve from the other branch, And unto God would I commit my cauſe,

That, It is a very great eaſe unto the ſoul in affliction, to commit our cauſe unto God, and to put our affairs into his hand.

Man is not able to ſtand alone, under the weight of his afflictions. Both ſin and ſorrow are burdens too heavy for us to bear: if you would have eaſe, lay both upon Chriſt; it is no unbecoming boldneſs to do ſo, for, he calls us to it, and bids us do it; Pſal. 55. 22. Caſt thy burden upon the Lord, and he ſhall ſuſtain thee. Chriſt is willing to bear a part, and put his ſhoulder under theſe burdens; yea, it is his ſtrength that bears the whole. The committing of our cauſe to God, is at once our duty, our ſafety, and our eaſe. Thus David did, Pſal. 142. 2. I powred my complaint before him, I ſhewed before him my trouble. David brought out his evils, and ſet them (as it were) one by one, in the ſight of God, and told him, thus it is with me. We may ſee David acting this rule, to the life, when Abſalom had fomented a moſt unnatural rebellion againſt Him: He haſtens out of Jeruſalem, All the Country wept with a loud voice, and the Prieſts with the Ark of the Covenant of God came with him alſo, In what poſture was Davids ſpirit, in the midſt of theſe commotions? His words to Zadok ſhew (no doubt) the true picture of it. And the King ſaid to Zadok, carry back the Ark of God into the City; if I ſhall find favour in the eyes of the Lord, he will bring me again, and ſhew me both it and his habitation: but if he ſay thus, I have no delight in thee, behold, here am I, let him do to me as ſeemeth good unto him (2 Sam. 15. 25, 26.) As if he had ſaid, I am uncertain what God will do with me: but I am reſolved to let the Lord do with me what he will, I am willing to be what God will have me; I lay my cauſe and leave my buſineſs at his foot-ſtool, if he will have me dethron'd and unking'd, I am content my honour ſhould lie in the duſt. If he ſay, I ſhall never come again to Jeruſalem, or ſee the Ark of his ſtrength and preſence, I am content for ever to be baniſht Jeruſalem, never to ſee the Ark (which to me is the moſt beautiful and deſirable ſight in the world) any more. Here was ſelf-reſignation, and cauſe-committing to the height. And when David had brought his heart to this, his heart was unburden'd, he (doubtleſs) found the weight and ſtreſs of the whole buſineſs lying upon God himſelf. His cauſe was with God, and his cares were with God; and therefore, though his throne ſhak'd, yet his heart was fixed. Nor do I find, that ever his heart was more fixed, then in this ſtreſs, while his Throne and Crown were tottering. Hezekiah did the like with like ſucceſs. In the day of that great and publick calamity, he went and ſpread the letter of Rabſhaketh before God; he, as it were, deſired God to read it, to obſerve the blaſphemous contents, and ſee in what condition he was. He that commits his cauſe to God, breaths a compoſed ſpirit, when the greateſt ſtorms and diſtractions are upon his body or eſtate, upon Church or State.

Only take this caution, be ſure the cauſe you commit to God, be a good cauſe. The committing of a ſinful cauſe to God, is a diſhonour to, and a high ſtrain of preſumption againſt God. We may commit a doubtful cauſe to God, deſiring, that he wou'd try, and examine, whether it be good or bad. But we muſt not commit a doubtful cauſe to God, deſiring him to protect it, or us in it, whether it be good or bad. And if (in this ſenſe) we may not commit a doubtful cauſe to God; what ſhall we think of thoſe, who ſhall dare to commit an openly unjuſt and wicked cauſe to God? A wicked mans prayer is alwayes ſinful; but, how abominable is it, when he prayes to be proſpered or directed in acting his ſin, or to be ſtrengthned in ſuffering (impenitently) for his ſin? There is no gracious act, but a wicked man, at one time or other, will imitate it. He will pray, and repent, and forgive, and commit his cauſe to God; and when he dyes, commit his ſoul to God. There is no truſting to a mouth full of good words; while the heart will not empty it ſelf of wickedneſs. It is good alwayes to commit our cauſe and our ſouls to God: but a cauſe or a ſoul are not therefore good, becauſe committed unto God. The language of Iſrael is often ſpoken by the men of Aſhdod; and many who never had the leaſt part of holineſs in them, can yet ſet themſelves (when there is no remedy) to act a part in it. The Apoſtle Peter gives us this rule, (1 Epiſt. 4. 19.) Let them that ſuffer according to the will of God, commit the keeping of their ſouls to him, in well-doing, as unto a faithful Creator. Except we ſuffer according to the will (or from the hand) of God, and, alſo, do well in our ſufferings, Chriſt will not admit this Feoffment; though we commit our ſelves to him, he will not accept the truſt. But he that ſuffers according to (or by) the will of God, and doth well in ſuffering; that is, hath a good cauſe, and a good conſcience: He (I ſay) may commit all to God, and (in the mercy of the moſt High) he ſhall not miſcarry.

Laſtly, Whereas Eliphaz ſaith, I would ſeek unto God, were I in thy caſe, > Obſerve, That, It is a wiſe courſe in adviſing others, to ſhew our ſelves ready to follow the ſame adviſe.

It wins exceedingly upon others, to take our counſel, when it appears we are ready to follow the ſame counſel our ſelves. We ought to do nothing unto others, but what we would have done unto our ſelves; and we ſhould adviſe nothing to others, but what we our ſelves would do: It puts ſtrength into a rule, when he that gives it, is ready to enliven it by his own practice. As a Phyſitian, for the encouragement of his Patient to take a nauſeous medicine, will ſay to him, Sir, you ſeem unwilling to drink it, but if I were ſick and diſtempered, as you are, I would drink it readily; and that you may ſee there is no hurt in it, I will taſte a little my ſelf; his taſting ſweetens it, and the Patient likes it well. Thus when either Miniſter or private friend offers adviſe or counſel, and ſhall ſay, thus I would do, this I would follow; this takes upon the heart: whereas it diſparages prayer or any duty, to ſay to another, Seek unto God, put your caſe unto him, faſt and pray, when he that gives the counſel neglects all theſe duties, and is careleſs of communion with God.

Chriſt ſaith of the Phariſees, that they bound heavy burthens upon the ſhoulders of others. Theſe burdens were counſels and directions, rules, and canons; they would have men do thus and thus, in the manner of Gods worſhip, or daily converſe with men. But, They themſelves would not touch them with one of their fingers; (Matth. 23. 4.) That is, they would not practiſe them in the leaſt degree. As to do evil with both hands, (Mic. 7. 3.) notes the higheſt degree both of deſire and endeavour, in doing evil: So not to touch that which is good with a finger, notes a total neglect of doing good. A finger is the leaſt member, and a Touch is the leaſt act; then theſe Phariſees not touching with a finger, imports they did not act at all. It is good to act a rule privately by way of experiment, before we put it upon others: but it is moſt neceſſary to act it by way of example, when we have publiſhed it to, and preſt it upon others. It was a ſpeech of one of the Ancients, I never taught my people any thing, but what I had firſt practiſed and experimented my ſelf. Doctrine is ſooner followed by the eye, then by the ear; he that (like the Scribes and Phariſees Matth. 23. 3. ſaith and doth not, ſhall find but few to do what he ſaith. No man ought to teach any thing which he is not willing (as he is call'd) to do and obſerve himſelf. It is very ſinful to give counſel, which we will not take. Our works ought to be the practiſe of our words, and as practicable as our words. Wo unto thoſe of whom it may be ſaid, as Chriſt of the Phariſees, Matth. 23. 3. Whatſoever they bid you obſerve, that obſerve and do, but do not ye after their works.

VERS. 9.

Which doth great things and unſearchable; marvellous things without number.

THis context unto verſe 17. contains the ſecond Argument, by which Eliphaz ſtrengthneth his former exhortation, To ſeek unto God, and to commit his cauſe unto him. The Argument may be thus formed.

> He is to be ſought unto, both in duty, and in wiſdom; and unto him our cauſe is to be committed, who is of abſolute, infinite power, wiſdom and goodneſs.
>
> But God is of abſolute, infinite power, wiſdom and goodneſs.
>
> Therefore it is our duty and our wiſdom to ſeek unto God, and unto God to commit our cauſe.

That, God is infinite in power, wiſdom and goodneſs, Eliphaz proves by an enumeration or induction of divers effects and works, which call for infinite power, wiſdom and goodneſs to produce and actuate them.

Theſe effects are laid down, firſt in general, verſe 9. Who doth great things and unſearchable; marvellous things without number.

Then, theſe works or effects are given in particulars; and the firſt particular inſtance of Gods mighty power, is in natural things, or his preſervation of the world, at verſe 10. Who giveth rain upon the earth, and ſendeth waters upon the fields.

The ſecond inſtance is given in civil things, or his adminiſtrations in the world, at verſ. 12, 13, 14. And that we may conſider two wayes.

Firſt, In deſtroying the counſels and plots of the wicked, in verſ. 12, 13, and 14. He that diſappointeth the devices of the crafty, ſo that their hands cannot perform their enterpriſe, &c.

Secondly, In delivering thoſe who are in trouble, verſ. 15. He ſaveth the poor from the Sword, &c. Theſe are works of Power.

Further the goodneſs of God ſhines forth in two things.

Firſt, By the preſent intendment, or end aimed at, in theſe mighty works, verſ. 11. To ſet up on high thoſe that be low, that thoſe which mourn may be exalted to ſafety.

Secondly, By the future benefit of theſe works, and that in two reſpects, verſ. 16.

Firſt, The raiſing up of their ſpirits who are oppreſſed; So the poor hath hope.

Secondly, The confounding and ſhaming of their oppreſſors, expreſt in their ſilence, at the latter end of verſ. 16. And iniquity ſtoppeth her mouth.

Thus you have a brief account of the ſeveral points contained in this argument, and the diſpoſition of the whole context. For the better underſtanding thereof, we will firſt conſider what might be the aim or ſcope of Eliphaz, in making ſo accurate and large a deſcription of God, in his great and marvellous works, and then ſurvay theſe works in order as they are digeſted.

To the former, we may take notice of a four-fold aim, which Eliphaz might have in deſcribing theſe works of God.

Firſt, Plainly to aſſert the providence of God, in ordering or diſpoſing all actions and events here below: and ſo it is in proſecution of what he had ſaid in verſ. 6. Affliction cometh not forth of the duſt, neither doth trouble ſpring out of the ground.

Or ſecondly, His intent might be, to humble Job, to bridle and take down his ſpirit, which he conceived overbold with, and too much heightned towards the Almighty; a diſcovery whereof himſelf made in his extravagant ſpeeches before noted, in Chap. 3. The remembrance of God in his greatneſs, is one of the readieſt means to humble man: And God himſelf took this way to humble Job, in the latter end of this Book, even, by a large diſcourſe of his own power, exemplified in many great acts and pieces of the creation.

Or thirdly, The intent of Eliphaz might be, to ſupport and comfort Job in his afflictions, by ſhewing him a God that had done ſuch wonders, and therefore able to work another wonder in delivering and raiſing him up again: A God, who could provide medicines for all his diſeaſes, heal all his breaches, repair all his loſſes, ſupply all his wants, and reſolve all his doubts. To conſider God in himſelf, and in his works, who he is, and what he doth, is a mighty encouragement to ſeek unto God in our greateſt extremities, in the ſaddeſt and cloudieſt day of our afflictions. Neither can we do any thing more prevalent, for the ſupport and relief of our own ſpirits, in a time when we are loweſt, then to ſpread before the eye of our own thoughts, the power, greatneſs and goodneſs of the high God, in his works and wonders.

A fourth intent in probability was to ſtop Jobs curioſity, in enquiring ſo much into the reaſon of Gods dealing with him; which Eliphaz it ſeems obſerved in the complaints of Chap. 3. where Job expoſtulates, Why is light given to a man whoſe way is hid, and whom God hath hedged in? Job was troubled, becauſe he could not ſee the bottom of Gods dealings with him; he could not ſee through them, either what the cauſe was, why he came into thoſe troubles, or by what iſſues and out-lets, he ſhould eſcape thoſe troubles. Now, to ſtop Jobs curioſity in prying too far, or too boldly, into the ſecret workings of God; Eliphaz tells him, That God doth great things, and unſearchable: no marvel therefore, if his wayes were hid; That he doth marvellous things without number, no marvail then, if he could not meaſure his dealings, by the line of humane underſtanding, or ſum up their account by the beſt of his Arithmetick.

This in general, for the common tendency of his diſcourſe, about thoſe noble acts of divine Providence in earthly things. I come now to open the words in particular.

Which doth great things and unſearchable, marvellous things without number.

Which doth.] He ſpeaks in the preſent tenſe, he ſayes not, which hath done great things, or, which will do great things; but which doth great things. And that notes not only a preſent act, but a continued act, or an everlaſting act; or, as if the workings of God were but an act, paſt, and to come, all included in the preſent, He doth. As in his Nature and Eſſence, though God was from all eternity, and ſhall be unto all eternity, yet his Name is, I am. So in his works, though he hath done great things, and ſhall no great things for ever, yet all are comprehended in this, I do, or He doth great things. Chriſt (John 5.17.) ſpeaks this language, My Father worketh hitherto: worketh; All that which God had done, and all that he ſhould do, is to be looked upon as his preſent act, My Father worketh hitherto.

עשה Aptè, concinnè, & exquiſitè, facit. Eſau vocatus, quia cũ naſceretur fuit actus & perfectus pilis. Eſau ſonat perfectũ & ornatũ, nam perfectior pueris, i. e. inſtructus pilis in lucem venerit. Jun. in loc.

Again, there is ſomewhat to be conſidered in the natural emphaſis of the word it ſelf, as well as in that circumſtantial of the time. The word which we tranſlate, Doth, ſignifies more then an ordinary Doing; which doth great things. The Criticks obſerve, that in ſtrictneſs and propriety of the Hebrew, it ſignifies to do a thing compleatly, perfectly and exactly, or (as we ſay) the ſetting of our laſt hand to a work. Hence Eſau (Gen. 25.25.) had his name. When Jacob and Eſau were born, Eſau came forth firſt, and the Text ſaith, they called his name Eſau; and why? becauſe he was born, made up, in greater perfection, then an ordinary child. Eſau ſignifies, adorned and perfected, becauſe he came into the world hairy, or with hair upon him, which is both a natural ornament, and an argument of natural ſtrength, activity and heat of ſpirit, &c. Hence they call'd him, Eſau: So then, the word [doth] imports doing, not by way of eſſay or inchoation, but doing compleatly, or to carry a thing on, or up to an extraordinary degree of perfection. I ſhall give one Scripture to illuſtrate that ſignificancy of the word, Iſa. 43.7. where the Lord by the Prophet, ſhewing the abundant increaſe of the Church, ſpeaks thus, Bring my ſons from far, and my daughters from the ends of the earth; even every one that is called by my name, for I have created him for my glory, I have formed him, yea I have made him. Obſerve, here is a pair gradation in thoſe three words, Created, formed, made; I have created, ſignifies the bringing of a thing from a not-being, to a being. But, ſaith God, I have not only given him a being, but, I have formed him; which notes the limming, proportioning and poliſhing a thing: And not only have I done ſo; but, in the third place, (which is the word of the Text) I have made him. There is more in this word, then in the former two, and therefore we tranſlate it with an emphaſis; yea, I have made him; that is, I have not only given him a being and a ſhape, but I have put upon him all the perfections of nature; yea, and the perfections of grace, the impreſſions of my ſpecial love and favour; I have lifted him up to the top of all, and ſo ſome render the word, I have magnified or made him great; I have exalted and ſet him upon the higheſt pinnacles of perfections, and mountains of holineſs.

ברא Produxit ad eſſe יצר Conſtituit rem in forma ſua. עשה Perfecit, diſpoſuit.

Hence Obſerve, When God begins a work, he compleats it and carries it thorough.

He doth not only Create, and give a being; Form, and give proportion: but He doth, or He makes, giving beauty and exactneſs to his works. Whether we conſider the works of God as Natural, Civil, or Spiritual; in this ſence God doth them, Deut. 32. 4. Moſes ſpeaks in generall concerning all the works of God; He is a Rock, and his work is perfect: The works of Creation are admirable to the eye; the works of providence, how often do they fill the heart with admiration! That which he ſpake to Samuel concerning the houſe of Ely, is appliable both to his works of Mercy and of Judgment; When I begin, I will alſo make an end, 1 Sam. 3. 12. that is, I will do it fully, there is nothing ſhall take me off, or ſtay me in the mid way; I will not work to halves, I will alſo make an end. And ſo it is in ſpirituals, when once God hath begun, he carries on his work of grace; when once he hath laid the foundation ſtone of mercy, he never leaves, until he hath ſet up the top ſtone, the higheſt ſtone of Glory. Hence the Apoſtle (Heb. 12.) entitles Chriſt, The author and finiſher of our Faith; that is, the beginner and ender, Alpha and Omega, firſt and laſt about our faith. It ſhall never be ſaid of any work of God (as Luke 14.) That he began to build, but could not finiſh it.

And as he finiſhes, ſo he beautifies: all his works are full of order and comelineſs: He doth his work exquiſitely (or as we ſay) artificially; yea, thoſe works that we look upon as full of confuſion, are full of order; and thoſe works in which we ſee no form, or nothing but deformity, even theſe will one day appear (now they are) admirable in beauty and comelineſs. That which the Apoſtle ſpeaks in his exhortation to Timothy, 2 Tim. 2. 15. bidding him do the work of an Evangeliſt, bidding him ſhew himſelf a Workman that needeth not to be aſhamed; is moſt true concerning the great God of Heaven and Earth: He ſhews himſelf a workman, or a worker that needeth not to be aſhamed: When he works, he doth the work of a God; He works like himſelf: Man cannot ſo much as be ſuſpected to have done ſuch things: The Name, that is, the wiſdom, power and goodneſs of God, is written upon them in ſo fair and clear a letter, that it muſt be ſaid, by way of aſſertion, This hath God wrought: And by way of admiration, what hath God wrought! Numb. 22. 23. A man (ſc. a meer natural man beholding theſe things) ſhall ſay, verily he is a God that judgeth the earth, Pſal. 58.11. Man cannot judge, or do like this. The Lord needs not engrave or ſubſcribe his Name to his works; His works, like ſo many Capital letters, ſpell, and like ſo many Heraulds, proclaim his Name.

Which doth great things.] To paſs from the act or manner of doing, we will conſider the object; He doth great things. Some men with a great deal of pains do nothing; and others with a great deal of Art do a thing of nothing, a trifle, a toy, a meer fancy; at moſt, ſome mean or inferior work takes up their time, ſkill and ſtudy: But when God goes to work, we may expect a noble work, He doth great things. The works of God, anſwer the ſtile or Attributes of God. He is a great God, and His are great works. The works of God ſpeak a God. And here are four things ſpoken in this one verſe, of the works of God, which ſpeak aloud, This is the finger of God. I will firſt bundle them together, and then, both take and weigh them aſunder.

He doth { Firſt, Great things.
Secondly, Unſearchable.
Thirdly, Wonderful.
Fourthly, Innumerable; or, without number.

No works of man or Angel, are capable of ſuch a fourfold ſtamp as this; no, nor any one work of all the creatures put together, could ever be ſtamped with any one of theſe characters, in any compariſon, with the works of God. Some, in a ſence, have done great things, but none have done things unſearchable: Man may fathome the works of man, his cloſeſt wayes are not paſt finding out. As there was never any thing made ſo ſtrongly by the ſtrength of man, but there was ſome other ſtrength in man, that could match, yea overthrow it; ſo there was never any thing ſo wiſely, ſo artificially or myſteriouſly contrived, by the skill, knowledge and deepeſt underſtanding of a man; but that the skill, knowledge and underſtanding of another man, hath, or might have ridled and ſearcht it out. The works of moſt men are wrought above ground, and their intentions flote and ſwim upon the face of their actions: And although ſome, as the Prophet ſpeaks (*Iſa.*29.) work deep to hide their counſels (as they hope, not only from men but) from God; yet God gives other men a light, to diſcover the very loweſt Hell of thoſe counſels; even all the depths of Satan, The Maſter-Engineer of thoſe mines and ſubterranean contrivances. Further, Though ſome men do that, which makes other men (eſpecially fools, or men weak in knowledge) wonder, yet no (Thaumaturgus, or) wonder-worker ever did that, which makes all men wonder. Or, if it ſhould be granted, that any have done things great, unſearchable, wonderful, yet I am ſure, none have done theſe things without number; one great, unſearchable, wonderful work, is task enough for one mans life: And a little skill in numbers will ſerve the turn, to caſt up, and give us the total ſum and number, of all the works of all men, which deſervedly bear (as mans may) the title and ſuperſcription of great, unſearchable, wonderful.

More directly. Firſt, He doth great things. There is a greatneſs upon every thing God doth: The great God leaves (as it were) the print of his own greatneſs, even upon thoſe things which we account little; little works of Nature, have a greatneſs in them, conſidered as done by God; and little works of Providence, have a greatneſs in them, conſidered as done by God: If the thing which God doth, be not great in it ſelf, yet it is great, becauſe he doth it. As there is no ſin of man little in it ſelf (though comparatively it be) becauſe committed againſt a great God: So there is no work of God little (though comparatively it be) becauſe acted by the great God. Further, if God doth a thing, which in it ſelf conſidered, or conſidered according to the line and rule of the creature, is unjuſt; yet becauſe God doth it, or commands it to be done, his very doing or commanding ſtamps juſtice upon it; as is clear in the caſe of Abrahams call to ſacrifice his ſon, and the Iſraelites carrying away the jewels of the Egyptians. If then the Act of God (whoſe will is the ſupreme law) makes that lawful, which according to the common rule, is unlawful; how much more doth the act of God make that great, which in ordinary proportion is accounted ſmall.

Again, When it is ſaid, God doth great things, we muſt not underſtand it, as if God dealt not about little things, or as if he let the ſmall matters of the world paſs, and did not meddle with them: Great in this place, is not excluſive of Little, for, he doth not only great, but ſmall, even the ſmalleſt things. The Heathens ſaid, their Jupiter had no leiſure to be preſent at the doing of ſmall things, or it did not become him to attend them. God attendeth the doing of ſmall things, and it is his honour to do ſo: the falling of a Sparrow to the ground, is one of the ſmalleſt things that is, yet that is not without the providence of God; the hairs of our head are ſmall things, yet as not too many, ſo not too ſmall for the great God to take notice of; Chriſt aſſures us this, The very hairs of your head are all numbred, Matth. 10. 29, 30. We ought highly to adore and reverence the power and inſpection of God about the loweſt, the meaneſt things and actions. Is it not with the great God, as with great men, or, as it was with that great man Moſes, who had ſuch a burthen of buſineſs in the government of that people upon his ſhoulders, that he could not bear it; therefore his father in law adviſeth him, to call in the aid of others, and divide the work: But how? The great matters, the weighty and knotty controverſies muſt be brought to Moſes; but the petty differences and leſſer cauſes, are tranſmitted and handed over to inferior judges; And it ſhall be, that every great matter, they ſhall bring unto thee, but every ſmall matter they ſhall judge; Exod. 18. 22. But God, the great Judge of Heaven and Earth, hath not only the great and weighty, but ſmall matters brought unto him; the leaſt motions of the creature, are heard and reſolved, diſpoſed and guided by his wiſdom and power.

Non vacat exiguis rebus adeſſe Jovi.

You will ſay, What is this greatneſs, and what are theſe great things? I ſhall hint an anſwer to both, for the clearing of the words.

There is a two-fold greatneſs upon the works of God. There is (ſo we may diſtinguiſh) Firſt, the greatneſs of quantity. Secondly, the greatneſs of quality or vertue. That work of God which is greateſt in the bulk or quantity of it, is the work of Creation: How ſpacious, huge and mighty a fabrick is Heaven and Earth, with all things compacted and comprehended in their circumference! And in this work, ſo vaſt for quantity, what admirable qualities are every where intermixt! Matter and form, power and order, quantity and quality, are ſo equally ballanced, that no eye can diſcern, or judgment of man determin, which weighs moſt in this mighty work.

Yet among theſe works of God, ſome are called Great, in regard of quality, rather then quantity. As it is ſaid (*Gen.*1.16.) That God made two great lights, the greater light to rule the day, and the leſſer to rule the night. (Sun and Moon) theſe are great lights, not that there are no lights great but theſe, or that both theſe are greater then all other heavenly lights; for many Stars are greater then the Moon, as the doctrine and obſervation of Aſtronomers aſſures us; but the leſſer of theſe is great, in regard of light and influence, excellency and uſefulneſs to the world.

And as theſe works of creation, ſo the works of providence are great works: When God deſtroyes great enemies, the greatneſs of his work is proclaimed. When great Babilon, or Babylon the great, ſhall be deſtroyed, the Saints ſong of triumph ſhall be, great and marvailous are thy works, Lord God Almighty, juſt and true are thy wayes, thou King of Saints, (Rev. 15. 3.) Great and marvellous works, why? Becauſe thou haſt deſtroyed great Babylon, and haſt executed great judgment, and powred out great wrath. So, great works of mercy and deliverance to his people, are cried up with admiration, And hath given us ſuch a deliverance as this, ſaith Ezra, Chap. 9. 13. When the Jews returned from their captivity out of Babylon; that mercy was a kind of miracle, that deliverance a wonder, and therefore he mentions it in terms of admiration, Such deliverance as this! How great? So great, that he had neither words to expreſs, nor example to parallel it; but lets it ſtand nakedly by it ſelf, in its native glory: Such deliverance as this.

The ſpiritual works of God, are yet far greater; the work of redemption, is called a great Salvation; the converſion and juſtification of a ſinner, the pardon of our ſins, and the purifying of our nature, are works as high above creation and providence, as the Heavens are in compariſon of the earth. Take two or three Corolaries or Deductions from hence;

> As firſt, It is the property of God to do great things: And becauſe it is his property, he can as eaſily do great things as ſmall things.

Among men, Great ſpirits count nothing great: A great ſpirit ſwallows and overcomes all difficulties: Much more is it ſo with the great God, who is a Spirit, all Spirit, and the Father of ſpirits; To the great God there is nothing great: He can as eaſily do the greateſt as the leaſt: 1 Sam. 14. 6. 2 Chron. 14. There is no reſtraint to the Lord, to ſave with few or by many; or, it is nothing with thee to help, whether with many, or with them that have no power: It is

Animo magno nihil magnum.

is not ſo much, as the duſt of the ballance with God, to turn the ſcale of victory in battel, whether there be more or leſs: Seeing all Nations before him, are but as the duſt of the ballance, as nothing, yea leſs then nothing. So that whether you put him upon any great work or ſmall work, you put the Lord to no more ſtreſs, to no more pains in the one, then in the other, for he doth great things; and to do them, is his property, not his ſtudy; his nature, not his labour. He needs not make proviſions or preparations, for what he would have done; the ſame act by which he wills the doing of a thing, doth it, if he wills. What great things hath the Lord done in our dayes? We may ſay as the Virgin (Luke 1.49.) He that is Mighty, hath done to us great things, and Holy is his Name; and as they, Act. 2. 11. We have both heard and ſeen the great things of God done amongſt us; and I believe greater things are yet to be done. It was a great work at the beginning of time, to make Heaven and Earth: and will it not be a great work, to ſhake Heaven and Earth? That God hath ſaid, he will do, before the end of time. Yet once it is a little while, and I will ſhake the Heavens and the Earth, and the Sea, and the dry Land, Hag. 2.6. The words following, ſeem to interpret this Earth-quake, and Heaven-quake; I will ſhake all Nations. Again, It was a great work to make the old Heaven and Earth: and will it not be a great work to make a new Heaven and a new Earth? That is the buſineſs which God is about in theſe latter dayes, as he promiſed, Iſa. 65.17. Behold I create a new Heaven and a new Earth; what is that? Jeruſalem a praiſe, and her people a joy. When God reformeth the face of his Church, and ſettles the affairs of Kingdoms and Common-wealths, he makes new Heavens and a new Earth.

Τὰ μεγαλεια τȣ̃ Θεȣ̃. Magnalia Dei.

And if it be the property of God to do great things, then it is a duty in us, to expect great things. We ought to look for ſuch things, as come up to, and anſwer the power and greatneſs of God; we diſhonour, and as it were, humble God, when we look only for low and mean things; Great expectations from God, honour the greatneſs of God. As the Lord expects to receive the greateſt ſervices from us, becauſe he is a great King, Mal. 1.14. So we ought to expect, that we ſhall receive the greateſt mercies from the Lord, becauſe he is a great King; It diſhonours God as much and more, when we believe little, as when we do little. A great King thinks himſelf diſhonoured, if you ask him a petty ſuit; he looks more what becomes him to give, or do in bounty, then the petitioner to ask in neceſſity. The Great Alexander could tell his ſuiter (whom he had more aſtoniſh'd then reliev'd with his favour) that though the thing might be too great for him to receive, yet it was not too great for Alexander to give. If duſt and aſhes can ſpeak and think at this rate; O how large is the heart of God! Then, it is not only our priviledge, but our duty to ask and believe great things; we ought to have a great faith, becauſe God doth great things; Is it not unbecoming to have a great God, and a little Faith? to have a God that doth great things, and we to be a people (his people) that cannot believe great things? nay, to have a God who can eaſily do great things, and we a people, that can hardly believe ſmall things? How unbecoming! If ſome ſmall thing be to be done, then uſually faith is upon the wing; but if it be a great thing, then faith is clogg'd, her wings are clipt, and we at a ſtand; why ſhould it be ſaid unto us, as, Chriſt ſaid unto his Diſciples. O ye of little faith? It may be as dangerous to us, if not as ſinful, not to believe the day of great things, as to deſpiſe the day of ſmall things. Why ſhould not our faith in a holy ſcorn, baffle the greateſt difficulties, in that language of the Prophet (Zech. 4.7.) Who art thou O great Mountain? before Zerubbabel thou ſhalt become a plain.

There is another uſeful conſequence from this truth.

He that doth great works, ought to have great praiſes.

As we ought to have great faith, that he will do great things; ſo he ought to have great acknowledgments, when he hath done great things. Shall God do great things for us, and ſhall we give him ſome poor, lean, ſtarven ſacrifices of praiſe? It is very obſervable, that, as ſoon as the Prophet had deſcribed the Lord in his greatneſs (Iſa. 40. 15.) he adds in the very next verſe, And Lebanon is not ſufficient to burn, nor the beaſts thereof ſufficient for a burnt Offering. That is, no ſervices are great enough, for this great God. Lebanon abounded in ſpices for Incenſe and perfume; it abounded with cattel for Sacrifice and Burnt-offerings; to ſay that Lebanon had not ſpice enough to burn for Incenſe, nor beaſts enough to burn for Sacrifice, ſhews the Lord far exalted in greatneſs, above all the praiſes and holy ſervices of his people.

Laſtly, Seeing God doth great works for us, let us ſhew great zeal for, great love unto the Lord.

We ſhould aim at the doing of great things for God, ſeeing God indeed doth great things for us. So much of the firſt Attribute of the works of God. Who doth great things,

ואינחקר

And unſearchable.] The Hebrew is, and no ſearch. The word imports the ſearch of thoſe things which are moſt abſtruſe and ſecret. As the heart, which the Lord only can ſearch, Jer. 17.15. The heart lies too low, not only for the eye, but for the underſtanding of man. Hence it is uſed, Pſal. 95.4. to note the Foundations, or deep places of the earth, becauſe they cannot be known, but by deep ſearchings, or rather, becauſe they are beyond the deepeſt ſearch of man. And the ſame phraſe we find, Pſal. 145.3. Great is the Lord, and greatly to be praiſed, and his greatneſs is unſearchable; or according to the letter, of his greatneſs no ſearch. As when the Pſalmiſt ſpeaks of the greatneſs of God, in his nature and eſſence, preſently he adds, and of his greatneſs there is no ſearch; ſo here, when Eliphaz ſpeaks of the greatneſs of God, in his works, the next word is, they are unſearchable. As God in himſelf is great, and of his greatneſs there is no ſearch; ſo many of the works of God are ſo great, that of their greatneſs there is no ſearch; that is, you cannot find out their greatneſs by any ſearch. God is in working (and ſo are men, the hand cannot act beyond the head) as he is in underſtanding. There is no ſearching of his underſtanding (Iſa. 40.28.) Therefore there is none of his working.

Penetralia terræ, ut Aben Ezra explicat, quæ ſcire nequeunt, niſi exquiſita perſcrutatione, vel potiùs quod homini minimè ſunt perſcrutabilia, Deo antè in propatulo. Buxtorf.

This unſearchableneſs of the works of God, may be conſidered two wayes.

Firſt, As that, which cannot be found by enquiry.

Secondly, As that, which ought not to be found or enquired.

There are ſome works of God, which are not to be ſearched into; they are to be adored by believing, not to be pryed into by ſearching; and in that ſence they are called unſearchable (Rom. 11.33.) O the depth of the riches, both of the wiſdom and knowledge of God! How unſearchable are his judgments! Many of his judgments, that is, his works of judgment, are ſo unſearchable, that it is not induſtry or duty, but preſumption, to ſearch into them. As thoſe unſpeakable words, which Paul heard in the third heavens, were ſuch as (2 Cor. 12.4.) it is not lawful for man to utter; ſo unſearchable judgements may be interpreted ſuch, as it is not lawful for a man to ſearch. Great Princes will not have all their actions ſcann'd, at leaſt, not by all, They keep ſtate in their works. If all a mans actions be level to the loweſt, his perſon will be ſo too. The reaſon why the works of Antichriſt were to be ſo myſterious and miraculous, is, becauſe he was to be adored and Godded, to be exalted above all (in man) that is called God, or that is worſhipped, 2 Theſ. 2.4. They who aſpire to divine honour, have, or at leaſt pretend to have many ſecrets. Becauſe ſecret things belong unto God, things revealed unto man, (Deut. 29.29.) And as the Angel at once anſwers and reproves Manoah (Judges 13.18.) Why askeſt thou after my name, ſeeing it is ſecret, or, wonderful? As if he had ſaid, thou muſt not enquire after my name, for it is a ſecret. Such prying into the works of God, is as dangerous, as prying into the Ark of God (1 Sam. 6.19.) It were more profitable for us, and more honourable to God, if we did ſearch our own ſecret wayes more, and Gods leſs.

Arcana imperii.

There are other works of God, which cannot be ſearched, yet we may and ought to ſearch them; it is our duty to ſtudy them, though we cannot find them. We may ſearch and find many of the works of God, with our ſenſes; there are others which we cannot find, though we ſearch for them, with our reaſon and underſtanding. As ſome parts of the word of God (2 Pet. 3.16.) So ſome parts of his works are ſo hard to be underſtood, that unſtable men wreſt them to their own deſtruction. The mind of God is very legible in many of his works, and we may read them without a Comment or Interpreter. Other of his works are myſterious and enigmatical, very riddles, in ſo much, that if an ordinary man looking on them, ſhould be queſtioned, Underſtandeſt thou what thou ſeeſt? he muſt anſwer, as the Eunuch did Philip, How can I, except ſome man teach me? And theſe works are unſearchable, two wayes.

Firſt, In regard of the manner of doing: we cannot find out the wayes and contrivances of Gods work. His wayes are in the deep, and his footſteps are not known, ſaith the Pſalmiſt; that is, the wayes which God goes to the accompliſhing of his ends, are oftentimes like ſteps upon the water, which leave no impreſſion or track behind him.

Secondly, His works are unſearchable in their cauſes or ends; what it is which God aims at or intends, what moves or provokes him to ſuch a courſe, is uſually a ſecret. He doth ſuch things as no man can give an account of, or render a reaſon why. Peter knew not how to conſtrue or expound that work of Chriſt, John 13. when he took a towel with a baſon of water, to waſh his feet: therefore Chriſt tells him, What I do thou knoweſt not (that is, thou knoweſt not what moves me to do this; for his eye taught him what Chriſt did) but thou ſhalt know hereafter. In due time this ſhall be interpreted to thee, and thou ſhalt know the reaſon why I did this.

But it is ſaid (and that may be an objection againſt both Text and Expoſition) Pſal. 111. 2. The works of the Lord are great, ſought out of all thoſe that have pleaſure therein. To ſeek out, notes a full diſcovery. And in Pſal. 106. 7. Failing in this, is charged upon the Fathers, and confeſſed by the Children, as a fault; Our Fathers underſtood not thy wonders, that is, the great things which God did for them in Egypt. How then is it ſaid here, The works of the Lord are great and unſearchable?

To clear this, Firſt, I ſay there are ſome great works of God, which are eaſie and plain; and it is our duty to be acquainted with, and learned in theſe works of God, as well as in the word of God.

Secondly, Thoſe works whoſe Text is hard, we muſt ſearch and labour to expound them, ſo, as to further duty, but not to feed our curioſity; we may ſearch them with ſubmiſſion to the mind of God, not for ſatisfaction only to our own minds. We may ſearch with deſire to honour God, but not to humour our ſelves. We may ſearch them to make us more holy, though not barely to make us more knowing. Take two Corollaries from this.

Firſt, If the works of God are unſearchable, then how unſearchable are the counſels of God, the deep and ſecret counſels of God? The works of God are the counſels of God made viſible. Every work of God is the bringing of ſome counſel of God to light. Now if we are not able to find out his counſels, when they are made viſible in his works; how ſhall we find out his counſels, when they lie hidden in his breaſt?

Secondly, If the works of God are unſearchable, then, we are to ſubmit unto the diſpenſations of God, whatſoever they are; though we are not able, according to reaſon, to give an account of them; though we cannot ſearch out either the manner how, or the cauſe for which they were done, yet we muſt reverence them: and what we cannot believe by knowing, we muſt know by believing. It is our duty, not only to wink and believe, ſhut our eyes and believe, or believe when we cannot ſee; but we muſt often believe where knowledge is ſhut out, believe when we cannot underſtand. Abraham by faith followed the call of God, not knowing whither he went, Heb. 11. 8. It is dangerous to follow men blindfold (how ſeeing ſoever thoſe men are) but it is ſafe, and our duty to follow God blindfold, how ſeeing ſoever we think our ſelves to be. We muſt not be diſpleaſed (as Joſeph was at Jacob his father, Gen. 48. 17.) when we ſee God laying his right hand upon Ephraim, and his left upon Manaſſes, doing things croſs to our thoughts; much leſs may we take upon us to direct the hand of God, as Joſeph would Jacob's, where we pleaſe. The Lord knows (as Jacob anſwered Joſeph) what he doth, and it becomes us to acquieſce in what he doth, though we know it not. Some Romiſh Paraſites have ſaid of the Pope, That if he ſhould carry thouſands to hell along with him, there is no man muſt ſay to him, Sir, why do you ſo? They adore him ſo in the unſearchableneſs of his wayes and doings, that it is enough for them, if he doth them.

This abominable flattery of that Man of ſin, is a ſober truth concerning the holy God; Though God caſt thouſands of ſouls into hell, no man may ſay to him, what doſt thou? And though God turn Kingdoms upſide down, though he ſend great afflictions upon his own people, and make them a reproach unto the heathen, though he give them up unto the power of the adverſary, and make all their enemies to rejoyce, yet no man may ſay unto God, why do you thus? His works are unſearchable. It is beyond the line of a creature, to put any queſtion, a why, or a wherefore, about the work of the Creator. Shall the thing formed ſay to him that forms it, why haſt thou made me thus? Hath not the Potter power over his clay?

Some think they could do things better then God hath done, or at leaſt, that God might have done better; if they had the power in their hands, things ſhould not go thus and thus: What an inſufferable indignity is this to the wiſdom and power of God, that He, whoſe works are unſearchable, ſhould be made accountable for his works? That of Auguſtine, when he was in a deep meditation about the Nature of God, may well be applied to the works of God, who walking by the ſea-ſide in deep thoughts of God, either heard this voyce, or was filled with this thought, That he might as ſoon empty the Sea with, or comprehend the Ocean in one of thoſe little Cockle-ſhells which lay on the ſhore, as with the narrow veſſel of his Spirit, comprehend the infinite greatneſs of the God of Spirits.

Marvellous things.] Unſearchable things and marvellous, differ thus: Thoſe things are unſearchable, which lie hid, and cannot be found: that is a marvel, whoſe cauſe cannot be found, though it ſelf be not hid. This is the third adjunct or attribute of the works of God. The word is derived from a root, which ſignifies, ſeparated, disjoyned or divided. And marvellous things are expreſt by that word, becauſe marvels or wonders are ſeparated or removed from us three degrees at leaſt.

Inſcrutabile & mirabile differunt; Inſcrutabile eſt quod latet & perquiri non poteſt: Mirabile eſt, quod ipſum quidem apparet, ſed cauſa ejus perquiri non poteſt. Aquin. in loc. נפלאות from פלא Separatus, disjunctus. Hinc ſignificat mirabilia, quia talia ſunt à nobis ſeparata, & captum ſuperant, ita ut ratione quis aſſequi, aut re præſtare nequeat.

They are ſeparated,

Firſt, From our knowledge or reaſon.

Secondly, From our ſenſe; not that marvels are inviſible, marvels and miracles are wrought to be ſeen, and the uſe of them lies in this, from the ſenſe to confirm faith, or to convince of unbelief. Which (by the way) quite overthrows the Popiſh refuge of a miracle, in their ſuppoſed tranſubſtantiation of Bread at the Euchariſt, who tell us of a miracle, but can ſhew us none. But though in all miracles and marvels the thing wrought is plain to the ſenſes, yet both the power and manner of doing it, are removed from the ſenſes: The marvel wrought is ſeen, but the working of the marvel is not ſeen.

Thirdly, Marvels are ſeparated or removed from our imitation; we cannot do ſuch things. The Lord ſtands alone working wonders. They are a ſeparated part and portion for God himſelf. The Egyptian Sorcerers ſeemed to do by their deviliſh enchantments, what Moſes did by the command and power of God; but at the beſt, they did but ſeem to do like Moſes, and preſently they could not ſo much as ſeem, Exod. 8. 18. And the Magicians did ſo: (that is, they attempted to do ſo) but they could not. They that work by the Devils art or power, cannot work long, they will quickly be at A could not. Both their Religions and their miraculous works are at beſt but in appearance; at laſt they will not ſo much as appear. In theſe three reſpects Marvels are rightly called, ſeparate.

Further, The word alſo ſignifies ſometimes, a hard or a difficult thing; becauſe thoſe things that are very difficult, have ſomewhat of wonder in them, and cauſe us to wonder at them, Deut. 17. 8. If a matter come which is too hard, the word is, which is too marvellous and wonderful for thee, &c. And, Gen. 18. 14. Is any thing too hard for me? (ſaith God) the word is, Is any thing wonderful to me? Nothing is wonderful to us, but that which is too hard for us. There is nothing wonderful to God, who doth all wonders, and is himſelf all Wonder. It hath been ſaid concerning thoſe lovers of, and ſearchers after ſecret wiſdom, called Philoſophers, that it doth not become a Philoſopher to wonder; for admiration is uſually the Daughter of Ignorance: We marvel at moſt things, becauſe we know the cauſes of few things. It was therefore a ſhame for a Philoſopher to wonder, becauſe it betrayed his ignorance, who would be thought ſtudied in, yea, a maſter of all cauſes; and able to give a reaſon of all things in Nature. But it is moſt certain, the great God never marvelleth at any thing; For, is any thing too hard for me? ſaith the Lord. Wonders are things too hard for us, and the ſame word ſignifies a Wonder, and a thing too hard.

אות
מופת
נפלא

There are three words of near alliance in the Hebrew, Signs, Miracles, and Marvels: And they may be diſtinguiſh'd thus; a Sign is the repreſentation of a thing preſent, or before us: A Miracle or Portentum (as contra-diſtinct from the former) ſhews forth ſomewhat future, or, that is to come. A Marvel, as differing from both, is any act of providence, ſecret or ſeparate from us, in the manner of doing or producing it; a thing to us unſearchable: ſo (Exod. 33. 16.) Wherein ſhall it be known, that I and thy people have found grace in thy ſight (ſaith Moſes) Is it not in that thou goeſt with us? So ſhall we be ſeparated, I and thy people; ſo we tranſlate it, or made wonderful; that is, if thou goeſt along with us, thou wilt do ſuch marvels for us, a will make a difference between us and all the people in the world; we ſhall be a people marvell'd at all the world over, or, a ſpectacle to the world, Angels and Men. The preſence of God with a people, is their difference, or will make them differ from all people with whom God is not (under the Notion of Favour and Protection) preſent.

Again, Marvels are taken ſometimes for Miracles, which are meerly and purely ſupernatural. For in ordinary acceptation of the word, a Marvel is only the heightning and ſublimating of Nature, or acting in the higheſt ſphear of Nature; but a Miracle is a croſſing or a contradicting of Nature; a work altogether above, yea, againſt Nature. Now we are not to take marvels here in that ſtrict ſence for miracles; for the great works of God are called marvels or wonders, which yet are but either the ordinary conſtitutions of Nature, or the extraordinary motions of Nature; as, Pſal. 136. 4. O give thanks to the Lord, to him, who alone doth great wonders: What are theſe? In verſ. 5 6,7. inſtances are given in natural things, as making the heavens, and ſtretching out the earth above the waters; the making of thoſe great Lights, the Sun and Moon (a). One of the Ancients diſcourſing upon that Miracle in the Goſpel, The multiplying the Loaves, obſerveth, that in natural things, there are very great wonders, though we lightly paſs them by; they were aſtoniſhed to ſee the loaves multiplied while they were eating: To ſee bread grow upon the Table, or between their teeth, made all wonder: but there is as great a miracle wrought every year, and no man takes notice of it; that is, when Corn caſt into the ground, multiplies thirty, ſixty, a hundred fold; It is (ſaith he) a greater miracle for corn to multiply in the earth, then for loaves to multiply on the table. And he makes a like concluſion in his Book of the City of God, Whatſoever is wonderful in the world, is not ſo great a wonder as the world; yet men rarely wonder at the making of the world, the Earth, the Heavens, the Sea, the Air, every creature in them, exceed in wonders, the things we wonder at. Ordinary works of Nature are marvellous; Firſt, Becauſe they proceed from a divine power. Secondly, Becauſe man is poſed to give a reaſon of moſt of them; Canſt thou tell how the bones grow in her that is with child? ſaith the Preacher. The bringing of an Infant alive from the womb, is a wonder, as well as the raiſing of a man from the dead: and the budding of a Tree, as well as the budding of Aaron's Rod (b). The uſualneſs of the one, and the rareneſs of the other, is, though not the only, yet the greateſt difference And as the ordinary works of Creation, in making, ſo of Providence, in governing the world, are full of wonders, though they paſs unobſerved. Such Eliphaz takes notice of in the words following; The diſappointing of crafty oppreſſors, and the deliverance of the poor. When God ſhall deſtroy Babylon, the Song prepared is, Great and wonderful are thy works: And (Exod. 15. 11.) from whence that is taken, Who is like unto thee, O God! who is like unto thee, glorious in holineſs, fearful in praiſes, doing wonders! The wonder was, a deliverance, the wonderful deliverance of his people from Egypt, and through the Red Sea. Works of judgment are often called works of wonder (Deut. 28. 59.) I will make thy plagues wonderful; and, Iſa. 28. 21. The Lord ſhall riſe up as in Mount Perazim, he ſhall be wroth as in the valley of Gibeon, that he may do his work, his ſtrange work, and bring to paſs his act, his ſtrange act: What act was this? an act of judgment upon his, and his peoples enemies; as is clear, 2 Sam. 5. 20. & Joſh. 10. 12. Where we may read, what God did in Mount Perazim, and in the Valley of Gibeon; ſtrange works indeed! And theſe works of God are called marvellous, not only, when God is in them alone, and acts without the intervention of the creature, but when he acts with the creature, above the ſtrength of a creature, ſo that little of the creature appears in the act, this alſo is a marvel. What God doth more by a man, then man can do, whether in ſtrength or wiſdom, ordinarily aſſiſted, ſo much of a wonder ſhews it ſelf, in what man doth. And therefore no man is ordinarily to attempt any thing beyond his ſtrength, for that is to tempt God, and to call him to work a miracle, at leaſt a wonder for us. Lord (ſaith David, Pſal. 131. 1.) mine heart is not haughty, nor mine eyes lofty; neither do I exerciſe my ſelf in great matters, or in things too high for me: The word is, in things too wonderful for me, that is, I do not ordinarily put my ſelf upon things which are extraordinary, or beyond my ſtrength and parts. I meaſure my undertakings, and my abilities together, and would keep them even. I do not put God upon doing wonders every day; therefore I ſet my ſelf to thoſe things which are according to the line of man. If God call us to it, we may expect a miracle, but we muſt not call God to work miracles for us, or with us. I do not exerciſe my ſelf in matters too high for me. Miracles or marvels are not every dayes exerciſe. We ought rather to be above our work, or any of our deſignes, then below them; but we muſt be ſure they are not above us. It is the ſafeſt and the holieſt way for man, in all his actions, to be upon a level. We cannot but diſpleaſe God, and hurt our ſelves, by clambering. It is but ſometimes, that the Lord will work wonders to relieve our neceſſities, and help our faith; but he will never (unleſs in wrath) work wonders, to pleaſe our humors, or comply with our ambition. Hence obſerve,

(a) Mirabilior eſt grani in terra multiplicatio, quã illi quinque panum. Aug. tract. 24. in Johan. Quicquid mirabile fit in mundo, profectò minus eſt quam totus hic mundus. Quamvis itaq; miracula viſibiliũ naturarum videndi aſſiduitate vileſcunt, tamen cum ea ſapienter intuemur, inuſitatiſſimis rariſſimiſq; majora ſunt. Aug. l. 5. De Civ. Dei. c. 12.

(b) Permulta ſunt quæ admirari non ſolemus, propterea quod vulgò quotidiéque fiant. Re nova & inſolita commovetur animus.

Non me extuli ad ea quæ meas vires aut ingenium ſuperarent. Eleganter Theodoretus, Meipſum metiabar, & quæ me excedũt, non aggreſſus ſum.

First, When we ſee marvels done, we muſt acknowledge the hand of God.

Marvels are proper unto God, Pſal. 75. 1. In that thy Name is near, thy wondrous works declare. Wondrous works are an Argument that God is near. When wonders are among us, we may know God is among us. We may well apply that of the Pſalmiſt, to our ſelves, Marvellous things hath the Lord done in our ſight, Pſal. 78. 12.

Secondly, If God work marvels, and we believe him not, hath he not reaſon to marvel at our unbelief? Chriſt having wrought miracles to gain the belief of his Countrey-men, marvelled at their unbelief, Mark 6. 2, 6.

Unbelief is a great ſin at all times, but in a time when marvels are wrought for the cure and healing of it, unbelief is a marvellous ſin.

Will not Chriſt, think you, marvel at our unbelief, if we believe not after all theſe marvels? Ye will not believe, (ſaith Chriſt, and he rebukes the Jews for it, John 4.) except you ſee ſigns and wonders: Surely, if they were ſo charged, becauſe they would not believe, except they ſaw ſignes and wonders, how ſhall they be charged, who will not believe, when they ſee ſignes and wonders? eſpecially when God ſeems to work a wonder on purpoſe, that they might believe? God loves and prizes the faith of man ſo highly, that ſometimes he bids a miracle for it, rather then go without it. And ſurely now, as God hath done marvels, to abate the marvellous pride of the Adverſary, ſo, to overcome the marvellous unbelief of his own people: As hath been obſerved concerning the Lords ſwearing, As I live, I deſire not the death of a ſinner, &c. O happy man, for whoſe ſake the Lord ſwears! but O moſt unhappy, who doth not believe the Lord, when he ſwears! So we may ſay of the Lords wonder-workings; O happy people, for whom the Lord works wonders! but O moſt unhappy people, who believe not the Lord, when he works wonders!

Thirdly, When God works extraordinary things for us, let not us ſtay in ordinary duties.

Let our works have ſomewhat of a marvel in them too; let our repentance, and the change of our lives be marvellous; let our zeal and courage for Chriſt be marvellous; like that of the Apoſtles, who carried themſelves with ſuch heroical magnanimity, in the work of the Goſpel, that when the High-Prieſt and Council (who had convented and threatned them) ſaw their boldneſs, they marvelled, ſaith the Text, Acts 4. 13. Let our love and thankfulneſs be marvellous, let us pray marvellouſly, and believe marvellouſly; Marvels done by God, ſhould ever work faith in man; and faith in man, doth ſometime work marvelling in God. Chriſt ſpeaks with a kind of admiration to the woman of Canaan, O woman, great is thy faith, Mat. 15. 28. O that his people in this Nation, would ſet Him thus a wondring once more! O England, great is thy faith in me! O England, great is thy love to me! O England, great is thy zeal for me! O England, great is thy repentance, exceeding glorious thy Reformation!

I will cloſe this Point with this one word. God hath begun to do ſo many marvels amongſt us, that I verily believe, the work he is about, will end in a marvel too; and we in the cloſe, ſhall be made either a wonder of mercy, or a wonder of judgment to all the Nations round about.

The fourth Attribute of the works of God, raiſes the glory of them all. They are innumerable.

He doth marvellous things without number.] The Hebrew, word for word, is, Until there be no number: Without number, may be taken three wayes.

Firſt, Strictly and abſolutely, for that which is without number; and thus there is no number innumerable. Things abſolutely without number, would be infinite; but there cannot be two infinites: As God is ſo one, and without number, that he is infinite; ſo, whatſoever could be ſo many, that it were without number, would be infinite too.

Secondly, Without number, is that which man cannot reckon or caſt up the ſum of it (Rev. 7. 9.) John ſpeaks of a great multitude which no man could number; as a ſmall number is ſaid to be ſuch as a Child may write, Iſa. 10. 19. So ſuch a multitude as a man cannot write, notes the greateſt number. And, Heb. 12. 22. There is mention made of an innumerable company of Angels. So God calleth Abraham out, and ſaith, Look now towards heaven, and tell the ſtars, if thou be able to number them, Gen. 12. The Stars are innumerable, that is, beyond mans Arithmetick.

Thirdly, Things are ſaid to be without number, or innumerable (in a more common ſence) when they are a very great number; and ſo we find it frequent in Scripture; as that which is very high, is ſaid to be as high as heaven: Thus the diſcouraging Spies deſcribe the Cities of the Canaanites, to be Cities walled up to heaven, Deut. 1. 28. And when Seamen or Mariners are toſſed upon the waves and billows of the Sea, they are ſaid, to mount up to the heaven, and go down again to the depths, Pſal. 107. 26. So here, a very great number is ſaid to be innumerable or without number: In this third, and in that ſecond ſence, the great works of God are innumerable: God hath done ſo many marvellous things, as are impoſſible for man to reckon. His mighty works are not only beyond the writing of a child, but of the wiſeſt men: The man who numbers moſt dayes, cannot number the wonders of God.

I ſhall note but one or two Inſtructions from this, That the works of God are innumerable.

First then, What God hath done, he can do it again a ſecond time, yea, a third, a fourth time, ten times, yea, ten thouſand times over, if our neceſſity and his good pleaſure meet together; for his works are innumerable.

Eliphaz ſpeaks not only of what God had done, but of what he can do; yea of what he is doing; he doth innumerable marvels. Some men can do great things, many have done great things, but they cannot do them without number; even a child may write all that any man can do, and at moſt, it needs but a man to reckon all the great things which all men have done. The hand of God ſhortens not in an eternity; but the hand of man ſhortens every day, ſometimes in a day; and therefore he cannot do things innumerable: Man cannot do that to day which he could yeſterday, whether we reſpect his civil abilities, or his natural. As old Barzillai ſaid unto David, 2 Sam. 19. When the King invited him home with him, and offered him all the pleaſures of the Court, Can I any more hear the voyce of ſinging-men and ſinging-women? or can I any more taſte what I eat and what I drink? As if he ſhould ſay, It is true, Sir, I have known the time when I could have made uſe of this Royal Favour, and have taken in the pleaſures of your Court; I once delighted in Muſick, and my ear could taſte a ſweet voice; I once delighted in rich fare, and my palat could taſte meat and drink; but can I any more do thus? My natural ſtrength is gone, my ſenſes cannot renew innumerable acts of pleaſure: If Grace doth not wean us from the abuſe, yet Nature will tire in the uſe of worldly comforts. But the civil abilities of man wither ſooner then his natural; you may ſee a man that hath done great things in a State or Commonwealth, come to him a while after, and he may ſay, Can I any more do thoſe things? I am not what I was, my power is gone: But come to God, after he hath done this or that, and a thouſand great things, he will not ſay, Can I help you any more? can I deliver you any more? can I deſtroy your enemies, can I diſcover their plots and counſels any more? Yes Lord, as thy works are unſearchable, ſo they are innumerable, and thou canſt do them for evermore. The Lord ſaith ſometime to a people, as he did to Iſrael (Judg. 10. 13.) in anger, I will deliver you no more; but he never ſaith to any of people out of weakneſs, I can deliver you no more, Pſal. 78. The people provoked God, by making a queſtion of this (ver. 20.) Behold (ſay they) he ſmote the rock, that the waters guſhed out, and the ſtreams overflowed (we acknowledge that God hath done a marvel) but can he give bread alſo? can he provide fleſh for his people? ſurely, he cannot do this marvel alſo: what ſaith the Text? The Lord heard this, and was wroth, ſo a fire was kindled againſt Jacob, and anger alſo came up againſt Iſrael: What do you think, that I can do but one great thing? that I have but one bleſſing, but one deliverance, but one wonder? Know, that I who ſmote the rock, can provide you fleſh; I, who gave you water, can give you bread; I, who have diſcovered one wicked plot of the enemy, can diſcover all; I, who have given you one victory, can give you a thouſand; I, who have given you one deliverance, can give you innumerable deliverances; therefore take heed of ſetting bounds to God, of limiting the Holy one of Iſrael: Men love not to be limited, but God ought not. We at once provoke and diſhonour the Lord, by thinking, that our wants can renew faſter then his ſupplies; or that our innumerable evils ſhall not find innumerable good things to balance, or remove them, from the hand of God. We weary men, when we come often to them, to do great things for us; yea, to come often for ſmall matters, wlll weary men: But we never weary the Lord by coming often; we weary God only, when we will not come often. How doth the Prophet, not only complain, but expoſtulate, becauſe that unbelieving King wearied God (take it with reverence) by not ſetting him awork, and that about the hardeſt and moſt knotty piece of work that can be, the working of a miracle, and that, as hard a one as himſelf would ask, either in the depth beneath, or in the height above. Is it a ſmall thing with you to weary men, but will you weary my God alſo? Iſa. 7. 13. It is no wearineſs to God to do innumerable miracles for us; but he is weary when we will not believe he can do them. To be diſtruſted the doing of one, is more laborious to God, then to do a million of miracles.

To conclude this, take heed above all, that you limit not God in works of ſpiritual mercy; as, to fear to ask pardon of ſin, becauſe ye have asked it often. His great works of forgiveneſs are as much without number, as any of his works. He multiplies to pardon, ſaith the Prophet, Iſa. 55. 7. And when the people of Iſrael had committed a new ſin, it is admirable to read, by what argument Moſes moves the Lord for pardon: It is not this (as uſually with men) Lord, this is the firſt fault, Lord, thou haſt not been often troubled to ſign their pardon: But, pardon, I beſeech thee, the iniquity of this people, as thou haſt forgiven this people from Egypt until now, Numb. 14. 19. As if he had ſaid, Lord, becauſe thou haſt pardoned them ſo often, therefore I beſeech thee pardon them now. It is a moſt wicked argument to move our hearts to ſin, becauſe God will pardon often; but when we have ſinned, it is a holy argument to move God to pardon again, becauſe he hath pardoned often before; for he pardons without number.

Amicitia non eſt reducenda ad calculos. Obedientia non eſt reducenda ad calculos.

Secondly, Seeing God doth innumerable great things for us, let u not be ſatisfied in doing a few things at the command, and for the glory of God; let us continue in acts of holineſs, charity, humility, zeal and thankfulneſs, without number; let us never ſtand reckoning our duties, when we hear the mercies of God are beyond reckoning. It is a noble rule in our friendſhip with men, That Curteſies muſt not be counted: I am ſure it is a holy rule in our obedience to God, That duties muſt not be counted: God hath no need of any one of our good works; but he will not bear it, if we think we have done enow, or can do too many. Let our hearts be like the heart of God, as he doth great things for us, let us do (in what we are able) great things for God, and good things for one another, without number.

So much in general of the proof of Gods power, by the Greatneſs, &c, of his works.

VERS. 10, 11, 12.

Who giveth rain upon the earth, and ſendeth waters upon the fields.

To ſet up on high thoſe that be low, that thoſe which mourn, may be exalted to ſafety.

He diſappointeth the devices of the crafty, ſo that their hands cannot perform their enterprize.

THis Context, from v. 9. to v. 17. contains the ſecond Argument, by which Eliphaz ſtrengthens his exhortation upon Job to ſeek unto God. The Argument ſpeaks to this effect; He is to be ſought; and unto him our cauſe is to be committed, who is of abſolute power, infinite in wiſdom and goodneſs; But ſuch is God: Therefore ſeek to him, and commit thy cauſe unto him. That God is of infinite power, wiſdom, &c. was proved in general at v. 9. by thoſe four adjuncts of his works, great, unſearchable, marvellous, and without number. And now, at v. 10. he begins his proof, by an enumeration of the particular effects of Gods power, wiſdom and goodneſs. The firſt inſtance is in natural things; God doth great things and unſearchable, marvellous things without number. And would you know what thoſe things are? You need not go far to enquire; there are things very near unto us, and very common among us, which yet, if they be well looked unto, will advance the power, wiſdom and goodneſs of God; every ſhower of rain drops down this truth, that God doth great things; He giveth rain upon the earth, and ſendeth waters upon the fields.

מטר Generale nomen eſt ad quamcunq; pluviam. Non deſunt qui putant cognationē habere cum סוה quod eſt humectari, quod pluvia liquefaciat, humectet & & diſſolvat dura. Merc.

There is not any difficulty about the meaning of theſe words, which calls for ſtay in opening of them. Therefore in brief; The Hebrew word for Rain, in our Letters (Matar) is ſo near in ſound to our Engliſh, Water, that ſome think it a derivative from it.

By the Rain, we are to underſtand, not the ſhowers only which fall from heaven, but all thoſe bleſſings and benefits for the ſupport of our natural life, which are the fruits of rain: He ſendeth rain (as it were) on his errand, to bring or carry the bleſſings of plenty, and to drop fatneſs on the earth. He giveth rain to the earth, and then the earth giveth her encreaſe. The Rabbins have a ſaying, that Rain is the Husband of the Earth, becauſe thoſe ſhowers fœcundate the Earth, and make that great Mother of plenty, fruitful, in bringing forth all things uſeful and comfortable for the life of man.

He giveth Rain upon the face of the Earth (ſo the Letter of the Original) that is, upon the Earth; as the face of Heaven, and the face of the Sea, ſo the face of the Earth, is an Hebraiſm, for the Earth it ſelf.

It is ſaid in the latter clauſe of the verſe, that he ſendeth waters upon the fields: we muſt diſtinguiſh theſe waters from the rain, taking them for rivers and ſtreams of water, as the Pſalmiſt ſpeaks, He cauſeth the Rivers to run among the hills; and the Prophet Habakkuk, Thou cleaveſt the earth with the Rivers.

מים Forma duali ſignificā-

The word is of the Dual Number in the Hebrew, and therefore by ſome applied to thoſe two ſorts of waters; or to the waters above, and to the waters that are beneath; ſo the waters are diſtinguiſh, Pſal. 104. 3. We read of the upper waters; Who layeth the beams of his chambers in the waters, who maketh the clouds his chariot; and of the inferior or lower waters, Gen. 1. 9. The Lord ſaith, let the waters under the earth be gathered into one place: and both are put together, v. 7. God made the firmament, and divided the waters that were under the firmament, from the waters that were above the firmament. So that the waters above, and the waters below, may both be here underſtood.

tur aquæ duplices, ſuperiores in cœlo, ut nubes, & inferiores in terra, ut mare, fontes & flumina.

חוץ Nomen propriè eſt, ſed ſumitur ſæpe adverbialiter, pro foris & in univerſum pro loco exteriori. Merc. Deſerta, horrida loca & mortalibus inacceſſa.

Irrigat aquis univerſa. Vulg.

It is added further, He ſendeth waters upon the fields. The word we tranſlate [fields] ſignifies any place without doors, as ſtreets and high-wayes; and becauſe fields are are without (ſub dio) covered only with the Canopie of the heavens, therefore we tranſlate, He ſendeth waters upon the fields. And it taketh in all ſorts of fields, whether till'd or untill'd; though ſome conceive, that here Eliphaz means, thoſe fields eſpecially which are untill'd, unſown, or unmanur'd; fields where men come not; namely, deſarts and wilderneſſes; as if he ſhould ſay, there is no place but God ſends waters to it: Hence the Vulgar read, in ſtead of fields, all places: He moiſtens all places with waters.

Here firſt, Foraſmuch as an inſtance of Gods greatneſs, power and unſearchable wiſdom is given in the rain, a natural thing we may note,

> That, The common bleſſings of God are not diſpenſed without a ſpecial providence: Nature works not without the God of nature.

He doth great things: And what? He ſendeth rain. The whole courſe of Nature moves, as it is turned by the hand of God, and directed by his counſel. It is not in the frame of Nature, as in many artificial frames, which being once ſet up, will ſtand, or go alone. When the Artificer hath made a Clock, and put it in frame, and hung on the weights, let him go whither he will, the Clock will go, and if there were room for the weights to deſcend, the Clock (continuing in frame) would go perpetually, though no hand helped or toucht it: But it is not ſo, in the frame and workings of natural things; God hath ſet all creatures in a frame, and curiouſly ordered them one within another, but there is no motion of the leaſt wheel, much leſs of the whole fabrick, without the ſpecial hand of God: When Rain comes, God ſaith, go; Rain is his gift, not the Clouds; the Cloud receives a Commiſſion from God to diſtill and diſſolve upon man: The moſt full, ſpongie Clouds diſtill no more then the Rock did in the wilderneſs, till the Lord ſpeaks to them. As, When he uttereth his voyce, there is a multitude of waters in the heavens, and he cauſeth the vapors to aſcend from the ends of the earth, Jer. 10. 13, So, till he uttereth his voyce, not one ſingle drop of all that multitude of waters, falls from heaven, nor will thoſe vapours deſcend and return again to the earth, except he bid them.

Cum plenæ ſunt nubes, effundunt pluviam, non tamen abſque Dei juſſu. Druſ.

He giveth rain upon the earth.

Rain is the ſpecial gift of God. Special, not in that ſence as Grace is a ſpecial gift; for rain is a common gift; but ſpecial, becauſe it is that, of which, and about which, God takes ſpecial notice; as we read, Amos 4. 8. I cauſed it to rain (ſaith God) upon one place, or upon one City, and not upon another. There is a ſpecial diſcriminating work about the rain; it rains by appointment, not accident, upon one place, rather then another. And, Iſa. 5. 6. When God expreſſes diſpleaſure againſt his Vineyard (he ſaith) I will command the Clouds, that they ſhall not rain upon it: The Clouds are as vaſt Bottles full of rain, but they cannot unſtop themſelves, or let out one drop, until God himſelf commands them: He melteth the clouds (as it is ſaid in Job) and then the rain falleth down. Thou, O God, didſt ſend a plentiful rain, whereby thou didſt confirm thine inheritance when it was weary, Pſal. 68. 9. How weary or dry ſoever the Earth is, unleſs God by a word broach thoſe veſſels of rain, the very inheritance of God cannot have a draught, no, nor a drop, to quench its thirſt.

Therefore though rain be a common bleſſing in reſpect of all places and perſons; yet we ought to acknowledge a ſpecial hand in giving it. And this checks that natural Atheiſm, which reigns in their hearts, who think that they are beholding only to the motions of the winds, or change of the Moon for rain: And hence in times of drought, they look moſt when the wind will turn, or when the Moon will change. To confute this, the Prophet tells us by way of queſtion, That as Idols cannot, ſo neither can the Heavens give rain, Jer. 14.22. Are there any among the vanities of the Gentiles that can cauſe rain? Or can the Heathens give ſhowers? They cannot. Indeed the holy Prophet Elias ſpeaks ſuch language, as if he had carried the keyes of the Clouds at his girdle, or had been maſter of the rain, 1 King. 17.1. As the Lord liveth, there ſhall not be dew nor rain theſe years, but according to my word. But the Apoſtle James ſhews us what word this was, namely a word of prayer, not of command, Chap. 5.17. Elias prayed, and it rained not; again he prayed, and it rained. All the power of man cannot prevail with the Heavens to rain, but the prayer of faith can prevail with the God of Heaven. To ſend rain was the work of God, though it were at the word of a man. They, who deny God in one work, will quickly deny him in another. And if we deny him in leſſer, yea, the leaſt of his works, in a drop of rain, we are in danger to deny him in the greater. And they who deny God in his working, have but an eaſie ſtep to the denyal of his being.

This ſhould teach us to walk in dependance upon God for all natural comforts, He giveth rain. All creatures drink from Heaven, that they may have their eyes and their hearts in Heaven. And if we muſt walk in dependance upon God for natural comforts, how much more for ſpiritual; if for the rain of the Clouds, how much more for the dews of his Spirit, and the rain of grace upon our hearts?

Further Obſerve, It is a great, wonderful, and unſearchable work of God to ſend rain.

For we muſt put the ſtamp of thoſe four characters upon all theſe works; and ſo the rain is a great, a wonderful, and an unſearchable work of God: ſo great and wonderful, that (as hath been proved) no creature can communicate with God, or ſhare in the honour of this work. The Rabbins have a ſaying, that upon every (apex or) Tittle of the Law there hangs a mountain of ſence and holy Doctrine. We may ſay, that in in every drop of rain there is an ocean of wiſdom, of power, of goodneſs, and of bounty. If we ſtudy the ordinary works of God, we ſhall learn ſomewhat extraordinary in them; common things are full of wonder: And among all common things, none fuller of wonders than the rain: To illuſtrate this a little, in ſome particular conſiderations.

In ea mira Dei in ſuas creaturas ſpectatur benignitas, clementia ſimul & potentia, undè paſſim Prophetæ, et præſertim in hoc libro, quādo ſocii Job, aut Job ipſe, admiranda Dei opera proponunt, pluviam inter ea primo loco ponunt. Merc.

Firſt, There is marvellous power ſeen, in cauſing and giving rain. Is it not marvellous power, which raiſes the vapours and holds (as we may ſo ſpeak) a Sea of water above the earth? That ſuch mighty Seas and floods of water hang in the Air, and thence are diſtill'd and ſprinkled down (as Job ſpeaks) in ſmall drops, are acts and arguments of the wonderful power of God.

Secondly, Behold in the rain the wonderful goodneſs of God: who by this means cools and refreſhes, nouriſhes, and ſuckles all earthly living creatures. When the ground is chapt and gapes, as it were with open mouth, the Lord opens theſe bottels, and gives it drink. And a miracle of goodneſs is ſeen in this, foraſmuch as when his very enemies hunger, he thus feeds them; when they are naked he thus cloaths them; when they thirſt, he thus gives them drink: Matth. 5.45. He ſendeth rain upon the juſt, and upon the unjuſt: They are maintained in life by the goodneſs of God, whoſe lives maintain a continual war againſt his Juſtice.

And as there is a wonder of goodneſs in giving rain for the uſe of evil men: So there is a wonder of bounty in ſending rain upon thoſe places, which are not of uſe to any man; He ſendeth waters upon the fields, that is, all over the world. Hence when Elihu would ſet forth he marvellous power and bounty of God, he exemplifies it in this (Job 38.25.) Who hath divided a water-courſe for the overflowing of waters, to cauſe it to rain on the earth where no man is, and on the wilderneſs, where there is no man? Such an open and bountiful houſe doth the Lord of Heaven and Earth keep, that rather then any ſhall want, he will (in a ſence) let the water run waſte. God will not have ſo much as an herb or a plant to want: though there be no man to come there, yet the graſs and ſhrubs ſhall have drink, and taſte of his bounty.

And ſo legible is that goodneſs of God, which is written with drops of rain, ſo wonderful his power and bounty in giving rain, that the Prophet wonders at the ſtupidity of thoſe men, who are not convinced of, and taught obedience by it. They have not ſaid, let us fear the Lord that giveth the firſt and the latter rain in his ſeaſon (Jer. 5.24.) As if he ſhould ſay, what a ſtrange thing is it that ſweet ſhowers of rain have not ſoftened the hearts of men, into the fear of God, and made them bloſſom with, and bring forth abundantly the fruits of holineſs? Hereupon it is very remarkable, how Moſes makes this a motive to perſwade the children of Iſrael to obedience in Canaan; becauſe that Country ſtood in much need of rain, which Egypt, from whence they came, did not, Deut. 11. Therefore ſhall ye keep all the Commandments, which I command you this day, verſ. 8. For the land whither thou goeſt in to poſſeſs it, is not like the land of Egypt, from whence ye came out, where thou ſowedſt thy ſeed, and wateredſt it with thy foot, like a garden of herbs. That is, Egypt being a flat plain Country all upon a level, when the land wanted moiſture, thou didſt not ſtay for, or depend upon the rain, to moiſten it; but with thy foot, thou diggedſt drains and madeſt ſluces or water-courſes, from the River ſide (meaning Nilus that famous River, which ran quite through Egypt) and that refreſhed thy lands, and made them fruitful. But (Canaan is another kind of Country, verſ. 11.12.) the Land whither thou goeſt in to poſſeſs it, is a Land of hills and valleyes, and drinketh water of the rain of Heaven. A Land which the Lord thy God careth for, his eyes are upon it, &c. As if he had ſaid, Canaan is not a Country capable of being watered by the foot, it is ſo mountainous and uneven. All the labour of hand or foot, cannot bring the ſtreams upwards, to give thy thirſty land drink; it muſt drink from Heaven, or be burnt up and parcht with thirſt: and if ſo, then, that muſt be the Lords care; his eye muſt obſerve, when thou wanteſt rain, his hand muſt make water-courſes in the Heavens, and open the ſluces and cataracts of the clouds for thee. And wilt thou not ſerve this God in duty, who in bounty thus ſerveth thee, and gives thee ſuch a ſenſible evidence of his care over thee? The Apoſtle Paul preaches thus to the Gentiles, as Natural Theology, to leave them inexcuſable, Though he ſuffered all Nations to walk in their own wayes (in that he gave them not either the light or reſtraint of grace, yet he did give them light and reſtraint too in nature) nevertheleſs he left not himſelf without witneſs, in that he did good, and gave us rain from Heaven. As if he had ſaid, though ye have not had the rain of the word, yet the rain of the cloud, is ſuch a Preacher of Gods power and goodneſs, as will leave you for ever without excuſe. The Lord himſelf ſeems to glory in this, as one of the chiefeſt of his works: (Job 38.37.) Who can number the clouds in wiſdom? Or who can ſtay the bottles of Heaven? I challenge all creatures to a competition with me in this. And again in his book (Chap. 36.26.) Elihu lifts up the greatneſs of God in this act of his providence, Behold God is great, and we know him not; (wherein doth he inſtance his greatneſs?) it follows, verſ. 27. For he maketh ſmall the drops of water, they pour down rain according to the vapour thereof. Read parallel Texts, Jer. 10.13. Pſal. 65.10, 11. Pſal. 147.8. So much of this firſt work of God, the rain; and of his power, wiſdom, goodneſs, bounty, viſible and apparent in it.

Act. 14.17.

The ſecond inſtance of Gods power and wiſdom, &c. is in civil things, both in ſetting up and pulling down: Firſt, in raiſing and ſetting up.

Verſ. 11. To ſet up on high thoſe that be low, that thoſe which mourn, may be exalted to ſafety.

As if he ſhould ſay, will you ſee another way, wherein God ſhews himſelf in his power, wiſdom and goodneſs? It is in looking thorough the world, for ſuch as are low, that he may lift them up: in eſpying out mourners and weeping eyes, that he may wipe them; and more, exalt them to ſafety.

Some of the Jewiſh Writers connect this verſe with the former; making this as an effect of Gods bounty and wonderful work in ſending rain. He ſendeth rain and ſhowers upon the earth with ſuch plenty of bleſſings; that by this means, many who were poor, low, mean and ſad-hearted, may be ſet in high eſtate, and exalted unto ſafety. And there is a truth in it, Gods bleſſing upon the earth hath exalted many, that were low, to an high eſtate, to riches and proſperity.

But rather, we ſhall take it in a more general ſence: And ſo Eliphaz in theſe words ſeems to comfort Job by giving him a hint, that though his eſtate was now very low, yet if he would apply himſelf unto God, as he had adviſed, verſ. 8. By ſeeking unto and committing his cauſe to him, as low as he was, he might be ſet high again; and though he was now a mourner, ſitting in duſt and aſhes, He might be exalted to joy and ſafety; for in this, the power, wiſdom and goodneſs of God are uſually put forth and exalted.

The words carry an alluſion to that cuſtom of Princes and Magiſtrates, who ſit in high places, upon erected thrones. As (1 King. 16. 19.) it is ſaid of Solomon, that he built a magnificent Throne, or chair of State, which had an aſcent of ſix ſteps to it, he ſate on high. And the Prophet Iſaiah (Chap. 6. verſ. 1.) deſcribed the Lord in the ſame manner, ſitting in ſtate; I ſaw the Lord (ſaith he) ſitting upon a Throne, high and lifted up. The pride and arrogancy of the Aſſyrian is thus expreſt (Iſa. 14. 13.) He hath ſaid in his heart, I will exalt my Throne above the Stars, I will ſit alſo upon the Mount of the Congregation. So that to ſit on high, is as much as to be preferred or advanced, whether we reſpect honour or riches, dignity or authority.

To ſet on high thoſe that be low.] The word may note either thoſe that are low in their own eyes, or thoſe that are made low by others, active or paſſive lowneſs. Grace in our own hearts, cauſes the former lowneſs; and ſinful oppreſſion from the hand of others, cauſes the latter. The former are humble, the latter are humbled; the Lord ſets both theſe on high. And,

קדרים a
קדר
Obſcurus, obſcuratus, luce privatus fuit, nigruit, per Metaphoram contriſtatus fuit; in triſtitia enim fugit ſplendor facici. Sic latinè, Atrati dicuntur lugentes.
σκυθρωπάζοντες, mœſti vultus.

Thoſe which mourn.] The Hebrew word ſignifies to be black, dark or obſcured. And the reaſon why that word is borrowed to note mourning or ſorrow, is, becauſe ſorrow cauſeth blackneſs, or darkneſs of habit and countenance; mourning and blackneſs uſually go together (Jer. 4. 28.) For this cauſe ſhall the earth mourn, and the heavens above ſhall be black. And uſually Mourners go in black, it is the die and dreſs of Mourners; as white is the colour of joy. Let thy garments be alwayes white, ſaith the Preacher to him, that is to eat his bread with joy, Eccleſ. 8. 8. Yea the very beauty of the face is obſcured, the light of the countenance ſhadowed or clouded with tears and ſorrow. Hence the Seventy render it, They whoſe faces are ſad or ſowre. It is the word uſed, Matth. 6. 16. When ye faſt, be not as the hypocrites, of a ſad countenance; It implies an affected, ſtudied ſadneſs, ſeverity, auſterity, grimneſs, gaſtlineſs, unpleaſantneſs of countenance, proceeding from art, rather then from nature, much leſs from grace, as the words following imply: for they disfigure, vitiate or diſcolour their faces, corrupt or aboliſh their native complexion, ſo as it appears not what it is, that they may appear what they are not. Hypocriſie can paint the face with black, as well or rather worſe then pride with red and white; and ſo doth real ſorrow ſometimes, whether for ſin or outward affliction. True paſſion in the heart, will dim the brightneſs and ſtain the beauty of the face.

שגב
In loco ſublimi ſtetit exaltatus, adeò ut ab hoſtibus pertingi nequeat. Per Metaphoram, tutus, inexpugnabiles. Hinc משגב
turris. Olim munitiones extruebantur in locis editioribus in montibus præruptis et inacceſſis, ut latinè arx ab hoſte arcendo dicta eſt.

Theſe Mourners ſhall be exalted to ſafety.] The word which we tranſlate Exalted, ſignifies to ſet in a high place, and in a place ſo high, that a man ſo placed, is beyond the reach of danger or the power of an adverſary; it is to be ſet upon a place impregnable: Hence the word is uſed for a Fort, Tower, or Caſtle, becauſe Forts and Towers, being places of defence, were for the moſt part built upon ſome high place, upon ſome rock or præcipice (Prov. 18. 10.) The name of the Lord is a ſtrong Tower; That is, we are as ſafe under his protection, as in a ſtrong Tower founded on the ſteepeſt rock. And the Prophet deſcribing the ſafety of him who walks uprightly, gives it in this word; His place of defence ſhall be the munition of Rocks, Iſa. 33. 16. So Jer. 48. 1. Miſgab is confounded and diſmayed; that is, the high place or Caſtle of defence is diſmaied: That word which is common to all places of ſafety, being ſuppoſed by our tranſlators, as the proper name of ſome one place of more eminent ſafety.

Further, although this word (Exalted) implies ſafety, yet in the Original, we have two words, They are exalted to ſafety. He that is exalted (according to the ſence of that word) is ſafe: But to ſhew the compleatneſs of their ſafety, ſafety or ſalvation is expreſſed. He is exalted to ſafety with ſalvation, or he is ſafely exalted in ſafety. It is a full and a perfect ſafety, to which God exalts his mourners and oppreſſed ſervants: They are as ſafe as ſalvation it ſelf can make them. That's the force of the Hebraiſm.

Ἓν διὰ δυοῖν. Endyadis.

From the former clauſe of the verſe, we may Obſerve,

First, That, advancement is the gift of God.

He ſetteth on high thoſe that are low, Pſalm 75. 6, 7. Promotion cometh neither from the Eaſt, nor from the Weſt, nor from the South (neither this way nor that way, nor any way of man) but God putteth down one, and ſetteth up another. When a man is advanced by the favour of a Prince, it is God that ſetteth him up. If a man be advanced by the vote of the people, yet it is God that ſetteth him up. Though a man be advanced by that, which may ſeem to have moſt contingency in it, by a lot, yet it is God that ſetteth him up, Prov. 16. 33. The lot is caſt into the lap, but the whole diſpoſing thereof is of the Lord. The Lord gives ſpecial direction to mans peradventure, and certainly determines, what we call contingent.

Secondly Obſerve, They that are low and mourning, are neareſt to exaltation and ſafety.

To be very low, it is to be (as it were) in a due poſture and readineſs to be exalted very high; He ſetteth the low on high (Luke 1. 51.) he hath put down the mighty from their ſeat, and hath exalted the humble and meek; or, hath exalted the lowly and the meek. We are not to underſtand it only of thoſe, who are low, that is, lowly in mind (that frame of heart which is wrought above in the higheſt Heavens (is in this ſence) loweſt upon the earth) but we may underſtand it likewiſe of thoſe, who are low in their eſtates; (many that are low in mind, may be high in place; a man may have abundance of humility in the height of outward eminency) therefore (I ſay) we muſt take in both; Before honour goes humility, as a high mind before a fall, Prov. 15. 33. And (Pſal. 113. 6, 7.) he raiſeth up the poor out of the duſt, and lifteth the needy out of the dunghil, that he may ſet him with Princes, &c.

And as it is in reference to particular perſons, ſo to the Church and people of God in general; when they are low, then look for their raiſing up. The Scripture is frequent in this, Deut. 32. 36. Pſal. 126. Pſal. 102. 13. And in that notable place, Iſa. 33. 9, 10. The Ambaſſadors of peace weep bitterly, the earth mourneth, and Lebanon languiſheth, and Carmel ſhakes off her fruit, &c. All places, every creature is brought in, mourning with that mourning people. When it was thus with them, Now will I ariſe, (ſaith the Lord) now will I be exalted, now will I lift up my ſelf. There are three Nows for it, to note That the ſpecial Now of their exaltation. But the Text ſaith, God would then be exalted. Was he brought low? God is alwayes alike exalted in himſelf, but he is not alwayes alike exalted in his people; therefore when he ſaith, Now will I be exalted; the meaning is, I will exalt this people who are low, that my name may be exalted and lifted up in the ſight of all people.

Therefore our low eſtate ſhould be ſo far from ſinking, that it ſhould lift up our faith in believing deliverance and exaltation. A low eſtate, is a great advantage for faith; faith hath ſureſt footing when we lie proſtrate upon the ground: There faith ſtands firmeſt, becauſe there faith meets with moſt promiſes: Promiſes are the foundation of faith. The people of God have never ſo much of the word about them, as when they have leaſt of the world about them. The covenant ſits cloſeſt to us, when we are diveſted of the creature. When the river is at the loweſt ebb, we are ſure the tide is coming in: the night is darkeſt a little before day breaks: when the dayes are ſhorteſt, and the winter ſharpeſt, then the ſpring of mercy is at hand. As the higheſt flouriſh of ungodly ones, is the immediate forerunner of their downfal (Pſal. 92. 7.) When the wicked ſpring as the graſs, what then? would you know the meaning of it? The next words are a comment upon the former: It is, that they ſhall be deſtroyed for ever : So, the loweſt downfal of the godly, is uſually the immediate forerunner of their advancement. When the godly wither as the graſs, the interpretation of it is, That they ſhall flouriſh for ever.

Obſerve in the third place, from that word, exalted to ſafety.

That, God can ſet his people on high, beyond the reach of all their Enemies.

Beyond the reach of their heads or counſels, and beyond the reach of their hands and ſwords ; Iſa. 33.16. The munition of rocks ſhall be their place of defence : He ſetteth them ſo high, that no ladders can be found long enough to ſcale theſe rocks, nor any Artillery or engine ſtrong enough to batter them down; and leaſt any ſhould ſay, but we will hold the ſiege, till we ſtarve them out ; it follows in the Text, Bread ſhall be given him, his waters ſhall be ſure. I remember a ſtory in Alexanders wars, that when he came to beſiege the Sogdians, a people who dwelt upon a rock, or had the literal munition of rocks for their defence, they jeered him, and asked him whether his Souldiers had wings or no? Unleſs your Souldiers can fly in the Air, we fear you not. It is a moſt certain truth, when God exalts a people, he can ſet them upon a rock, ſo high, that unleſs their adverſaries have wings, and thoſe more then Eagles wings, to ſoar higher then God himſelf, they are beyond annoyance. He carries his own upon Eagles wings ; what wings then muſt they have, who get above his people?

There are theſe two things, about which the thoughts of men are moſt converſant : The one is, to be ſet on high ; the other is, to be ſet in ſafety. They both meet in the mercy here promiſed : He ſetteth on high thoſe that are low, that's their honour : He exalts them to ſafety, that's their comfort. The firſt thoughts of men are ſpent to get a great eſtate, but their next thoughts are to keep and protect it. Experience hath often ſhewed us the men of the world, rolling riches and Titles together into a mountain ; but it hath been a mountain of ſnow, one hot day hath melted all down. The mountain of outward bleſſings, upon which God raiſeth his people, ſhall be, if he pleaſeth, like a mountain of Adamant, which cannot be melted, or like mount Sion, which cannot be removed. A high place is ſeldom a ſafe place : All high things are tottering, and the more high, the more tottering. Then how unſearchable is the wiſdom, how great the power of God, who can ſet his people very high, and yet very ſafe? who can make a man ſtand as firm and ſteady upon the higheſt pinacle of honour, as upon a level ground, or in a valley of the loweſt eſtate and condition. He exalts to ſafety.

Nutare ſolent excelſa omnia.

And hence we may draw down a difference between Gods exaltation of his own people, and the exaltation of his enemies and wicked ones. Wicked men are oft-times exalted, and God exalts them, though they know it not : but how? He exalts them to a high place, but doth he exalt them to a ſafe place? No, the Pſalmiſt, after a long temptation, concludes, Thou haſt ſet them in ſlippery places, thou caſteſt them down into deſtruction ; how are they brought into deſolation, as in a moment! Pſal. 73. 18, 19. Haman was exalted high, but not in ſafety : Many are exalted, as Jezabel exalted Naboth, high among the people ; but it was to ſtone him rather then to honour him. It is ſaid of Pharaoh, he lifted up the head of his chief Baker, he lifted up his head out of priſon indeed, but he lifted up his head to the gallows alſo ; he lifted him out of priſon, but it was unto his death. Such is the lifting up of wicked men, they may be ſet on high, but they are never ſet in ſafety. How many have we ſeen ſuddenly advanced, and as ſuddenly depreſs'd? We are never ſafe, but where God ſets us, or while God holds us in his hand.

Fourthly Obſerve, It is a wonder, a wonderful work of God, to exalt thoſe that are low, and ſet mourners in ſafety.

The 107 Pſalm, is a Pſalm recounting the wonderful works of God ; O that men would praiſe the Lord for his wonderful works! is the burthen of that holy ſong. And all thoſe wonders conclude in this, verſ. 39, 40. Again, they are miniſhed and brought low, through oppreſſion, affliction and ſorrow : what then? He powreth contempt upon Princes, &c. yet ſetteth he the poor on high from affliction, and maketh him families like a flock. How wonderful is this, that the Lord will give Kings for the ranſom of his people, and to raiſe his poor, will pour contempt upon Princes? the higheſt muſt down, rather then his low ones ſhall not be ſet on high. There are four things which encreaſe this wonder, and make it exceeding wonderful. Firſt, Theſe poor have no ſtrength (Deut. 32. 36.) He ſees that their ſtrength is gone. Secondly, Many times they have no hope, no faith ; When the Son of man comes, ſhall he find (among low ones) faith (this faith to be exalted) upon the earth? Luke 18. 8. Thirdly, They have many enemies, ſubtil enemies, powerful enemies, confident enemies, enemies (above hope) arrived at aſſurance, that they ſhall keep poor ones at an under for ever. Lord (ſaith David) how many are they that trouble me? So many they were, that he could not tell how many. Fourthly, They are ſuppoſed to have no friends, none to appear for them. Let us perſecute and take him (ſay they) for there is none to deliver him. Not a man, no nor God, as they conclude ; They ſay of my ſoul, there is no help for him in his God. I need not ſay, it is a wonder to exalt a people, upon all theſe diſadvantages; the fact ſpeaks : ſhould you ſee a man trod upon the ground, and many there holding him down, one by the arm, another by the leg, a third laying a great weight upon his breaſt ; were it not a wonder to ſee this man to riſe up, and reſcue himſelf from them all? Thus it is with the Church and ſervants of God, when they are low, all the world is upon their backs ; the world of wicked ones hang about them, one with his power, another with his policy, all with their utmoſt endeavours to hold them down ; yet the Lord ſets them on high, who were thus low, and exalts them to ſafety, who were thus in danger. Oh that men would praiſe the Lord for his goodneſs, and declare his wonderful works to the children of men.

Pſal. 71. 11.

And this is further cleared in the twelfth verſe.

He diſappointeth the devices of the crafty, ſo that their hand cannot perform their enterpriſe.

As if Eliphaz ſhould ſay, Would you know, how God exalteth his people, and ſetteth them in ſafety? 'Tis true, they have many enemies, many that plot and deviſe evil againſt them, but the Lord breaks their plots, he out-plots them ; He diſappointeth the devices of the crafty, &c. And as this is a proof of the former, ſo it is a further inſtance of Gods wonderful works. The firſt was in natural things, ſending rain ; the ſecond and third were in civil things ; firſt, exalting his own people ; and ſecondly, in defeating the policies and power of their adverſaries : ſo then, this twelfth verſe, may be taken either as it hath reference to the former, or as a further inſtance of Gods wiſdom and power.

He diſappointeth the devices of the crafty.] Or, he defeateth the purpoſes of the ſubtil (ſo Mr. Broughton readeth it) that their hands can bring nothing ſoundly to paſs. The Apoſtle in 1 Cor. 3. 19. ſets the holy ſtamp of divine authority upon this whole book, by quoting this or the next verſe, as a proof of his doctrine : For it is written (ſaith he) He takes the crafty in their own counſel ; He diſappoints the devices of the crafty, (ſaith Eliphaz) and, He takes the wiſe in their own craftineſs.

He diſappointeth.] The word ſignifies to break, to break a thing to pieces : and by a metaphor, to diſappoint or to defeat ; becauſe if an engine or inſtrument, with which a man intends to work, be broken, he is diſappointed of his purpoſe, and cannot go on with his work : So here, He breaks the devices of the crafty ; the crafty frame very curious engines and inſtruments, they lay fine plots and projects ; but the Lord breaks them, and then they are defeated or diſappointed. The word is often uſed for breaking or making void the law, as Pſalm 119. 126. Ezra 9. 13. becauſe wicked men, as much as in them lies, would defeat and diſappoint the holy purpoſe and deſign of God, in giving thoſe laws. They would repeal and abrogate the laws of God, that they might enact their own luſts. They would do that by the will of God, which the Lord doth with their wills, Null and diſappoint it.

מפר à radice פור fractus, contritus. הפר Confregit, diſſipavit. Metaphoricè irritum fecit. Latinè poteſt reddi abrogari.

מחשבות à radice חשב cogitavit, excogitavit, denotat opus ingenioſum, inventum artificium, quia artificium fit per cogitationem.
* Ainſw. on the Cant.

The devices.] The word which we tranſlate, devices, ſignifies, not barely cogitation, or thinking, but excogitation, or, ſtudied thinking; not only a natural thought, but an artificial thought, or thoughts made up and formed after long debate of a buſineſs in our own breaſts: This is properly expreſt by deviſing. Thoſe Pools of water in Cant. 7. 4. are called from this word, The pools in Heſhbon. Some take Heſhbon for a City (Numb. 21. 26.) and ſo it notes the place where thoſe pools were. Others tranſlate it thus *, Pools artificially made: And we may obſerve much skill and curioſity uſed in making pools and water-works. So (Exod. 28. 8.) the holy Girdle which was made for the High-Prieſt, is called a curious girdle; it is from the ſame Root; becauſe that girdle was made of cunning work, and exquiſite embroideries. So that this word notes, the very ſpirits and quinteſſence of ſinful wit, drawn out for the deviſing of evil. In Pſal. 119. 59. David uſeth this word, to ſhew the accurateneſs and holy curioſity which he uſed, in ſurveying his own life, I thought on my wayes, that is, I ſtudied my ſelf and my works with greateſt exactneſs, to find out every error or failing, or to frame my wayes to a hairs breadth (if it were poſſible) according to rule; which anſwers the Apoſtles phraſe, Eph. 5. of walking circumſpectly or exactly. Grace will vie it with ſinful craft, for exactneſs; that will make as curious works or devices in holineſs, as the other can in wickedneſs.

Of the crafty.] Here the workmen are deſcribed as well as their work; their works are devices, and the workmen are crafty. As the man is, ſo is his employment; we are in working as we are in being; Devices are the proper trade of crafty ones. The Original word ſometimes imports holy wiſdom, and ſometimes corrupt and ſinful wiſdom. We read it in a good ſence (Prov. 1. 4.) & (Prov. 22. 3.) The prudent man (a man that hath holy craft and skill in him) foreſees the plague, and hideth himſelf. Again, Prov. 8. 12. I Wiſdom dwell with Prudence, and find out knowledge of witty inventions. But uſually the word is taken in an ill ſence, for ſubtil and ſinful craft, for craftineſs and ſubtilty to do miſchief; therefore the Vulgar tranſlates it, He diſappointeth the devices of the Malignants; noting, that it is not any honeſt craft, but a malignant craft, by which the counſels and devices of theſe men are contrived or acted (Pſal. 83. 3.) that word is uſed, They have taken crafty counſel againſt thy people, and conſulted againſt thy hidden ones: And, Gen. 3. 1. Now the Serpent was more ſubtil then any beaſt of the field; The word properly ſignifies to be naked; and by a Metaphor, to be ſubtil, crafty, nimble; becauſe men, who (as tumblers, racers, rope-dancers) are to do a thing nimbly and ſpeedily, ſubtilly and ſlily, often ſtrip themſelves of all, but will never cumber themſelves with many cloaths. We know that craft always puts a cloak or veil upon actions, and walks in a diſguiſe; yet becauſe the crafty man is ſo nimble to turn and wind, and varie himſelf a thouſand wayes, both for the plotting and acting of his deſignes, therefore he is elegantly named from nakedneſs. Hence alſo in the Greek Language, the word which ſignifies any nimble acting or exerciſing the mind or body, as alſo places and Schools where thoſe exerciſes were performed and taught, is derived from nakedneſs, or being naked. And it is obſervable, that our firſt parents Adam and Eve, before they ſinned, are called (Gen. 2. 25.) naked. And the Serpent in the very next verſe (being the firſt of the third Chapter) is called ſubtil, by one and the ſame word. Our firſt Parents were naked outwardly (Innocency needed none, and Glory ſhall need no cloathing) they were alſo (in oppoſition to evil) naked inwardly; they were ſimple, plain-hearted, without any cloak of malice or wickedneſs. But the ſerpents nakedneſs, notes only a fitneſs, ſlyneſs, readineſs or activeneſs to do evil; for he was double-cloath'd with craft, cloak'd and hooded with ſubtilties, to act miſchiefs unſeen. The naked crafty ones of the Text, are the ſeed of the Serpent, his children, and therefore they bear their Fathers name. The Chaldee Paraphraſt tells us, that the crafty ones here meant by Eliphaz, were eſpecially the Egyptians, who when they would oppreſs the people of God, ſaid, Come on, let us deal wiſely with them, leſt they multiply, Exod. 1. 10. A crafty man is one, who hath not alwayes more underſtanding then his neighbour, but ever leſs conſcience: Yea, how great ſoever his wit is, his conſcience is ſo little, that it never ſtands in his light, whatſoever he is doing. He takes meaſure of his actions, not by what he ought to do, but by what he would have done; and yet he can ſeldom do what he would, for the Lord diſappoints the devices of the crafty ſo, that as it follows in the Text, ערום Nudus, ſignificat etiã involutum vafrum, cujus in animo plures ſunt flexiones & diverticula. Γυμνάζω, Exerceo, unde γυμνάσιον. Locus ubi nudi ſe exercebantur: nunc ſumitur pro ludu literario, ubi ingenia literis diſcendis exercentur. Nudi ſunt agiliores & minus præpediti.

Intelligit cogitationes Ægyptiorum, quia ſapientes fuerunt ad malefaciendum Iſraeli. Targ.

Their hands cannot perform their enterprize.

To every buſineſs, two things are required, Invention and Action; or, the electing of means, and the purſuing of the end: The former is Head-work, and the latter is Hand-work. The hands are the inſtruments of action, as the head is the inſtrument of invention and conſultation. Theſe crafty heads were at work before, now their hands go to it; What they deviſe craftily, they would act induſtriouſly; but they cannot, Their hands cannot perform their enterprize.

The word which we tranſlate Enterprize, ſignifies Being, as alſo reaſon, wiſdom and virtue; becauſe wiſdom, virtue, and reaſon, are, as it were, the being, ſtability and permanency of things; and therefore, as in the Hebrew, this word ſignifying wiſdom and virtue, is derived from a root which notes Being. So the word ſignifying wickedneſs and folly, is derived from a root (as ſome Criticks obſerve) which notes only a negative, or a not being of any thing; becauſe wickedneſs is nothing, or it is good for nothing: Thoſe things which want wiſdom and reaſon, are as if they were not, and ſhortly will not be at all. Hence ſome render the words thus, Their hands cannot perform their wiſdom, that is, they cannot bring to paſs that enterprize, which they had determined and laid (as themſelves conceived) with ſo much wiſdom and ſtrength of reaſon. Mr. Broughton to the ſame ſenſe; Their hands bring nothing ſoundly to paſs. And the Chaldee exemplifies it in the Egyptians before-mentioned, who as the holy ſtory informs us, could not effect that which they had conſulted with thoſe depths of policy, and principles of ſinful wiſdom, the deſtruction of the children of Iſrael. Here then we may obſerve, תושיה à radice איש ut און ab אין denotat eſſentiam, rationem, ſapientiam, virtutem ſemper permanentem aliis rebus in mũdo tranſeũtibus. Hinc ſignificat, omne quod cum intellectu & ratione fit; & hic ſpecialiter pro eo, quod quis ſibi ſtatuit ut faciat quo finem optatum aſſequatur, etiam in malum. Mer.

First, That, The wiſdom of natural men is nothing but craft or wit to do wickedly.

The Prophet Jeremy gives us this character of them, They are wiſe to do evil (Jer. 4. 22.) And to be wiſe to do evil, is very ill wiſdom, the worſt wiſdom, indeed meer folly; better to be a fool, then to be but ſo wiſe: And theſe have it from their father, it dwells and is derived in their blood, They are the ſeed of the ſerpent (as was toucht before) and his ſubtilty was made the inſtrument of the greateſt evil, the tainting of that firſt created innocency, and the overthrow of man. Now, they are called the ſerpents ſeed, becauſe they are like the Serpent; the Serpent was the ſubtilleſt of all the beaſts of the field, and theſe (as Chriſt ſpeaks of the men of the world) are wiſer in their generation then the children of light; yet it is but in their generation, and their wiſdom laſteth but for their generation, if it laſt ſo long: Elymas (Acts 13. 10.) being charged to be full of all ſubtilty and miſchief, is called at the next word, child of the Devil. Subtil to do miſchief, is the Genius or diſpoſition of the Devils children; and they ſhall have the Serpents, the Devils portion: For as the Serpent, who was once the ſubtilleſt of all the beaſts of the field (applying his ſubtilty to miſchief) became the moſt curſed of all the beaſts of the field; ſo they, who are thus the ſubtilleſt among the children of men, ſhall be the moſt curſed of all the children of men, Jer. 18. 18. We find crafty men in conſultation, and under a curſe; Come (ſay they) let us deviſe a device againſt Jeremiah, and let us ſmite him with the tongue. Let us deviſe devices; it is the ſame word in the text, but doubled for greater emphaſis: Theſe were their crafts-maſters. To deviſe devices, notes more then ordinary skill in that black art; as to work a work (John 6. 28.) notes great induſtry and intention of the mind in working. Some play their works rather then work their works: I muſt work the works of him that ſent me, ſaith our Lord Chriſt, John 9. 4. None ever laboured as Chriſt laboured, therefore his was working a work. As (I ſay) to work a work, notes great induſtry in working; ſo to deviſe a device, implies much cunning and skill laid out in deviſing. Now as theſe men would be witty above others, in deviſing evil, ſo they are curſed above others in bearing evil. The Prophet gives them their load, v. 21, 22. Therefore deliver up their children to the famine, and pour out their blood by the force of the ſword, and let their wives be bereaved, &c. And it is moſt juſt, that they ſhould be deepeſt in the curſe, who are deepeſt in ſuch craft: for the truth is, that, Every ſinful act, the more skill there is in it, the more ſin there is in it, it is beſt to be a dull-head, a very bungler in doing miſchief: Wit commends and ſets off other things, but it makes ſin the more ſinful and deformed.

Secondly Obſerve, That, Satan makes uſe of ſubtle, crafty men, and abuſeth their parts for his own purpoſes.

He diſappointeth the devices of the crafty. God never diſappointeth thoſe whom he ſets a work: If God diſappoint the devices of men, theſe devices were not of God: Satan ſets thoſe a work, whoſe work God ſpoils. The Lord loves to break Satans engines, tools and inſtruments. Chriſt came to deſtroy the works of the Devil, both his works within us, and his works againſt us. All Satans works and workmen ſhall rue it, when Chriſt pleaſes. And here we ſee whom Satan ſets a work, even men of the fineſt wits, of the moſt reaching brains, of the deepeſt judgments and richeſt endowments; theſe he draweth into his pay, and makes ſerviceable for his ends; that's Satans deſign; ſuch as are amongſt men, as the Serpent amongſt the beaſts, the moſt ſubtil of all, theſe Satan makes uſe of: The deep policy of an Achitophel, the Great Oracle of his times for counſel, he deſires to improve againſt a David; the high parts and learning of a Julian, he deſires to improve and boyle up againſt the Chriſtians; ſuch a one will not only Fire and ſword, but ſet hard to jear and wit them out of the profeſſion of the Goſpel.

Philoſophi hæreticorũ Patriarchæ. Tert.

And it is obſervable, that the ſeeds of the greateſt hereſies and errors, that ever poyſon'd the ſpirit of man, or vext the Church of God, have been ſown in that rank ſoyl, the wits of Philoſophers. Which gave Tertullian occaſion to call Philoſophers, The Patriarks of Hereticks, or The Patrons of Hereſies: They were men of high conceits and apprehenſions; and in thoſe fertile and rich grounds, Satan with great ſucceſs caſt the tares of error. When Chriſt came into the world, he had moſt oppoſition among the crafty Scribes and Phariſees; and Herod the Fox (as Chriſt himſelf calls him for his ſubtilty) was a notorious inſtrument of Satan, to hinder the receiving of Chriſt. Our Lord Chriſt ſometimes chooſeth the ſimpleſt, the meaneſt, the plaineſt men, fiſher-men, to do his work. But Satan chooſeth the ſubtileſt he can find in learned throngs, to ſend of his errand. The reaſon of this difference between Chriſts choice and Satans, is, Satan cannot make a Mercury out of every block; he is not able to give a man underſtanding, wiſdom or abilities for his work: neither can he increaſe or improve any mans parts and gifts; he muſt have inſtruments ready to his hand, he can but put them forward and tempt them on. He will give ſuch as are ſtrong and crafty, many motives to ſerve him, but he cannot furniſh them with ſtrength or craft to ſerve him. But Chriſt can give gifts to men, which they have not, and raiſe the parts which they have. He can make himſelf a Mercury, a meſſenger out of any block. Chriſt can ſend a fool of his errand, and cauſe him to do it wiſely; he can cauſe the ſtammering tongue to ſpeak plain, and the plaineſt man to ſpeak the higheſt Rhetorick. When a Moſes complains of a ſlow tongue, he can ſay, I will be with thy mouth, and teach thee what thou ſhalt ſay, Exod. 4. 12. If he finds us not fit to do his buſineſs, he can make us fit. If Chriſt pleaſe, he can make a man Maſter of his trade, before, or as ſoon as ever he is a ſervant to it. Thus, without the wiſdom of the world, Chriſt overcomes the wiſdom of the world: And by the fooliſhneſs of preaching (as men count fooliſhneſs) ſaveth thoſe that believe (1 Cor. 1. 21.) The fooliſhneſs of God is wiſer then man; that is, thoſe inſtruments which Chriſt imployes, how fooliſh ſoever men account them, ſhall foil all the wiſdom of man.

Therefore let no man boaſt of his natural parts, unleſs they be ſpiritualiz'd, and reſign'd up (for ſuch Chriſt commonly uſes, though he can make uſe of others) to the ſervice of Chriſt. Conſider to whom you are inſtrumental, with your parts and knowledge. All wit out of Chriſts work, degenerates into craft, and wiſdom into wickedneſs. It is Satans work to ſolicite the learning of men (even as an Adulterer ſollicites the beauty of women) that he may commit folly with it, and beget ſome monſtrous birth of miſchief and villany.

For, when ſuch appear on Satans ſide, they are a great credit to his cauſe, and by the reputation of their learning and parts draw others to it. Do ye not ſee (will he ſuggeſt to inferior ones) ſuch and ſuch wiſe, learned men, go this way; ſuch learned Divines, ſuch learned Lawyers, ſuch deep Politicians, and do you ſcruple? and how many have been caught in this ſnare, and led aſide by the noiſe of their abilities, whom Satan abuſeth to his own ſide? what, ſuch wiſe men, ſuch learned men, think thus, and do you ſimple ones ſtand off? Hath he not reaſon then to ſay of wiſe men, (as it was once ſaid of one) Seeing ye are ſuch, I wiſh you would come over to me: and to brag of them, as much as ever that Perſian Monarch did of Themiſtocles, whoſe revolting to him from the Græcians, tranſported him ſo, that he broke ſuddenly out of his ſleep with theſe words, I have Themiſtocles the Athenian. I remember what Auguſtine obſerves (it is a very remarkable paſſage) in an Epiſtle to a young Noble man of great learning, who it ſeems had been ſometime his Schollar. Auguſtine having received from him a Poem or copy of accurate verſes (but perceiving that he abuſed his wit to wantonneſs or uſeleſs curioſity) returns him anſwer to this effect, I have read this Poem, and I know not with what verſes, or with what lamentation to mourn over it; becauſe I ſee an excellent wit ſparkling in every line, but ſuch an one, as I cannot dedicate unto God. A little after he thus exhorts him, Give thy ſelf unto my Lord, who hath given thee this excellent wit: if thou hadſt found a golden Cup, what wouldſt thou have done with it? Wouldſt thou not have given it to ſome good publick uſe? God hath given thee a golden wit, thy underſtanding is a golden Cup, and wilt thou let thy luſts drink out of it, or wilt thou drink thy ſelf to the Devil in it? I tell thee thus much, the Devil would fain make thy wit his ornament, and thy parts, the credit of his Court and Cauſe. Satan ſerves himſelf of the beſt wits, and his is the worſt ſervice of wit: Such ſhall be paid at laſt with crying, We fools. Of all fools, the knowing wiſe fools will be in the ſaddeſt condition.

Cũ talis ſis, utinã noſter eſſes. Habeo Themiſtoclem Athenienſẽ.

Auguſt. Ep. 39. ad Licentiũ Juvenẽ nobi'ẽ & doctum. Da Domino meo te, qui tibi illud donavit ingeniũ, &c. Accepiſti à Deo ingeniũ ſpiritualiter aureũ, & miniſtras inde libidinibus & in illo Satanæ propinas teipſum? Ornari abs te diabolus quærit.

Obſerve Thirdly, The crafty are full of hopes, that their deviſes will ſucceed; and full of trouble, becauſe they ſucceed not.

Otherwiſe it could not be ſaid, that God diſappointeth the deviſes of the crafty; Diſappointment implies expectation: And it is no afflicting affliction to miſs of that which we never looked for. Theſe thought all ſure. Theſe doubted not to over-wit and over-power all, at laſt. This brought them ſomewhat beyond hope, even to the borders of aſſurance; at leaſt it ſo endeared them to their hopes, that they would rather hazzard their ſouls, then loſe their plots; they were burthened to be delivered. Having conceived miſchief, they were in travel with iniquity, Pſal. 7. 14. As the Lord ſuffers his own people to fear much, that when deliverance comes, their joy may be full: ſo, he ſuffers wicked men to hope much, that their ſorrows may be full, when they cannot be delivered. A woman forgets the pains of her travel, for joy that a man child is born into the world; and theſe men ſhall remember the pains of their travel, for ſorrow that a monſter (ſuch are their deſigns) is not born into the world: That their miſchief comes not (in their ſenſe) to light, leaves them in deſperate darkneſs.

Fourthly Obſerve, What ſuch plot and deviſe, they labour to act and effect.

Their hands cannot perform their enterpriſe; which intimates, that they put their hands to the work, as well as their heads; as ſoon as they have laid their plot, they fall to acting. We ſhould in this imitate our enemies, not to ſtand deviſing and conſulting, this is a good way, and t'others a good way, and then do neither, or then ſit ſtill and moulder away in expectation; love to, and zeal for Chriſt, and his truth, ſhould render us as full of action, as of invention; of execution, as of deſign.

Fifthly, Though they did attempt it with their hands, yet they could not effect it with their hands, their hands did not perform their enterpriſe.

Hence note, That, Crafty men may deviſe ſtrongly, but they have not ſtrength ſufficient to accompliſh their devices.

The Phariſees after all their confederacies againſt Chriſt were forc't (without any rack, but that of their own conſciences) to make this confeſſion, Joh. 12. 19. Perceive ye how we prevail nothing. At this day they have many fine devices and Idæas ready framed in their heads, but the hand ſhakes, They cannot perform their enterpriſe. They want not counſel, nor craft, nor skill, nor will, nor deſires, nor endeavours, only they want God with them. Hence it is, that though they gather very proper materials, and lay very ſtrong foundations, yet they cannot rear up their building. And in the iſſue; (Luke 14. 29.) All that behold it ſhall mock, ſaying, Theſe men began to build, and were not able to finiſh; it is the main work of God to ſtop evil men in their works: what they would do, he ſaith they ſhall not; and what they would not do, he ſaith they ſhall: Pharaoh deviſed a deviſe againſt the children of Iſrael, but his hands could not perform his enterpriſe. Haman deviſed a deviſe againſt the Jews, but his hands could not perform his enterpriſe. Achitophel gave crafty counſel againſt David, but his hands could not perform his enterpriſe. Herod the Fox plotted againſt Chriſt, to hinder the courſe of his Miniſtery and Mediatorſhip, but he could not perform his enterpriſe: 'Tis ſo all along, therefore (Pſal. 2. 1.) it is ſaid, Why do the Heathen imagine a vain thing; a vain thing, becauſe a thing ſucceſleſs, their hands could not perform it; it was vain, not only becauſe there was no true ground of reaſon, why they ſhould imagine or do ſuch a thing; but vain alſo, becauſe they laboured in vain, they could not do it. And therefore it follows, *verſ.*4. He that ſitteth in the heavens ſhall laugh, the Lord hath them in deriſion. The Lord ſees what fools they are, and men (yea themſelves) ſhall ſee it. The Prophet gives us an elegant deſcription to this purpoſe (Iſa. 59. 6.) They weave the ſpiders web, but their webs ſhall not become garments, neither ſhall they cover themſelves with their works. As if he had ſaid, they have been deviſing and ſetting things in a goodly frame to catch flies; they have been ſpinning a fine thread, out of their brains, as the Spider doth out of her bowels, ſuch is their web: but when they have this web, they cannot cut it out, or make it up into a garment. They ſhall go naked and cold, notwithſtanding all their ſpinning and weaving, all their plotting and deviſing. The next broom that comes will ſweep away all their webs, and the Spiders too, except they creep apace. God loves and delights to croſs worldly proverbs, and worldly craft.

How many viſible demonſtrations hath there been of this in all ages! How many cunning, but ruining devices have been unacted! They went thorough the Head-work, but they could not get through their Hand-work. We may ſay, as in the Pſalm (76.5.) None of the men of might have found their hands: The men of craft found their heads, but the men of might (bleſſed be God) have not yet found their hands, to execute up to the height of the deviſers, either, wit or malice.

In this we ſee the glorious prerogative of God. How many thouſand, thouſand, thouſand thoughts do men looſe! The thoughts of many years are loſt in a moment: God never loſt, nor never ſhall looſe one thought. And therefore David put theſe two together in a breath. Having ſaid (Pſalm 33. 10.) The Lord bringeth the counſel of the Heathen to nought, he maketh the devices of the people of none effect: In the next verſe, he ſubjoyns, The counſel of the Lord ſtandeth for ever, the thoughts of his heart to all generations. And as the counſel of the Lord ſtands, ſo he causeth the counſel of thoſe to ſtand, who conſult for him: He confirmeth the word of his Servants, and performeth the counſel of his Meſſengers, Iſa.44.26. So that their hands ſhall perform their enterpriſe, as the Lord encouraged his ancient people; (Zach. 4. 9.) The hands of Zerubbabel have laid the foundation of this houſe, his hands ſhall alſo finiſh it: And again, Chap. 8. 13. Fear not, let your hands be ſtrong. As if he had ſaid, Fear not, go on with your work; for your hands ſhall perform their enterpriſe; you ſhall not be beaten from your work, neither ſhall ye work in vain. The Lord himſelf hath no barren counſels, and he makes all the counſels which are for him, bring forth in their due time, deſired fruit, the longed for and beloved iſſue.

Laſtly, Obſerve, That, It is a great and wonderful work of God, to diſappoint the devices, and ſtop the enterpriſes of crafty men.

Eliphaz put this among the wonders of God. This is reported in a way of admiration concerning God (Iſa. 44. 25.) He fruſtrates the tokens of the lyers, and maketh diviners mad; he turneth wiſe men backwards, and maketh their knowledge fooliſh. The wiſdom of God is moſt ſeen, in defeating the wiſe; as the power of God is moſt ſeen, in overthrowing the ſtrong. While we conſider that Theirs, are ſecret devices, and that they are ſubtil devices; that they have many devices, and that they have many wayes to bring theſe devices to paſs; it cannot fall below a wonder in our thoughts, that their thoughts, or devices are not accompliſhed. Therefore the Pſalmiſt concludes (Pſalm 124.) Unleſs it had been the Lord, who was on our ſide, &c. we had been ſwallowed up quick, and taken in their ſnare. As if he had ſaid, if we ſhould have had any leſs then God, to help us, we had been gone; all the world could not ſave us. To paſs through a place full of gins, and ſnares, and pits, ſet and made on purpoſe to take a man, and that man not taken, is marvelous in our eyes. Thus it is with the people of God, they walk among ſnares and traps; The trade of moſt wicked men, is to be Trap-makers, Snare-makers, if not Sword-makers againſt the Saints of the moſt High. They meet with devices upon devices, and plots upon plots; now that God ſhould diſappoint all theſe, and exalt his people to ſafety, in the very face of death and dangers, how admirable!

But ſome may object, Yet we ſee that, at leaſt ſome of theſe plots are not diſappointed, at leaſt ſome of theſe devices take, and we have ſeen bloody hands performing their enterpriſe.

I anſwer, in a word, Firſt, this Text and the obſervation bottom'd upon it, are to be underſtood of what is often done, not ſtrictly of what is alwayes done. The Lord very frequently diſappoints the devices of the crafty.

But ſecondly, Their very ſucceſs is a diſappointment, and their proſperity is their curſe. For their cauſe is under a curſe, and ſo are their perſons, when both ſeem moſt ſucceſsful. If outward judgments ſlay not wicked men, Their proſperity ſhall, Prov. 1. 32.

Thirdly, All the ſucceſs, which the devices of wicked crafty ones have, tends to the fulfilling of Gods counſels, more then their own: So that, though it be to the eye, or in the letter, ſucceſs to them; yet in truth, and upon the matter, it is ſucceſs to the cauſe of God: Craft prevails no further, and no longer on earth, then ſerves to accompliſh the counſels of Heaven, and fulfil what infinite wiſdom hath deviſed. Therefore when you ſee any devices of the crafty thrive, know, that God is ſerving himſelf upon them, and that they are but acting, What his hand and counſel hath determined before to be done, Act. 4. 28. As Chriſt himſelf overcame by dying, ſo do they who are Chriſts, they have ſucceſs in all their diſappointments; and theſe are diſappointed in all their ſucceſſes, and die while they overcome. No ſinful deviſe of man ever did, or ever ſhall prevail, beyond a contribution to the juſt and holy purpoſe of God. All their prevailings are diſappointments, who intentionally oppoſe, though they really accompliſh the good pleaſure and purpoſe of God.

VERS. 13, 14, 15, 16.

He taketh the wiſe in their own craftineſs; and the counſel of the froward is carried headlong.
They meet with darkneſs in the day time; and grope in the noon-day as in the night.
But he ſaveth the poor from the Sword, from their mouth, and from the hand of the mighty.
So the poor hath hope; and iniquity ſtoppeth her mouth.

IN theſe four verſes Eliphaz proceeds in, and finiſhes the former Argument, by a further and fuller clearing of the power and wiſdom of God, in catching and over-matching crafty ones, in their wayes and counſels. Having ſhewed before (in verſ. 12.) that their devices are diſappointed; he ſheweth now, that they are intangled in their devices. There, we ſaw they could not perform their enterpriſes, priſes, and here we ſhall ſee them ruined in their enterpriſes. It is a ſore trouble to ungodly men, when they cannot do the miſchief, which they intend to others; but it is a far ſorer trouble, when their counſels recoyle, and when their own projects promote their own ruin: when their own actions effect that, which they had rather die, then ſee done; when that miſchief falleth upon their own heads, which they intended others: That's their calamity in this Text.

He taketh the wiſe in their own craftineſs.

Theſe wiſe men, are no better then the crafty, before mentioned, for we ſee their wiſdom is but craftineſs. We had the Crafty in the former verſe; and here we have their craft or craftineſs. The Apoſtle in 1 Cor. 3. 19. quotes this Text of Eliphaz; The Wiſdom of the world is fooliſhneſs with God; for it is written, He taketh the wiſe in their own craftineſs. The Greek word there uſed hath ſomewhat more in it, then the Hebrew word, opened at verſe 12. For it notes a fitneſs for all purpoſes, a dexterity to ſerve any turn, be it never ſo ſiniſter or evil. Such a man can be on any ſide, and is for any purpoſe you will turn him to. A godly man hath but one work, and he can do but one work, that is, one work in kind; every work he doth (as a godly man) hath a ſtamp of goodneſs, or godlineſs, of holineſs, or juſtice upon it. But theſe crafty ones are for any work; for various works, you may turn them looſe to any ſervice; they are ready to do good for a need, to ſerve their own ends, and they will not ſtick at any evil, for their own ends; their bias is not within them, but upon them, and they can clap it to which ſide they pleaſe, or may be moſt pleaſing to, or taking with others; yet this Turn-coat Craftineſs ſhall not ſerve their turn; for ſaith the Text, He taketh the wiſe in their own craftineſs.

πανȣργία à πανȣ̃ργος, quaſi dicas, ad quodlibet opus promptus, qui dexteritate ingenii valet ad quodlibet agendū.

The word which we tranſlate [He taketh] is very ſignificant. It imports a taking by force or ſtrength, and it imports a taking by skill or ſtratagem. God will have them both wayes: If theſe cunning men work by their wits, He can take them: The Lord hath more ſtratagems to take them, then they have had to take others: Or if they work by power and by plain ſtrength, he can take them. The Lord hath more ſtrength to take them, then they have had to take others.

לכד cepit, apprehendit de loco aut urbe, expugnavit inopinata & violenta expugnatione.

The word is applied to the taking in of Cities or Forts, places ſtrengthned both by Art and Nature, and to the taking of them (which includes both ſences) either by ſiege or ſudden ſurpriſal. Read Numb. 21. 32. Joſh. 6. 2. Deut. 2. 34. And ſo the ſence may be, that, although theſe men think, they have ſo intrenched and fortified themſelves by their wits, policies and counſels (as it were in a ſtrong City or Caſtle) that they ſeem impregnable, and laugh at all oppoſite power: Yet, then God beſieges, batters and takes them preſently; he takes in, and ſlights their works with eaſe; he levels to the ground their great thoughts, even the high Tower of their imaginations: That may be the force of the word [He taketh them.] For as every natural man labours to ſecure himſelf and his luſts, againſt the power of the word of God, by carnal reaſonings and pleadings for them: All which the Apoſtle calls ſtrong holds (2 Cor. 10. 4, 5.) The weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but they are mighty through God to the caſting down of ſtrong holds. Now (I ſay) as natural men ſecure themſelves (as it were in ſtrong-holds) by their carnal reaſonings; ſo wicked Politicians think to ſecure themſelves, and fortifie their deſigns by plots and platforms of crafty counſel. But as God in the miniſtry of his word, caſteth down all the arguments, which a man frames in his heart, to protect his luſts: ſo the Lord in the adminiſtration of his providence, throws down all the fortifications, which crafty men frame in their hearts, to protect their lawleſs practiſes, and takes them in.

Secondly, The word may imply the taking and binding of a man in bonds or in fetters. He takes the wiſe in their own craftineſs, that is, he takes and binds them as with a chain, or he fetters them in their own craftineſs. So the word is uſed (Prov. 5. 22.) His own iniquities ſhall take the wicked himſelf, and he ſhall be holden with the cords of his ſins.

Thirdly, The metaphor may be carried in alluſion to Hunters of wild beaſts, or to bird-takers; who ſet nets and gins, traps or toyls to take them: Theſe wiſe, crafty men, are cunning hunters; their trade and buſineſs is, to ſet nets to catch, and toyls to intangle; they dig pits, and lay ſnares, for others to fall into: So the Prophet deſcribes them (Jer. 5. 26.) They lay wait as he that ſetteth ſnares, they ſet a trap, they catch men: But at laſt, God takes the wiſe in their own craftineſs; that is, the pits they have digged, and the ſnares they have laid, and the nets they have ſet, ſhall catch themſelves.

Fourthly, The word is applied in Scripture, to a taking or a diſcovery by lot: So (Joſh. 7. 15.) the rule was thus given, He that ſhall be taken with the accurſed thing, ſhall be burnt; and verſ. 18. Achan was taken, that is, taken by a lot, the lot diſcovered and catcht him. Achan had hid the Babyloniſh garment, and the wedge of gold ſafe enough, as he thought: and one would have thought, that in ſuch a multitude, in ſuch an huge hoſt and throng of people, he might have been hidden too; but God ſends a lot, and takes out Achan from the midſt of all the multitude; he calls him out by name, this is the man. There may be a like meaning and uſe of the word in this place, He taketh the wiſe in their own craftineſs; that is, men who think to ſhelter themſelves amongſt the multitude, or to walk in the clouds of craft: men who hide and ſhadow themſelves from the eye of the world, as if none ſhould ſee who they are, or what they do, even theſe God will take; he will direct a divine lot, one time or other, to apprehend and lay hold on them; he will diſcover Achans, the troublers of his Iſrael, in their wicked counſels; and bring to light their ſtoln wedges of Gold, and their Babyloniſh garments.

There is one thing further conſiderable, from the ſence of that Greek word, which the Apoſtle uſes (1 Cor. 3. 19.) He taketh the wiſe, &c. The Apoſtles word ſignifies properly to take, or a taking with the hand, a laying hold upon one that is flying: as in a battel, when the enemy flies and runs, the purſuer takes hold of him, and will not let him eſcape. And ſo the ſence is, that though theſe crafty ones think to make an eſcape, when they have done miſchief, to out-run the juſtice of men, yea, to get out of the reach of God; yet he taketh them, as flying enemies or malefactors, that would make an eſcape; he catcheth them by the back, takes them by the ſhoulder, layes faſt hold on them, ſo that they ſhall not be able to get away. He takes the wiſe in their own craftineſs.

δρασσόμενος à δράσσομαι, Manu capio & firmiter teneo; fugientē in curſu deprehendere manuq; injecta capere. Ita tenere quicquam ut nō elabatur; unde δρὰξ manipulus pugillus. Eraſ.

Laſtly, It is obſervable, that the Prepoſition [in] he takes them [in] their craftineſs, may be underſtood inſtrumentally: and ſo it is as much as the Propoſition [by:] He takes them in, that is, he takes them by their devices; that Prepoſition is often put inſtrumentally (Gen. 32. 10.) Jacob ſaith, In my ſtaff I paſſed over this Jordan; we tranſlate, with my ſtaff, or, by my ſtaff I paſſed over this Jordan. And ſo Heb. 1. 1. God who at ſundry times, ſpake in time paſt to the Fathers [in] the Prophets, ſo the Greek; we tranſlate, by the Prophets, becauſe they were the means or the inſtruments, which God employed to ſpeak by. Thus here, He takes the wicked [in] their craftineſs; or [by] their craftineſs; their craftineſs is the very means and inſtrument by which God apprehends and takes them. So much for the opening of this firſt clauſe.

Pleroſq; aſtus illorum facit Deus inſtrumentū ad arcendū ab iis quod cogitans. Rab. Levi.

We may Note hence, Firſt, That, No wiſdom or craftineſs of man, can ſtand before the wiſdom and power of God.

He not only takes them in their fooliſhneſs, but in their craftineſs; he ſtayes not till they begin to dote and do weakly, before he takes them; but when they are in their height of wit, and in the depths of worldly wiſdom and policy; when they put forth the quinteſſence of craft, and give counſel like the Oracle of God (2 Sam. 16. 23.) then God takes them; He takes them in their craftineſs. (Prov. 21. 30.) There is no wiſdom, nor underſtanding, nor counſel againſt the Lord. No counſel againſt the Lord. How is it then ſaid in Pſalm 2. The Kings of the Earth ſet themſelves, and the rulers take counſel together, againſt the Lord, and againſt his anointed? There are many counſels oppoſed againſt the Lord, but there are none prevailing againſt the Lord. The meaning of that holy Proverb, is, That no wiſdom, not the moſt ſublime and refined wiſdom; no counſel, not the moſt Machivilian or Achitophelian counſel can prevail againſt the Lord. Men, uſually catch others, when they are at a fault, or take them upon ſome ad-advantage and error in their counſels. Moſt ſucceſſes of men, are made out of the ſlips and defects of their adverſaries: They take, upon miſtakes, either in adviſing or acting; but after the moſt deliberate and grave debates, the choiceſt and beſt grounded reſolves, the Lord takes them. For (1 Cor. 1. 25.) The fooliſhneſs of God is wiſer then man: And if the wiſdom of man cannot match the fooliſhneſs of God, how ſhall it contend with the wiſdom of God? as the Prophet Jeremiah ſpeaks in another caſe, If I have run with footmen, and they have wearied me, how can I contend with horſes? So, if theſe men are not able to deal with the fooliſhneſs of God, how ſhall they deal with his wiſdom? Not, that there is any, the leaſt imaginable fooliſhneſs in God; for as God is light, and in him there is no darkneſs at all; ſo God is wiſdom, and in him there is no fooliſhneſs at all: but the Holy Ghoſt ſpeaks thus, to put God as low as the fooliſheſt thoughts of man can put him, which is to think there is fooliſhneſs in God; yet in that, or then, he is wiſer then they.

Secondly Obſerve, That, God turneth the counſels of wicked men againſt themſelves.

He taketh the wiſe, not only in, but by their craftineſs; He beats their own weapons againſt their heads; He wreſts their weapons out of their hands, and with them wounds their hearts. Thoſe counſels and contrivements, by which they thought to ſecure themſelves, are their deſtruction. He deſtroyes them in their counſels, and by their counſels.

This wonderfully magnifies and commends the wiſdom of God: He doth not trouble himſelf to deviſe ſome new way or ſtratagem to take theſe men, but he makes uſe only of that which they have deviſed. It is the nobleſt way of conquering, to conquer our enemy with his own weapons; ſuch was that victory of David over Goliah; and that was a type of Chriſts victory over the Devil and all ſpiritual wickedneſſes. And ſuch will his victory be over all the wickedneſſes of this world. The Lord is (and ſhall ever be) known by the judgments which he executeth; the wicked is ſnared in the work of his own hands, Higgaion Selah *. Mark and meditate, Pſal. 9. 16.

Qui ſcripſerunt de arte militari; dicunt ſummū genus dimicandi, quoties calcato umbone adverſarii, ſe in hoſtilem clypeū erigit miles & ita contraſtantis vulnerat terga. Serv. in Virg. Æn. 11.

* Rem meditandā ſummè. Jun. in loc.

It was the plot of Satan, to tempt man, who was made in the image of God (for the doing of good and a voiding evil) to deſire to be as God, knowing good and evil; he tempts man to affect a Deity, or a Godſhip; and this plot was, to ruine man below the beaſts, by aſpiring to an equality with God; or to make man leſs then he was made, by ſeeking to be as much as his maker. Now the Lord takes (as it were) this weapon out of Satans hands, and deſtroyes him by it. Satan would have man aſpire to be a God, that he might be ruined; and God becomes man, to ruine Satan: This was the greateſt counterplot that ever was. God took the Devil in, and by his own craftineſs. As if God had ſaid, Satan, Thou ſhalt ſee what a fine device thou haſt deviſed, I will meet thee in thy own way, and turn it upon thee. Thou wouldſt have man become God, ſo to ruine him; now God ſhall become man, and by that I will at once ruine thy counſels, and repair the broken condition of man.

Joſeph's brethren, had a device to hinder his Prophecies, and make his dreams but phancies; Joſeph dreamed that his brethren ſhould worſhip him; they ſell him for a captive into Egypt: what more oppoſite to honour among his brethren, then captivity among ſtrangers? yet this device effected what they oppoſed; Joſeph was exalted in Egypt, and his brethren preſs'd with want, worſhipt or bowed unto him for bread.

The Jews took counſel to kill Chriſt, and what was the motive? A wiſe man among them ſuggeſts this fear; If we let him thus alone, the Romans will come and take away both our place and Nation (Joh. 11. 48.) But the Lord took the wiſe in this craftineſs; for that cruel act in killing Chriſt, brought the Romans upon them: The time cometh (ſaith Chriſt, he foreſaw what would come) that thine enemies ſhall caſt a trench about thee, and compaſs thee round, and keep thee in on every ſide; and they ſhall lay thee even with the ground, and thy children within thee; and they ſhall not leave in thee one ſtone upon another, becauſe thou knoweſt not the time of thy viſitation, Luke 19. 43, 44. And thus as the Pſalmiſt (Pſalm 64. 8.) propheſied of his enemies; They made their own tongues to fall upon themſelves. A ſtrange thing, that the fall of a mans tongue ſhould oppreſs his body, and whole eſtate; yet ſo it is, the weight of a mans tongue falling upon him, cruſhes him to powder. The ſeventh Pſalm is the paraphraſe of this point (verſ. 14.) He travelleth with miſchief, and hath brought forth a lie; (that anſwers verſ. 12. He diſappointeth the devices of the crafty:) He made a pit, and digged it, and is fallen into the ditch which he made; his miſchief ſhall return upon his own head, and his violent dealings ſhall come down upon his own pate: Here is verſ. 13. made good, He taketh the wiſe in their own craftineſs.

How doth this aggravate the ſorrows of crafty men? It is ſad enough with the crafty, when they are taken by the craftineſs of other men; That any man out-wits them, is enough to put them out of their wits: How then will they live, being taken and enſnared by their own wit; when they ſee themſelves acceſſary to their own undoing; when they ſee they have pull'd down their eſtates with their own hands, and have put fire to their own houſes? As it greatens the ſin, ſo it greatens the puniſhment, when a man falls by his own hand; ſelf-murder is the moſt ſinful and moſt bloody murder. Neither is their ſin or puniſhment leſs, who die by the craftineſs of their own heads, then theirs, who die by the violence of their own hands.

This is a viſible truth among us, and he that runs, may read it in the book of Gods latter providences: I believe our age will be able to make as fair a record of this point for poſterity, as any that hath paſſed, if not as all that have paſſed for many generations. He takes the wiſe in their own craftineſs: And, as it follows in the Text.

The counſel of the froward is carried headlong.

The counſel.] There is ſomewhat further in that: not only are their devices diſappointed, but their counſels; Counſels are the reſults of ſerious and ſad debates: Craft is of one, counſel of many heads laid together. Counſel is the extract of reaſon, both about what we are to do, or leave undone: Theſe counſels God carries head-long: there is nothing more oppoſite to counſel then precipitation. Long deliberation ſhould go before determination, but their counſels ſhall be carried head-long: They ſhall either be overhaſty in counſel, or their counſels being ſolemnly enough ſetled, ſhall be over-haſtily acted: Raſh, headlong execution may be as dangerous as raſh, headlong reſolutions. But whoſe are theſe counſels? The ſame mens ſtill, though under another notion. The counſel of the froward. Before we had, the devices of the crafty; and again, the craftineſs of the wiſe; now here, the counſel of the froward. The Spirit of God varies words, but the men are the ſame. There is ſcarce variety enough of words in all languages, to expreſs the variety of wickedneſſes, which one heart ſpeaks. The Hebrew word in the root, ſignifieth to wreſt or to writhe a thing, or to wreſt and turn a thing as wraſtlers their bodies. Hence by a Trope, it is tranſlated often to wraſtle; becauſe a cunning man in wraſtling, turneth and windeth his body, and works himſelf in and out every way, to get an advantage of his adverſary any way; therefore your cunning-headed men, your crafty men, are fitly preſented under this word; they are like wraſtlers, who turn and wind themſelves in and out, and lie for all advantages; or, as we ſpeak, they lie at catch. A man knows not where to have them, or what they mean, when they ſpeak plaineſt, or ſwear ſolemneſt: when we think we ſee their faces, we ſee but their vizards; all their promiſes and performances too, are under a diſguiſe. Such cunning gameſters or wreſtlers are here intended. One of the Patriarchs had this name (Gen. 30. 8.) Naphtali, and the reaſon is there given, for (ſaith his mother) with great wraſtlings have I wraſtled with my ſiſter, and I have prevailed; and ſhe called his name Naphthali: The Hebrew is, with wraſtlings of God, that is, divine and vehement wraſtlings; as if ſhe had ſaid, I have uſed great and earneſt endeavours, both with God in prayer, and all other means, as a wraſtler, by might and ſlight, to obtain theſe bleſſing (given before to my ſiſter) and now I have prevailed. And it is obſervable, that the Hebrews call an extraordinary cunning wraſtler, Pethalthol, which is this word doubled in the latter ſyllable; becauſe he is a man of double or extraordinary skill in wreſtling, the word is doubled; and ſo it expreſſes one that is double witted, or that hath craft enough for two or three, though not honeſty enough for one. And this word is applied to the Lord himſelf (Pſal. 18. 26.) With the froward thou wilt ſhew thy ſelf froward; that is, if men will be winding and turning, and thinking to catch others, or over-reach the Lord himſelf, with tricks and turnings of wit, the Lord will meet and anſwer them in their own kind, he can turn as faſt as they, he can put himſelf into ſuch intricate Labyrinths of infinite wiſdom and ſacred craft, as ſhall entangle and enſnare the moſt cunning wreſtler or tumbler of them all. He will Cretize the Cretians, ſupplant the ſupplanters of his people.

Conſiliū eſt aliquid faciendi non faciendivè excogitata ratio, Cicer. l. 2. de Invent.

נפתלים è radice פתל Et in niphal Niphtol, tortus, diſtortus per Metonymiam, luctatus fuit; qui enim luctatur cum aliquo, eū variè torquet donec eum vincat & proſternat. Notatur hic vel talis verſutia, qua quis facilè alium aliumq; habitum induet, ut nec facile caveri, nec facile teneri poſſit in actionibus ſuis: vel ad luctatores alluditur. Cocc.

פתלתל Nomine literiſque geminatis, ut inſignis vaſricies, & quaſi duplicata caliditas ſignificetur. Contortuplicatus.

Utitur hoc verbo, ut indicetur maxima quædam & invicta Dei quaſi diſtortio, implicatio, & ſacra calliditas adverſus pravos, callidos, diſtortos, q. d. adverſus Cretenſes cretizat Deus, cum vafro luctatore, vafrè luctatur Deus, ſupplantatores ſupplantat.

Olympiodorus vertit πολυπλόκους, homines varios, nodoſos, implicatos, intricatos.

Some of the Greeks interpret this elegantly by a word in that Language, noting a thing that hath many knots, folds or twiſts, wreaths or plaits in it, as plaited hair, or a folded garment, thereby ſhadowing out men like a Serpent, of knotted, twiſted, enfolded ſpirits, men who wreath and plait their actions ſo cloſely and artificially, that few can underſtand or tell what to make of them, or where to find them: The counſels of theſe cunning, intricate, froward men,

Are carried headlong.] It is very obſervable (Iſa. 44. 25.) how the Prophet threatneth, that the counſels of the wiſe ſhall be turned backward; and here, their counſels ſhall be carried headlong, that is, forward. God hath wayes of all ſorts to croſs ungodly policies; he turns them ſometimes backward, and ſometimes forward; by both, or either they are diſappointed: Counſels are turned backward, when the event is quite croſs to the deſign; or the motion of things, to the reſolutions of the mind: As if a man purpoſing to go Eaſtward, ſhould be turned about (he knows not how) with his face into the Weſt: Counſels are carried headlong, when they go too faſt forward, and make ſo much haſt on in their way, that they tire and are out of breath, or ſtumble, and break themſelves, before they can attain their journeyes end.

Omne conſilium captum in feſtinatione eſt ſtultitia. Rab. Sol.

נמהרה à radice מהר accelerare, feſtinare, atque inde præcipitem eſſe, imprudentem, ſtultum; nam prudentia tranquilitate & deliberatione gaudet. Bruta impetu ruunt in ſuam peſtem. Coc.

The Original word ſignifies to haſten, and thence to be precipitate, raſh or fooliſh in counſel; Prudence uſes to go ſoftly, wiſdom keeps a kind of ſtate in her pace, and loves to go ſtep by ſtep, not headlong. A prudent man ſets his head before his feet; his head goes before his feet in conſultation, but he loves to go upon his feet, not upon his head, in action. It is the curſe of the froward, their counſels are carried headlong; when they ſhould go ſteadily upon their feet, they run upon their heads, or run their heads againſt the next wall. The meaning (in a word) is, They ſhall make more haſte then good ſpeed; or, they ſhall go ſo faſt to their ends, that their end ſhall be their undoing. As the Lord (in mercy) makes the raſh underſtand, ſo (in judgment) he makes the underſtanding raſh. As this is here threatned, ſo the former is graciouſly promiſed (Iſa. 32. 4.) The heart of the raſh ſhall underſtand knowledge, and the tongue of the ſtammerer ſhall ſpeak plainly. When the Prophet would ſhew, how great a bleſſing God poures out upon his people by Chriſt, he thus expreſſes it; Chriſt, who is the wiſdom of the Father, cauſeth the heart of the raſh to underſtand knowledge; it is the word of the Text, the heart of thoſe who naturally run headlong upon buſineſſes, who have no ſteadineſs nor ſtableneſs in their underſtandings, ſhall be ſtayed and balanced with wiſdom and gravity from above. Chriſt will take them off their hurrying pace, and teach them to go and do, to adviſe and act with ſobriety and deliberation. The latter clauſe of the promiſe joints fitly with this; And the tongue of the ſtammerer ſhall ſpeak plainly; ſuch as ſtammering is to ſpeech, the ſame is raſhneſs to counſel: A man that ſtammers, huddles his words; he that hath an impediment in ſpeech, ſpeaks faſteſt; and and becauſe he cannot ſpeak one word well, he ſpeaks many words at once: This haſte is his hinderance; in making ſo much haſte to ſpeak, he cannot ſpeak at all; therefore we uſually adviſe ſtammerers, to take heed of ſpeaking haſtily, that they may ſpeak plainly. The Prophet joines theſe ſweetly, to note the compleat abilities of a Chriſtian, The raſh ſhall underſtand, and the ſtammerer ſhall ſpeak plainly; that is, he ſhall adviſe judiciouſly, and ſpeak elegantly; depth of wiſdom, and ſweetneſs of elocution ſhall meet in him, though before, rude and ruſtick. But the counſels of the froward, though men of great parts, and filed ſpeech, ſhall be carried headlong. Hence obſerve,

Ut blæſitudo linguæ accelerationem habet cum hæſitantia, ut nihil expeditè pronunciare poſſit, & quo magis properat eo minus proficit, citata illa lingua volubilitate Ita qui intelligentia feſtinus eſt, nullum profert utile & integrum conſilium ſed manca omnia & inutilia. Bold.

Haſty counſels are ſucceſſeleſs counſels.

Haſte in counſelling, alwayes makes waſte; and ſo doth haſtineſs in acting. Haſte in either, may hurt, as much as ſloth; though uſually we may divide the miſcarriages that are in the world, between haſtineſs in counſel, and ſlowneſs in action. I know not which is the greater prejudice to any honeſt deſign, to be quick in concluding, or to be dull in executing. They who will not take time to conſult about what they do, may have time enough to repent of what they have done. And they who will not take the time for doing what they conſult, loſe all the time they took for conſultation.

Secondly note, That, God diſappoints evil counſels, as by ſtopping them, ſo by putting them forward.

The Princes of Zoan are become fools (ſaith the Prophet) Why? The Lord hath mingled a perverſe Spirit (or a headlong, vertiginous ſpirit) in the midſt thereof, and they have cauſed Egypt to err in every work thereof, as a drunken man ſtaggereth in his vomit, Iſa. 19. 13, 14.

Verſe 14. They meet with darkneſs in the day-time, and grope at noon-day, as in the night.

Here is a further aggravation of the miſery upon crafty, froward Counſellors, They meet with darkneſs in the day-time. Some underſtand this for the darkneſs of trouble, falling upon theſe men ſuddenly in the day of their proſperity; as if the Holy Ghoſt had ſaid, In the day-time of their greateſt glory, when they think their Sun at the height, then they are clouded and overcaſt, they meet with the darkneſs of ſorrow, and are benighted in a moment, Amos 8. 9. I will cauſe the Sun to go down at noon, and I will darken the earth in the clear day; (it is meant of great afflictions, as the next words interpret) And I will turn your feaſts into mourning.

But rather by darkneſs in the day-time, we are to underſtand the ignorance of thoſe things which are very plain and clear. They meet with darkneſs in the day-time, that is, they are puzled to find out and diſcover thoſe things which are as clear as the light. God often ſends ſuch a ſpirit of giddineſs and blindneſs upon the counſels of his enemies, that eaſie things are hard, plain things, obſcure; and common queſtions, very riddles to them.

Diurnæ tenebræ ignorationem denotant rerum clariſſimarum.

They meet with darkneſs in the light.

There is a double light neceſſary to the ſeeing or diſcovery of a thing. Firſt, An external light. And ſecondly, An internal light. External light is of the Medium or place in which we ſee; the air muſt be enlightned: Internal light is of the Organ or inſtrument by which we ſee; the eye muſt be enlightned. Though there be much light in the air, a blind eye ſees nothing. So the meaning of theſe words may be explained [They meet with darkneſs in the day-time] though theſe men have outward light, though the buſineſs they are about, be plain, a clear caſe (as we ſpeak) yet they are ſo darkned in their underſtandings, that they cannot apprehend or make it out. The Idol-Shepherd is threatned with this wo, Zech. 11. 17. The ſword ſhall be upon his arm (his power ſhall be broken) and upon his right eye (his underſtanding ſhall be darkned). The Idol-Shepherd ſhall be like an Idol, having eyes, but ſeeing not; he was before a blind Seer, ſinfully, and now he ſhall be a blind Seer judicially. As that wicked Prieſt, ſo theſe wicked Politicians in the Text, ſhall have a ſword upon their right eye, a wound in the beſt of their underſtandings, which ſhall make them alſo blind Seers, and make the light to be darkneſs round about them. The latter clauſe clears it farther.

They grope at noon-day, as in the night.

To grope at noon-day.] is the deſcription of a blind man. For what the eye is to a man that ſees, the ſame is the hand to a man that cannot ſee. A man that ſees, looks his way, but a blind man feels it; his hand is inſtead of an eye, to direct his way. They, as it is ſaid in the Text, grope at noon-day, as in the night. When the Sodomites were ſmitten ten with blindneſs, they wearied themſelves to find the door of Lot's houſe, Gen. 19. 11. And when the Philiſtines had put out Samſon's eyes, and he was brought to make them muſick at their Feaſt, he ſaid to the Lad that held him by the hand, Suffer me that I may feel the pillars whereupon the houſe ſtandeth, &c. He could not ſee them, but he could grope ot feel them out. Groping infers either want of light, or want of ſight. Theſe in the Text had light enough, therefore the failing was in their eyes; They grope at noon-day. This fearful judgment the Lord threatens againſt his own people, Deut. 28. 29. Thou ſhalt grope at noon-day, as the blind gropeth in darkneſs. And it was brought upon them, as themſelves lamentably complain, Iſa. 59. 10. We grope for the Wall like blind men, and we grope, as if we had no eyes, we ſtumble at noon-day, as in the night.

Palpare in meridie, eſt cæci periphraſis. Cæcus tentat & palpat manibus antequam pedem efferat.

Prabent manus cæcis oculorum uſus & miniſteria. San. in Iſa. 59.

In that it is here added as a further aggravation of the judgment of God upon theſe, who thought themſelves Eagle-eyed, all eye, and all the world blind, That they ſhall meet with darkneß in the day time; we may obſerve,

First, It is a ſore judgment not to ſee when there is light.

It is like ſtarving at a full Table, or periſhing with thirſt, in the midſt of a Fountain. It is a great judgment not to have light to ſee by; but it is a greater judgment not to ſee by the light. It is a great judgment to a people, when they have not the light of the Goſpel; when Chriſt, who is the light, is not ſhiningly preached among them; but if light ſhine, if Chriſt be preached, and a people ſee it not, this is a far greater judgment. The poor Gentiles, before the light of the Goſpel came to them, ſate in darkneſs and in the ſhadow of death; and in that eſtate, they could only (like blind men) grope after God; as the Apoſtle elegantly expreſſes it, Acts 17. 27. He hath made of one blood all Nations of men, &c that they ſhould ſeek the Lord, if haply they might feel after him, and find him. The Gentiles were inexcuſable, if they did not find the Lord by feeling after him in the dark: what then are they, who find him not by ſeeing in the light? The Apoſtle ſhews us them as as loſt men, and blinded by Satan, to whom the light of the glorious Goſpel doth not ſhine, when it ſhines (2 Cor. 4. 3, 4.) To grope in Goſpel-light, to be in darkneſs, when truth is at her high-noon, is as the ſhadow of death. It is the worſt of ſins to ſin againſt the light; and it is the worſt of judgments, not to ſee the light, by which we may avoid ſin, The heat of divine wrath breaks out in this, when abuſed light is puniſhed with want of ſight, or when light is ſent, and eyes taken away (Iſa. 6. 9, 10.) When the Prophet brought killing light to the Jews, he ſaith, See ye indeed, but perceive not, that is, becauſe ye have had light, and would not ſee believingly; now ye ſhall have light which ye ſhall not ſee, perceivingly, or diſtinctly; as the man in the Goſpel ſaw, but he did not perceive; when he ſaw men walking as trees, he had not a diſtinguiſhing eye, or a diſcerning ſence, as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, Heb. 5. 14. But why ſhall they not perceive, when they ſee? The Prophet tells us, becauſe the Lord had ſaid, Shut their eyes, leſt they ſee. The work of a Prophet is to open eyes; but when men wilfully ſhut their eyes, then God ſhuts them judicially, and blinds them with light. The Apoſtle quoting this text, Acts 28. 27. expounds it ſo, Their eyes have they cloſed, leſt they ſhould ſee; for this, God cloſed them, that they could not ſee. Paul was preaching, and he preached Chriſt the true light, the Son of righteouſneſs: Behold the miſery ſpoken of in this Text, They met with darkneſs in the day-time. This is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men love darkneſs rather then light. Why love they darkneſs? becauſe they ſee not the light; And becauſe they ſee not the light, therefore they cannot love it. It is impoſſible to ſee the light, the beautiful face of the Truth, as it is revealed in Chriſt, and not to love it. A Heathen ſaid, if virtue (much more if Goſpel-truth) were ſeen, every eye would be taken, and every heart led captive by it. A great part of the world hath not this light to ſee, and the greateſt part of thoſe, who have this light, ſee it not. They muſt needs meet with darkneſs, who are darkneſs, in the day-time; and they muſt grope at noon-day, as in the night, who are in the night. If men hear the Law and the Teſtimony, and neither ſpeak nor do according to that wotd, it is (as the Prophet gives the reaſon) becauſe there is no light in them; or as the Hebrew, No Morning in them, Iſa. 8. 20. Till the day-ſtar ariſes in our hearts, the day before our eyes, is night.

Secondly obſerve, Plain things are often obſcure to the wiſeſt and moſt knowing men.

They grope at noon-day, as in the night.] That which a man may ſee with half an eye (as we ſay) theſe men, who think themſelves all eye, cannot ſee. Men of acute and ſagacious underſtandings, men quick-ſighted like Eagles, prove as dull as Beetles. Owles and Bats ſee in the dark, better then in the light; and (in a ſence) it is true of theſe, they can ſee about the works of darkneſs, but the light of holineſs and juſtice, they cannot ſee. The reaſon is given in that of Chriſt, The light that in them is darkneſs; no wonder then, if the light without them be darkneſs, if the inward light, the light that is in them, be darkneſs, how great is that darkneſs? ſo great, that it quite darkens the outward light. Inward darkneſs is to outward light, as a great outward light is to a ſmall one (in regard of our uſe and benefit) it extinguiſhes and overcomes it. Hence theſe men cannot ſee the plaineſt object in the cleareſt light. Light ſhineth in darkneſs, and the darkneſs comprehendeth it not, John 1. 5.

Chriſt breaketh forth into a vehement gratulation to his Father (Mat. 11. 25. I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, becauſe thou haſt hid theſe things from the wiſe and prudent, and haſt revealed them unto Babes. The wiſe and prudent could not ſee ſo much as children. They were ſo wiſe in their own conceits, that the could not conceive the things of God. As it is in ſpirituals, ſo likewiſe, in regard of civil counſels. God hides wiſdom from the wiſe, and underſtanding from the prudent. They ſhall not be able to do or ſee, what a child might have done or ſeen; they ſhall do ſuch things, and ſo abſurdly, that a child would not do them. Myſteries are plain, when the Lord opens, and plaineſt things are myſterious, when he ſhuts the eyes of our underſtanding.

Thus far Eliphaz hath ſet forth the power and juſtice of God againſt ſubtil, crafty counſellors. Now he ſhews the oppoſite effect of his power and goodneſs.

Verſe 15. But he ſaveth the poor from the ſword, from their mouth, and from the hand of the mighty.

But he ſaveth the poor.] It is very obſervable in Scripture, that uſually, if not alwayes, after the mention of judgment and wrath upon the wicked, the mercy, goodneſs and love of God unto his own people, are repreſented; leſt any ſhould think, that judgment is a work wherein God delighteth, he quickly paſſeth from it, and concludes in what he delighteth; Mercy. As he retains not his anger for ever towards his own people, ſo he ſtayes not long upon the deſcription of his anger againſt his enemies, becauſe he delighteth in mercy, Mich. 7. 18. A ſubject of mercy is moſt pleaſant both to the hand and pen of the Lord. He wiſhes rather to write in honey then in gall, and to draw golden lines of love, then bloody lines of wrath. Satan is a Deſtroyer, and he doth nothing but deſtroy and pull down. The Lord deſtroyeth, and he pulleth down; he defeats and diſappointeth, but he hath another work beſides; he ſaves and delivers, he builds up and revives the hopes of his people.

He ſaveth the poor.] Theſe poor are Gods poor. Some may be called the Devils poor, for they have done his work, and he hath given them poverty for their wages. Satan will give all his hirelings full pay, when they die; the wages of ſin is death; while they live, many of them receive only the Earneſt of it, poverty and trouble; all that are poor, and not under the rich influences of this promiſe, He ſaveth the poor. Wicked poor are no more under Gods protection, then wicked oppreſſors or wicked rich men are. This poor man cried, and the Lord heard, Pſal. 34. 6. Not every or any poor man. Some poor men may cry, and the Lord hear them no more then he did the cry of Dives, the rich man in hell, Luke 16. Fonget not the Congregation of thy poor, Pſal. 74. 19. Thy poor, by way of diſcrimination; There may be a greater diſtance between poor and poor, then there is between poor and rich. There are many ragged Regiments, Congregations of poor, whom the Lord will forget for ever: But his poor ſhall be ſaved. And theſe poor are of two ſorts; either poor in regard of wealth and outward ſubſtance, or poor in regard of friends or outward aſſiſtance. A rich man, eſpecially a godly rich man, may be in a poor caſe, deſtitute and forſaken, wanting patronage and protection; God ſaveth his poor in both notions, both thoſe that have no friends, and thoſe that have no eſtates.

אביון à radice אבה quod eſt deſiderare, quaſi pauper omnia deſideret, cum nihil habeat; inde Æbion hæreticus, quaſi mentis & intelligentiæ inops. Schind. Quia omnibus indiget, omnia cupit, & grata habet Rab. Dav.

The Hebrew word for Poor, ſprings from a root ſignifying deſire; and the reaſon is, becauſe poor men are commonly rich in deſires. They that are full of ſenſible wants, are full of earneſt wiſhings: They that are emptieſt of enjoyments, are fulleſt of hopes and longings. And the reaſon why poverty of ſpirit, in our ſpiritual eſtate, is pronounced a bleſſing, is, becauſe the poor in ſpirit are full of deſires after ſpiritual riches. They are ever craving and ſeeking to be filled with that fulneſs which is in Chriſt, with grace for grace; they would have the image of every grace in Chriſt, engraven upon their ſouls. Or (in a holy covetouſneſs) they would be as rich in grace as Chriſt is, grace for Grace; as a covetous man would have penny for penny, pound for pound with his richeſt neighbour; or as an ambitious man would have honour for honour, title for title, with his greateſt Neighbour. That Chriſtian who ſees his eſtate loweſt, uſually ſets his deſires higheſt; his affections are ever upon the wing for ſupplies from Chriſt. Both the civil poor man, and the ſpiritual poor ſoul, would fain be enriched.

He ſaveth the poor from the ſword, from their mouth, and from the hand of the mighty.

Some read this by appoſition, he ſaveth the poor from the ſword, their mouth, making the latter to be but an expoſition of the former, from the ſword their mouth, that is, their mouth is the ſword, from which God ſaveth his poor. So taken, it is a truth; for the mouth is a ſharp ſword, as killing as any inſtrument or engine of war. Hence others, who keep this ſence, read it thus, He ſaveth the poor from the ſword of their mouth; or, from the killing ſtroak of their mouth: making the particle Mem, in the Original, to govern the Genitive Caſe, The Sword of their mouth, or, the Sword coming out of the mouth. There are two Swords of the mouth, two coming out of the mouth, or one doubleedged. 1. Slander. 2. Falſe-witneſs: by which, often the reputation, and ſometime the perſon of a man is murdered.

A gladio oris eorum. Vulg. Ab occiſione oris eorum. Chal. Ut Mem indicet Genitivum. מחרב מפיהם Gladius oris eſt ipſe lingua mala i. e. calumnia falſa, qua homo tanquam gladio necatur. Sed melius à gladio qui ex ore ipſorum, i. e. à falſis teſtimoniis. Dru.

But I conceive that the cleareſt meaning of the Original (though both are good) is, to read theſe as diſtinct evils, from which He ſaveth the poor; namely, 1. From the ſword. And, 2. From their mouth. 3. From the hand of the mighty. That is, From Nimrods, mighty hunters, oppreſſors of the poor, or from the violent man. I returned (ſaith the Preacher, Eccleſ. 4. 1.) and conſidered all the oppreſſions that are done under the Sun, and behold the tears of ſuch as were oppreſſed, and they had no comforter; and on the ſide of the oppreſſors there was power, but they had no comforter. Oppreſſors are alwayes cloathed with power, and the oppreſſed ſeldom find ſo much pity from men, as to be their comforters. Therefore for the oppreſſion of the poor, and the cry of the needy, the Lord ariſes, and he ſaves his poor.

From the { Slaying Sword.
Slandering Tongue.
Oppreſſing Hand.

Theſe three wayes, crafty, powerful men ſeek to deſtroy the poor. Firſt, By the Sword, to cut off their lives. Secondly, By Slander, to blemiſh and blot out their good Names. Thirdly, By ſtrong Hand, to captivate their perſons, or oppreſs their eſtates and liberties. To be ſaved from all theſe deſtructions, is compleat ſalvation. Let the wicked attempt as many wayes as they will or can, to deſtroy, the Lord both will and can find out as many wayes to ſave. The malice of man ſhall never out-act or overmatch the mercy of God. He ſaveth the poor from the ſword, &c.

I ſhould here more diſtinctly open theſe great evils, the Sword, the Mouth, and the hand of the mighty, with the goodneſs of God in ſaving his poor from them: But theſe particulars occur again, v. 20, 21. Where you may find a more diſtinct explication of them. From theſe words thus far opened, Obſerve, Firſt, To what all the Devices and crafty Counſels of ungodly Politicians tend.

Here we have the iſſue or Engliſh of their counſels, the meaning of their State-myſteries is interpreted, Oppreſſion. Their craft concludes in cruelty, and their witty devices, in drawn Swords, ſlandering Tongues, or the Hands of violence. We may ſay of them as Jacob of his Sons Simeon and Levi, Gen. 49. 5, 6. Inſtruments of cruelty are in their habitations. O my Soul, come not thou in their ſecret, for in their anger they will ſlay men, and in their ſelf-will dig down a wall.

Secondly, Obſerve their method. Firſt, here is the bloody Sword.

They will cut them off, and rid their hands of them, if they can.

They could wiſh (as that bloody Roman Emperor) that the heads of their ſuppoſed enemies (poſſibly their beſt friends) were ſet upon one ſhoulder, and that they might cut them all off at one blow. But if God ſave his poor from the mouth of the Sword, then the next weapon is the ſword of their mouths; ſlanders and defamations, lies and falſe accuſations ſhall reach them, whom Iron and ſteel, pike and ſhot cannot. The tongue is a little member, but it is a world of iniquity, and boaſteth (often acteth) great things, Jam. 3. 5, 6.

But if God ſaves his poor from both mouth and ſword, ſo that their enemies cannot prevail at ſharps; then they try at blunts, by a heavy hand, to over-load, oppreſs and keep them down, in their Eſtates, Liberties and Privilidges.

Thirdly Obſerve, That, Salvation is of the Lord.

The Faith of David graſped this, as his richeſt treaſure, Pſal. 68. 20. He that is our God, he is the God of ſalvation. The Lord is called the God of ſalvation, as the God of comfort, both affirmatively and negatively. Salvation is to be had in him, and there is no ſalvation to be had without him. Truly in vain is ſalvation hoped for from the hills, and from the multitude of mountains (from Armies, from counſels, from the power and policies of men) in the Lord our God is the ſalvation of Iſrael, Jer. 3. 23.

Fourthly, It is obſervable Againſt whom theſe crafty cruel men muſter up and levie the united forces of Sword, Tongue and Hand.

They are the poor. He ſaveth the poor. Why, will not God ſave the rich? will he not ſave the mighty, the Princes of the earth? Yes, God will ſave all that fear him, both high and low, rich and poor. Why then is it ſaid, He ſaveth the poor? As it were, determining ſalvation upon them. The reaſon is, becauſe, as the poor are moſt eaſily oppreſt, ſo uſually they are moſt oppreſt: Where the hedge is loweſt, men go over faſteſt. And becauſe, for the moſt part, Gods people are poor, comparatively to others; they are the vallies, the lower part of the Earth, and wickedneſs is commonly advanced upon the mountains of wealth, honour and greatneſs; therefore the denomination is taken from them: He ſaveth the poor: They whom God loves moſt, the World loves leaſt, they have leaſt of the World. The World gives moſt to its own; and God hath given his own ſo much beyond the world, that, the loſs of a world is not diſcerned in their Eſtate, and worldly gains are not often diſcernable in their Eſtates; therefore, though in Chriſt, they are heirs of all things, and all is theirs, yet their rank and titles are among the poor.

Fifthly obſerve, they are poor ones; yet what deviſing and plotting is here againſt them? Crafty counſels, drawn ſwords, envenom'd tongues, ſtrong hands lifted up, Againſt whom are all theſe? Againſt the poor. Hence note,

That, Wicked men plot againſt the people of God, how poor and low ſoever they be.

As David ſaid unto Saul (1 Sam. 24. 14.) After whom is the King of Iſrael come out? after a dead dog, after a flea? As if he had ſaid, whom doſt thou purſue? thou doſt that which is unworthy, and much below ſo great a King; wilt thou ſet thy ſtrength againſt my weakneſs? Why doſt thou arm againſt him, by whoſe conqueſt thou canſt get no honour? Alas, I am but a poor man, a mean ſubject, no match for thee; I wonder you trouble your ſelf ſo much in following or oppoſing me: I am (in compariſon) but as a dead dog, or as a flea. A dead dog cannot bite; or if I bite, it is but a flea-bite: A dead dog can do no hurt, and a living flea can do but little. The people of God (as ſuch) never have any will to do wrong, and it is ſeldom that they have any power to do wrong; and yet the world is all up in purſuit againſt them: What's the reaſon of it? what's the matter? The truth is, how poor and low ſoever they are, yet there is an eye of jealouſie awake upon them. The world looks upon them as a ſuſpected party: the world hath ſecret miſgivings, that one time or other, they muſt riſe upon their ruines; and therefore they will keep them down (yes, that they will) as long as they can. What a diſtance was there between Haman and Mordecai? the one ſate in the gate, and the other ſtood at the Kings elbow, and had his ear, yea, and his ſignet (upon the matter) at his command: yet this Haman muſt needs oppreſs Mordecai, becauſe he would not bow: Haman had a jealous eye upon him, he was a ſuſpected perſon; though he cou'd not reach Haman, yet Haman fear'd he might undermine him.

Facis quod eſt tanto rege indignum, dum me tenuiſſimum tanto comitatu perſequeris. Jun. in loc.

Again, There is a continual Antipathy between the two ſeeds; and Antipathy is incurable: To oppoſe the godly, is not ſo much the diſeaſe, as the nature of wicked men: And we know, Antipathies are againſt the whole kind; revenge againſt this, or that Individual, is no eaſe to it; Antipathy is not ſpent, but in the conſumption of the whole kind. It is not this or that ſheep which the Wolf hates, but every ſheep, fat or lean, ſhorn or unſhorn, that's all one to the Wolf; he will ſuck the blood of a ſheep that hath not a lock of Wool on his back, as greedily as if that ſheep had a Golden Fleece. Let a godly man be poor or rich, low or high, their ſword ſhall be unſheath'd, and their mouth opened againſt him: the old hatred and quarrel is againſt all. Haman thought ſcorn to lay hands on Mordecai alone, wherefore Haman thought to deſtroy all the Jews, Eſth. 3. 6. He hated thoſe whom he never ſaw, thoſe who had never wrong'd him, haply had bowed to him; yet, becauſe Jews, die they muſt.

Sixthly obſerve (But he ſaveth the poor.)

God delights to help the poor: He loves to take part with the beſt, though the weakeſt ſide.

Contrary to the courſe of moſt, who when a controverſie ariſes, uſe to ſtand in a kind of indifferency or neutrality, till they ſee which part is ſtrongeſt, not which is juſteſt. Now if there be any conſideration (beſides the cauſe) that draws or engages God; it is the weakneſs of the ſide. He joynes with many, becauſe they are weak; not with any, becauſe they are ſtrong; therefore he is called, the helper of the friendleſs, and with him the fatherleſs (the Orphans) find mercy: By fatherleſs, we are not to underſtand ſuch only whoſe parents are dead, but any one that is in diſtreſs; as Chriſt promiſeth his Diſciples, John 14. 18. I will not leave you Orphans, that is helpleſs, and (as we tranſlate) comfortleſs; though ye are as children without a Father, yet I will be a Father to you. Men are often like thoſe clouds, which diſſolve into the Sea, they ſend preſents to the rich, and aſſiſt the ſtrong; but God ſends his rain upon the dry Land, and lends his ſtrength to thoſe that are weak. This poor man cried, and the Lord heard him, and ſaved him out of all his troubles. Forget not the Congregation of thy poor for ever. The truth is, he never forgets them: They are graven upon the palms of his hands; ſuch poor are his treaſure, his Jewels, as the Signet upon his right hand; therefore alwayes in his eye, yea, alwayes in his heart, though they lie in the dirt, or be trodden under foot, like mire in the ſtreets. The Prophet makes this report to God of himſelf (Iſa. 25. 4,) Thou haſt been a ſtrength to the poor, a ſtrength to the needy in his diſtreſs, a refuge from the ſtorm, &c.

Pſ. 10. 14, 18.
Hoſ. 14. 3.
Pſ. 34. 6.
Pſ. 74. 19.

Thus far Eliphaz hath given inſtance of the great, marvellous and unſearchable works of God, in a double reference: Firſt, to wicked crafty oppreſſors. Secondly, to poor helpleſs innocents. He ſhuts up this Narration with a double effect of theſe works upon thoſe two ſorts of men. Firſt, ſhewing what effect they produce in the poor; namely, Hope. Secondly, what in the wicked; namely, ſhame and confuſion of face.

